With Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

[A new life of Herbert, in which a minute inquiry into his career, and the times in which he lived, has brought many new facts to light.]

BUTLER'S "ANALOGY" and MODERN THOUGHT. By the Rev. A. R. EAGAR, D.D. T.C.D. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SIDE LIGHTS on CHURCH HISTORY.—HISTORY of EARLY CHRISTIAN ART. By the Rev. E. L. CUTTS, D.D. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

THE CHURCHMAN'S MANUAL: a Book of Instruction and Devotion. By the Right Rev. ENOS NUTTALL, D.D., Bishop of Jamaica. 82mo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

A FIRST BOOK on CHURCH PRINCIPLES. By the Rev. Canon GARNIER. With Diagrams. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

The CATECHISM of the ORTHODOX EASTERN CHURCH.

By IGNATIUS MOSCHAKA. 18mo, limp cloth, 6d.

SIMPLE EXPERIMENTS for SCIENCE TEACHING.

With numerous Diagrams, including 200 Experiments fully illustrating the Elementary Physics and Chemistry Division in the Evening School Continuation Code. By J. A. BOWER. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EDIBLE and POISONOUS MUSHROOMS: What to Eat, and What to Avoid. By M. G. COOKE, M.A., LL.D. With 19 Coloured Plates illustrating 48 Species. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

ROMANCE of LOW LIFE AMONGST PLANTS: Facts

and Phenomena of Cryptogamic Vegetation. By M. G. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth boards, 4s.

MANUALS of HEALTH. Notes on the Ventilation and Warming of Houses, Churches, Schools, and other Buildings. By Prof. E. H. JACOB. F ap. 8vo, cloth, 1s.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

TIME. By Professor C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S.

[In preparation.]

OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By Percy Faraday

FRANKLAND, Ph.D., B.Sc. (London), F.R.S. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous

Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous

Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward.

With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Second Edition,

Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles Meymott

TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM.

Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British

Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor

GEORGE HENSLIOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.

NORMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. W. Hunt. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ROMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. Prebendary Scarth,

Rector of Wroughton, Somerset. Fcap. 8vo, with Maps, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CELTIC BRITAIN. By Professor Rhys. Fcap. 8vo, with

Two Maps, cloth boards, 3s.

"Much instruction will be found in a small compass."—Daily Chronicle.

POST-NORMAN BRITAIN. Foreign Influences upon the History of England from the Accession of Henry III. to the Revolution of 1633. By HENRY G. HEWLITT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE DAWN of EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson,

B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"His book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic literature."—Scotsman.

* * * Others in preparation.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

| TABLE OF CONTENTS | PAGE |
|---|------|
| SAUNDERS'S JAMES MACHESON, by T. HUTCHINSON | 205 |
| OHLOW'S STORY OF ST. AUSTIN'S, STAFFORD, by E. PEACOCK | 207 |
| WAY'S TRANSLATION OF EURIPIDES, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD | 207 |
| THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE "IMITATIO CHRISTI," by L. A. WHEATLEY | 208 |
| DOSTOYEVSKI'S POOR FOLK, by W. R. MORFILL | 209 |
| PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN AMERICA, by W. E. A. AXON | 209 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE | 210 |
| SOME COUNTRY BOOKS | 210 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 211 |
| THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES | 212 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 212 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "REX MORITUR ENSUL," by C. J. B. | 213 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 213 |
| MESSRS. SAMSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 214 |
| MESSRS. CASSELL & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 214 |
| MR. DAVID NUTT'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 214 |
| MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 214 |
| MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 215 |
| MESSRS. HODDER & STOUDITON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 215 |
| MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON'S & FERRIER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 215 |
| MESSRS. HENRY & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 216 |
| MR. W. B. CLIVE'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 216 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 216 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| An Inscription in Unknown Letters on Baginham Head, co. Wexford, by R. A. S. Macalister; Rohal's Place in Dante's Paradise, by Paget Toynbee; An Ancient Method of Computing Losses in War, by Canon Isaac Taylor; Scrivener's Introduction to the New Testament, by the Rev. E. Miller | 216 |
| FICK'S INDO-EUROPEAN PROPER NAMES, by Prof. SAYCE | 217 |
| CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE | 217 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Abyssinian Inscriptions of Mr. Theodore Bent, by Dr. E. Glaeser; Goodwin's Ugumt Homocich , by T. W. Allen | 217 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 218 |
| ART BOOKS | 218 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| A Coin of King Cinthila, by E. S. Dodgson | 218 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 219 |
| STAGE NOTES | 219 |
| MUSIC PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. S. | 219 |

EDINBURGH. — SUPERIOR BOARD
offered for STUDENT in professional gentleman's family; large house; good locality. Highest references.—No. 598, Robertson & Scott, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

THACKERAY'S WORKS FOR SALE,
First Editions, cheap.—ESMOND, 3 vols., original cloth; clean, 1852.—VANITY FAIR, 12 vols., 1848.—PENDENNIS, 2 vols., 1849.—HARRIS, Brunswick Terrace, Stafford

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STROCKEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by JAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CHEAP TYPE-WRITERS' RIBBONS.—For Barlock, 16 yds., 3s. each; Two, 5s. 6d. Ribbons re-linked, 1s. each.—E. CARO, Mr. Newall, 101, Park Road, Bradford.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

ADVICE as to CHOICE OF SCHOOLS.—The SCHOLASTIC ASSOCIATION (a body of Oxford and Cambridge graduates) gives ADVICE and ASSISTANCE, without charge, to PARENTS and TUTORIAL AGENTS in the SELECTION of SCHOOLS for Boys or Girls, and Tutors for all Examinations at home and abroad.—A Statement of Requirements should be sent to the Manager, R. J. BEYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, LONDON, THE ROYAL SCHOOL OF MINES.

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED

DEAN—THE RT. HON. T. H. HUXLEY, LL.D., F.R.S.

| | |
|------------------------------|--|
| MECHANICS AND MATHEMATICS | Professor Goodeve, M.A. |
| PHYSICS | Professor A. W. Rucker, M.A. F.R.S. |
| ASTRONOMY | Professor J. Norman Lockyer, C.B., F.R.S. |
| CHEMISTRY | Professor W. A. Tilden, D.Sc., F.R.S. |
| BIOLOGY | Professor (Hon.) The Rt. Hon. T. H. Huxley, LL.D., F.R.S. |
| GEOLOGY | Professor J. W. Judd, F.R.S. |
| METALLURGY | Professor W. C. Roberts-Austen, C.B., F.R.S. |
| MINING | Professor C. Le Neve Foster, D.Sc., A.R.S.M., F.R.S. |
| AGRICULTURE | Professor J. Wrightson, F.O.S. Francis Fladgate, Registrar. |

NEXT SESSION BEGINS OCTOBER 3RD.

Full Particulars can be obtained from the Registrar, Royal College of Science, South Kensington, and Prospectuses of Eyre & Spottiswoode, East Harding Street, Fleet Street, E.C., or of any Bookseller.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY. THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dye-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the REGISTRAR:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.

A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

YORKSHIRE COLLEGE HALL of RESIDENCE (Limited), LYDDON HALL, LEEDS, under the direction of Mr. HERBERT ROWE, has been established as a Hall of Residence for Students of the Yorkshire College. Fee, £16 per term. Prospectus from the SECRETARY of the College.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will COMMENCE on WEDNESDAY, October 3rd, at 1 p.m.

SWINEY LECTURES ON GEOLOGY, IN CONNECTION WITH THE BRITISH MUSEUM (NATURAL HISTORY).

Professor H. ALLEYNE NICHOLSON, M.D., D.Sc., F.G.S., will deliver a COURSE of TWELVE LECTURES on "THE MAKING OF THE EARTH'S CRUST," in the LECTURE THEATRE of the SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM (by permission of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education), on MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS, at 3 p.m., beginning MONDAY, 1st October, and ending Friday, 26th October. Admission to the Course, Free.

By order of the Trustees,
W. H. FLOWER, Director.

British Museum (Natural History),
Cromwell Road, London, S.W.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE FOR WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Hill Scholarship, £20 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 48, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Fisher, Esq., of Norton, Middleham; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, 36, Porchester Terrace, W.; and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

SMALL SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S
SONS.—Country house; healthy hilly district. Small classes; individual attention. Moderate terms.—Oxford M.A., The Grange, Halstead, Essex.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

VINOLIA CREAM

Is a good Prescription

FOR

SUNBURN, INSECT BITES, and any SKIN IRRITATION.

1s. 1d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

From the Earliest Period to the End of 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 320 pages, price 3s. 6d. net.

Globe.—"Is unquestionably useful."

Morning Post.—"Will be of considerable value."

Manchester Courier.—"An invaluable storehouse of facts."

Newcastle Chronicle.—"The Guide may be recommended to librarians as well as to readers of fiction."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 301 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net. With Portrait.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 3759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE FATAL CARD. Messrs. William Teriss, Murray, Carson, Charles Filton, W. L. Abiegdon, Richard Purdon, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Vane, Laura Linden, Sophie Larkin, and Miss Mulward.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE NEW WOMAN. Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. J. G. Grahame, Mr. Wyes, Mr. Champion, Mr. Byron; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Alma Murray, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Gertrude Warden, Miss Rickards, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9.0, HOT WATER. Messrs. Charles Hawtree, Edward Bighton, George Giddens, William Blakeley, Sydney Valentine, J. G. Taylor, F. Atterley, E. Dagnall, F. Vigay; Mesdames Edith Chester, Alice de Wiotan, E. Vinick, K. Drew, A. Saker. Preceded, at 8.30, by HOME RULE.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Geo. Grossmith, jun., Lawrence D'Orsay, Farren-Soutar, R. Somerville, Gilbert Porteous, Charles Eaton, and Rutland Barrington; Mesdames Kate Cutler, Nellie Malone, Marie Stodolme, Lonie Pounds, Kate Hodson, Violet Robinson, Nina Martino, and Lottie Venna.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves, Nina Boucicault, At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE QUEEN OF BRILLIANTS. Messrs. Hubert Wilke, Arthur Williams, W. H. Denny, John Le Hay, Avon Saxon, Owen Westford, Fred. Wright, jun., Compton Cutts, Geo. Honey, and Fred Storey; Madame Amadi, Miss Lizzie Ruggles, Miss Annie Moyers, Mesdames Leonard, Burle, Leigh, Comyns, and Miss Lillian Russell.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS (New Edition). Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, Thompson, W. S. Laidlaw, H. Gregory; Mesdames Geraldine Ulmar, Maud Holland, M. Love, A. Newton, E. Greville, D. Thorne, F. Wilson, V. Cassell, M. Maraden, and Florence St. John, &c. At 7.15, THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, OUR FLAT. Misses Georgie Esmond, Annie Goward, May Edouin, Annie Esmond, Grace Lane, F. Loveridge; Messrs. C. Fawcett, H. Ross, E. Hendrie, E. Silward, Cecil Paget, D. Gordon, and Willie Edouin. At 8, PARALLEL ATTACKS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE FOUNDLING. Messrs. Charles Groves, Sydney Brough, Hantley Wright, Oswald Yorke, George Warde, Stanley Kennis; Misses Ellis Jeffreys, Emmeline Orford, Susie Vaughan, Lizzie Webster, Gwynne Herbert, Minnie Clifford, Fanny Erris. At 8.15, THEN FLOWERS GREW FAIRER.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE CHINAMAN. Mr. Frank Wyatt, Messrs. Warren, Dreyton, Wentworth, John Tresahar, Mesdames Cicely Richards, Halkett, Kenward, Ripley, Carlyle, Clara Jacks. Preceded, at 8.15, by THE ELECTRIC SPARK.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Messrs. Arthur Helmore, J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, T. Kingston, J. L. Mackay; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Deringer, A. Beet. Preceded, at 8.15, by LOYAL.

DE FIVAS' FRENCH CLASS BOOKS

Now ready, fcap. 8vo, 450 pp., price 2s. 6d. strongly bound.

DE FIVAS, GRAMMAR OF FRENCH GRAMMARS.

With Exercises and Examples Illustrative of every Rule. By Dr. DE FIVAS, M.A. Including an Appendix on the History and Etymology of the French Language. Fifty-third Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with the Author's latest Notes, Corrections, and Additions. "The best French Grammar we have."—Educational Times. "It is a valuable and justly popular book."—Journal of Education.

DE FIVAS, ELEMENTARY FRENCH GRAMMAR and READER. Third Edition, Revised. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d., cloth.

"Those engaged in teaching French to beginners could not base their teaching upon a more useful school book."—Schoolman.

DE FIVAS, GUIDE TO FRENCH CONVERSATION.

Twenty-first Edition. 18mo, 2s. 6d., bound.

DE FIVAS, INTRODUCTION À LA LANGUE

FRANÇAISE. Twenty-eighth Edition. 12mo, 2s. 6d., bound.

DE FIVAS, BEAUTÉS DES ECRIVAINS FRANÇAIS

ANCIENS ET MODERNES. Fifteenth Edition. 12mo, 2s. 6d., bound.

DE FIVAS, LE TRÉSOR NATIONAL. (The Translation of English into French at sight.) Seventh Edition. 12mo, 1s. 6d., cloth.

* Detailed Prospectus on application.

London:

CHOSBY LOCKWOOD & SON, 7, Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.

NEW WORK in preparation by

W. RUSSELL, Author of "An Invalid's Twelve Years' Experience"—"MAN: his Peculiarities, Weakness, Diseases, Degeneration, and Remedies."

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

24, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PRES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

A THIRD EDITION (Fourth Thousand) now ready at all Booksellers and Libraries.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 30s.

FIFTY YEARS of MY LIFE

in the WORLD of SPORT at HOME and ABROAD.

By Sir JOHN DUGDALE ASTLEY, Bart.

"It is not too much to say that in writing these two volumes, which he has, by permission, dedicated to the Prince of Wales, Sir John Astley has not only produced a book which will amuse and in some measure instruct the thousands who will be anxious to read it, but has at once taken his place amongst the best chroniclers of his time."—Times, May 18.

"In conclusion, we never read a book into the treasures and attractions of which it is more impossible to give an insight by a few quotations. It is the work of a thoroughly genial and good fellow, who has seen nearly every vicissitude of life that the open air can afford, and has touched nothing without adorning it."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVELS.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. HANS BLACKWOOD.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

IN A NEW WORLD. By Mrs. Hans

BLACKWOOD.

VENTURED in VAIN. By Reginald

E. SALWEY, Author of "The Finger of Scorn," "Wildwater Terrace," &c. 3 vols.

ADAM the GARDENER. By Mrs

STEPHEN BATSON, Author of "Such a Lord is Love," &c. 3 vols.

"A uniformly sympathetic and surpassingly entertaining story."—Daily Telegraph.

ST. MAUR. By Adeline Sergeant

Author of "Caspar Brooke's Daughter," "Sir Anthony," &c. 3 vols. "It would be unjust to deny that 'St. Maur' is an excellent specimen of its class, and will be read with much more delight and avidity than the average three-volume novel."—Glasgow Herald.

SUIT and SERVICE. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," "Britomart," &c. 2 vols.

A VAGABOND in ARTS. By Algernon

GISSING, Author of "A Moorland Idyl," "A Village Hampden," &c. 3 vols.

"The story is both clever and interesting, and the characters are very natural."—Athenaeum.

"There is much profound thought and brilliant writing in 'A Vagabond in Arts.'"—Daily Telegraph.

HOIST WITH HER OWN PETARD.

By REGINALD LUCAS. 3 vols.

"A well-worked out tale of matrimonial intrigue, and the author obtains a mastery of the reader's attention from the very outset."—Daily Telegraph.

THE LIGHT of OTHER DAYS. By

Mrs. FORRESTER, Author of "Viva," "My Lord and My Lady," &c. 2 vols.

Uniform, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL.

DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.

TO RIGHT the WRONG.

WE TWO.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.

KNIGHT ERRANT.

WON BY WAITING.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLE-

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.

MAN.

A NOBLE LIFE.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS

HANNAH.

ABOUT WOMEN.

THE UNKIND WORD.

A LIFE for a LIFE.

A BRAVE LADY.

NOTHING NEW.

STUDIES from LIFE.

MISTRESS and MAID.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

NATURE and HUMAN

THE OLD JUDGE; or,

NATURE.

Life in a Colony.

WISE SAWS and MODERN

TRAITS of AMERICAN

INSTANCES.

HUMOUR.

The AMERICANS at HOME

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.

ALEC FORBES.

ROBERT FALCONER.

SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.

LIFE of IRVING.

LAIRD of NORLAW.

A ROSE in JUNE.

AGNES.

PIRROE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER and HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, Limited.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A NEW POPULAR EDITION
OF

MAARTEN MAARTEN'S THE GREATER GLORY.

"The Greater Glory" is a strangely beautiful book, but its greatest charm is not in any one scene, it is the gradual evolution of beauty out of beauty till the climax is reached in the 'greater glory' of the old baron's deathbed."—Guardian.

MAARTEN MAARTEN'S NOVELS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.

THE SIN of JOOST AVELINGH.

GOD'S FOOL.

New Novels at the Libraries.

JUST READY.

THE INTENDED.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE
OTHER GIRLS," &c.

THE OLD OLD STORY

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY,

Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

THE ADVENTURESS.

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES,

Author of "A Girton Girl," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The local colour and tone of the little drama, the conversation at Negretti's Hotel at Nice, the 'dear bishop' and his satellites, the petty spites and ambitions are perfectly admirable. Juliana Tredennick is, perhaps, the most clever of all the author's studies in complex character; she is worthy of Thackeray's scalpel-pen."—Worl.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"An interesting study in psychology."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient, sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description, apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER. SOME NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

BY MONA CAIRD.

The DAUGHTERS of DANAUS.

By MONA CAIRD.

Crown 8vo, 480 pp., cloth, 6s.

The above work will be issued at once in 6s. form, in accordance with the wishes both of the Libraries and the Booksellers.
[Ready in October.]

BY MAY CROMMELIN.

Cheap Edition.

[Shortly.]

DUST BEFORE THE WIND.

By MAY CROMMELIN.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready in October.]

"Originally treated dramatic intenseness quite above the average novel."—National Observer.

BY MRS. ALEC TWEEDIE.

A WINTER JAUNT TO NORWAY.

With Accounts (from personal acquaintance) of Nansen, Ibsen, Bjornson, Brandes, &c.

By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE,
Author of "A Girl's Ride in Iceland," and "The Passion Play at Oberammergau"

Fully Illustrated. Second and Cheaper Edition.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The Spectator (2 pages of review) says: "Our space forbids us further dealing with Mrs. Tweedie's pages, which from start to finish are really a treat.... Her book of travel is altogether too racy, too breezy, too observant, and too new to let us part from her with anything but the most sincere compliments."

"A most interestingly written account of a most adventurous journey."—Queen.

"Breezy and entertaining."—Times.

BY THE AUTHOR OF THE "NEW UTOPIA."

STRIKES, LABOUR QUESTIONS,

And Other Economic Difficulties.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY CLEMENTINA BLACK.

A N A G I T A T O R.

By CLEMENTINA BLACK.

A Novel Dealing with Social Questions.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE COUNTRY MONTH BY MONTH.

By J. A. OWEN.

Author of "Forest, Field, and Fell"; and Editor of "A Son of the Marshes,"

AND

Professor G. S. BOULGER, F.L.S., F.G.S.,

Author of "Familiar Trees," "The Uses of Plants," &c.

With a Cover Design by J. Lockwood Kipling.

Price, paper covers, gilt top, 1s.; cloth, silk sewn, inlaid parchment, 2s.

The above consists of Twelve Monthly Parts, each complete in itself. March, April, May, June, July, August, and September are now ready, and each of the remaining Volumes will be issued on the first day of the month that bears its name.

"Carefully compiled."—Spectator.

"Well adapted to the purpose."—Times.

"Interesting and brightly written."—Nature.

"Full of observant sympathy and special knowledge."—Scotsman.

"An excellent work, and one which will have more than a passing popularity."—Nature Notes.

"It is altogether delightful reading."

School Board Chronicle.

"A little booklet of delicate writing, which will commend itself to every lover of rural life."—Gentleman.

"Charming gossip; reminding us of Gilbert White and Richard Jefferies."—Christian World.

"Should delight the heart of the naturalist."—Glasgow Herald.

"Charming in appearance, literary in style, accurate in statement.... We know none which so well deserves credit for being 'Up to Date' as this pretty little volume."

Selborne Society's Nature Notes.

And many Others.

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY

TALES. Edited by A. W. POLLARD. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s. [THE EVERSLY SERIES.]

THE COLLECTED ESSAYS of

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY, F.R.S. Globe 8vo, 5s. each volume.

Vol. IX. Evolution and Ethics, and other Essays.

[THE EVERSLY SERIES.]

MEMORIALS of OLD WHITBY;

or, Historical Gleanings from Ancient Whitby Records. By the Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York, Editor of "The Whitby Charivary," &c., and Author of "Forty Years in a Moorland Parish." With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY, PROPHECY, and the MONUMENTS. By J. F. McCURDY, Ph.D., LL.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in University College, Toronto. 2 vols. Vol. I., 8vo, 14s. net.

A CATALOGUE of ADAM

SMITH'S LIBRARY. Edited by JAMES BONAR. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE LIFE of JOHN MILTON.

Vol. II. By Professor DAVID MASSON. New Edition. 8vo, 16s.

STUDIES and EXERCISES in FORMAL LOGIC. By JOHN NEVILLE KEYNES, M.A. Third Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. 8vo, 12s.

A TEXT-BOOK of PATHOLOGY

Systematic and Practical. By Professor D. J. HAMILTON. Copiously Illustrated. Vol. II., Parts I. and II. Medium 8vo, 15s. net each Part. (Vol. I., 21s. net.)

An INTRODUCTORY ACCOUNT

of CERTAIN MODERN IDEAS and METHODS in PLANE ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY. By CHARLOTTE ANGAS SCOTT, D.Sc., Girton College, Cambridge; Professor of Mathematics in Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania. 8vo, 10s. net.

TIMBER and TIMBER TREES.

NATIVE and FOREIGN. By THOMAS LASLETT, Timber Inspector to the Admiralty. New Edition, Revised by Prof. H. MARSHALL WARD, F.R.S. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

MEISSNER'S LATIN PHRASE

BOOK Translated from the Sixth German Edition by H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant Master at Fettes College, Edinburgh. Globe 8vo, 4s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S SHORTER

LATIN COURSE. Second Part. Abridgement of the Second Part of Macmillan's Latin Course. By A. M. COOK, M.A., and W. E. P. PANTIN, M.A. Globe 8vo, 2s.—Key (for Teachers only), 4s. 6d. net.

ELEMENTS of MARINE SUR-

VEYING. For the Use of Junior Naval Officers. With numerous Exercises. By Rev. J. L. ROBINSON, M.A., Chaplain and Naval Instructor, Royal Naval College, Greenwich. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

PRIMER of HYGIENE. By

ERNEST S. REYNOLDS, M.D. Lond. Pot 8vo, 1s.

CLASSICAL SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

EURIPIDES' ALCESTIS.

Edited by M. L. EARLE, Ph.D. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE ÆNEID. Books I.-VI.

Edited by T. E. PAGE, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1894.

No. 1168, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Life and Letters of James Macpherson. By Bailey Saunders. (Sonnenschein.)

It was (he tells us) by a mere accident that the author's attention was originally directed to the question which, in this volume, he discusses at length. His curiosity once aroused, he would seem not only to have thoroughly mastered the details of the Ossianic controversy itself, but to have extended his inquiries in several directions beyond the limits of his immediate subject, reading—as we gather from the footnote on page 101—pretty nearly everything of importance that has appeared in recent years on the poetry and antiquities of the Celts. The result was just what might have been expected. Mr. Bailey Saunders, finding himself incommoded by the crowd of novel ideas accumulated in the course of this somewhat severe mental scamper, began to cast about him for some means of relief; and finally, in default of any readier shift, he resolved to adopt the obvious expedient of writing a book. The fruit of which resolve now lies before us in the shape of a handsome octavo volume of some three hundred and thirty pages, admirably printed in clear type on pleasantly toned paper, and embellished with a well-executed engraving from Romney's portrait of James Macpherson.

The author's immediate purpose in writing this book was, as we learn from the Preface, to relate the history of the origin, reception, and extraordinary effect of the Ossianic poems; and he has thrown his work into the form of a biography, "because the question of the authenticity of the poems largely turns on Macpherson's actual proceedings, and his personal character and attainments." With regard to the specific character of the misconception (as to Macpherson's true relation towards the Ossianic poems) which, if his biographer is to be believed, prevails all but universally, though in varying degrees, throughout the literary world of to-day, Mr. Saunders observes:—

"Among educated Englishmen, Macpherson commonly passes for an audacious impostor who published his own compositions as the work of an ancient writer, and received due punishment at the hands of Dr. Johnson. The historians of literature compare him with Chatterton, and brand him as a forger."

This, which seems, in fact, a fairly accurate description of the view now prevailing as to the validity of the Scotchman's pretensions (see, for example, Mr. Edmund Gosse's History of Eighteenth Century Literature, pp. 335-337), Mr. Saunders holds to be not alone grossly inaccurate, as an account of what that writer actually did in the matter of the poems, but gravely unjust as well to the memory of an elegant and versatile littérateur, whose character he declares to be thereby wantonly and grievously belied. At the same time that he maintains the substantial integrity of Macpherson, however, he takes care to vindicate himself with all possible earnestness from the suspicion of bias or partisanship:

"While I believe that, on the whole, he has been greatly slandered, he is certainly no hero; and I hope that I am not afflicted, in regard to him, with what has been called the lues boswelliana, or the disease of admiration. I hope also that I am free from any suspicion of national prejudice: I have not the honour of being a Scotsman."

Can it really be, then, that a wrong so grave as Mr. Saunders's theory would imply has been done, and that for so many years back, to the memory of James Macpherson? Perhaps the readiest way to answer this question will be to pass in rapid review the leading events of Macpherson's life, from the day when he first emerges into notice, strolling down to the bowling-green at Moffat in company with John Home (who is said to have found him "an exceeding good classical scholar"), to the proud day when there issued from the house of Becket and De Hondt, publishers in the Strand, the famous quarto entitled "Fingal, an Ancient Epic Poem in Six Books . . . , composed by Ossian, Son of Fingal: Translated from the Gaelic Language by James Macpherson." Of course, no one in his right senses would dream, at the present day, of taking up the extreme position, so petulantly and uncritically assumed by Dr. Johnson and his followers, that the so-called poems of Ossian—"Fingal," "Temora," and the rest—were one and all simply forged and invented out of his own head by James Macpherson. Even a superficial examination of the Report issued by the Committee of the Highland Society will suffice to make it clear that the so-called epic of "Fingal"—if it be not, as Macpherson represented it to be, a literal translation into measured English prose of a Gaelic original extant at the time in the Highlands—is at least undoubtedly based upon a solid foundation of genuine Gaelic ballad-poetry, from which the names and leading incidents, and even in some instances entire sentences or, it may be, short detached passages, have been borrowed and incorporated with his own work by the self-styled translator. In short, the problem of Macpherson's true character must now be regarded as depending, not upon any question as to the survival of ancient Celtic poetry in the Highlands—for of the existence there, in Macpherson's day, of even a considerable body of such traditionary remains there seems no longer any room to doubt—but rather upon the particular degree of fidelity and conscientious care displayed in his arrangement and translation of the several "fragments" recovered by him from the Highlanders, and declared by him to be none other than the disjecta membra of the long-lost epic of "Fingal."

In the autumn of 1759 John Home, the celebrated author of the tragedy of "Douglas," while drinking the waters at the Spa of Moffat, in Dumfries-shire, had made the acquaintance of a young Highland student named James Macpherson, who was living as tutor, until such time as he should be of age to take holy orders, in the family of Lady Christian Graham of Balgowan. Home had long felt an interest in the subject of Highland poetry; and when, in reply to his inquiries, Macpherson told how from time immemorial the Highlanders had loved to listen to the tales and songs of their ancient bards, and added that he had in his possession several specimens of this traditionary poetry, Home at once expressed an eager desire to see and examine them. Here, however, a difficulty presented itself: Home knew not a word of Gaelic; how, then, was he to judge of the pieces produced by Macpherson? Home suggested that the other should select what he considered a favourable specimen from his repertory, translate it into English prose, and submit it to the critical eye of the Lowlander, who would then be able to form some opinion, however inadequate, of the genius and character of the Gaelic poetry. To this, after some delay and considerable show of reluctance, Macpherson at length consented; and when, shortly afterwards, John Home returned to Edinburgh, he carried with him copies of "The Death of Oscar," and of two or three other pieces translated by Macpherson, which, in his elation over what he regarded as an important find, he handed eagerly about among the "Select Circle," as it was called, of his literary friends and colleagues.

In due course the translations came into the hands of Dr. Hugh Blair, a famous theologian and literary critic of the day. In him they excited the most extraordinary enthusiasm. He instantly sent for Macpherson; and as soon as, in conference with him, he had ascertained that, besides the few pieces now in the tutor's possession, "greater and more considerable poems of the same strain were to be found in the Highlands, and were well known to the natives there," he earnestly begged that any pieces remaining as yet untranslated in Macpherson's hands should forthwith be done into English and submitted to him, promising that he "would take care to circulate and bring them out to the public, by whom they well deserved to be known."

Macpherson demurred, objecting, in the first place, that no translation of his could do justice to the spirit and force of the original; and, secondly, that the poems would, he feared, "be very ill-received by the public, as so very different from the strain of modern ideas, and of modern, connected, and polished poetry." Finally, after vigorous and oft repeated importunity on the part of Blair, he consented, and, while still a member of the Balgowan family, completed the translation of some sixteen pieces.

"In June, 1760," writes Mr. Bailey Saunders, "these were published at Edinburgh, in a small, thin volume, under the title: Fragments of Ancient Poetry collected in the Highlands of Scotland, and translated from the Gaelic or Erse Language. Blair superintended their production, and, as the result of various conversations with Macpherson, himself wrote the preface."

The little volume, introduced to the public under auspices so favourable, achieved a wide and instantaneous success. David Hume and Horace Walpole, William Shonstone and Thomas Gray, were one and all loud in their praises of the "nature and noble wild imagination" of the Fragments, and impatient for further details respecting the Gaelic poetry and antiquities. The enthusiastic Blair, who by this time had got to the length of persuading himself that a formally complete epic of some 9,000 lines, dating from the third century, and composed by the blind prince-poet Ossian, son of Fingal, was lying derelict, as it were, in the Highlands, awaiting the advent of some one enterprising enough to undertake the task of collecting, transcribing, and arranging—the ardent Blair was resolved to take the tide at the flood, and accordingly wrote to Lord Hailes, expressing a desire that some scheme might be hit upon "for encouraging Mr. Macpherson to apply himself to the making a further collection of Earse poetry, and particularly for recovering OUR EPIC," and proposing a subscription to meet the incidental expense. He also appealed to Macpherson himself, urging him strongly, as in every respect the fittest man for the office, to undertake the double labour of searching and of gleaning and gathering up such "fragments" as his investigations should bring to light. Macpherson, however, shrank from the task proposed to him. In all probability he was secretly amused at the extravagant zeal displayed by Blair and one or two others: very possibly he was altogether sceptical as to the existence of the much-talked-of epic. There is, we must remember, not a particle of evidence to indicate that it was Macpherson who first spoke of the Gaelic pieces as "fragments" of an original epic. On the contrary, as Mr. Bailey Saunders very justly observes (p. 93, note 1), Blair's strenuous insistence on this point in his Critical Dissertation, published three years later on, points to the conclusion that it was he, and not Macpherson, who originally broached the idea. Indeed, if Macpherson ever gave a serious thought to the matter at all, he could hardly, one should think, fail to perceive that the pieces in question were not of an epic but of a lyric cast, and that, so far from presenting the appearance of detached fragments, they were rather each one severally complete in itself. It was doubtless all very well to listen gravely—with his tongue in his cheek—while Blair discoursed at large on the fragments of the noble epic now lying dispersed throughout the Highlands, and crying out for retrieval and restoration at the hands of some loyal son of the Feinne; but to go and look for the said fragments was quite another affair. Doubtless even then Macpherson felt confident that he could contrive to knead the rude lyrical ballads of the Gaels into a cake of the right epic leaven for such ultra-sentimental and enthusiastic critics as Dr. Hugh Blair; but then, how would this queer composition affect the palate of the age—an age, too, be it remembered, which (O sœculum insapiens et infacetum!) had suffered the original poems of James Macpherson to fall unheeded from the press? It is not difficult to understand the young man's reluctance to throw up his position as tutor, and thereby endanger his prospect of winning a certain livelihood, merely for the sake of so hazardous and (as he may very possibly have secretly believed) so chimerical a mission.

The Fragments, we have said, were published in June, 1760. In the following August Blair assembled the leading social and literary lights of Edinburgh at a dinner to which Macpherson also was bidden. Patrick Lord Elibank, Robertson the historian, John Home, Prof. Adam Ferguson, and many others were present; and, after much discussion, they finally prevailed on Macpherson to disengage himself from all other employment, and set out on his unique quest without delay. He received £100 (raised mainly by collection from those present at the dinner) to defray the expenses of his travels. Blair describes the effect of this meeting upon Macpherson in the following words:

"I remember well that when I was going away Mr. Macpherson followed me to the door, and told me that from the spirit of that meeting he now for the first time entertained the hope that the undertaking to which I had so often prompted him would be attended with success; that hitherto he had imagined they were merely romantic ideas which I had held out to him; but he now saw them likely to be realised, and should endeavour to acquit himself so as to give satisfaction to all his friends."

The true significance of this speech is obvious enough. Macpherson had, it is evident, been troubled with misgivings respecting the commercial side of Dr. Blair's scheme. He doubted whether the recovery of a supposed ancient epic was a matter in which sufficient public interest could be excited to make the labour of collecting, translating, and recasting a profitable one. But the enthusiasm displayed at the Edinburgh dinner sufficed to dispel all his fears on that score; and he now felt assured that, whatever might be the difficulties involved in it, the scheme was unquestionably one in which there was money. Accordingly he made up his mind to start at once, having a perfect understanding of what he was expected to find and bring back with him; and resolved that, whether originals were plenty or scarce, he at least would take good care not to return empty handed, or disappoint the confident expectations of the men who held the purse-strings.

Macpherson set out early in September, 1760. He journeyed through the shires of Perth and Argyle to the north-west district of Inverness; thence to Skye and the Hebrides, and subsequently to the coast of Argyleshire and the Island of Mull. Here and there he picked up a few MSS., and in many places took down in writing pieces from oral recitation; then, returning early in January, 1761, to Edinburgh, he settled in lodgings immediately below Blair's house at the head of Blackfriars' Wynd, and started without delay on the task of "translation." Just ten months later on, in the beginning of December, 1761, the result of his labours appeared in London, in the shape of a quarto volume, sold for half a guinea, and entitled Fingal.

Did Macpherson—could he, by any possibility—honestly believe that his Gaelic originals were in deed and in truth fragments of an ancient normal epic? Unluckily, both the old MSS. which he picked up in Skye and elsewhere, and also the rough copies he took down from the oral recitations of sundry Highlanders, have, under unexplained circumstances, wholly disappeared; so that, being unable to examine them for ourselves, we cannot speak positively as to their true character. But—putting aside Macpherson's unsupported statement respecting them—there is nothing whatsoever to lead us to suppose that these originals were in any respect other or better than the rude ballad poetry of a rude people, marked, indeed, by a vigorous though untrained picturesque faculty—a considerable power of direct and concrete description—as well as by frequent touches of a tender and simple pathos, but far removed from the skilful scene-painting, the tendency to high-flown, or, at times, to mawkish sentiment, and the stilted and bombastic magniloquence, which so prominently distinguish the style of Macpherson's "translations." Such remains of Gaelic poetry as the efforts of later investigators have succeeded in recovering are one and all of this plain and unsophisticated character; and if, indeed, it be true that the pieces recovered by Macpherson in 1760 were of a different and more artificial cast, it certainly is one of the most astonishing and vexatious accidents of literature that they should have every one of them perished, or at least disappeared beyond our reach. For supposing that they were different, however, we have not a shred of authority beyond the bare word of James Macpherson; and Mr. Bailey Saunders must really pardon us if, after carefully perusing his candid pages, we borrow a phrase from Dr. Johnson and say that what we have therein learned of Macpherson's morals inclines us to pay regard, not to what he may say, but to what he is able to prove.

We say nothing now of Macpherson's ludicrously inadequate knowledge of Gaelic (he was unable either to write or to spell it; and was often at a loss to understand the very meaning of the words, if we are to believe his assistant, Capt. Morrison); of his outrageous tamperings with the details of the story as given in the originals; of his ready cleverness in supplying connexions and interpolations of his own; and of many other extraordinary features which, according to the evidence even of his own friends, characterised his so-called "translation" of the Poems of Ossian (see Life: pp. 134-143). We simply desire to point out (1) that, apart from his bare word, there is not a scintilla of evidence that the pieces collected by Macpherson from the Highlanders were fragments of a single epic original; and (2) that, on the contrary, there does exist strong presumptive evidence that the pieces in question closely resembled, both in tone and in cast, the rough ballad-poetry of the ancient Gaels, as it is found, e.g., in the Leabhar na Feinne compiled by Mr. J. F.

Campbell, of Islay. From the time of his return, laden with the poetic spoil captured during his four months' raid in the Highlands, to his Edinburgh lodgings just below Blair's house (a significant juxtaposition!) Macpherson invariably wrote and spoke in the most unambiguous fashion respecting the character of what he had found. "I have been lucky enough," he writes to a friend on 16th January, 1761, "to lay my hands on a pretty complete poem, and truly epic, concerning Fingal. . . . I have some thoughts of publishing the original if it will not clog the work too much." In the same strain he writes, in the Preface to the first edition of Fingal: "How far it [the 'epic'] comes up to the rules of the Epopoea is the province of criticism to examine. It is only my business to lay it before the reader as I have found it." Now it is obvious that Macpherson could at any time have brought the truth of these statements to a decisive test by simply publishing the originals of the Poems of Ossian as they had come into his hands; and this, moreover, he had been often urged to do by both friends and foes. Johnson, on behalf of offended virtue, had fiercely challenged him:

Mocche putide, redde codicillos!

The gentlemen of the East India Company had respectfully approached him, tendering a douceur of one thousand guineas and demurely murmuring:

Pudice et probe, redde codicillos!

But all in vain; threats and cajolings alike had been lost upon the canny Scot who, with his pockets full of the Nabob of Arcot's gold, was content simply to ignore the assaults of his enemies, while eluding as best he might the importunities of his friends. Why, one may well ask, was this, if it was not from the dread lest, if the originals were published side by side with the "translation," it would at once become manifest to all men that the story and the names alone had been adopted from the Gaelic, while the expressions, the sentiment, and the scene-painting were substantially supplied by the "translator" himself? Such unquestionably is the conclusion at which ninety-nine out of a hundred men of plain common sense will arrive after duly weighing the facts and circumstances recited above; such, he must confess, is the inference which the present writer finds himself unable to avoid, after an honest attempt to arrive at a just theory of the question. And, this being so, he would venture to assess the damage, which the popular estimate of his character does to the memory of James Macpherson, at the sum of just one farthing.

T. HUTCHINSON.

St. Thomas's Priory; or, The Story of St. Austin's, Stafford. By Joseph Gillow. (Burns & Oates)

MR. GILLOW has produced an interesting book, but we must call in question the appropriateness of the title he has given to it. Nearly everyone will imagine that he has written a history of the Austin Priory of St. Thomas of Canterbury, which was founded about 1180 by a bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, or (as others say) by one of the Staffords. There is a very meagre and unsatisfactory account of this house in the Monasticon. We should be much pleased if Mr. Gillow would give us its annals in detail.

The volume before us takes up the history of one of its estates after the fall of the religious houses. The church of Baswich or Berkswich, a little way outside Stafford, belonged to the priory of St. Thomas. It was granted to Rowland Lee, one of Henry VIII.'s courtier-bishops, in 1539. Lee died before the king, leaving his estates among his nephews, sons of his sister Isabel, who had married Roger Fowler, a scion of a Buckinghamshire family of that name. The husband and wife both died early, and the bishop discharged the function of guardian to his infant nephews and nieces. The priory, which seems to have been a rich inheritance, devolved on Brian Fowler, who married Jane, daughter and heiress of one of the Flintshire Hammers.

The Fowlers were staunch Catholics. From the early days of Queen Elizabeth to the last century they seem not only to have maintained the faith in their own persons, but to have done all they could for the support of their religion in Stafford. It is difficult for us, living in times so widely different, to estimate the amount of self-sacrifice which this constancy must have entailed during all those long years of bitter persecution.

William Fowler, the last male representative of the line, died in 1716. By a will dated 1712 he left the whole of his large property, with the exception of a small legacy to his sister, to his nephew-in-law, Richard Betham, of Rowington, whose only daughter and heiress married Thomas Belaysse, fourth Viscount Fauconberg. The will was duly proved, its provisions acted upon, and Lord Fauconberg entered into possession of the estates. It afterwards transpired that William Fowler had made a later will, in 1715, by which he divided his estates equally between the heirs of his two sisters. This will was in the custody of Christopher Ward, an attorney at Stafford. Why he kept it from the knowledge of those interested in it has never been explained. It is difficult to suppose that he could have forgotten the existence of so important a document; and yet, so far as could be ascertained, he had no interest in its suppression. Ward died in 1724; and his son, in looking over his father's papers, found the will, which he at once showed to Lord Aston of Tixall, the chief trustee of the Fowler estates. Lord Fauconberg of course disputed the genuineness of this latter will, which had been so strangely sprung upon him. Wearisome proceedings in Chancery followed. The case came before the House of Lords in 1733, when it was decided that the estates should be shared equally between the representatives of William Fowler's two sisters. Thus Lord Fauconberg was required to surrender a moiety of the property; but as he had acted in good faith, he was not called upon to refund any part of the income which he had received in past years. The case made a great sensation, not only in legal circles, but throughout the whole country. It is by no means forgotten in Staffordshire at the present time.

Mr. Gillow gives minute details as to the priests who have ministered to the Stafford Catholics from the times of Elizabeth to the present day. We believe that he is very accurate in facts and dates. Wherever we have been able to test him, he has not proved wanting.

The account of Daniel Fitter, who had charge of the Stafford mission during the frenzy of the Oates plot, is of some historical interest, as he "evaded imprisonment, and possibly death," by taking the oath of supremacy. Some few of his friends followed his example, but nearly all the English Catholics continued to regard it as unlawful. The exiles in Paris issued a declaration condemning the oath. We have no doubt that they were right, but it is highly probable that Fitter acted in good conscience.

Mr. Gillow has, we understand, made very large collections regarding all the missions, chaplaincies, and missionary stations which have existed throughout England since the death of Queen Mary I. It is much to be desired that they should be arranged for publication and given to the world.

EDWARD PEACOCK.

The Tragedies of Euripides in English Verse. By Arthur S. Way. Vol. I. (Macmillans.)

MR. WAY won his spurs as a translator by his versions of the Iliad and Odyssey; he certainly will not lose them by the present work, if vols. ii. and iii. prove as good as vol. i. It is strange, but appears (Pref., p. viii.) to be the fact, that no complete translation of Euripides into English verse has been achieved in this century. Of course, the leading plays have been rendered fairly often, especially the "Alcestis." It is with some surprise that we note that the "Hecuba" (if Mr. Way's knowledge is complete) has only once been translated (by Beesley) since the versions by Potter and Wodhull more than a hundred years ago. We suppose the prose versions have had it all their own dull way.

In one point at all events we applaud Mr. Way without reserve: he is determined that the choric odes shall appear in the dress of English poems, not in that would-be-facsimile of the Greek which is so hard to read, so impossible to admire. He even thinks that rhyme is, if not essential, highly conducive to fidelity, properly understood; and he reminds us, with great truth and cogency, that "the Greek no more suspected a great dramatist of neglecting any means whereby he might satisfy his hearers' demand, not only for noble thought, but for musical expression, than of begrudging them aught of his treasures of experience and imagination." And his method is, to take an English metre, often a quite modern one, into which, "for him, the great thoughts of the ancient master most felicitously run" (Pref., p. ix.), and to do his best with it. All depends, of course, on the tact and metrical instinct of the translator, whether the new form suits the old matter, or merely reminds us of another modern poem. With what success Mr. Way uses this method may best be shown by an example: this is the close of the chorus—ἔγω καὶ δὴ Μούρας (Aleestis, ll. 961-1006; pp. 50-1).

"Thee, friend, bath the Goddess gripped; from her hands never wrestler hath slipped.

Yet be strong to endure: never mourning shall bring our beloved returning

From the nethergloom up to the light.

Yea, the heroes of Gods begotten,

They fade into darkness, forgotten

In death's chill night.

Dear was she in days ere we lost her,

Dear yet, though she lie with the dead.

None nobler shall Earth-mother foster

Than thou wife of thy bed.

Not as mounds of the dead who have died, so account we the tomb of thy bride,

But O, let the worship and honour that we render to Gods rest upon her:

Unto her let the wayfarer pray.

As he treadeth the pathway that trendeth

Aside from the highway, and bendeth

At her shrine, he shall say:

'Her life for her lord's was given;

With the Blest now abides she on high.

Hail, Queen, show us grace from thine heaven!

Even so shall they cry."

That is an average, not an exceptional, specimen of Mr. Way's choric renderings; and we think he takes high rank among those who have attempted the task. Whatever minor faults, and whatever modernism, pervade his verse, he avoids the one great fault—that of stiffness—which spoils so many meritorious efforts. Of his blank verse, the following is a good specimen—it is Medea's farewell to her children (p. 106):

"O children, children, yours a city is,
And yours a home, where, leaving wretched me,
Dwell shall ye, of your mother aye bereft.
... O me accurst in this my ruthless mood!
For nought, for nought, my babes, I nurtured
you,

And all for nought I laboured, travail-worn,
Bearing sharp anguish in your hour of birth.
Ah for the hopes—unhappy!—all mine hopes
Of ministering hands about mine age,
Of dying folded round with loving arms,
All men's desire! But now—'tis past—'tis past,
That sweet imagining! Forlorn of you
A bitter life and woeful shall I waste.
Your mother never more with loving eyes
Shall ye behold, passed to another life.
Woe! woe! why gaze your eyes on me, my darlings?

Why smile to me the latest smile of all?
Alas! what shall I do? Mine heart is failing
As I behold my children's laughing eyes!"

This is more like Euripides than is the choric passage; on the other hand, it is less remarkable, though very readable, as verse. But the forcible style is maintained right through the six plays. So far as we know, Euripides has nowhere else been so vigorously presented. Sometimes, however, the expansion appears to be unduly great. It is hard to blame the pretty poem (pp. 184-5) that represents the short chorus in the "Hippolytus" (ll. 1268-81); but thirty-two lines for fourteen is a considerable metamorphosis.

It is worth noticing that, by some misarrangement, the last few pages (from 346 onwards) of the "Ion" are not only out of order, but jumbled-up with the beginning of the "Suppliants"—in our copy at all events. On p. 260, l. 3, "born" should surely be "borne." We do not quite like "nethergloom" as a substantive, still less as an adjective (p. 53), nor (p. 208) "shorn throat" for "severed"; nor the tendency (p. 148 and elsewhere) to combine "utter" with adjectives—"utter-shameful words"; nor the rhyming of "rest me" with "blessed ye" (p. 15), "in me" with "win thee" (p. 23). But on the whole Mr. Way has deserved thoroughly well of Euripides—not least, perhaps, in the very fine prefatory sonnet to him; the last lines are excellent:

"That high heaven
Where he, who sang of triumph-erimsoned seas,
And thou, through whom things common touched the spheres,
Twin-throned, while hand to hand of brother
clave,
Smiled scorn of Gods on Aristophanes—
A satyr mocking orphaned Athens' tears—
Saw from the stars frogs croaking o'er a grave."

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE "IMITATIO CHRISTI."

Prolegomena zu einer neuen Ausgabe der Imitatio Christi. Nach dem Autograph des Thomas von Kempen u. s. w. von Karl Hirsche. Bd. III. (Berlin: Carl Habel.)

TWENTY years ago Dr. Hirsche published the first volume of his Prolegomena, and pointed out the need of a new edition of the works of Thomas à Kempis in order to put in a clear light his right to be considered the author of the Imitatio Christi. He showed the importance of the Thomas MS. at Brussels, especially as it contained a complicated system of punctuation and of accentuation which brought to view a rhythm, and in many places rhymes, which gave a new charm not only to the four treatises forming the Imitatio, but to the other works in the same MS. In 1882 a second volume followed, in which was a selection of passages or Chrestomathy from the undisputed works of Thomas, compelling the reader's attention to the similarity existing between them and passages of the Imitatio. A third volume was to have contained the completion of Dr. Hirsche's researches; but delays occurred owing to an affection of the eyes, and in July, 1892, he died without having accomplished his task. In the volume now before us we have all that he was able to write, — it was in fact printed during his lifetime—giving us "a proof of Thomas' authorship of the Imitatio from its contents and from the MSS."

Dr. Hirsche gives an elaborate exposition of the four books, which he maintains are to be considered as distinct works. He points out the manner of composition as well as the characteristics observable in all the works of Thomas as he himself has described them in the prologue to the Soliloquium, where he compares himself to a gardener who, "by planting trees and flowers, changes a meadow into a pleasant park;" for here we find pictorial grouping, not the unfolding of a complete system out of one or several fundamental thoughts, but rather the illumination of objects from various standpoints. He does not dwell on doctrines and their exposition, his interest as a writer turns to the Life itself; his writings are for edification.

In 1652, the Thomas MS. was sent from Brussels to Paris for examination, and met with a very unfavourable reception. The commissioners considered it a very bad MS., and condemned it for the transposition of the fourth book, for its solecisms, for its errors, and for its erasures and corrections. This report, which is reprinted by Dr. Hirsche, shows the strong prejudices they felt on account of their desire to proclaim as the author Chancellor Gerson, whose claims are now even in France acknowledged to be impossible from the fact of his not having been a monk, as well as from his well-known polemical character; and it is also opposed to the facts, for all who see the codex at the present day agree with Dr. Hirsche as to its beauty and correctness. Corrections there are, but not more than in other MSS.; and as to the solecisms, out of the thirty-three found thirty are in the Codex Gerardi-Montensis, a MS. of which they approved. It is a singular fact, that M. Gence, who had not seen the Brussels MS., but had relied on the accuracy of the observation of the French savants, took for the principal text of his edition this codex; and yet his text is closer to that of the Brussels than to that of the Gerardi-Montensis MS. Dr. Hirsche examined with much care the latter MS., and found it very correct; he has also examined and described many of the MSS. written during the lifetime of Thomas, and found that the majority closely resemble the Brussels MS., even in the matter of punctuation and accentuation.

We should have been glad if Dr. Hirsche had been able to complete his work by examining the contemporary evidence; but on this point we have the work of Rev. S. Kettlewell (who is also now lost to us) and of Dr. Cruise. Dr. Hirsche satisfactorily demonstrated "those voices which unite in witnessing in favour of Thomas": (1) the system of punctuation so complicated as to be rare among works of the middle ages; (2) the Germanisms which proclaim the nationality of the author; (3) those undoubted expressions in which the author proclaims himself a monk; (4) the arrangement of thought and the divisions of paragraphs, preference being given everywhere to co-ordinating sentences; (5) the contents.

The author had dictated to his wife a German translation of the first book of the Imitatio, and this has been added to the volume. It shows all the peculiarities of punctuation and accentuation, as was also done in the English rhythmical translation by the "Clerk of Oxenford," of which the late Canon Liddon said:

"The mind is led by the poetical arrangement to dwell with a new intelligence and intensity upon clauses and words, and discern with new eyes their deeper meanings, their relation to each other, and to the whole of which they are parts."

L. A. WHEATLEY.

Poor Folk: a Novel. Translated from the Russian of Fedor Dostoevski by Lena Milman, with an Introduction by George Moore. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

WE are glad to see that an English translation has appeared of the celebrated novel of Dostoevski, Biednie Liudi, the first-fruits of his genius. It is a truly pathetic tale, and at once made its mark in Russia. Dostoevski, who up to that time had been an obscure writer, was now destined, as Byron said, "to wake up and find himself famous." The novelist, however, in his own life exemplified the truth contained in the fine sonnet of John Forster:

"Genius and its rewards are briefly told,
A liberal nature and a niggard dome,
A difficult journey to a splendid tomb."

It was indeed a prolonged struggle, and showed the world anew—what it has too often seen—a man of genius compelled to grind at the mill, and to bequeath his fine legacies to posterity under the pressure of physical pain and pecuniary need.

The epistolary novel is somewhat exploded among ourselves, although we can show a long catena of such productions from the days of Richardson to some of the productions of the late Wilkie Collins. Dostoevski appears to have been fond of this form of composition; among his other works may be found one entitled "A Novel in Nine Letters" (Roman v' devyati pismakh). Still, this somewhat clumsy form need not, as Mr. George Moore remarks in his preface, deduct from the value of a work of art.

The translation of Miss Milman appears to be well done so far as we have compared it with the original, though, of course, the delightful pet names are wanting and all expressive diminutives of noun and adjective in which the Russian language is so rich. These defy translation; and at the same time the inscriptions at the beginning of the letters, varying between the most arch tenderness and the usual formalities, cannot be exactly kept up in an English version. A few notes are added. It is difficult to make the English reader thoroughly perceive the force of the allusions in all cases. Thus, the juxtaposition of Homer and Baron Brambens—the nom de guerre of Senkowski, the once well-known Russian man of letters and Aristarchus of the forties—is humorous and is not made sufficiently clear. There is also humour in the names: thus, Dievushkin seems very appropriate to the man who bears it.

Not only was this the first book produced by Dostoevski, but it was finished by him with more care than most of the others. It was written as a complete work, and not piecemeal for the magazines, as the remainder were. For our novelist wrote always more or less under pressure. His correspondence is full of altercations with publishers about copy. Even some of our own authors have worked under great disadvantages in this way, and have been frequently led into strange inconsistencies in their stories. Not only did Harrison Ainsworth put a gentleman into the Tower in one number of his novel, and describe him as at large in the following number; but a far greater man, Dickens, made some extraordinary slips, which were always carefully corrected when the novel made its appearance in a complete form.

We may remark that the name Polkan for a dog, occurring in Poor Folk, is a common one in Russia for that animal, and is taken from a sprite more or less mischievous in their folklore. It occurs also in the clever story of Gogol, "The Papers of a Madman" (Zapiski Sumashedshago). We must leave the reader to the enjoyment of this delightful piece of fiction, full of pathetic incidents, such as that of the poor old man following the funeral of the student. The book is well printed, but has a strangely ornamented cover. Mr. George Moore has furnished a preface. We will not quarrel with him for what he has written. We will only remark that good wine needs no bush, and certainly Dostoevski gives us very good wine, such as:

"Forever sets our table praising."

W. R. MORFILL.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN AMERICA.

Public Libraries in America. By William I. Fletcher. Columbian Knowledge Series. No. II. (Sampson Low.)

Statistics of Public Libraries in the United States and Canada. By Weston Flint. Bureau of Education: Circular of Information, No. 7. 1893. (Washington: Government Printing Office.)

THESE two American books both deal with the same subject, but appeal to different audiences. Mr. Flint's careful compilation is intended for specialists, and is one of the numerous excellent monographs issued by the United States Bureau of Education. Dr. W. T. Harris, in a characteristic introduction, brings out some of the wider considerations as to the work of the modern public library. In this institution, conjointly with the school and the newspaper, he sees the potent instrument of a national and international elevation of the people.

"This threefold means of education increases, with greater and greater rapidity, the diffusion of local self-government. There is a brain for each pair of hands. Each brain avails itself by means of the printed page of the labours of all other brains. Life becomes vicarious. Each human being lives his life not only for himself but as a lesson for all his fellowmen. Others may use his successful experiments and avoid repeating his unsuccessful ones."

Mr. Fletcher's book is more popular in form; and, while specialists may use it with advantage, it is addressed to a wider public, and is written in a missionary spirit. The public library is the necessary complement of the public school; but notwithstanding rapid progress in the United States, there are still many communities destitute of any collection of books freely accessible to rich and poor. Mr. Fletcher shows the necessity of such an institution; and where that necessity is acknowledged, his book will aid in supplying it wisely and well. After a sketch of the history and development of the American public system he discusses buildings, classification, cataloguing, management, selection of books, reference-work, the training of the librarian, and the American Library Association. Then follow accounts of a few representative libraries, special libraries, public libraries in Canada, and a forecast of the future. An interesting appendix gives a list of a few libraries having special collections, and another records gifts exceeding 50,000 dollars. Thus Chicago has received 2,000,000 dollars from Mr. W. N. Newberry, 3,000,000 dollars from Mr. John Crerar, 200,000 dollars from Mr. Hiram Kelly, and 60,000 dollars from Mr. J. W. Scoville. It would not be easy to point to individual benefactions so large in this country.

The book is well printed, has not only views of some of the greater libraries, but portraits of George Ticknor, Justin Winsor, A. R. Spofford, and W. F. Poole. When last summer I had the pleasure in the Newberry Library at Chicago of discussing with Dr. Poole the prospects of that institution, it did not seem at all likely that bibliography would so soon have to lament his loss. But his influence remains, and he has impressed something of his spirit both on England and America.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

NEW NOVELS.

A Vagabond in Arts. By Algernon Gissing. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

In a Cinque Port: a Story of Winchelsea. By E. M. Hewitt. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

The Mystery of the Patrician Club. By Albert D. Vandam. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

Joanna Traill, Spinster. By Annie E. Holdsworth. "Pioneer Series." (Heinemann.)

A Pastor's Vengeance: a Tale of the North Sea. By Walter Wood. (Frederick Warne.)

No Heroes. By Blanche Willis Howard. (Gay & Bird.)

MR. ALGERNON GISSING'S novels are always clever, and they have that "fundamental brainwork," as Rossetti called it, which is more satisfying than any mere cleverness. A Vagabond in Arts is, however, either too clever or not quite clever enough; its brainwork, though always in evidence, is somehow unconvincing and ineffective; it reads like a riddle to which the answer is withheld. Everybody talks a great deal, and the conversation is either of abstract topics or of personal topics treated in such an abstract manner that the reader cannot feel he has any grip either of the talk or the talkers: they are up in the air rather than on the solid earth. He gets a vague feeling that the book has been written with some set purpose other than the mere commonplace purpose of telling a story; but he cannot for the life of him say what that purpose is, and the inability induces a feeling of discomfort, almost of irritation. The most prominent person in the story is a young man bearing the curious name of Shiel Wanless; and it is difficult to decide whether Mr. Gissing intends him to be a hopeless prig, or simply a well-built human vessel which is unfortunate in being laden with too much deck cargo for the amount of ballast in the hold. His father, a country clergyman of moderate means, pinches himself to pay for his boy's university career, and even goes so far as to incur a debt of £1,000, which he can only repay by the sacrifice of his beloved library. When the youth for whom these sacrifices have been made has taken his degree, he announces his determination to decline every post which is offered, because he has formed a theory of irresponsibility which would be discredited were he to do what every sane and honest young man does without a theory at all. While at Oxford he has rescued from suicide a feather-headed girl, who has been seduced by one of his college companions; and this young man, whom he exhorts and threatens, becomes his father's creditor for the £1,000 already mentioned, which is a complication, though nothing special comes of it. Then the seduced becomes in turn the seducer, and the virtuous Shiel falls, but he is as irresponsible as ever; so the girl marries someone else, and again attempts suicide, this time successfully. Then Shiel becomes a shepherd, and is congratulated by his father upon having thus solved some "problem," the nature of which is, to one reader at least, a dark mystery. But, indeed, A Vagabond in Arts is from first to last a very bewildering book.

The writer of In a Cinque Port has sufficient imagination to feel the charm of the once prosperous, but now decayed, port of Winchelsea; but still more strongly has she felt the finer charm of those transfigured glimpses of the little town that we find in the fragmentary pages of Denis Duval upon which the pen of a great master fell at the touch of death. Miss Hewitt, for so we must style her at a venture, is by no means a Thackeray, but she has written a pleasant story, though I think it might have been made both more pleasant and more congruous by the omission of that narrative element which seems to have been suggested by the reports of the Maybrick trial. In a book of this kind, with a quiet old-world background, and a general suggestion of repose in the treatment, the presence of anything like common melodrama seems an intrusion; and, though the story of the mysterious Rachel Earl, who flits through the novel in an uncanny sort of way, has its touches of grace and pathos, it is essentially melodramatic. Indeed, the construction and movement of the whole mechanism of the narrative has the awkwardness so often found in the work of the amateur. The charm of the book—and that it has a real charm will be denied by nobody—lies less in its outlines than in its atmosphere; less in its characters and incidents than in the skill and sympathy with which Miss Hewitt renders the gracious quiet and curious remoteness of the life with which she deals. But what of the title? I write at a distance from histories and encyclopædias; but I surely learnt at school that the cinque ports were Romney, Sandwich, Hastings, Hythe, and Dover.

The main defect of The Mystery of the Patrician Club is a scarcity of mystery. There hardly ever was a story with anything of a complicated plot that was less mysterious than the story told—and in the main cleverly told—by Mr. Vandam. Gustave Dubois, a card-room waiter at the Patrician Club, is found murdered in a West-End by-street: and at the opening of the story the coroner—a most expansive coroner he is—announces to his friends that the murderer will prove to be a member of that very aristocratic association. Suspicion does indeed fall upon one of the Patricians, a certain Jack Edmundsbury, so called apparently because he has been christened James; but it is speedily transferred from him to the objectionable peer Lord Brackelonde. By the time the reader has got through the first few chapters he can have no possible doubt whatever that in his lordship the true criminal has been found; and there is nothing to fill the remainder of the two volumes but the story of how he was hunted down by the detective Jasper Davenport, who has private reasons for regarding the wicked nobleman with undying hatred. It may be this hatred which prompts him to play with his victim as a cat with a mouse, but even on such a theory his conduct is barely explicable. More than once he has Brackelonde in his clutches, but on some pretext he allows him to escape, and runs the risk of losing him altogether; indeed, he finally does lose him, though the loss is not of a kind to interfere with the execution of poetic justice. It is impossible to think that the general scheme of Mr. Vandam's plot is altogether satisfactory, but some of its details are ingeniously planned, and the book is very readable.

Joanna Traill, Spinster, is a good story of its kind, but it would have been considerably improved by even the slightest infusion of humour. It cannot be accused of the mortal sin of didacticism, but its uniformity of seriousness strikes one as being somewhat unnecessary; and a sad ending which is not in the least inevitable but perfectly gratuitous is a thing that it is always hard to forgive. There was no reason whatever why Joanna should die a spinster. After many worries in the performance of a difficult duty she was surely entitled to something in the way of personal gladness; and as the wife of the worthy philanthropist Boas she would have attained that comfort, had not Miss Holdsworth extemporised an attack of diphtheria and carried her off. This is too bad. It is not art: it is what is colloquially termed "cussedness." For the rest, the book merits nothing but praise. When Joanna is introduced to us she is a dull, colourless, single woman, who has submitted so long to the domination of her married sister and brother-in-law that she has no will of her own. Then she meets Mr. Boas, and becomes so much interested in his schemes that she actually dares to assert herself, and to become his active ally in the rescue of the stranded waif Christine. It is not an easy business; and it is rendered all the more difficult by the conduct of the prig Bevan, who, after professing the most ardent love for Miss Traill's protégée, heartlessly turns his back upon her the moment he hears from her own lips the story of her past. This is probably the incident for the sake of which the book has been written, but it is the weakest thing in it nevertheless. Men may be poor things, but such a combination of the Pharisee and the cad as Miss Holdsworth has chosen to present to us in Bevan must be as rare as the blackest of black swans—at any rate far too rare to be exhibited to the world as a masculine type. Ladies of Pioneer Clubs and Pioneer literature are too fond of giving themselves and their cause away by this kind of exaggeration.

One shilling shocker is very like another, and probably it would be unjust to say that A Pastor's Vengeance is more absurd than the average specimen of its tribe. But it is quite absurd enough. It is about a dissenting minister who starts on a wild goose chase of a missing claimant whose cause he has espoused. The task develops into a pursuit of the claimant's supposed murderer, who is finally discovered to be the pastor's long lost brother; so the Rev. Henry Sanderson naturally wishes that he had stuck to his sermons and prayer-meetings. It might have been better, only in that case Mr. Wood would have had no story to tell.

Miss Blanche Willis Howard writes as pleasantly for young folk as for their seniors, and boys and girls who do not insist on exciting adventure will enjoy No Heroes. English boys, even if they be the sons of country doctors, are not generally called upon to nurse a cantankerous peddler through an attack of small pox, and Bob Rea's experiences will therefore have the charm of novelty. There is only one disappointment: Miss Howard stops short of the story of Bob's deferred voyage, but perhaps she is keeping it for another book. If so, the readers of No Heroes have something to look forward to.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME COUNTRY BOOKS.

The Friendship of Nature. By Mabel Osgood Wright. (Macmillans.) The dainty size and the subject matter make this a book for outdoor reading, but it reaches us only when the days are short and the winds begin to blow cold. Even under the disadvantage of being read in the house, its merit is apparent. It is a really delightful study of nature, made in New England—a literary rather than a scientific study, but still careful in matters of fact. We note with satisfaction that the author's love of birds is sufficiently genuine to make her disapprove of the barbarous practice of caging them. In fact, the book throughout is free from the sentimental affectations which often mar works of this kind. The closing pages contain a passage from an unpublished letter by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes concerning Old Age, a subject on which he often touches, and must be regarded as an authority. It was written when he was only about seventy years old, and of course his experience in the matter was then much less than it is now. We take leave to reproduce it:

"It is a mixed kind of feeling with which one reaches the top of this Pisgah, and peeps over into the mists that hover over Jordan. I felt as if Bryant was old and out of sight on his seventieth birthday; but now—bless me! why, what did the Psalmist mean with his 'three score years and ten'? Think of Tennyson, of Gladstone, of Disraeli, of the stout old fellows who ride to the hounds in England—of old Radetsky—and the possibilities—think of Thomas Parr! Think of Henry Jenkins! That is the way one feels and talks to himself when he finds himself driven into that fast-narrowing corner, where the drivers—the deaf, inexorable years—have at last edged us almost without our knowing they were driven. The horizon flies as we travel westward, the sun goes back as it did for Joshua. At fifty years seventy seemed like sunset. At seventy we find it is as yet only cheerful, shining afternoon. Nature has more artifices than all the human conjurers that ever lived."

In connexion with this our present author remarks:

"Age and winter should take for their sign the witch-hazel, the flower of unconquered hope. There is no winter or age for the heart that feels nature's throbbings and crowns the earth's beauty with human brotherhood."

A pretty sentiment, gracefully expressed.

Agricultural Zoology. By Dr. J. Ritzema Bos. Translated by J. R. Ainsworth Davis. (Chapman & Hall). This is a meritorious attempt to give the farmer in one small volume a useful account of his friends and foes among the various forms of animated life which surround him. Unluckily farmers never read, at least in England, but the book strongly appeals to all lovers of the country. It takes up class after class of animals, gives a brief description of each, with its value or harmfulness to crops, and is well illustrated with 149 figures. Those of the viper and snake and the wasp are indeed excellent. Miss Eleanor Ormerod contributes a preface, in which she vouches for "the great amount of valuable information which she constantly derives from the study of the writings of Dr. Ritzema Bos on Agricultural Zoology." The insects, ticks, and lower forms of life generally are carefully treated in this compendium. Fishes are described, but summarily dismissed as "being without exception aquatic." Occasionally a naturalist would demur to some of the statements which Mr. Davis has allowed to pass. When it is asserted, for instance, that the water-shrew "is very injurious to fishing and fish-breeding, since it devours the small fish and kills the larger ones, eating out their eyes and brains": this savours of folk-lore rather than of exact science. Again, the remark that "the following species, occurring in England, are predominately harmful for killing domestic mammals: the sea eagle, golden eagle, peregrine falcon, merlin, hobby, kite, goshawk, harrier, and sparrow-hawk," is simply a tissue of mistakes. To begin, the last-named bird is the only one in the list which is at all common. The rest are either exceedingly rare or extinct in England; and when they do appear never harm domestic mammals, but live exclusively on game and wild creatures. With regard to most of these birds Lord Macaulay's remark would apply: "Should one be captured, men would crowd to gaze at it as at a Bengal tiger or a Polar bear." The water rat, again, is almost certainly a vegetarian and never touches flesh, so that it is a libel to accuse it, as does Dr. Bos, of "eagerly devouring chickens and the eggs of ducks and geese." These misdeeds are to be put down to its cousin, the brown, or house, rat. The biology of the lower forms of animals and the injury they do to crops are the best parts of the book. These pages alone would, as Miss Ormerod suggests, render it worthy of a place in farm and school libraries.

Woodside, Burnside, Hillside, and Marsh. By J. W. Tutt (Sonnenschein). Let no one be deterred from reading this little volume because of the numerous books of the kind which have been published of late years. Mr. Tutt is a practised entomologist, and knows, moreover, how to describe in familiar language the creatures in which he is interested. They may be said to form the staple of the book. Then he shows the structure of many common rustic plants, and every now and then pleasantly introduces topics which prove that he is acquainted with the speculations of Darwin and Sir John Lubbock. Illustrations are carefully appended. Birds and beasts are also treated, but these might well have been spared for more entomological knowledge. Should any one be in want of a book to help him in unravelling the wonders of common natural history in the country, Mr. Tutt's work can be honestly recommended. He must be a good naturalist who does not learn much from its pages. For a family going from town for a rustic holiday, the book, with its capital index, is exactly what is required to enable birds, moths, and flowers to be identified and, still better, understood. It is a pleasure to commend it.

Ponds and Rock Pools. By Henry Scherren. (The Religious Tract Society.) Half-a-dozen chapters on the microscopic inmates of standing water contain not only hints on collecting these animalcules, but also a life-history of most of the species. A multiplicity of books and papers has appeared on the subject, but there is ample room for Mr. Scherren's essays, which were originally printed in the pages of the Leisure Hour. They give a regular history of most of the inhabitants of ponds and sea-pools which are likely to fall under the notice of a young biological student. Careful looking through the book shows that it forms a good popular manual of the Brachion, Vorticellae, and other low forms of life which do not demand the higher powers of the microscope. The outfit for pond-hunting forms the subject of the first chapter, after which, aided by Mr. Scherren's pages and the excellent illustrations which stud them, the student ought to find no difficulty in advancing in the knowledge of these elementary creatures. That the book is brought up to the present level of knowledge is apparent from the fact that Amoeba is no longer described, as of old, to be an amorphous lump of jelly-like cells, but is shown to possess intelligent movement, with powers of eating and digesting. When its lowness in the scale of life is borne in mind, it is not surprising to find that its mode of reproduction is the simplest known in the animal world.

A Naturalist on the Prowl. By EHA. With Illustrations by R. A. Sterndale. (Thacker.) The Anglo-Indian who chooses to be known by the ugly pseudonym of EHA, has here added a third volume to the series that began ten years ago—before Mr. Rudyard Kipling's appearance—with The Tribes on my Frontier. If we cannot say that he has kept his best wine until the last, it must be admitted that his somewhat peculiar vein of humour has been little impaired by a lengthy sojourn in the East. And he is distinctly to be congratulated on having found a new illustrator, who is at home among the fauna and avifauna of the jungle, though we do not know that his pencil has ever before condescended to insects. On previous occasions the author has written about household pets—and pests; he now goes further afield, and describes with equal vivacity his experience as an observer and collector out-of-doors. We know not whether to admire most the enthusiasm which impelled him to pursue butterflies under tropical heat, or the accuracy with which he describes the mode of life of his prey. About birds, too, he has a good deal that is interesting to tell: how the black eagle plunders the nests of small birds, and, again, how it practises swooping for pleasure over the sea. It is pleasant to know that, despite the overwhelming pressure of desk-work, India still has some officials who can enjoy the abundant feast that the country everywhere spreads before the eyes of observant naturalists.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. FROUDE'S Oxford Lectures on the Life and Letters of Erasmus will be published by Messrs. Longmans next week.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have in preparation a series of volumes, to be entitled "The Jewish Library," under the general editorship of Mr. Joseph Jacobs. Each volume will give in literary form the results of recent research by Jewish scholars here and abroad on points of Jewish history, life, and thought, which are likely to be of interest to the general public. Among the volumes already arranged for are: Aspects of Rabbinic Theology, by Mr. S. Schechter, reader in Rabbinic at Cambridge; Jewish Social Life in the Middle Ages, by Mr. Israel Abrahams, one of the editors of the Jewish Quarterly Review; The Return of the Jews to England, by Mr. Lucien Wolf, president of the Jewish Historical Society; The Jewish Prayer Book: its History and Relation to Christian Ritual, by the Rev. S. Singer; Jewish Ethics, by the Rev. Morris Joseph; The Jewish Race: a Study in National Character, by the editor.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co., encouraged by the success of their cheap re-issue of the novels of Mr. Blackmore and Mr. Clark Russell, have determined to bring out a companion series of standard works of travel and adventure, with illustrations. The following seven volumes will appear before Christmas: Father Ohrwalder's Ten Years' Captivity in the Camp of the Mahdi; E. F. Knight's The Cruise of the "Falcon"; H. M. Stanley's How I found Livingstone; Sir W. F. Butler's The Great Lone Land; Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes's Our Hundred Days in Europe; Walter B. Harris's The Land of an African Sultan; and Lord Randolph Churchill's Men, Mines, and Animals in South Africa.

MR. GLADSTONE has consented to write the General Introduction to a work to be issued next spring by the Henry O. Shepard Company, of Chicago, under the title of The People's Pictorial Bible History. Among other European contributors are Archdeacon Farrar, Prof. Sayce, and Prof. Agar Beet. The work will embrace a complete treatment of Bible history in the light of recent investigations, and will be copiously illustrated from the masterpieces of famous artists. The general editor is the Rev. Dr. G. C. Lorimer, of Boston.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will be the publisher in England—and Messrs. Scribner in America—of Mr. Frederick Wedmore's new volume of short pieces, English Episodes, which will be ready to appear in October.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce an English translation of the works of Marcus Aurelius, with an introductory essay on his place in philosophy, by Principal Readall, of University College, Liverpool.

THE series of literary confessions, entitled "My First Book," which have been appearing in the Idler, will be published shortly in a volume by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, with nearly two hundred illustrations and a prefatory story by Mr. Jerome K. Jerome.

MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON announce for immediate publication an edition of The Historical and Political Odes of Horace, by the Rev. A. J. Church, and Stories from Ovid, edited for schools by Mr. A. H. Allcroft. The same publishers have in preparation The Oxford Manuals of English History, edited by Mr. Oman, of All Souls, of which the volume dealing with the Stuart period will be ready on October 1; and a new series of "Modern French Texts," edited by Mrs. F. Storr, the first volume of which—the Letters of Paul Louis Courier—will be issued immediately. Among Messrs. Blackie's other announcements may be mentioned Readings from Carlyle, edited by W. Keith Leask, and a new and enlarged edition of Prof. Bernthsen's Organic Chemistry.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON will publish in the autumn a new work by Dr. Stalker, entitled The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ. The author's Imago Christi has just appeared in a Bulgarian translation; but the chapter on "Christ in the State" had to be considerably modified by the translator, the Rev. Robert Thomson, of Constantinople, in order to meet the views of the censor.

DR. SPARROW SIMPSON's third volume on the history of St. Paul's is announced for immediate publication, by Messrs. Elliot Stock. It is entitled St. Paul's Cathedral and Old City Life, and deals mainly with the period from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century. It will be illustrated with many curious views and facsimiles of old plates.

HESBA STRETTON's new work, entitled The Highway of Sorrow, dealing with the tragic story of the Stundists, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. early in October, and simultaneously in America. In the preparation of the book the author has had the assistance of a well-known Russian writer now an exile in England.

ANNIE S. SWAN's new novel, A Lost Ideal, will be issued by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, in one volume, on October 1, two months before its completion as a serial.

AN anonymous novel entitled A New Note will be issued by Messrs. Hutchinson in about a fortnight. The same firm will publish next week a volume of sad and humorous stories by Mr. Robert Barr, under the title of The Face and the Mask.

MISS CLEMENTINA BLACK has completed a work of fiction dealing with strikes and strike leaders, and showing the inner working of the Trades Unions. It will be published on October 1, by Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Foster.

A Born Soldier, by John Strange Winter, in one volume, and Peter's Wife, by the author of "Molly Bawn," in three volumes, will be published immediately by Messrs. F. V. White & Co.

A COLLECTION of practical papers on The Art of Writing Fiction will be published immediately by Messrs. Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co. The contributors include S. Baring-Gould, W. E. Norris, L. B. Walford, Mrs. Parr, Maxwell Gray, Mrs. Molesworth, and the author of "Mademoiselle Ixe."

THE Theosophical Publishing Society announce for early publication: The Aesch Mazaroph: or, Purifying Fire collected from the Kabbalah Denudata of Knorr von Rosenrath, with preface, notes, and explanations, by "Sapere Aude"; The Building of the Kosmos and other Lectures, by Mrs. Annie Besant; The Esoteric Basis of Christianity, by William Kingsland.

MESSRS. JAMES ELLIOTT & Co. announce a work by the president of the Berean Society, Mr. Charles G. Harrison, entitled The Transcendental Universe, being six lectures on occult science, theosophy, and the Catholic faith, with special reference to the present Gnostic reaction; and also The Haunted House of Ben's Hollow and other Ghostly Stories, by Miss A. M. Stein, with six full-page engravings from designs by the author.

THE whole of the one volume edition of Mr. Anthony Hope's Half a Hero having been subscribed before publication, a second edition is being rapidly prepared and will be ready almost immediately.

WE hear that Mr. Halliday Sparling, late secretary of the Kelmescott Press, is engaged at Paris in collecting materials for a work on English influence in the early years of the French Revolution.

MR. JOSEPH JACOBS will publish six books during the coming season. Two of these are children's books, the first being More Celtic Fairy Tales, which brings to a conclusion for the present the series of "Fairy Tales of the British Empire" which Mr. Jacobs has been publishing with Mr. Nutt. Like the preceding volumes of the series, this will be illustrated by Mr. J. D. Batten. The other children's book is a popular edition of Aesop's Fables, profusely illustrated by Mr. R. Heighway. This will be published by Messrs. Macmillan, uniform with the works illustrated by Mr. Hugh Thomson. A further volume of over 300 pages is devoted to an inquiry into the history of the Jews in Spain, containing a calendar of over 2000 documents, investigated by Mr. Jacobs during a tour among the chief archives of Spain, undertaken for this purpose. Another volume will contain a number of studies on Biblical archaeology, which attracted some attention and caused some controversy when they originally appeared in the now defunct Archaeological Review. In addition to these, Mr. Jacobs will edit, with an introduction, Meinhold's Amber Witch, a romance on which Auber's opera of the same name was founded. This will be illustrated by Mr. Philip Burne-Jones. All these are ready for publication; and Mr. Jacobs hopes besides to finish before Christmas his study of the Legend of Barlaam and Josaphat, which is practically the life of Buddha in the form which caused him to be canonised as a saint by the Roman Church. This will be included in Mr. Nutt's "Bibliothèque de Carabas," uniform with Mr. Jacobs' editions of the Fables of Bidpai and the Fables of Aesop, and will have a frontispiece by Mr. H. Ryland.

To the note in the ACADEMY of last week announcing the termination of partnership between Mr. Elkin Mathews and John Lane, it may be added that Mr. Mathews will continue to publish the books in the catalogue of the firm by Mrs. Radford, Dr. Henry Vandyke, and Mr. Herbert P. Horne, and will also be the publisher of the Hobby Horse and of the "Diversi Colores" series.

THE fifth volume of the late Prof. Dillmann's edition of the Ethiopic Old Testament, containing the Apocryphal books (Baruch, Epistle of Jeremiah, Tobit, Judith, Ecclesiasticus, Wisdom, Apocalypse of Ezra, and the Greek Esdras) is just published, with a phototype portrait of the great scholar, and a brief Latin sketch of his career. A young Marburg professor, Dr. A. Jülicher, has brought out an excellent introduction to the New Testament, in the same series as Cornill's Introduction to the Old, but larger by 80 pages.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

IN consequence of fresh arrangements made by Messrs. Chapman & Hall as to the future conduct of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. Frank Harris will retire from the editorship at the end of the year. The Fortnightly was founded in 1865, and has been edited in succession by Mr. George Henry Lewes, Mr. John Morley, and Mr. T. H. S. Escott. Mr. Frank Harris has held the editorship since 1886.

BEGINNING with October, the Idler will be increased in size by the addition of thirty-two pages. The forthcoming number will contain the opening chapters of Dr. Conan Doyle's new serial story, entitled "The Stark Munro Letters," in which the reader is introduced to James Cullingworth, who is reported to be as original a creation as the late Sherlock Holmes.

Among the other stories promised are: "Lucifera," by Mr. Anthony Hope—an exposure of the advanced society woman; "The Mystery of Black Rock Creek," an Australian story, in which no less than six writers collaborate; "The Gift of the Simple King," by Mr. Gilbert Parker; and "The Lost Engine," by Mr. W. L. Alden.

IN the October number of the New Review there will be a double article on "The Prospects of the Forthcoming Book Season," belles-lettres being treated by Mr. George Saintsbury and fiction by Mr. Arthur Waugh.

WE understand that Boys, which started nearly two years ago, will cease as a separate publication with the completion of the current volume, the copyright having been purchased from Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. by the proprietors of the Boys' Own Paper, with which journal Boys will now be incorporated.

To the October number of the English Illustrated Magazine Mr. Frederick Dolman will contribute a paper on "Lord Bute and Cardiff." This is the first of a series of articles on men whose fortunes are linked with the rise of particular towns.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. H. MORSE STEPHENS, the historian of the French Revolution and at present teacher of Indian history at Cambridge, has been appointed to occupy temporarily the chair of modern European history at Cornell University, which is vacant by the death of Prof. Herbert Tuttle. This professorship, we believe, was originally founded by Prof. Goldwin Smith; and its duties will be the more attractive to its new holder because the library of Cornell possesses, through the munificence of ex-president White, the finest collection of contemporary material relating to the period of the French Revolution to be found out of Europe.

THE contents of the Ashmolean Museum are just now being removed to the new buildings, which have been erected by the munificence of Dr. Drury Fortnum near the University Galleries in St. Giles's. The old Ashmolean will henceforth be annexed to the ever-growing Bodleian. We may mention that Dr. Thomas Chaplin has recently presented to the Ashmolean his haematite weight from Samaria, with an inscription in ancient Semitic characters, about which there was some controversy in the ACADEMY towards the end of last year.

MR. ANDREW J. HERBERTSON, of Edinburgh, has been appointed lecturer in geography at Owens College, Manchester, in succession to Mr. Yule Oldham, now university lecturer at Cambridge.

GRAF VON BAUDISSIN has been appointed to fill the chair of Semitic philology at Berlin, vacant by the death of Dr. Dillmann. This leaves a vacancy at Marburg, the due filling up of which is the more important now that Dr. Wellhausen is settled at Göttingen.

WE learn from the Annals of the American Academy (Philadelphia) that during the past year twenty-three students in American colleges obtained the degree of Ph.D. for work in political and social science, economics or history; and that fifty-nine students have been elected to fellowships or post-graduate scholarships for the coming year in the same subjects.

THE number of Hermathena (Longmans) for 1894 opens with a long paper on Aristotle's "Parva Naturalia," by Mr. John I. Beare, dealing with textual questions. We presume that it is only the first of a series. Then follows a review, by Prof. Tyrell, of Goodwin's edition of the Homeric Hymns, in which he maintains two propositions: (1) that the difficulties of interpretation are largely due to unrecognised lacunae in our existing MSS.; and (2) that much may yet be accomplished by bold conjecture in restoring the text. Prof. T. K. Abbott, while noticing Berger's History of the Vulgate, incidentally records the varieties in the order of Books in the MSS. of the New Testament belonging to Trinity College, Dublin. He also prints two unpublished inscriptions: a Latin one now preserved in the Library of Trinity College (which we commend to the notice of Mr. Haverfield), and a Greek one (from a mould) which was formerly in the churchyard of St. Mark's, Dublin. Prof. Palmer takes occasion, from the completion of the Ritschl edition of Plautus, to propose a number of textual emendations. He further offers the following transposition of the epithets in Horace, Epod. iii. 17, 18:—

"Nec munus umeris aestuantis Herculis Inarsit effluuius."

Prof. Bernard reviews the posthumous fourth edition of Scrivener's "Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament," pointing out the chief changes that have been made by the new editor (the Rev. Edward Miller) and his assistants, chiefly with regard to the Coptic versions, and also enumerating the MSS. in the library of Trinity College. In another article on "The Predecessors of Bishop Butler," Prof. Bernard regrets that we have no knowledge of the books used by Butler; but points out that he must have been familiar with the Natural Religion of Bishop Wilkins of Chester (some time Warden of Wadham, and one of the founders of the Royal Society), and that his indebtedness to Shaftesbury is greater than commonly supposed. Dr. Purser contributes notes on Cicero's Epistles, in which he reports that eight MSS. in the Philipps Library at Cheltenham afford no additional knowledge for the settlement of the text; and Prof. Bury some more notes on the "Argonautica" of Valerius Flaccus.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

REX MORITUR EXSUL.

"We know no king—no God, no master, we!"
What wonder, when your passions know no master?
When morbid, moonstruck, measureless vanity,
The mock of nations, whirls you faster
Tow'rd the steep doom of downfall and disaster—
A ruin deeper than the unfathomed sea?
Vainglorious fools! your chronic rage is vain;
Birth royal is Nature's gift, as brawn or brain;
And natural right thrones high above your mob
Of silly mouths and maws, whose slender sense
The froth of individual impotence
Stirs to ridiculous rage that fain would rob
The sun of right to shine in heaven, if thence Absinthine nerves might thrill and pothouse pulses throb.

C. J. B.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of the Economic Journal (Macmillans) opens with a report of the annual meeting of the British Economical Association, held last June, when Prof. Nicholson delivered an address on "Political Economy and Journalism," which was followed by some remarks from Mr. A. J. Balfour. Mr. Edwin Cannan continues his interesting summary of Ricardo's career in parliament, which is most valuable for the economical history of England during the period immediately following the great war. In particular, we may mention Ricardo's bold scheme for paying off the entire National Debt (under par) by means of a direct tax of six hundred millions levied upon property, so as to remit indirect taxation amounting to thirty millions. Prof. Edgeworth himself contributes a second article, with diagrams, on the mathematical version of the theory of international values. Then follows the paper read by Mr. L. L. Price at the recent meeting of the British Association on the final report of the Royal Commission on Labour. Mr. A. W. Flux submits some carefully-prepared statistical tables, tending to show that Germany is not ousting Great Britain from her markets in general, however great may be the redistribution in trade in special articles between the two countries. Mr. C. S. Loch subjects Mr. Charles Booth's recent work on the aged poor to severe criticism, arguing that his facts have been throughout drawn from incomplete and unsifted evidence. Under the heading of "Notes and Memoranda," Prof. Edgeworth calls attention to Böhm-Bawerk's latest pronouncement on the ultimate standard of value; Mr. Thomas C. Shearman discusses the question whether foreigners can be made to pay our taxes; Prof. Kabbeno analyses the budget of a metayer family in Central Italy; and a Japanese writer advocates a revision of the existing treaties between his own country and European powers. Finally, we must mention the obituary notice, by Prof. Cohn, of Wilhelm Roscher, of Leipzig, the founder of the historical school of political economy in Germany.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co.'s
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Venice Depicted by Pen and Pencil," the text adapted by Mrs. Arthur Bell, (N. D'Anvers), from the German of Henry Perl, with 180 illustrations from drawings by Ettore Tito and other Venetian artists; "The Life and Times of J. Greenleaf Whittier, 1807-1892," by S. T. Pickard, with portraits, in 2 vols.; "Lord John Russell," being the ninth volume of The Queen's Prime Ministers series, by Stuart J. Reid, with photographic portrait from a crayon by G. F. Watts; "Personal Memoirs of General Grant," new edition, with illustrations; "The Sherman Letters," Correspondence between General and Senator Sherman, from 1837 to 1891, by Mrs. Sherman Thorndiac, with portraits; "Recollections of a Virginian, in the Mexican, Indian, and Civil Wars," by General Dabney H. Maury, with portrait; "Hector Berlioz: Man and Musician," a critical biography based on original research, by Sydney R. Thompson, with portrait; "Colour Vision," being the Tyndall lectures delivered before the Royal Institution, by Capt. Abney, with numerous diagrams and illustrations; "The Public Letters of the Right Hon. John Bright, M.P.," collected and edited, with a memoir, by H. J. J. Leech, new edition; "Strange Pages from Family Papers," by T. F. Thiselton Dyer; "Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat, 1802-1808," with a preface and notes by her grandson, Paul de Rémusat, translated from the French by Mrs. Cashel Hoey and John Lillie, new edition; "Great Explorers of Africa," with map, portraits, and numerous illustrations, in 2 vols.; "Picturesque Ceylon"—Vol. II., Kandy and Peradeniya, by Henry W. Cave, with numerous full-page illustrations in Woodbury-gravure; "Tales of Adventure from the Old Annuals," by Charles Dickens, W. M. Thackeray, S. T. Coleridge, Sir Walter Scott, Thomas Roscoe, Barry Cornwall, Lord John Manners, William Howitt, and many other writers, new edition; "Artistic Travel: a Thousand Miles towards the Sun," by Henry Blackburn, with 130 illustrations by John Philip, E. Lundgren, Gustave

Doré, Sydney Hall, R. Caldecott, &c., new edition; "In the Land of the Tui: My Journal in New Zealand," by Mrs. Robert Wilson, illustrated; "Thermodynamics," treated with Elementary Mathematics, and containing applications to Animal and Vegetable Life, Tidal Friction, and Electricity, by J. Parker; "The Anwar-i-Suhaili; or, Lights of Canopus," translated from the Persian by Arthur N. Wollaston, new edition; "Half-Hours with Muhammad," being a popular account of the Prophet of Arabia and of his more immediate followers, together with a short synopsis of the religion he founded, by Arthur N. Wollaston, with map and about 20 illustrations, new edition; "History of Engraving in England," by Louis Fagan; "The Art of the World," illustrated with reproductions of masterpieces of modern English, American, French, German, Spanish, Dutch, and Italian Art, in 2 vols.; "Russian Art," containing 24 photogravures, reproduced from the best examples of modern Russian art; "An Elementary History of Art," by Mrs. Arthur Bell (N. D'Anvers), fourth edition; "Cheerful Thoughts of a Cheery Philosopher," by the Rev. Frederick Arnold, in 2 vols.; "Roman Fever": the Results of an Inquiry, during Three Years' Residence on the Spot, into the Origin, History, Distribution, and Nature of the Malarial Fevers of the Roman Campagna, with especial reference to their supposed connexion with Pathogenic Organisms, by W. North, with numerous maps, diagrams, &c.; "Health and Condition in the Active and the Sedentary," by Nathaniel Edward Yorke-Davies; "Specifications," for the use of surveyors, architects, engineers, and builders, by J. Leaning; "The Orient Guide, 1894," edited by the Rev. W. J. Loftie, fifth edition, entirely re-written, with charts, maps, and numerous illustrations; "Tales from St. Paul's Cathedral told to Children," by Mrs. Frewen Lord, with plan and view of the west front of the cathedral; "Tales from Westminster Abbey told to Children," by Mrs. Frewen Lord, with a portrait of Dean Stanley, and a plan and view of the Abbey, new edition; "Sweet-scented Flowers and Fragrant Leaves," interesting associations gathered from many sources, with notes on their history and utility, by Donald McDonald.

Fiction.—"Highland Cousins," by William Black; "John March, Southerner," by G. W. Cable; "The Gates of Dawn," by Fergus Hume; "In the Day of Battle," by J. A. Steuart, in 3 vols.; "The Man from Oshkosh," by John Hicks; "Cleopatra," by Prof. George Ebers, in 2 vols.; "A Witch's Legacy," by Hesketh J. J. Bell, new edition; "The Romance of Paradise: or, the Story of a Seraph's Love," by Edmund S. Gunn; cheap editions of Sydney Christian's Novels—"Lydia" and "Sarah: a Survival."

Juvenile Literature.—"Claudius Bombarnac," by Jules Verne, illustrated; "Foundling Mick," by Jules Verne, illustrated; "A Plunge into Sahara: an Adventure of To-day," by G. Demage, with illustrations by Paul Crampel; "Walter Gaydon: or, An Art Student's Adventures," by F. Searlott Potter, with illustrations; "The Adventures and Misadventures of a Breton Boy," by Eugène Mouton, with illustrations; "A Night in the Woods, and other Tales and Sketches," by James Weston, with fifty illustrations; "A Mountain Path, and other Talks to Young People," by John A. Hamilton; "The Minister's Wooing," by H. B. Stowe, new edition; "Second Annual Volume of Boys," containing nearly 800 illustrations, including numerous coloured plates, besides serial and short stories by G. A. Henty, George Manville Fenn, J. A. Steuart, Ascott R. Hope, Frank Cowper, Robert Overton, R. D. Chetwode.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Autobiography of George Augustus Sala," in 2 vols.; "Social England": a Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Science, Literature, Industry, Commerce, and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day, edited by H. D. Traill (Vol. II., embracing the period from the accession of Edward I. to the death of Henry VII.); "The Life of Daniel Defoe," by Thomas Wright, principal of Cowper School, Olney, with seventeen full-page illustrations; "English Writers," by the late Henry Morley, Vol. XI. containing "Shakspeare and His Time—under James I.," completed by Prof. W. Hall Griffin; "The People's Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone," profusely illustrated; "Electricity in the Service of Man," new edition, revised by Dr. R. Mullineux Walsmsley, with upwards of 950 illustrations; "The Seven Ages of Man": a series of seven reproductions from Photographs, in portfolio size; "A Vision of Saints," by Lewis Morris, with full-page illustrations from the old masters and contemporary portraits, new edition; "The Electric Current, How Produced and How Used," by Dr. R. Mullineux Walsmsley, with numerous illustrations; "Diet and Cookery for Common Ailments," by A. Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and Phyllis Browne; "The Elements of Modern Dressmaking," by Jeannette E. Davis; "Cassell's New Universal Cookery Book," by Lizzie Heritage, with preface by Léonard Grunenfelder, containing twelve coloured plates and numerous illustrations in the text; "Pomona's Travels: A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from her Former Handmaiden," by Frank R. Stockton, illustrated; "The Highway of Sorrow," by Hesba Stretton and * * * * *; "The Sea Wolves," by Max Pemberton, with nine full-page illustrations; "Cassell's Gazetteer of Great Britain and Ireland," a Complete Topographical Dictionary of the United Kingdom, with numerous illustrations and maps in colours, Vol. I.; "Cassell's History of England," new and revised edition, with nearly 2000 illustrations, Vol. VII., embracing the period dating from the illness of the Prince of Wales to the British occupation of Egypt; "The Magazine of Art Volume for 1894," with fourteen etchings or photogravures, and a series of full-page plates; "European Pictures of the Year 1894"; "Picturesque America," Vol. I., with twelve steel plates and about 200 wood engravings; "The Cabinet Portrait Gallery," complete in five series, each containing thirty-six cabinet portraits of eminent men and women of the day, from photographs by Messrs. W. & D. Downey, with biographical sketches; "Five Stars in a Little Pool," by Edith Carrington, dedicated to Dorothy Tennant (Mrs. H. M. Stanley), illustrated by W. Rainey, W. S. Stacey, Robert Barnes, and Mrs. Staples; "To Punish the Czar: A Story of the Crimea," by Horace Hutchinson, with eight full-page illustrations; "Red Rose and Tiger Lily," by L. T. Meade, with eight full-page illustrations; "They Met in Heaven," by G. H. Hepworth; "Searchings in the Silence," by Rev. Dr. George Matheson; "Chums Yearly Volume for 1894"; "The Great Cattle Trail," by Edward S. Ellis; "Football, the Rugby Union Game," edited by the Rev. F. Marshall, with numerous illustrations, new edition, with an appendix bringing the work up to date; "Told Out of School; or, Humorous Yarns of School Life and Adventure," by A. J. Daniels, with eight full-page illustrations; "Cassell's Family Magazine Volume for 1894," with about 750 illustrations; "Cassell's Saturday Journal Volume for 1894," with numerous illustrations; "Little Folks Christmas Volume for 1894," with pictures on nearly every page, together with six full-page coloured plates; "Cottage Gardening," edited by W. Robinson, Vol. IV., with six coloured plates; "Cassell's History of the Franco-German War," Vol. I., containing about 250 illustrations; "The Quiver Volume for 1894," with about 600 illustrations, and coloured picture for frontispiece; "The Family Prayer Book," edited by Canon Garbett and the Rev. S. Martin, with twelve full-page illustrations, new edition, with an introduction by the Dean of Canterbury; "Work Handbooks," a Series of Practical Manuals prepared under the direction of Paul N. Hasluck, editor of Work, illustrated—"House Decoration," "How to Make and Repair Boots and Shoes," "Sign Writing, Ticket Writing, and Poster Writing," "Cycle Building and Repairing," "Wood Finishing, comprising Staining, Varnishing, Polishing, &c.," "Dynamics and Electric Motors, How to Make and Run them"; "Gleanings from the Patent Laws of all Countries," with notes, by W. Lloyd Wise, Vol. I.; Illustrated Books for the Little Ones, new volumes—"Bright Tales and Funny Pictures," by Maggie Brown, "Merry Little Tales," by Sheila, "Little Tales for Little People," by Isabel Wilson, "Little People and their Pets," by C. L. Matéaux; "A Book of Merry Tales," by Maggie Browne, "Sheila," Isabel Wilson, and C. L. Matéaux, illustrated; "Beneath the Banner, being Narratives of Noble Lives and Brave Deeds," by F. J. Cross, with facsimiles and full-page illustrations; "Bo-Peep Yearly Volume for 1894"; "Hand and Eye Training," designing with coloured papers, by George Ricks and Joseph Vaughan, with upwards of 100 illustrations; "Yule-Tide for Christmas 1894," containing a novel by J. Maclaren Cobban, a coloured plate by W. E. F. Britten, two coloured pictures by Robert Morley, four plates in three tints, by Prescott Davies and W. Rainey.

MR. DAVID NUTT'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Caxton's Recuyell of the Histories of Troye," reprinted from the first edition, with introduction, glossary, and index of names and places, by Dr. H. O. Sommer; "Le Roman de Merlin," verbatim transcript of the earliest British Museum MS. (Add. 10,292), edited with introduction by Dr. H. O. Sommer; "Wolfram von Eschenbach, Parzival," translated by Jessie L. Weston, vol. 2, completing the work, with notes and excursus on Wolfram's sources and on the interpretation of the poem; "Persens the Dragon Slayer," a study of myth and tradition by E. Sidney Hartland, vol. 1—"The Supernatural Birth" (Grimm Library); "Edward Tyson's Physiological Essay on the Pygmies of the Ancients (1699)," edited with ethnological and folklore introduction by Dr. Bertram C. A. Windle (Bibliothèque de Carabas); "Popular Tales and Traditions of the Western Highlands," collected and translated by the late Rev. J. G. Campbell, of Tiree, with memoir of author, notes, and illustrations (Waifs and Strays of Celtic Tradition, vol. 5); "Underdowne's Aethiopian Histories of Heliodorus," with introduction by Charles Whibley, and "Mabbe's Celestina or the Spanish Bawd," with introduction by J. Fitzmaurice Kelly (Tudor Translations); "More Celtic Fairy Tales," by Joseph Jacobs, illustrated by J. D. Batten; "The Story of Alexander," retold from the romances for English children by Robert Steele, with illustrations by Fred. Mason; "Children's Singing Games," by Alice Bertha Gomme and Winifred Smith, second series; "The Ugly Duckling," pictured in colours by P. van Hoytema; "Noel: a Book of Carols for Christmastide," written and designed by Ch. F. Foulkes, with music by H. A. Vincent Ransom; "The Amber Witch: a Romance of the Sixteenth Century," by W. Meinhold, translated by Lady Duff Gordon, and re-edited with critical introduction by Joseph Jacobs; "Tales from Welsh Wales," by P. H. Emerson; "Songs and Sagas of the Norsemen," by Albany F. Major; "Low Tide on Grand Pré"; poems by Bliss Carman, second edition; "Poems Old and New," by George Cotterell; "At the Cross Roads," poems by Arnold Wall; "Fairy Legends of Southern and Western Ireland," collected from oral tradition by Jeremiah Curtin; "Studies in Biblical Archaeology," by Joseph Jacobs; "The Jews of Russia," by L. Errera, translated by Bella Löwy; "Cardinal Tournon and the Jesuits in China," by Canon R. C. Jenkins; and "Lectures on Darwinism," by the late Prof. Alfred Milnes Marshall, edited by Dr. C. F. Marshall, with diagrams and illustrations.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Art Books.—"Milton's il Penseroso and L'Allegro," with 9 photogravures, 4 wood engravings, and other illustrations, by William Hyde; "Mrs. Browning's Sonnets from the Portuguese," with 48 decorative designs by F. C. Tilney, and an introduction by Edmund Gosse; "Malory's Le Morte Darthur," reprinted from Caxton's edition of 1485, pointed and spelt in conformity with modern usage, with an introduction by Prof. Rhys, and 300 illustrations by Aubrey Beardsley, including photogravure frontispiece to each volume, and 46 full-page illustrations and bordered pages, in 2 vols.; Shakspeare's "Two Gentlemen of Verona," with 8 drawings by Walter Crane, reproduced by the Dallas-type process; "Popular British Ballads, Ancient and Modern," edited by Reginald Brimley Johnson, with 40 illustrations to each volume by W. Cubitt Cooke, in 4 vols.; "The Lyric Poets," printed on deckle edged paper and bound in a limp cover designed by H. Granville Fell—each volume will have a portrait etched by H. Crickmore, and head and tail-pieces drawn by Miss Nina Murray, the series will be edited by Mr. Ernest Rhys, who will contribute an Introduction, and where necessary a glossary, one volume will be issued each month, the first being "A Prelude to Poetry," "Spenser," "Burns," "Sidney," "Shelley," "Lyrics from the Bible," "Ben Jonson," "Keats," "Beaumont and Fletcher," "Wordsworth," "Campion"; "Shakspeare's Comedies," the first 14 volumes of the Temple Shakspeare, in ornamental box.

Reprints of English Classics.—"Laurence Sterne's Works," edited by George Saintsbury, with photogravure illustrations after drawings by E. J. Wheeler, in 6 vols.; "Miss Ferrier's Novels," with introduction by R. Brimley Johnson, and 17 photogravure illustrations after drawings by Nellie Erichsen, and a hitherto unpublished portrait, in 6 vols.; "Madame De Staël's Coriune," translated from the French, with an introduction by George Saintsbury, and 6 illustrations by H. S. Greig, in 2 vols.; "The Romances of Alexandre Dumas," illustrated with photogravures, etchings, and engravings, in 48 vols.; "Tales from Shakspeare," by Charles and Mary Lamb, with a continuation by Harrison S. Morris, with 24 illustrations, in 4 vols.; "Short Stories for Travellers," in 19 vols.

Miscellaneous.—"Annals of a Quiet Valley in the Wordsworth Country," by John Watson, with 30 illustrations by Bertha Newcombe; "Washington Irving's Sketch Book," with about 50 illustrations (the illustrations to this book were made for the "Artist Edition" in America); "Overheard in Arcady," by Robert Bridges, with illustrations by Oliver Herford, F. G. Attwood, and A. E. Sterner; "Madonna and other Poems," by Harrison S. Morris, illustrated; "The Golden Book of Coleridge," selected and edited with a critical introduction by Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, and an etched portrait; "Songs of Zion by Hebrew Singers of Mediaeval Days," translated into English verse by Mrs. Henry Lucas, with an etched frontispiece; "Banbury Cross Series of Children's Folklore and other Stories," edited by Grace Rhys, and illustrated by R. Anning Bell and others—this series is a revival in form of the old chap books, and will be produced in a dainty and quaint style, each story will be carefully compared with the earliest sources, and when taken from foreign originals will in many cases be re-translated: the first three volumes to be issued being "Jack the Giant Killer, and Beauty and the Beast," "Whittington and his Cat, and the Sleeping Beauty," "Cinderella, and Jack and the Beanstalk," "Chaucer's Canterbury Tales," edited by John Saunders, new edition, with 23 illustrations from the Ellesmere MS.

Essays.—"Essays of Mazzini," mostly translated for the first time into English by T. Okey, edited, with an introduction, by Bolton King, with a photogravure portrait; "Essays in Literary Interpretation," by Hamilton Wright Mabie, with portraits of Robert Browning, Dante Rossetti, and John Keats; "Short Studies in Literature," by Hamilton Wright Mabie, with 3 photogravure portraits.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Land of the Sphinx," being travels in Egypt, by G. Montbard, with 186 illustrations by the author; "Children of Circumstance," in 3 vols., by the author of "A Yellow Aster"; "A Daughter of the King," by "Alien"; "Run to Ground," a sporting novel, in 3 vols., by Mrs. Robert Jocelyn; "Hooks of Steel," by Helen Prothero Lewis; "A House in Bloomsbury," in 2 vols., by Mrs. Oliphant; "The Golden Fairy Book," being fairy tales of other lands, by George Sand, Alexander Dumas, Voltaire, Xavier Marmier, &c.; "A Modern Quixote," in 3 vols., by Mrs. J. Kent-Spender; a cheaper edition of "A Strange Temptation," by the same author; "Bruno the Conscript," by Marie Hutcheson; "The New Standard Elocutionist" by Alfred H. Miles, with a popular treatise on the vocal organs by Lennox Browne, and a chapter on the art of introducing musical accompaniments into elocutionary recitals by Clifford Harrison; "A Rising Star," in 3 vols by David Christie Murray; "The Crimson Sign" an historical romance, by Dr. S. R. Keightley; "Tempest Torn," by Lt.-Col. Andrew C. P. Haggard; a fourth edition of "The Japs at Home," by Douglas Sladen; cheap edition of "A Bitter Debt," by Annie S. Swan; "Fifty-two Stories of Boy Life" and "Fifty-two Stories of Girl Life," at home and abroad, being two new volumes of A. H. Miles's "52 Library"; a fine paper edition of "Robinson Crusoe"; "One Fair Daughter," in 3 vols., by F. Frankfort-Moore; also each in one vol. by the same author—"A Gray Eye or So," eighth edition; "I Forbid the Banns," eighth edition; and a second edition of "Daireen"; Alphonse Daudet's "Fromont Junior and Risler Senior," translated by Mr. Edward Vizetelly, with 91 illustrations by George Roux, and an edition de luxe of the same work; "The Mysteries of Marseilles," by Emile Zola, translated by Mr. Edward Vizetelly, with an introduction by the author; "David Pannell," by Mrs. Alfred Marks; "My Cousin from Australia," by Evelyn Everett Green; "The Adventures of Leonard Vane," an African story, by E. J. Bowen; "The Thousand Best Poems in the World," first and second series complete in one volume; two new volumes of "The Poets and Poetry of the Century," by Alfred H. Miles, entitled "Society and Humour," being selections from the poetry of George Canning, Theodore Hook, J. Ashby Sterry, F. Locker

Lampson, &c., &c., and "Religious and Didactic," being selections from John Keble, Stopford Brooke, S. Baring Gould, Dr. Alexander, and others, with critical notices—these two new volumes complete the work in ten volumes; a special edition of "The Women Poets of the Nineteenth Century," edited by Alfred H. Miles; two new volumes of "The Boy's Golden Library"—"Pictures from Greek Life and Story," by Prof. A. J. Church, with full-page illustrations, and "Robinson Crusoe," with fifty-six illustrations; four new volumes of "The Girls' Golden Library"—"A Singer from the Sea," by A. E. Barr; "Little Women and Nice Wives," by L. M. Alcott; "A Bubble Fortune," by Sarah Tytler, and "Love for an Hour is Love for Ever," by Amelia E. Barr; "One Thousand and One Anecdotes," edited by Alfred H. Miles; "Peg the Rake," in 3 vols., by Rita; "A New Note," in 2 vols., by a new author; New editions of Emma Jane Werboise's novels, "The Wife's Trials," "The Lillingstones," "Campion Court," "Sir Julian's Wife," "Lottie Lonsdale," and "Evelyn's Story"; a third edition of "The Green Bay Tree," by W. H. Wilkins and Herbert Vivian. Ten new volumes of Hutchinson's Popular Library—"The Fate of Fanella," by twenty-four popular authors; "Sojourners Together," by Frankfort Moore; "A Ruthless Avenger," by Mrs. Conney; "The Web of the Spider," by H. B. Marriott-Watson; "Lottie's Wooing," by Darley Dale; "A Wild Proxy," by Mrs. Clifford; "Under the Great Seal," by Joseph Hatton; "A Strange Temptation," by Mrs. J. Kent Spender; "The Last Tenant," by B. L. Farjeon; and "His Wife's Soul," by Fitzgerald Molloy. "The Game of Life," in 3 vols., by Darley Dale; "The Face and the Mask"; Short Stories Sad and Humorous, by Robert Barr; "A Woman's Whim," by Mrs. Diehl, and "Passion's Puppets," in 3 vols., by the same author; "The Mistress of Quest," in 3 vols., by Adeline Sergeant.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," by Jan MacLaren; "The Life of A. L. O. E.," by Agnes Giberne; "Kerrigan's Quality," by Jane Barlow; "Love and Quiet Life: Somerset Idylls," by Walter Raymond; "Tammas Bodkin: Swatches o' Hodden Grey," by W. D. Latto; "Thomas Hardy: a Critical Study," by Annie Macdonell, being the first of a series entitled "Contemporary Writers," edited by the Rev. Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll; "The Lone House," by Amelia E. Barr; "On the Old Frontier; or, The Last Raid of the Iroquois," by William O. Stoddart, with ten illustrations by H. D. Murphy, being the new volume of the "Boys' Prize Library"; "Sherburne House: the Story of an Heiress," by Amanda M. Douglas; "Led by Love: a Story of Everyday Life," by the author of "Tim's Troubles"; "Chronicles of Uganda," by the Rev. R. P. Ashe, with portrait and many illustrations; "Letters and Sketches from the New Hebrides," by Mrs. J. G. Paton, with numerous illustrations; "Ruysbroeck and the Mystics, with Selections from Ruysbroeck," by Maurice Maeterlinck, translated by Jane T. Stoddart; "Studies in Oriental Social Life," by the Rev. Dr. H. Clay Trumbull; "The Making of Manhood," by the Rev. W. J. Dawson; "The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ: a Devotional History of Our Lord's Passion," by Dr. James Stalker; "Christian Doctrine," a series of Discourses by the Rev. Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birminghams; the first volume of the "Anglican Pulpit Library"—"Sermons, Outlines, and Illustrations for the Sundays and Holy Days of the Year," to be completed in six volumes; the following volumes of the "Expositors' Bible," edited by the Rev. Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll, which will complete the series in forty-nine volumes—"Daniel," by Archdeacon Farrar; "Jeremiah," by Prof. W. Bennett; "Deuteronomy," by Prof. Andrew Harper; "The Song of Solomon and the Lamentations," by Prof. Adeney; "Ezekiel," by Prof. J. Skinner; and the "Minor Prophets," by Prof. G. Adam Smith, in 2 vols.; "Letters and Reminiscences of the late Dr. Andrew Bonar," by his daughter, Marjory Bonar; "Secrets of a Beautiful Life," by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller, in the "Silent Times Series"; "First Things First," Addresses to Young Men, by the Rev. George Jackson; "Thoughts for the Quiet Hour," by the Rev. Dr. J. B. Macduff; "The School of Life," by the Rev. Dr. John Smith; "By Fire and Cloud; or, Life Experiences in India and South Africa," by M. S. Osborn-Howe; and "Musical Edition of the Church of England Hymnal," edited by Dr. A. H. Mann.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"A Lost Ideal," by Annie S. Swan; "Rab Bethune's Double or, Life's Long Battle Won," by Edward Garrett; "In His Steps," a Book for Young Christians setting out to follow Christ, by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller; "Samuel Rutherford and Some of His Correspondents," by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte; "Letters of Samuel Rutherford," with a Sketch of his Life, Notices of his Correspondents, Glossary, and List of his Works, by Rev. Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, new edition; "The Book of the Life-boat," with a complete history of the Life-boat Saturday Movement, numerous original illustrations, and narratives written by eye-witnesses of shipwrecks and life-boat rescues on the coasts of the British Isles, the dangers and excitements set forth by members of the life-boat crews engaged in the work, edited and arranged by J. C. Dibdin and John Ayling; "The Holy Spirit—the Paraclete," by the Rev. Dr. John Robson; "A Fair Norwegian," by Andrew Stewart; "Crowned Victor," a Story of Strife, by Hannah B. Mackenzie; "My Ducats and My Daughter," by P. Hay Hunter and Walter Whyte, library edition; "Miss Uraca," by Evelyn Everett-Green; "Confidential Talks with Young Women," by Dr. Lyman B. Sperry, with recommendatory note by Frances E. Willard; "Through Love to Repentance," by Maggie Swan; "The Provost o' Glendookie: Glimpses of a Fife Town," by Andrew Smith Robertson; "Parables and Sketches," by Alfred E. Knight, with four illustrations by the author; "Puddin': an Edinburgh Story," by W. Grant Stevenson, with six full-page illustrations and chapter initials by the author; "The Scottish Songstress, Caroline, Baroness Nairne," by her great grandniece, Mrs. A. R. Simpson, with portraits, facsimile of writing, and illustration from a drawing by Lady Nairne of "The Auld House" at Gask; "The Church and Social Problems," by A. Scott Matheson, new edition; "Pierre Arnaud: a Story of the Huguenots," by Ella Stone, with six illustrations by Stephen Reid; "Hope," by Evelyn Everett-Green; "Airlie's Mission," by Annie S. Swan, with six illustrations by Lilian Russell; "The Crime of Christmas Day," by P. Hay Hunter, new edition; new editions—"The Sandcliff Mystery," by Scott Graham; "After Touch of Wedded Hands," by Hannah B. Mackenzie; "Seventy Times Seven," by Adeline Sergeant; "Little Tom Thumb," by Evelyn Everett-Green, with four illustrations by R. Easton Stuart; "Scotland's Saint," by the Rev. Dr. James Wells.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"History of Modern Paintings," by Dr. Richard Muther, Director of the Berlin State Collection of Prints and Engravings, with over thirteen hundred illustrations, in fifteen monthly parts; "With Wilson in Matabeleland; or, Sport and War in Zambesia," by Capt. C. H. W. Donovan, of the Army Service Corps; "The Violin," a Treatise, Historical, and Critical upon the Works of the Principal Makers from the Introduction of the Violin to the Present Time, by Horace Petherick, vice-president of the Cremona Society; "The Gods, Some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham," by John Oliver Hobbes; "Disillusion," a novel, by Dorothy Leighton; "Baron Verdigris," a Romance of the Reversed Direction, by Jocelyn Quilp, with a frontispiece by Aubrey Beardsley; "Holiday Rhymes," from Punch, the Pall Mall, St. James's, and Westminster Gazettes, by Anthony C. Deane; "The Victoria Library for Gentlewomen," a new edition in case complete; "The Housewife's Referee," by Mrs. de Salis.

MR. W. B. CLIVE'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"An Intermediate Text-Book of Algebra"; "Cicero: De Amicitia," edited by A. H. Allcroft and W. F. Masom; "Cicero: De Finibus, Book II.," edited, with introduction and notes, by J. D. Maillard; "Cicero: De Finibus, Book II.," a translation, with test papers, by J. D. Maillard; "Cicero: In Catilinam III.," edited by A. Waugh Young; "Cicero: Pro Milone," edited by F. G. Plaistowe and W. F. Masom; "The Intermediate Text-Book of English History," by C. S. Fearenside and A. J. Evans, vol. i., to 1485, vol. iii., 1603-1714; "The Intermediate Text-Book of English Literature," vol. i., to 1558, by W. H. Low; "Euripides: Andromache," edited by H. Clarke; "The Tutorial French Accidence," by E. Weekley; "Exercises on the Tutorial French Accidence"; "The Tutorial French Syntax"; "Geometry of Similar Figures and the Plane (Euclid vi. and xi.);" "History of Greece, 431 to 371 B.C.," by A. H. Allcroft; "The Tutorial History of England," by C. S. Fearenside; "Horace: Odes, Books I. to IV.," edited, with introduction and notes, by A. H. Allcroft and B. J. Hayes; "Horace: Epodes," edited by J. Thompson; "An Elementary Text-Book of Hydrostatics," by William Briggs and G. H. Bryan; "A Higher Latin Writer"; "Exercises to the Tutorial Latin Grammar"; "A Manual of Logic," by J. Welton, vol. ii.; "Questions on Logic," with illustrative examples; "Ovid: Heroides I., II., III., V., VII., XII.," edited by A. H. Allcroft and B. J. Hayes; "The Tutorial Physics," vol. i., A Text-Book of Sound, by E. Catchpool; "Physics," by E. Catchpool; "Properties of Matter"; "An Introduction to the Tutorial History of Rome, B.C. 202 to 78," by A. H. Allcroft and W. F. Masom; "Sophocles: Ajax," edited, with introduction and notes, by J. H. Haydon; "Thucydides: Book I.," a translation, with test papers; "The Elements of Trigonometry"; "Vergil: Georgics, Books I., II.," edited by A. Waugh Young; "Xenophon: Oeconomicus," edited by J. Thompson and B. J. Hayes.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

Jicé, Michel. Kif-kif Haroun-al-Raschid: odyssée en Algérie d'un membre de la commission des dix-huit. Paris: Nislen, 3 fr. 50 c.
Jourdier, Ad. Globe-trotting. Paris: Lemerre, 3 fr. 50 c.
Mädl, K. B. 21 Portrait-Büsten im Triforium des St. Veit-Domes zu Prag. Prag: Bellmann, 21 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

Buchwald, G. Wittenberger Ordinirtenbuch 1537-1500. Leipzig: Wigand, 10 M.
Conrad, J. Die Statistik der Universität Halle während der 200 Jahre ihres Bestehens. Jena: Fischer, 4 M.

GLÄSSING, W. Die conditio indebiti d. deutschen öffentlichen Rechtes. Gießen: C. v. Münchow, 2 M. 40 Pf.
JORET, Ch. Fabri de Peirese, humaniste, archéologue, naturaliste. Paris: Picard, 2 fr. 50 c.
KUNL, J. Geschichte der Stadt Jülich. 3. TL. 1742-1815. Jülich: Fischer, 5 M.
LARROQUE, Tamizey de. L'Amiral Joubert de Barrault et les pirates de la Rochelle. Paris: Picard, 5 fr.
PETIT, E. Histoire des ducs de Bourgogne de la race capétienne. T. V. Paris: Picard, 12 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY, ETC.

CORBIÈRE, L. Nouvelle Flore de Normandie. Caen: Lanier, 7 fr. 50 c.
HEYMANS, G. Die Gesetze n. Elemente des wissenschaftlichen Denkens. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Harrassowitz, 6 M.
HOLDER, A. Alt-celtischer Sprachschatz. 6. Lfg. Leipzig: Teubner, 8 M.
OBERHAUCH, F. J. Monge, der Begründer der darstellenden Geometrie als Wissenschaft. Brunn: Prof. Oberhauch, 2 M. 50 Pf.
STEINMETZ, S. R. Ethnologische Studien zur ersten Entwicklung der Strafe. Leipzig: Harrassowitz, 20 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

MYSTÈRE de la Passion. Texte du manuscrit 637 de la bibliothèque d'Arras, p.p. J. M. Richard. Paris: Picard, 10 fr.
WINTER, J., u. A. WURNISCHER. Die jüdische Litteratur seit Abschluss des Kanons. 23 M. 50 Pf.
ZANOWEISTER, K., u. W. BRAUNE. Bruchstücke der alt-sächsischen Bibeldichtung aus der Bibliotheca Palatina. Heidelberg: Koester, 1 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN INSCRIPTION IN UNKNOWN LETTERS ON BAGINBUN HEAD, CO. WEXFORD.

Cambridge.

Baginbun Head is a promontory on the south-east of Hook Point, about a mile from the town of Fethard. Tradition makes it the landing-place of Strongbow, though the documentary evidence points clearly to Bannow as the place which possesses the true claims to that distinction. Certain ancient trenches on the Head are pointed out by the inhabitants as the military trenches dug by Strongbow, but antiquaries are generally inclined to refer them to much more ancient times. A martello tower stands beside them, and forms a useful landmark.

About a quarter of a mile from this tower, in the direction of Fethard, on the top of the sea-cliff, will be found a prostrate stone lying partly buried in the earth. The upper surface of this stone measures 45 by 33 inches, and bears inscribed upon it an inscription in three lines, of which the following is a copy, processed from a careful tracing:

ΖΨΠΘΦΣΤ
ΛΘΥΖΦΘΖ
ΦΘΣΑΥΠΕΞ

It is unnecessary to point out the extraordinary manner in which Greek, Roman, Irish, quasi-Runic, and nondescript characters are jumbled together in this singular inscription. As to its significance, I can only say that, so far as I can see, it must take its place with the engravings on the Lennon Cromlech and the Loughcrew Stones as a hopeless puzzle.

The inscription does not seem to have been noticed in print before, though it is well known in the neighbourhood (and is even alleged to have marked the meeting-place of Strongbow and Macmurrough!). I first heard of its existence from my friend Mr. Barrett-Hamilton of New Ross, who derived his information from the Fethard coastguard.

We must not leave an inscription of this nature without considering the possibility of fraud, intentional or unintentional. If it be an intentional fraud, however—such as was alleged to have been committed at Mount Callan—the forger does not appear to have derived any advantage, either in purse or reputation, from his work. The stone is so hard, that the difficulty of cutting the inscription must in any case have been considerable; and we should surely have heard of it before had it been cut for any malicious purpose. Were it an unintentional fraud—that is to say, the result of an innocent (but vacant) person amusing himself with no ulterior motive beyond that of passing the time—like the handiwork of Bill Stumps or Edmund Conic,* some such simple process as respacing or inversion would be sure to solve the riddle: I can only say that all my efforts in that direction have failed.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

RAHAB'S PLACE IN DANTE'S PARADISE ("PAR." IX. 116).

Dorney Wood, Burnham, Bucks: Sept. 5, 1894.

Some surprise has been expressed at the position in Paradise assigned by Dante to the harlot Rahab, whom he places in the Heaven of Venus, and describes as having been the first soul (of those destined for that sphere) released by Christ from Limbo:

"Da questo cielo . . . pria ch' altr' alma Del trionfo di Cristo fu assunta."

(Par. ix. 118-120).

Apart, however, from the fact that through her marriage with Salmon (Joshua vi. 25; Matt. i. 5) she became the ancestress of Christ—a fact insisted on by Petrus Comestor in his Historia Scholastica (Liber Josue, cap. v.)—and that she is especially mentioned both by St. Paul (Heb. xi. 31) and St. James (Jam. ii. 25), it may be noted that by the Fathers Rahab was regarded as a type of the Church, the "line of scarlet thread" which she bound in her window (Josh. ii. 21) being typical of the blood of Christ shed for the remission of sins. This view is expounded as follows by Isidore of Seville, with whose writings Dante was certainly familiar:

"Ex impiorum perditione unica domus Raab, tanquam unica Ecclesia, liberatur, munda a turpitudine fornicationis per fenestram confessionis in sanguine remissionis. . . . Quae ut salvari possit, per fenestram domus suae, tanquam per oam corporis sui, coecum mittit, quod est sanguinis Christi signum pro remissione peccatorum confiteri ad salutem" (Quaestiones in Vetus Testamentum—in Josue, cap. vii., §§ 3, 4).

Petrus Comestor, with whose works Dante was also familiar, alludes to this same interpretation in the passage of his Historia Scholastica referred to above.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

AN ANCIENT METHOD OF COMPUTING LOSSES IN WAR.

Settrington Rectory, York: Sept. 13, 1894.

To the instances enumerated by Mr. Stokes another may be added. There is a tradition among the Black Horde of the Kirghiz that before a battle Timur ordered each of his soldiers to deposit a stone in a heap, and when they returned after the victory each of the survivors took away one of the stones.

* The engraver of the famous "Pelagian" inscription on Tory Hill, which caused no little stir among the antiquaries of the early years of the present century. The inscription ran and was read as an oriental inscription to Bel ["Beli Divose"!], till some enterprising inquirer inverted the stone.

1821 CINOCE

The remaining stones were then counted, showing how many men had fallen. There is a cairn near the Issyk-kul, which is said to have been thus formed. It is called San-tash, which means the "counted stones." The cairn is on the shore of a mountain tarn named Borotale.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

"SCRIVENER'S INTRODUCTION TO THE NEW TESTAMENT."

Oxford: Sept. 17, 1894.

Will you allow me to ask students of the fourth edition of Dr. Scrivener's Plain Introduction to the Study of the New Testament to be so good as to send me notice of any errors that they may have discovered, for an increased list of Addenda and Corrigenda?

Anyone who examines similar works will find that such lists are inevitable. In the case of the recent edition of Scrivener this necessity is sharpened in consequence of the time for preparation having been unavoidably limited; besides that I was thrice stopped by illness. Space in each volume is already left for such a list, which it was impossible under the circumstances to prepare at all fully before publication. I may perhaps mention that, in consequence of being unable to procure a copy of the "American Notes," I was dependent upon one kindly lent me by a neighbour, but reclaimed before I had corrected the proof-sheets of the revised MSS., which, though contained in the first volume, were of necessity put off till last.

EDWARD MILLER.

SCIENCE.

FICK'S INDO-EUROPEAN PROPER NAMES.

Die Griechischen Personennamen. By Aug. Fick. Second Edition by Fr. Bechtel and Aug. Fick. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.)

It is just twenty years ago since Prof. Fick published what the Germans would call his "epoch-making" work on Indo-European proper names. For the first time their origin and character were explained; and it was shown that, with two exceptions, all the languages of the Indo-European family agreed in the nature of their formation. They were, in fact, part of the heritage which had descended from the days when the dialects that were to develop into the several Indo-European languages still existed side by side. The mystery which had enveloped them was cleared away; and not only in Greek, but in Sanskrit, Slavonic, and Celtic, their signification and history were made clear.

The Indo-European proper name conformed to a single type. It consisted of two elements, the places of which could be interchanged. Doro-theos, for example, might appear as Theo-doros, Krato-xenos as Xeno-krates. The name, or rather its termination, could be abbreviated; thus Kleopater might be shortened into Kleopas, Hippokrates into Hippokras. These abbreviated forms were called "Kosenamen" by Prof. Fick, for which we have no satisfactory English equivalent.

Of course, as time went on, numerous exceptions to the general type came to exist in the individual varieties of Indo-European speech. New names were derived from other names, more especially where the latter had a geographical signification; names were given from the seasons of the year, or taken from objects of the animal and physical world. But, on the whole, in languages like Greek, which preserved the old system of nomenclature, the primitive type was faithfully adhered to.

Twenty years have brought with them many changes and revolutions in the philological world, but they have brought nothing that would oblige us to modify, much less reject, Prof. Fick's discovery. On the contrary, they have but confirmed it, and furnished fresh illustrations of its truth. The new edition of Fick's work, therefore, contains no corrections of old theories: it merely enlarges the ground covered in the first statement of his doctrines, and establishes them upon a wider and more solid basis.

In preparing it he has been largely assisted by Dr. Bechtel, who has carefully revised the instances and illustrations quoted by Prof. Fick and abundantly added to them out of the stores of his own unrivalled knowledge of Greek epigraphy. The references are given in each case to the epigraphic authority upon which a particular name rests, and we consequently have in the lists of names what is practically an index to the proper names of the Greek inscriptions. The names are arranged under both their initial and their final elements, leaving nothing to be desired for the purposes of reference.

Dr. Bechtel's labours occupy a considerable portion of the book. The last two sections of it, on the names of the heroes and the gods, belong to Prof. Fick himself. These names, for the most part, do not conform to the Indo-European system of nomenclature, and their explanation accordingly is full of difficulties, which are not diminished by the fact that many of the names are probably of foreign origin, though more or less disguised by their adaptation to a Greek form. The attempt to explain them is therefore heroic, and I know of no other philologist except Prof. Fick who would have had either the courage or the knowledge and skill to make it. That he should have been successful, as he undoubtedly is in a large number of cases, is a matter on which he may well be congratulated.

As an Orientalist, however, I should protest against his endeavour to find etymologies for certain of the names. Kadmos, for instance, is certainly Phœnician. The question has been settled by a cuneiform tablet which informs us that Qadmu was the name of "god." Herodotos, again, states that Kandaules of Lydia was called Myrsilos as being the son of Myrsos; and the Lydian inscription which I copied in Egypt the winter before last, with its Alus Mrshlt, "Alys the son of Mrshlt" shows that (i) denoted the Lydian patronymic. In the story of Perseus, too, I am inclined to think that Akrisios, like Danae, the Babylonian Danna(t), is of Chaldaean origin. We now know that the story is but a repetition of that told of the Babylonian hero, Gilgames; and since, according to Aelian, the Babylonian king Sakkhoras was the father of the Chaldaean Danae, it seems to me likely that Akrisios and Sakkhoras are but variant forms of the same name.

But these are matters about which absolute certainty will probably never be attainable. All we can hope to do is to reach a fair degree of probability through the combined labours of specialists in the European and Asiatic fields. Prof. Fick has done his part on the side of European philology; it now remains for the Orientalists to perform theirs.

A. H. SAYCE.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

Monograph on the Stalactites and Stalagmites of the Cleaves Cove, Ayrshire. By John Smith, Vice-President of the Geological Society of Glasgow. (Elliot Stock.) This is a very carefully written and detailed account of the calcite deposits in a typical limestone cave. The forms and colours assumed by the crystals are very various, and it is no easy matter to understand in all cases what has determined them. Generally speaking, stalactites—i.e., dependent growths—are much whiter than the stalagmites, as their position protects them from dust and dirt; but occasionally in both carbonaceous matter introduces a black band, or chalybeate water imparts to them a reddish tinge. Mr. Smith is very cautious in his statements, and considers that no fixed rule as to the rate of stalactite or stalagmite growth can be laid down. The book is enriched with thirty-six plates, exhibiting a great variety of crystals, and the same accuracy of treatment which distinguishes the rest of the monograph.

Practical Photo-micrography. By Andrew Pringle. (Hiffe.) The use of photography in connexion with the microscope has now become essential to all biological investigations; and Mr. Pringle has performed a useful service in bringing out a small hand-book for this branch of science. Both the instruments used and the various processes are treated of in a clear and concise and yet scientific manner. The large and excellent type, and the illustrations, are further recommendations of this useful little book.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ABYSSINIAN INSCRIPTIONS OF MR. THEODORE BENT.

Saaz, Bohemia: Sept. 12, 1894.

Yesterday I received the ACADEMY of September 8, with the translation of my letter about the Abyssinian Inscriptions of Mr. Bent. I am sorry that there are some misreadings in the translation; and, as the inscriptions are important, I beg that the following additions may be made to my letter.

The first line of the inscription Bent II. seems to permit two restorations, each of them in two sub-divisions, which I shall mark 1a, 1b, 2a, and 2b. They are:

1a.—... uldm Elm 'Am'm Be-sm Halenm, negushm Aksumm. In English: "N.N., son of Ela 'Amida Beese Halen, King of Axum."

1b.—... uldm Elm 'Amdm benm negushm Aksumm. In English: "N.N., son of Ela 'Amida, son of , King of Axum."

2a.—Aizdm Elm 'Amdm Be-sm Halenm negush Aksumm. In English: "'Aizdm Ela 'Amida Beese Halen, King of Axum."

2b.—Aizdm Elm 'Amdm benm negushm Aksumm. In English: "'Aizdm Ela 'Amida son of King of Axum."

We have now to examine which of these readings can be maintained.

The reading 1b must be excluded, because it would contain the word "son" twice, which in these and similar inscriptions is most unusual. Moreover, the same word would appear in two different forms (walad and ben), which also is inadmissible. There thus remain 1a, 2a, and 2b.

In the evidently incorrect facsimile given by Prof. D. H. Müller, the remains of the first word in the first line are decisively against the reading waladm, because the second sign can never be l, the l being in the Sabæan script composed of an oblique and a vertical line, and not, as the facsimile here shows, of a round line sloping down. For this reason the reading 1a is also to be excluded, and we have only 2a and 2b as possible ones. Thus, we must read either:

2a.—'Aizan Ela 'Amida Beese Halen, King of Axum; or 2b.—Aizan Ela Amida, son of . . . , King of Axum.

The king is doubtless 'Aizân Ela 'Amîda. The only doubt that exists is whether he had an additional epithet (Beese Halen), or whether his father was named in this place. This question can only be settled by a fresh examination of the squeeze now in the hands of Dr. Budge of the British Museum. Perhaps he and Mr. Bent, the owner of the squeeze, will allow it to be examined.

Prof. D. H. Müller reads the name of the king as Ela 'Amîda, and not Ela 'Amida. But it is certainly Ela 'Amida, Prof. Müller having misread dh for d by prolonging the left vertical side of the triangle of the d, and thus making it similar to dh. This is the more certain, as the character dh has in no other passage of the inscription the form given it here by Prof. Müller's facsimile. We thus have the result that Bent II. and the Bilingual of Axum (Greek and Aethiopo-Sabæan) have one and the same author—King 'Aizân Ela Amida.

As for the two Geez inscriptions Bent III. and IV., which have been written by .zēna, son of Ela 'Amida, it seems that this .zēna is identical with King Tazēna in the Abyssinian lists of kings. The lists, like the ecclesiastical tradition, have the kings Saladôba, Ela 'Amida, and Tazēna. I have an impression that the Abyssinian royal names have, as in Southern Arabia, been restored from the ancient inscriptions without any historical grounds by ignorant Abyssinian priests of the eighth or ninth century A.D., or later. They did not understand Greek and Sabæan letters, but only the Geez alphabet. Thus they knew only the inscriptions Bent III. and IV., which are written in the Geez alphabet. At that time the name Tazēna was perhaps still legible, and so they knew of Tazēna and his father, Ela 'Amida, without knowing the other title of his father. Similarly they must have read somewhere in an inscription the name of Saladôba as that of the father of Ela 'Amida. 'Aizân, being written in Greek and Sabæan, was unknown to them. Now the history of Axum during those centuries can easily be explained, as I shall prove shortly. It is just the inscription Bent II. which has given a good basis for doing so. But it was necessary first of all to refute Prof. D. H. Müller's erroneous statements and misleading facsimiles, which would otherwise have been a great hindrance to our progress.

E. GLASER.

HYMNI HOMERICI (ED. GOODWIN, 1893).

Χαμῆρυ: Aug. 20, 1894.

Dion. I. 2. ὡς δὲ τὰ μὲν. Read τάμην, "were cut," and refer to the Dionysia legend.

Dem. 269. Write, after Tyrrell, ἀθανάτους θνητοῖσι τ' ὕναιον κάρμα τέτυκται.

328. κ' ἐθέλοισα. Read κὲ βόλυιτο

344. Read ἡ δ' ἐπ' ἀλήτων ἐργοῖς θεῶν μακάρων [χαλεπὸν] μητίετο βουλήν.

404. Supply a line such as εἰπέ δέ μοι πῶς ο' ἦγεν ὑπὸ ζόφον ἡρέρντα.
438. Keep γηθόσσαι, and supply such a line as μύθον τῶν δα' ἐκάστη ἐποίησάν τ' ἐπαθόν τε.
- Ap. 18. Restore the MS. reading ὅπ'.
53. οὐδὲ σε λίσσει. Perhaps οὐδὲ σε δύσει, or οὐδ' ἐσθύσει.
81. Supply a line such as τευξάσθω νηὺς τε καὶ ἄλσέα δενδρήντα.
129. Read δεσμά σ' ἔρκε.
133. Keep ἀπὸ of the MSS.
173. Keep the present ἀριστεύουσι.
299. κτιστοῖσιν λάεσσιν. Read τοκτωῖσιν.
317. Supply such a line as ἀλσος ἔμολ καὶ δνείδας ἐν οὐρανῷ· ὅν τε καὶ αὐτὴ.
382. πέτρῃν προχυνῆσι is dat. of circum-stance, "with a shower of stones."
402. ἐπεφράσαστο νοῆσαι. Qu. νομῆσαι?
408. Keep ἔγειρε, "freshened."
417. Keep ἀμφίς, "out, away."
539. Keep ἰδὼν. Supply such a line as δεικνύσθε θνητοῖς· τὴν δὲ φρεσὶ δέξο θέμιστα.
- Herm. 44. Read θαμνεία for θαμνία; cf. Choerobosc. ap. Cram. An. Ox. II., p. 180.
48. Perhaps κατὰ νῶτα διὰ ῥυαῖο.
80. For ἀφραστ', read ὕφρ' ἔστ', i.e. ἄιστα.
159. Supply as follows:
159, ὅς σε λαβὼν ῥίψει κατὰ ταρτάρου ἡρέρντος,
159a, ἢ σε λαβὼντα μετὰ κατ' ἄγκυα φηλητεύσειν.
160. Restore πάλιν.
272. Restore βουλή μετ'.
457. Read διῆζε πέπον καὶ θυμὸν ἐγείρει προ-βυτέραισιν.
526. Supply a line such as οἰετὸν ἦκε πατὴρ δ' ἐπάμοσσε, ἢ σε μὰν' αἶον.
568. Supply a pair of lines such as—ὡς ἔφατ'· αἰρὰνθόν δὲ πατὴρ Ζεὺς αὐτὸς ἔπεισεν θῆκε τέλος· πᾶσιν δ' ὁ μὲν οἰωνοῖσι κίλευσε.

T. W. ALLEN.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Swiney Lectures on Geology, under the auspices of the trustees of the British Museum, will this year again be given by Prof. H. Alleyne Nicholson, who has taken for his subject "The Making of the Earth's Crust." The lectures are delivered at the South Kensington Museum, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays during October, at 3 p.m. For next year, Dr. J. G. Garson has been appointed Swiney Lecturer; and it is expected that he will deal with the geological history of man.

THE winter session at the medical schools in connexion with the several hospitals in London will commence on Monday, October 1.

MR. FRANK FINN has been appointed first assistant curator in the zoological department of the Indian Museum at Calcutta.

MESSRS. WHITTINGHAM & Co. will publish shortly a work entitled What is Heat? a Peep into Nature's most hidden Secrets, by Mr. Frederick Hovenden, with illustrations.

IN the current number of Science Progress, Prof. H. Halliburton, of King's College, writes upon "Snake Poison," emphasising the need of further study of blood coagulation and of the poisonous proteids secreted by snakes. There are two papers on "Algae": Mr. A. C. Seward, of Cambridge, brings forward their claims as rock-building organisms; while Mr. George Murray, of the British Museum, deals with fossil algae. Mr. E. H. Griffiths contributes an article on "The Measurement of Temperature," arguing that mercury thermometers cannot compare in accuracy with the platinum thermometer. The bibliography of chemical literature for the preceding month is continued.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

Practical Designing: a Handbook on the Preparation of Working Drawings. Edited by Gleeson White. Contributors: Alexander Millar, Arthur Silver, Wilton F. Rix, Owen Carter, R. Ll. B. Rathbone, Selwyn Image, and George C. Haité. (Bell.) These papers have all been written by masters of their craft, and may be recommended without any fear. Not the least interesting and valuable is the editor's own paper on "Drawing for Reproduction," which is, indeed, an art in itself, too apt to be slighted even by good artists, who have not made it a special study. From Mr. Alexander Millar on "Carpet-designing" to Mr. George C. Haité on "Wall-papers," the book is full of sound instruction, the result of experience; and the illustrations are thoroughly business-like, with an eye to beauty at the same time.

A Handbook of Ornament. By Franz Sales Meyer. Translated from the fourth revised German edition. (Batsford.) This volume has reached its fourth edition in Germany, and its value must therefore be regarded as established. With its three thousand illustrations, it is no doubt a happy hunting ground for those in search of an "adaptable" design. The examples are taken from all schools and times; and the taste of the selector seems to have been extremely impartial, as the good, bad, and indifferent often hustle one another on the same page. The book, however, is well arranged, and has the merit of containing an immense amount of information and suggestion in a small compass.

Some Hints on Learning to Draw. By G. W. Caldwell Hutchinson. (Macmillans.) This is one of those books which needs little recommendation. Its modest title scarcely does justice to the completeness of the work. It begins with "measuring" and "outlines" and "perspective," and goes on to drawing from nature and the life, without leaving alone any intermediate stages, or neglecting such important matters as the use of water-colours, and the value of some knowledge of anatomy. It is "elementary," no doubt, but within its limits it is thorough; and the student will not have to unlearn or forget any of its lessons, as they are all sound. It is well illustrated, and well printed also, though the margin is rather meagre, and some of the drawings are not quite so clearly reproduced as they should be. Many of these, like Sir Frederic Leighton's drawings of Lemon Blossom, the flowers of Mr. Alfred Parsons, Mr. Watts's head of "Thomas Wright," and Mr. Marks's studies of "An Egg-collector," are of special interest and beauty. The examples of pen-drawing by Mr. Pennell, Mr. Strang, and Mr. Hugh Thomson are also excellent in their way.

A Few Words about Drawing for Beginners. By J. B. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.) We are afraid that this little book will not be of much use to beginners or to anybody else. Its author has composed it, as she tells us in the title, "after a long experience of its difficulties," that is, of the difficulties of drawing. If we may judge from the illustrations, she is yet very far from having triumphed over them. Nor can we praise very highly the hints she gives to less accomplished artists. Here is one for a sample: "If a hand is to be holding anything, the fingers should curl round it and grasp it." Is that the way she holds her pencil or her pen?

CORRESPONDENCE.

A COIN OF KING CINTHILA.

Oporto: Sept. 10, 1894.

The director of the newly opened municipal museum at Figueira da Foz, Portugal, has lately acquired a well-preserved gold coin, found near Tafe, bearing the legends CINTHILA REX and TYDEIXYSTYS. The Description Générale des Monnaies des Rois Wisigoths d'Espagne, par Alois Heiss (Paris, 1872), records no coin of this king struck at Tuy, or presenting his name with this spelling. The letter Y on this piece has, of course, the value of U.

E. S. DODGSON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ONE of the most important of the illustrated books which Mr. George Allen contemplates issuing this autumn is an edition of Spenser's Faerie Queene, in large post quarto form, with illustrations by Mr. Walter Crane. It is to be published in monthly parts, and will probably be the artist's chef d'œuvre, as he himself said that it had been the dream of his life to illustrate the Faerie Queene.

THE committee of the Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery having decided to hold an exhibition of works by living English marine painters, Mr. Whitworth Wallis, the director, has been engaged for some months past in getting together a representative collection. Among the artists who will be represented are Sir Oswald Brierley, Messrs. J. C. Hook, Henry Moore, John Brett, Colin Hunter, Stanhope Forbes, A. W. Hunt, C. Napier Hemy, Edwin Ellis, Frank Brangwyn, Tom Henry, Tom Graham, Hamilton Macallum, W. L. Wyllie, C. W. Wyllie, H. S. Tuke, David Murray, Edwin Hayes, E. M. Hale, W. H. Bartleet, Albert Goodwin, Walter Langley, R. W. Macbeth, W. Small, Nelson Dawson, and J. Fraser. The exhibition will open on October 1.

THE annual autumn exhibition in the Royal Institution at Manchester opened this week. On this occasion the permanent collection in the galleries has been left undisturbed, and consequently there is less room for pictures of the year. In addition to the work of local artists, these include Sir E. Leighton's "Spirit of the Summit," and examples of Messrs. Watts, Poynter, Goodall, Henry Moore, Brett, Boughton, MacWhirter, Stanhope Forbes, Shannon, Hacker, and North.

THE last part of Archæologia Aeliiana (Andrew Reid), published by the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, consists mainly of an index to vol. xvi. (new series). Mr. Maberly Phillips gives a history of the Old Bank at Newcastle, found by Ralph Carr about 1740, which he believes to have been the earliest provincial bank in England. During the Forty-five rebellion, Mr. Carr forwarded no less than £30,000 to Scotland for the use of the royal army. There are two short papers relating to the Roman Wall. The Rev. G. Rome Hall describes a fragment of a lorica which he found last year among the debris of the wall-turret on Walltown Crag, and compares it with similar relics in the British Museum and elsewhere. Mr. Cadwallader J. Bates quotes the following passage from an anonymous treatise, De Rebus Bellicis, which is sometimes printed with the Notitia, as illustrating the mile-castles:

"Est præterea inter commoda reipublicæ utilis limitum cura, ambientium ubique latus imperii. Quorum tutelæ assidua melius castella prospiciunt: ita ut millenis interjecta passibus stabili muro et firmissimis turribus erigantur. Quas quidem munitiones possessorum distributa sollicitudo sine publico sumptu constituat, vigiliis in his et agrariis exercendis, ut provinciarum quies circumdata quodam præsidii cingulo inlaesa requiescat."

THE STAGE.

THE re-opening of Drury Lane marks the beginning of the theatrical season, and has that amount of interest, albeit the drama presented within its walls makes—if we may put it mildly—little claim to possess literary value.

It is frankly a piece of adventure and a piece of spectacle. For all that, a very good cast—a cast including some almost first-rate people—is engaged by Sir Augustus for the interpretation of his "Derby Winner," Mr. Charles Cartwright, Mr. Arthur Bouchier, Mrs. John Wood, and Miss Beatrice Lamb lending their skill to the performance. As a scenic display—at all events, as a display of pure realism—"The Derby Winner" does not yield the palm to any of its forerunners. The actual race for the "blue ribband of the Turf" is portrayed—one might almost say enacted—with consummate dexterity upon the boards of "the Lane."

NOT, perhaps, since the appearance here of Herr Barney—"als gast"—and of the Meiningen company, has there been in London public performance of German drama; and this circumstance lends interest to the appearance of a German company of average competence at the often unlucky theatre of the "Opera Comique." If German is not understood by any means universally in Piccadilly or South Kensington, in Hampstead or Chelsea, it is a tongue familiar, as we are informed, to all Dalston and all Barnsbury. The German colony will doubtless be the backbone of support to the German drama. Yet is the German drama better worth notice than is popularly supposed. Its prolixity does not exclude truth of observation, and it has afforded material of which the American adaptor has not been slow to take advantage.

MUSIC.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

Masters of German Music. By J. A. Fuller Maitland. (Osgood, Mellvaine & Co.) A third of this book is devoted to Johannes Brahms. Mr. Fuller Maitland rightly remarks that "the existence of a strong opposition implies strength in the thing opposed." Brahms, in certain quarters, has been hotly opposed; therefore, he is very strong. Our author mentions, as an instance of Brahms's powers of transposition, that he played the "Kreutzer Sonata," written in A, in B flat, when he found that the pianoforte, on a certain occasion, was flat. To transpose a difficult work at sight was undoubtedly clever; but the composer probably adopted the easier mental transposition of A to A sharp, i.e., without changing the alphabetical names of the notes. Mr. Fuller Maitland's enthusiasm for Brahms is refreshing; but seeing that he had really a great master to write about, we think he might have dispensed with some of his laudatory adjectives. He considers that the epilogue of the "Schieksalslied" illustrates "the power of instrumental music to suggest definite non-musical ideas"; but surely in this instance the principle of association comes into play. Mr. Maitland refers to the composer's "many points of resemblance to Beethoven, and certainly his 'complete indifference to journalistic verdicts' may count as one. Discussing Brahms's pianoforte music, he remarks:

"It is not one of Brahms's merits, any more than it was one of Beethoven's, to write what is called 'grateful' music for the pianoforte alone." We agree with the statement respecting Brahms, but scarcely with that concerning the older master. Beethoven's pianoforte music may not be quite so fascinating to the pianist as that of Chopin, or Liszt, but it seems to us to possess many "grateful" qualities. We are glad that Mr. Maitland's admiration for Brahms did not prevent him from noticing some transcriptions from Bach, Weber, and Chopin, as exhibiting Brahms "in an almost mischievous mood." Reference is made to Brahms's objection to write to order, and his resolution not to write for festivals is applauded. Our author confesses, however, that, if English composers were to follow his example, it would probably "end in their sinking to the level of song-writers and purveyors of pianoforte pieces."

Max Bruch is said to follow Brahms longo intervallo. But the great value of Bruch's music is fully recognised; and, in fact, for the sake of English musicians, a notice such as the present one was much needed, since "very little of his music has entered into what may be called the permanent repertory of English concerts."

Goldmark, Rheinberger, and Joachim are the next masters noticed; and with all three English people are, for various reasons, imperfectly acquainted. We of course refer to Joachim as a composer. Mme. Schumann is also ranked among the "masters"; and she deserves a place, if only for her exquisite songs.

From the great, our author passes to the "little" masters—Herzogenberg, Hofmann, &c.; and, borrowing a title from Schumann, under "New Paths," he discusses quite modern men, including Kistler. His appreciation of this composer is not very warm; but so far as we can make out, he has not heard any performances of his operas. An opinion of Wagner's "Parsifal," founded only on the pianoforte score, might prove somewhat cold.

Mr. Fuller Maitland's book is both interesting and valuable; and as he has the courage of his opinions, he will not be alarmed to find that, in a few comparatively unimportant matters, others differ from him.

The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, Parts 1 and 2. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland and W. Barclay Squire. (Breitkopf & Härtel.) Of collections of Virginal Music, the volume in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, is the most remarkable, and, in many respects, the most valuable. For a long time it was known as Queen Elizabeth's Virginal Book, but there is sufficient evidence to show that it can never have belonged to her: in all probability it dates from the third decade of the seventeenth century. It was, at one time, in the hands of Dr. Pepusch, organist to the Duke of Chandos before Handel; the earliest account of it is said to be in Mr. Ward's Lives of the Gresham Professors (1740). The volume contains no less than 291 pieces, and of these the two parts now under notice contain only the first nine and part of the tenth. To insist on the importance of the contents is scarcely necessary; like Bach's music, that of the early English masters whose names figure in the collection seems to defy time and its ravages. To imagine that the interest in it is merely an historical one would be a great mistake. The first parts contain John Bull's "Walsingham" Variations, which for skill and extraordinary technique deserve a place with the "Goldberg" Variations of Bach. John Munday's Fantasia (No. 3) is an early and interesting specimen of programme music; in it "Faire Wether" and "Lightning and Thunder" are depicted in most realistic fashion.

To print the Virginal Book is an undertaking on which the firm of Breitkopf & Härtel may well be congratulated, while the two editors appointed are a sufficient guarantee that the work will be conscientiously performed. The peculiarities of the MS. in regard to notation, time-signatures, fingering, &c., are to be fully discussed in the Introduction, which will appear with the last part. The delay is to be regretted, but the editors have probably some good reason for adopting this course.

Englishmen may be proud to think that, in early instrumental music, their country was in the van. Old Christopher Simpson, writing well nigh three centuries ago, remarked, "You need not seek outlandish authors, especially for instrumental music; no nation (in my opinion) being equal to the English in that way." J. S. S.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

LATIN.

CÆSAR.—THE COMMENTARIES (for Schools). With Notes and Maps. By CHARLES E. Moberly, M.A.
The Gallic War. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo.
Books I. and II., 2s.; III.-V., 2s. 6d.; VI.-VIII., 8s. 6d.

Books I.-III., stiff covers, 2s.

CICERO.—PRO CLUENTIO. With Introduction and Notes. By W. RAMSAY, M.A. Edited by G. G. RAMSAY, M.A. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.

CICERO.—PRO ROSCIO AMERINO. With Notes. By ST. GEORGE STOCK, M.A. 3s. 6d.

LIVY.—BOOK XXI. Edited by M. T. TATHAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

LIVY.—BOOKS XXI.-XXIII. With Introduction and Notes. By M. T. TATHAM, M.A. Second Edition, Enlarged. 5s.

PLAUTUS.—TRINUMMUS. With Notes and Introductions. (Intended for the Higher Forms of Public Schools.) By C. E. FREEMAN, M.A., and A. SLOMAN, M.A. 3s.

TACITUS.—THE ANNALS. BOOKS I.-IV. Edited, with Introduction and Notes (for the use of Schools and Junior Students), by H. FURNEAUX, M.A. 5s.

TERENCE.—ANDRIA. With Notes and Introductions. By C. E. FREEMAN, M.A., and A. SLOMAN, M.A. 3s.

TERENCE.—ADELPHI. With Notes and Introductions. (Intended for the Higher Forms of Public Schools.) By A. SLOMAN, M.A. 3s.

TERENCE.—PHORMIO. With Notes and Introductions. By A. SLOMAN, M.A. 3s.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID I. Edited by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. 1s. 6d.

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID I.-XII. By the same Editors. In Four Parts. Crown 8vo, 3s. each.

GREEK.

ÆSCHYLUS.—AGAMEMNON. With Introduction and Notes. By ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A. Fourth Edition. 8s.

ÆSCHYLUS.—EUMENIDES. With Introduction and Notes. By ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A. New Edition. 3s.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE CLOUDS. Edited, with English Notes, Introductions, &c., by W. W. MERRY, D.D. Third Edition. 3s.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE KNIGHTS. Edited, with English Notes, Introductions, &c., by W. W. MERRY, D.D. Third Edition. 3s.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE WASPS. Edited, with English Notes, Introductions, &c., by W. W. MERRY, D.D. 3s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. Third Edition. 2s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. H. RUSSELL, M.A. 2s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—HERACLEIDÆ. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. 3s.

EURIPIDES.—MEDEA. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. B. HERRNEN, M.A. Second Edition. 2s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY.—BOOKS I.-XII. By W. W. MERRY, D.D. Fifty-third Thousand. Extra fcap. 8vo, 5s.

Books I. and II., separately, each 1s. 6d.

Books VI. and VII. Extra fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY. BOOKS VII.-XII. Edited by W. W. MERRY, D.D. 3s.

SOPHOCLES.—ELECTRA. Edited, with Introductions and English Notes, by LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., and EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A. 2s.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK I. With Notes and Map. By J. MARSHALL, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Anabasis, Book II. With Notes and Map. By C. S. JERRAM, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s.

Vocabulary to the Anabasis. By J. MARSHALL, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

ENGLISH.

CHAUCER.—THE SQUIERES TALE; The Prioresse's Tale; The Monks Tale; The Clerkes Tale, &c. Edited by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Fifth Edition. 4s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—SELECT PLAYS. Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers.

Edited by W. G. CLARK, M.A. and W. ALDIS WRIGHT, D.C.L.

The Merchant of Venice. 1s. Macbeth. 1s.
Hamlet. 2s. Richard the Second. 1s. 6d.

Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, D.C.L.
The Tempest. 1s. 6d. Midsummer Night's Dream. 1s. 6d.

As You Like It. 1s. 6d. Coriolanus. 2s. 6d.

Julius Cæsar. 2s. Henry the Fifth. 2s.
Richard the Third. 2s. 6d. Twelfth Night. 1s. 6d.

King Lear. 1s. 6d. Much Ado About Nothing. [In the press.]
Henry the Eighth. 2s.

King John. 1s. 6d.

BACON.—ADVANCEMENT OF LEARNING. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, D.C.L. Third Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

POPE.—SELECT WORKS. With Introduction and Notes. By MARK PATTISON, B.D.
Essay on Man. Sixth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

SCOTT.—MARMION. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. BAYNE. Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

JOHNSON.—RASSELAS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. Bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.; in parchment, 4s. 6d.

MORRIS and SKEAT.—SPECIMENS OF EARLY ENGLISH. A New and Revised Edition. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossarial Index.

Part II. From Robert of Gloucester to Cowey (A.D. 1298 to A.D. 1393). By R. MORRIS, LL.D., and W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Second Edition. 7s. 6d.

SWEET.—AN ANGLO-SAXON PRIMER. With Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By HENRY SWEET, M.A. Seventh Edition. 2s. 6d.

AN ANGLO-SAXON READER. In Prose and Verse. With Grammatical Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By HENRY SWEET, M.A. Seventh Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 9s. 6d.

A PRIMER OF HISTORICAL ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By HENRY SWEET, M.A. 2s.

MODERN LANGUAGES.

HOFMANN.—HEUTE MIR MORGEN DIR. Edited by J. H. MAUDE, M.A. 2s.

MINNA VON BARNHELM. A Comedy. Edited, with Biographical, Historical, and Critical Introductions, Arguments (to the Dramas), and Complete Commentaries, by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Phil. Doc., Professor in King's College, London. Fifth Edition. 3s. 6d.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL. A Drama. Large Edition. With Map. Seventh Edition. 3s. 6d. By the Same Editor.

—Wilhelm Tell. School Edition. With Maps. Fourth Edition. 2s. By the Same Editor.

MODERN GERMAN READER. A Graded Collection of Extracts from Modern German Authors. Edited by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Phil. Doc.

Part I. Prose Extracts. With English Notes, a Grammatical Appendix, and a Complete Vocabulary. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d.

Part II. Extracts in Prose and Poetry. With English Notes and an Index. Second Edition. 2s. 6d.

LESSING.—THE LAOKOON. With English Notes, by A. HAMANN, Phil. Doc., M.A. Revised, with an Introduction, by L. E. UCCOTT, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

BEAUMARCHAIS' LE BARBIER DE SEVILLE. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THEOLOGY.

THE OXFORD HELPS to the STUDY of the BIBLE, comprising Introductions to the several Books, the History and Antiquities of the Jews, the Results of Modern Discoveries, and the Natural History of Palestine, with Copious Tables, Concordance and Indices, and a series of Maps, New, Enlarged, and Illustrated Edition. Pearl 16mo, stiff covers, 1s. net. Large Type Edition, long primer 8vo, cloth boards, 4s. 6d. net.

OXFORD HELPS to the STUDY of the BOOK of COMMON PRAYER. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NOVUM TESTAMENTUM GRAECE. C. LLOYD. 18mo, 3s.

A GREEK TESTAMENT PRIMER. An Easy Grammar and Reading Book. By E. MILLER, M.A. 3s. 6d.

HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY.

A SHORT HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST of ENGLAND. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HISTORY of the DOMINION of CANADA. By W. PARR GREWELL, M.A., under the Auspices of the Royal Colonial Institute. With 11 Maps. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY of the DOMINION of CANADA and NEWFOUNDLAND. By the same Author. With 10 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GEOGRAPHY of AFRICA, SOUTH of the ZAMBESI. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION to a HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. By C. F. LUCAS, B.A. With 8 Maps. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. By the Same Author.

Vol. I. The Mediterranean and Eastern Colonies (exclusive of India). With 11 Maps. 8s.

Vol. II. The West Indian Colonies. With 12 Maps. 7s. 6d.

Vol. III. West Africa. With 5 Maps. 7s. 6d.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES. By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I. Eightieth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS, ETC.

ELEMENTARY MECHANICS of SOLIDS and FLUIDS. By A. L. SELBY, M.A. 7s. 6d.

PRACTICAL WORK in HEAT. By W. G. WOOLCOMBE, M.A. 3s.

PRACTICAL WORK in PHYSICS. By the Same Author. 3s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the MATHEMATICAL THEORY of ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. By W. T. A. ENTAGE, M.A. Second Edition. 7s. 6d.

BOOK-KEEPING. New and Enlarged Edition. By Sir R. G. C. HAMILTON and JOHN BALL. Extra fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, 2s.

* * * Ruled Exercise Books, adapted to the above, may be had, price 1s. 6d.; also, adapted to the Preliminary Course only, price 4s.

HYDROSTATIC and ELEMENTARY HYDROKINETICS. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. By G. M. MINCHIN, M.A.

A TREATISE on the KINETIC THEORY of GASES. By H. W. WATSON, D.Sc., F.R.S. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

MAXWELL.—AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on ELECTRICITY. Edited by WILLIAM GARNETT, M.A. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

In 6 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles.

THE COMPLETE WORKS

OF

GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

Edited from numerous MSS. by Prof. W. W. SKEAT.

VOL. IV., Just Published, 18s., containing THE TEXT OF THE CANTERBURY TALES.

The complete set of Six Volumes is offered to Subscribers at THREE GUINEAS net, payable in advance.

THE SUBSCRIPTION LIST WILL BE CLOSED FOR BOTH WORKS OCTOBER 31.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE; CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by the Proprietor, HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, uniform with the OXFORD CHAUCER.

PIERS THE PLOWMAN.

Edited from numerous Manuscripts, with Preface, Notes, and Glossary by W. W. SKEAT.

At the desire of the Editor, subscribers to the OXFORD CHAUCER have now the opportunity of obtaining "Piers the Plowman" (published at 31s. 6d.) at the Subscription price of ONE GUINEA net, payable in advance.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1169.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

S. R. CROCKETT'S NEW WORK.

"THE LILAC SUNBONNET," by S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Raiders," "The Stickit Minister," &c., will be ready, at all Booksellers, on Tuesday next, October 2. In large crown 8vo, cloth boards, gilt top, price 6s.

THE NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

VENICE. By the Hon. Alethea Wiel. Profusely Illustrated, and furnished with Maps and Index. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"Shows great industry and research, embodying the latest information."—Observer.

"At once the most readable, elaborate, and yet moderate in dimensions, that the subject has suggested."—Globe.

SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION.

ANNIE BESANT: an Autobiography. With Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A fascinating story."—Daily Chronicle.

"An extraordinary book."—Daily News.

W. E. GLADSTONE, speaking of this Work in the September Number of the NINETEENTH CENTURY, says: "THIS VOLUME PRESENTS TO US AN OBJECT OF CONSIDERABLE INTEREST. IT INSPIRES SYMPATHY WITH THE WRITER, NOT ONLY AS A PERSON HIGHLY GIFTED, BUT AS A SEEKER AFTER TRUTH."

THE NEW PSEUDONYM.

A HUSBAND of NO IMPORTANCE.

By RITA.

Paper, 1s 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"As darling as it is fascinating."—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"A brightly-written little story."—Glasgow Herald.

THE NEW AUTONYM.

MAD SIR UCHTRED of the HILLS.

By S. R. CROCKETT.

Second Edition. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"Exceedingly well-written."—Daily News.

"Emphatically this is a book to read."—Vanity Fair.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

BOTH WORLDS BARRED. By Sydney Kean. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE MARK o' the DE'IL, and other Northumbrian Tales. By Howard Pease,

Author of "Borderland Studies." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Always healthy and pleasant."—Scotsman.

"Exceedingly quaint."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE REFORMER'S BOOKSHELF."

TITLED CORRUPTION: the Sordid Origin of Some Irish Peerages. By

J. G. SWIFT MACNEILL, M.P., M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, one of Her Majesty's Counsel in Ireland, and formerly Professor of Constitutional and Criminal Law in the Honourable Society of the King's Inns, Dublin. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"It is almost too painful an argument for the repeal of the Union."—Daily Chronicle (Leader).

The OCTOBER Number of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE contains an Account of an INTERVIEW with the CHINESE VICEROY, illustrated with a Portrait taken from a Photograph supplied by LI HUNG-CHANG himself. Price 1s. 4d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| DR. ROBERT BROWN'S STORY OF AFRICA, by Prof. KEANE | 225 |
| ATKINSON'S LAILI AND MAJNUN, by G. E. WILSON | 226 |
| MEDLEY'S ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY, by R. S. LONG | 227 |
| MARCEL PREVOST'S SHORT STORIES, by F. WEDMORE | 227 |
| LONDON'S PRINCIPLES OF TEACHING, by FOSTER WATSON | 228 |
| NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE | 229 |
| SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE, by PERCY ADDLESHAW | 230 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 231 |
| THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES | 232 |
| TRANSLATION: "THE PRESS-OANG," by HERBERT A. GILES | 232 |
| OBITUARY: DR. W. S. GREENHILL AND DR. J. E. MILLARD, by J. S. C. & Co. | 232 |
| THE CLARENDON PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS | 232 |
| THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS | 233 |
| MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 233 |
| MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 234 |
| MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 234 |
| MESSRS. GAY & BIRD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 234 |
| MESSRS. BEMROSE & SON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 234 |
| MESSRS. GIBBINGS & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 231 |
| THE ROXBURGH PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS | 234 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 235 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Manuscripts of the Canterbury Tales , by Dr. FURNIVALL; | |
| The Baginbun Stone , by E. W. B. NICHOLSON and | |
| R. A. S. MACALISTER | 235 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 235 |
| TWO BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY, by Prof. A. H. CHURCH | 235 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Newly Discovered Fragments of Suetonius' Life of Lucr- | |
| tius, by John Masson; "Arabic Tapyri of the Bodleian | |
| Library," by Prof. Margoliouth | 236 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 237 |
| W. MAX MÜLLER'S RACES IN ANCIENT EGYPT, by F. L. GRIFFITH | 237 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 238 |
| THEATRICAL NOTES FROM PARIS, by CECIL NICHOLSON | 238 |
| MUSIC NOTES | 238 |

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most
moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLI-CATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

CATALOGUE OF PAMPHLETS.—Now in the press, and will be issued shortly, a CATALOGUE of between Forty and Fifty Thousand Pamphlets, chiefly Ancient, arranged under Subjects, Localities, and Authors' Names, including many very rare and valuable. Collectors desiring a Copy should apply to the Publishers, CLEMENT PALMER & Co., 100, Southampton Row, London, W.C.

IMPORTANT—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, BELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other publications.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 2753. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

THACKERAY'S WORKS for SALE,
First Editions, cheap.—ESMOND, 3 vols., original cloth, clean, 192 VINTY FAIR, Half-bound, 198.—LENDENNIS,
2 vols., 1349.—HARRIS, Brunswick Terrace, Stafford

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

ACADEMY. A complete series or a long run, bound in cloth preferred.
CONTEMPORARY REVIEW, 1867 to 1871, all or any parts or volume.
JOURNAL OF PHILOLOGY, 1877 to 1893, or a set.
MONTHLY NOTICES OF LIBRARY ASSOCIATION. 4 vols.
DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE, Vol. 67 to—1866—1882.

G. BUCKLE, 60, STANHOPE STREET, NEWCASTLE STREET, LONDON, W.C.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, LONDON,

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED
THE ROYAL SCHOOL OF MINES.

DEAN—THE RT. HON. T. H. HUXLEY, LL.D., F.R.S.

| | | |
|----------------------|-----|--|
| MECHANICS AND | ... | Professor Goodeve, M.A. |
| MATHEMATICS | ... | ... |
| PHYSICS | ... | Professor A. W. Rucker, M.A., F.R.S. |
| ASTRONOMY | ... | Professor J. Norman Lockyer, C.B., F.R.S. |
| CHEMISTRY | ... | Professor W. A. Tilden, D.Sc., F.R.S. |
| BIOLOGY | ... | Professor (Hon.) The Rt. Hon. T. H. Huxley, LL.D., F.R.S. |
| GEOLOGY | ... | Professor J. W. Judd, F.R.S. |
| METALLURGY | ... | Professor W. C. Roberts-Austen, C.B., F.R.S. |
| MINING | ... | Professor C. Le Neve Foster, D.Sc., A.R.S.M., F.R.S. |
| AGRICULTURE | ... | Professor J. Wrightson, F.O.S. Francis Fladgate, Registrar. |

NEXT SESSION BEGINS OCTOBER 3RD.

Full Particulars can be obtained from the Registrar, Royal College of Science, South Kensington, and Prospectuses of Eyre & Spottiswoode, East Harding Street, Fleet Street, E.C., or of any Bookseller.

TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON. For

Musical Education and Examination. Inst. 1873.
President—SIR RICHARD E. WEBSTER, G.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P.
Warden—Professor E. H. TURPIN, Mus.D.
Director of Studies—Professor BRADHURST TURNER, Mus.B.
Director of Examinations—Professor JAMES HIGGS, Mus.B.
MICHAELMAS TERM begins on OCTOBER 1st.
Any or all of the following Printed Papers may be had on application to the undersigned:—(a) Regulations and List of Music to be performed for the Local Examinations in Instrumental and Vocal Music, and Regulations for the (Theoretical) Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge; (b) List of Local Centres; (c) Regulations for the Higher Examinations for Diplomas and Certificates and List of Music to be performed for the Higher Certificates in Vocal and Instrumental Subjects; (d) Prospectus of the Classes and Lectures Department;
(e) General Prospectus containing List of Honorary Officers; (f) Regulations for the Enrolment of Institutions in Unio; (g) Regulations for Membership.

By order of the Academical Board,

SULLIVAN FISHER, Secretary.
Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, W.

BOROUGH of WEST BROMWICH.

The Corporation of West Bromwich require the services of a PRINCIPAL to undertake the general control of the Day and Evening Teaching in their Science School. The salary has been fixed at £300 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st April next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Municipal Technical Instruction Committee.

Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 1st December next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter.

T. GILBERT GAFFRINS, Secretary.

The Institute, West Bromwich.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.
THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dye-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the REGISTRAR:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.

A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

YORKSHIRE COLLEGE HALL OF RESIDENCE (Limited), LYDDON HALL, LEEDS, under the direction of Mr. HERBERT ROWE, has been established as a Hall of Residence for Students of the Yorkshire College. Fee, £18 per term. Prospectus from the SECRETARY of the College.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE OF SCIENCE
NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

The College represents the Faculties of Science and Engineering in the University of Durham, and is open to Students of either sex.

In addition to the Departments of Pure Science, complete Courses of Instruction are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, and Mining. There are also Departments of Literature, Classics, History, Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.

A House of Residence for Women Students is attached to the College.

The SESSION commences SEPTEMBER 24th 1894.

Full particulars will be found in the College Calendar, price 1s.
Prospectuses will be forwarded on application free.

H. F. STOCKDALE, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE OF LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork,
Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Paisley,
Trent, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

TO CONNOISSEURS OF THE FINE ARTS.

57, BELSIZE PARK GARDENS.—BY ORDER OF EXECUTORS.

MESSRS. E. & F. SWAIN beg to draw attention to the valuable collection of OIL PAINTINGS included in second day's sale as above, on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10th, amongst which will be found choice examples of Donovan Adam, F. Vine, Tito Conti, and others; a fine Gallery Picture,

"Heroism and Humanity," by Sir William Allan, R.A., F.R.S.A., exhibited in the Royal Scotch Academy, 1840; very clever works by or after Berghem, Hoth, Correggio, and Murillo; Water-Colour Drawings, Views of Old Edinburgh, by J. Diaz. In addition to these are included several pairs of costly Sevres Vases of large size, a cleverly executed figure in brass of "Harmony," by Carrier, and the "Venus Triumphant," in marble, by Bigiolelli, noble bronze Clock, by Muirhead, Paris, and other objets d'art.

May be viewed privately on Saturday, October 6th, by orders only to be obtained of the AUCTIONEERS; and publicly on Monday, October 8th, and Catalogues had of the AUCTIONEERS, 32, High Street, Notting Hill Gate, W.

NEW WORK in preparation by

W. RUSSELL, Author of "An Invalid's Twelve Years' Experience"—"MAN": his Peculiarities, Weakness, Diseases, Degeneration, and Remedies."

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT
PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address
Mr. G. B. BROCKES, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN, 30, MANDEL STREET, BAUXSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLE-

MEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE,
46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honorable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Caister, Esq., of Norton, Middlesex; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgway, 36, Porchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL

SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGIS-TRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions.
Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

ADVICE as to CHOICE of SCHOOLS.—

The SCHOLASTIC ASSOCIATION (a body of Oxford and Cambridge Graduates) gives ADVICE and ASSISTANCE, without charge, to PARENTS and GUARDIANS in the SELECTION of SCHOOLS for Boys or Girls, and Tutors for all Examinations at home and abroad.—A Statement of Requirements should be sent the Manager, R. J. BEYER, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

VINOLIA CREAM

Is a good Prescription

FOR

SUNBURN, INSECT BITES, and any SKIN IRRITATION

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY.—New Volume.

Edited by the DUKE of BEAUFORT, K.G., and A. E. T. WATSON.

ARCHERY. By C. J. LONGMAN and Colonel H. WALROND. With Contributions by Miss LEGH, Viscount DILLON, Major C. HAWKINS FISHER, Rev. EYRE W. HUSSEY, Rev. W. K. R. BEDFORD, J. BALFOUR PAUL, and L. W. MAXSON. With 2 Maps, 23 Plates, and 172 Illustrations in the Text. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY MR. FROUDE.

LIFE and LETTERS of ERASMUS: a Series of Lectures delivered at Oxford. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, Regius Professor of History in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 15s.

NEW VOLUME OF THE VERNEY MEMOIRS.

MEMOIRS of the VERNEY FAMILY during the COMMONWEALTH, 1650—1660. Compiled from the Letters and Illustrated by the Portraits at Claydon House, Bucks. By MARGARET M. VERNEY. With 10 Portraits, &c. [Shortly.]

NEW VOLUME OF CANON LIDDON'S LIFE OF DR. PUSEY.

LIFE of EDWARD BOUVERIE PUSEY, D.D. By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D. Edited and prepared for Publication by the Rev. J. O. JOHNSTON, M.A., Vicar of All Saints, Oxford, and the Rev. ROBERT J. WILSON, D.D., Warden of Keble College. (4 vols., 8vo) With Portraits and Illustrations. Vols. I. and II., 36s. (ready). Vol. III., 18s. [On October 3.]

2 vols., 8vo, with 42 Full-page Photo-Intaglio Plates, and 34 Illustrations in the Text, 35s. net.

MEMORIALS of ST. JAMES'S PALACE. By EDGAR SHEPPARD, M.A., Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal, Hon. Chaplain to the Queen, &c. [Shortly.]

MR. LANG'S CHRISTMAS BOOK.

THE YELLOW FAIRY BOOK. Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 22 Plates and 82 Illustrations in the Text by H. J. Ford. Crown 8vo, 6s. [On October 3.]

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HAGGARD.

THE PEOPLE of the MIST. By H. RIDER HAGGARD, Author of "She," "Montezuma's Daughter," &c. With 16 Full-page Illustrations by Arthur Lazard. Crown 8vo, 6s. [In October.]

THE PLAYGROUND of EUROPE. By LESLIE STEPHEN, formerly President of the Alpine Club. New Edition, with Additions and 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

FROM EDINBURGH to the ANTARCTIC. By W. G. BURN MURDOCH, Artist. Profusely Illustrated by the Author. Supplemented by the Science Notes of the Naturalists of the Expedition, W. S. BRUCE, J. J. W. CAMPBELL, and C. W. DONALD, M.B. 8vo, 18s. [In a few days.]

STUDIES of NATURE on the COAST of ARRAN. By GEORGE MILNER, Author of "Country Pleasures." With 10 Full-page Copper-plates and 12 Illustrations in the Text by W. Noel Johnson. Imperial 18mo, 8s. 8d. net.

PRACTICABLE SOCIALISM: Essays on Social Reform. By the Rev. Canon and Mrs. BARNETT. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LONGMANS' CIVIL ENGINEERING SERIES.

NOTES on DOCKS and DOCK CONSTRUCTION. By C. COLSON, M.Inst.C.E., Assistant Director of Works, Admiralty. With 365 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. net.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNING, Author of "A Bride from the Bush," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A JOURNEY in OTHER WORLDS: a Romance of the Future. By JOHN JABOB ASTOR. With 10 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," "One Good Guest," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [In a few days.]

NUGGETS in the DEVIL'S PUNCH BOWL, and other Australian Tales. By ANDREW ROBERTSON, Author of "The Kidnapped Squatter." Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. [In a few days.]

PROBLEMS of the FAR EAST. JAPAN—KOREA—CHINA. By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON, M.P., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford; Author of "Russia in Central Asia," and "Persia." With 2 Maps, 21 Full-page Illustrations and 29 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 21s.

WANDERING WORDS. Reprinted by permission from Papers published in the "Daily Telegraph" and Foreign Journals and Magazines. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, M.A., K.C.L.E., C.S.I. Author of "Seas and Lands," "The Light of Asia," &c. With 23 Plates and 22 Illustrations in the Text from Drawings by Ben Boothby and from Photographs. 8vo, 18s.

CLERICAL LIFE and WORK. By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., late Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

THE HISTORY of MARRIAGE, JEWISH and CHRISTIAN, in RELATION to DIVORCE and CERTAIN FORBIDDEN DEGREES. By HERBERT MORTIMER LUCKOCK, D.D., Dean of Lichfield. Crown 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

SPIRITUAL LAW in the NATURAL WORLD: a Metaphysical and Psychical Exposition of the Operations of the Holy Spirit and other Agencies. By J. W. THOMAS, F.I.C., F.C.S. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WATTS' DICTIONARY of CHEMISTRY. Revised and entirely Re-written, by H. FORSTER MORLEY, M.A., D.Sc., Fellow of, and lately Assistant-Professor of Chemistry in, University College, London; and M. M. PATTERSON MUIR, M.A., F.R.S.E., Fellow and Praelector in Chemistry of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. Assisted by Eminent Contributors. 4 Vols., 8vo. Vols. I. and II., 42s. each (ready). Vol. III., £2 10s. (ready). Vol. IV., £3 3s. [On October 3.]

A TEXT-BOOK of INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By G. S. NEWTH, F.I.C., F.C.S., Demonstrator in the Royal College of Science, London, Assistant Examiner in Chemistry, Science and Art Department. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. [In a few days.]

HISTORICAL WORKS

FOR THE LIBRARY.

BY MR. ROWBOTHAM.

A HISTORY of MUSIC. To the Time of the Troubadours. By J. F. ROWBOTHAM. A New and Revised Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BY DR. DUNCKER.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.

From the German of the late Prof. MAX DUNCKER, By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

BY DR. CURTIUS.

THE HISTORY of GREECE. From the Earliest Times down to 337 B.C. From the German of Dr. ERNST CURTIUS, Rector of the University of Berlin. By A. W. WARD, M.A. Demy 8vo. Each volume separately, 18s. [Vols. I. and III. reprinting.]

BY DR. MOMMSEN.

THE HISTORY of ROME. From the Earliest Times to the Period of its Decline. By Professor THEODORE MOMMSEN. Translated by Dr. P. W. DICKSON. 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2 6s. 6d.; or sold separately—Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., with Index, 15s.

BY DR. MOMMSEN.

THE HISTORY of the ROMAN

PROVINCES. From the Time of Cæsar to that of Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Dr. P. W. DICKSON. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with 10 Maps, 36s.

BY MR. BESANT AND PROFESSOR PALMER.

THE HISTORY of JERUSALEM.

By WALTER BESANT, M.A., and E. H. PALMER, M.A., late Professor of Arabic, Cambridge. Third Edition. Large crown 8vo, with Map, 7s. 6d.

BY MR. JAMES.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT

BRITAIN. From the Declaration of War by France, in 1793, to the Accession of George IV. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, 42s.

BY PROFESSOR CREASY.

THE RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Fifteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY DEAN HOOK.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By the late WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUXON. 12 vols., demy 8vo, £9. Each separately (with the exception of III. reprinting), IV., VI., and VII., 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

EDITED BY PETER CUNNINGHAM.

LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE,

FOURTH EARL of ORFORD. Edited by PETER CUNNINGHAM, F.S.A. In 9 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, £5 5s.

BY M. GUIZOT.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.

From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW R. SCOBLE, Q.C., C.S.I. Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

BY M. MIGNET.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW R. SCOBLE, Q.C., C.S.I. Seventh Edition. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

LONDON UP TO DATE.

BY

George Augustus Sala

In One Volume. Crown 8vo.

Price 3s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

TWO P.M.: A LEVEE AT ST. JAMES'S PALACE.
A BANQUET AT FISHMONGERS' HALL.
THE DERBY.
A FIRST NIGHT AT THE LYCEUM.
FIVE P.M.: A BALLOT AT A PALL MALL CLUB.
FIVE P.M.: A CORNER OF THE WORLD—WEST-MINSTER.
TEN A.M.: AT GREAT GRUBBY STREET POLICE COURT.
THREE P.M.: A CHARITY BAZAAR.
NOON: A PICTURE SALE AT CHRISTIE'S.
FROM MORN TILL MIDNIGHT: ON A 'BUS.
NINE P.M.: AFTER DINNER AT THE HOTEL BRODDINGNAG.
FIVE P.M.: A CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.
THREE P.M.: AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY.
FOUR P.M.: A GARDEN PARTY AT THE TOWER.
TEN P.M.: A CULTURE CONVERSAZIONE.
EIGHT FORTY-FIVE A.M.: BREAKFAST ON BOARD A PULLMAN.
ANY HOUR: FLATS.
TRAVELS IN REGENT STREET.
ONE A.M.: AT THE MORNING MAMMOTH NEWS-PAPER OFFICE.
EIGHT P.M.: DINNER AT THE QUEEN'S GUARD, ST. JAMES'S.
THE LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.
TEN-THIRTY A.M.: AT THE NEW LAW COURTS.
EIGHT A.M. TO EIGHT P.M.: A RAILWAY TERMINUS AND A RAILWAY BOOKSTALL.
THE THAMES EMBANKMENT—ALL HOURS.
CARTHAGE IN THE HAYMARKET.

ADAM & CHARLES BLACK,
SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST

By PROFESSOR W. W. SKEAT.

In 6 Vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles.

THE

Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer.

EDITED FROM NUMEROUS MSS.

Just published, Vol. IV., 16s., containing

THE TEXT of the CANTERBURY TALES.

The complete set of 6 Volumes is offered to Subscribers at THREE GUINEAS net, payable in advance.

"The high quality of this great edition is so manifest and indisputable that it needs no special commendation at our hands."
Times.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo. Uniform with the Oxford Chaucer.

PIERS the PLOWMAN. Edited from numerous MSS., with Preface, Notes, and Glossary.

At the desire of the Editor, Subscribers to the Oxford Chaucer have now the opportunity of obtaining "Piers the Plowman" (published at 31s. 6d.) at the Subscription price of One Guinea net, payable in advance.

The Subscription List for both the above works will be closed on October 31.

Just published, in 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

CO-OPERATIVE PRODUCTION. By BENJAMIN JONES. With a Preface by the Right Hon. A. H. DYKE ACLAND, M.P., Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education.

"There is a vast amount of interesting information and valuable suggestion in Benjamin Jones's 'Co-operative Production.'.....The author's remarks upon the advantages of co-operation are pregnant with sound sense."—Daily Telegraph.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

A TREATISE on the MEASUREMENT of ELECTRICAL RESISTANCE. By W. A. PRICE, M.A., A.M.I.C.E., formerly Scholar of New College, Oxford.

During some years the author has superintended the construction of a large number of resistance coils, and of various forms of instruments for their comparison and measurement, and he thinks that a systematic account of the methods and processes employed may be useful to the large and increasing body of electricians who use such apparatus.

"This treatise is a companion for the workshop or the laboratory, and will be appreciated by those engaged in the construction and manipulation of electrical instruments. Its directions are full, minute, and lucid."—Times.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE HISTORY of SICILY from the EARLIEST TIMES. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., late Regius Professor of Modern History, Fellow of Oriel College, &c.

VOLUME IV.

FROM the TYRANNY of DIONYSIOS to the DEATH of AGATHOKLES. Edited from Posthumous MSS., with Supplements and Notes, by ARTHUR J. EVANS, M.A., Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, &c. With Maps and Numismatic Plate.

Also published, Vols. I. and II., 42s.; Vol. III., 24s.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 24s.

THE SOUNDS and INFLECTIONS of the GREEK DIALECTS. By HERBERT WEIR SMYTH, Ph.D., University of Göttingen, Professor of Greek in Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania. IONIC.

"The book is far more comprehensive than any that has yet been given to the world; the result is such that Professor Smyth must always be regarded as a leading authority on this subject, while his treatise adds to the literature of Greek Philology, a work probably the most important of all that American scholarship has contributed to this department of learning."—Scotsman.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. net.

MODES of ANCIENT GREEK MUSIC.

By D. B. MONRO, M.A., Provost of Oriel College, Hon. Doc. of Letters in the University of Dublin.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, with a Map, 6s. 6d.

CORNELII TACITI DE GERMANIA.

Edited with Introduction, Notes, and Map, by HENRY FURNEAUX, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE ANNALS of TACITUS. Text.

With Introduction and Notes. Demy 8vo. Vol. I., Books I.-VI., 18s. Vol. II., Books XI.-XVI., 20s.

Books I.-IV., with Introduction and Notes for the use of Schools and Junior Students, extra fcap. 8vo, 5s. Book I., separately, 2s.

Full Catalogues post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,
CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1894.

No. 1169, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Story of Africa and its Explorers. By Dr. Robert Brown. Vols. I., II., and III. (Cassells.)

IN geography, as in other branches of knowledge outside the circle of the exact sciences, the analytical must precede the synthetic process, which in the nature of things is impossible until the observer has been enabled, by facts accumulated in sufficient number, to sum up results, and thus arrive at broad inductive generalisations. When it is remembered that throughout the historic period next to nothing was known regarding the interior of the Dark Continent down to the second half of the present century, and that our knowledge even of the periphery dates only from the close of the fifteenth century, any attempt at a synthesis of African exploration might still seem hopelessly rash and premature. Nevertheless, the attempt is not only here made, but made with a large measure of success. The mere statement of this fact is perhaps the best illustration of the prodigious development of geographical exploration throughout the length and breadth of the land since Mungo Park's work in the Niger Basin was completed by the brothers Lander penetrating from the Atlantic, and the snows of Kenia were first sighted in 1849 by Krapf advancing from the Indian Ocean. In fact the work of the pioneers was virtually accomplished between this date and 1884, when the interested European powers were summoned to the Berlin International Congress to divide the spoils.

In these three handsome, finely printed, and richly illustrated volumes Dr. Brown deals with the pioneer work, reserving for future issues the early colonial settlements and the recent political partition, as may be inferred from the concluding lines of the present series. A hope may be expressed that in the reservations may also be included a general index, the absence of which in this first instalment makes the work of the reviewer well nigh as difficult as that of the pioneers themselves. The difficulty is increased by the further absence of a preface, which has been likened to the hands of a dial, and even of any intelligible tables of contents. No doubt the several chapters in the body of the work are furnished with sufficiently copious summaries, while the text is provided with exceedingly welcome marginal rubrics. But of what practical use to reviewer or reader are such enigmatical headings as "In Search of Prester John: a Paper-Chase"; "The Niger Kingdoms: a Half-told Tale"; "The Last of an Old Traveller, and the First of Two New Ones";

"The Missionaries: Tilling, Sowing, and Reaping"; "Man and Beast: the Beginning of the End," which are the only indications of the subject-matter of several chapters in the general tables of contents prefixed to each volume. Such devices to attract the attention of a few languid or blasé students are all the less needed in a work, every page of which is full of attraction.

Summaries of this kind, avowedly written to "popularise knowledge," are still "popularly" supposed to somewhat debase knowledge in the process, by writing it down to the level of a rather low standard of general intelligence. But this standard has admittedly been greatly raised by the spread of education among the present generation, and the upheaval has naturally reacted on the quality of the literary food now supplied in this form to the reading public. At all events, in Dr. Brown's volumes there is no attempt at "writing down"; and while every legitimate expedient is adopted to make difficult subjects intelligible and attractive to the average capacity, no concessions are made either to mental lethargy or to prejudice. The result is a lucid and orderly exposition of the subject, that may be read with pleasure and indeed with profit by all alike, and especially by those hard-worked students in other fields, who have no time to plunge into the ocean of geographical literature that has accumulated with bewildering rapidity during the last few decades of systematic exploration in the African continent.

The present writer may, perhaps, claim to know something of the subject, on which he has been specially engaged for years. Yet he is free to admit that he has often consulted the work with advantage since it began to be issued in parts three years ago. There are, of course, here and there a few slips and misleading statements, as was inevitable in dealing with a multiplicity of topics, of which no compiler could always possess much personal knowledge. Thus, Schweinfurth is represented as describing the Akka pigmies as "the inhabitants of Monbuttu" (iii. 35), where the definite article, which has crept in by an oversight, conveys quite an erroneous impression. Schweinfurth does not say that the Akkas are the inhabitants of Monbuttu, which is mainly occupied by a tall race of highly intelligent negroes, but that they roam the southern forests, where in fact they were afterwards met and "interviewed" by Junker. They belong to the same aboriginal Negrito element as the Wambutti, whose poisoned arrows gave Stanley so much trouble during the march to Emin's relief through the dense forests of the Aruwimi. The name Wambutti (Wa-Mbutti) has nothing to do with Monbuttu (Mo-Nbuttu), the true form of which word appears from Junker to be Mangbattu (Ma-ngbattu?).

Again, it is stated (iii. 87) that "the various tribes of Touaregs are the true inhabitants of the Sahara. . . . Some Tibboos and Negroes inhabit the southern portion." This is quite misleading, in so far as it implies that the Tibus, like the Negroes, are confined to the south, both presumably intruders from Sudan, and not truly indigenous, like the Tuaregs. As fresh currency is here given to the erroneous views widely prevalent regarding the distribution and mutual relations of the Saharan populations, it may be well to point out that the Tuaregs, if any, are rather the intruders, doubtless from remote prehistoric times, but still intruders from the Mediterranean seaboard, and before that probably from Asia. They are a branch of the Hamitic family, who are now believed on good grounds to be ultimately allied to the Semitic family, so that ethnologists already speak of a primeval Hamito-Semitic family, as philologists, with even better reason, speak of a primeval Hamito-Semitic linguistic family, whose origin is to be sought rather in Asia than in Africa, certainly not in the Sahara. The Negroes and the Tibus are, on the contrary, truly indigenous in this region, at least in so far as they are to be regarded as its first inhabitants, at all events precursors of the Tuaregs. Sonrhai, a pure Negro language, is still current in Asben, where the Keloway Tuaregs are later arrivals, traditionally from the north-west. The true home of the Tibus also is not the south, but the central region of the Tibesti ("Rocky") Mountains, from which they take their name of Ti-bu, "Rock People," whence their Arabic designation Reshádeh, "Rock-dwellers." They are the Garamantes of Herodotus, who also dwelt in the rocks, and who were reduced by Caesar's lieutenant, Cornelius Balbus; but so far from being confined to the south, they still occupy pretty well all the inhabitable parts of the Sahara from about the twelfth meridian eastwards. They have relations both with the Tuaregs (physical) and with the negroes (linguistic); and while the Tedas, or northern branch, have preserved the racial purity intact, the southern Dasas have intermingled with the Negro Kanem and Bornu peoples of Central Sudan, whence Ptolemy already speaks doubtfully of the Garamantes as "Ethiopians": "Οντων δὲ καὶ αὐτῶν ἡδὴ μᾶλλον Αἰθιοπῶν (i. 8). It should be noted that the confusion began with Leo Africanus, who writing in Rome from memory transfers to the Berber (Tuareg) connexion the Gumeri and the Bardai, who are really Tibus of the Bardai oasis (Nachtigal, Sahara und Sudan, ii. p. 189).

In all other respects the account of the Sahara (iii. chap. 4) leaves nothing to be desired. Indeed, it is a brilliant piece of writing which, as it stands, with perhaps a little pruning, might figure worthily in the pages of any scientific publication. Here the ordinary reader will find all the old (and recent) illusions about the "Great Inland Sea," the possible flooding of the desert, and so forth, dispelled once for all, and the sands and billowy dunes traced to their true source—not a marine bed, but rock-weathering, the chief agents being, not pluvial or running waters, but for ages the winds and exceptional climatic conditions—intense diurnal heat followed by rapid radiation and relatively intense cold, even frosty, nights. This chapter, it is mentioned, has had the advantage of revision by Sir Lambert Playfair.

Personal matters, which necessarily crop up here and there, so many leading actors in the stirring drama being still among us or but recently gone hence, are touched upon with great tact and in excellent taste. Nevertheless Dr. Brown, unsmitten by the morbidity of the times, does not hesitate to speak out when occasion needs, as, for instance, in the case of Emin Pasha:

"a man who, if originally permeated by a strain of Teutonic truthfulness, must, during his long residence with Orientals, have imbibed something of their duplicity and a great deal of their desire to say to everyone what may please him best. . . . When vakeel at Lado under Gessi, the Egyptian officers laughed at him for his exaggerated affectation of being a Mussulman (originally a German Jew). . . . An officer murdered four natives with impunity, and another fiend bound a female slave to a tree, smeared her with honey, and left her to be eaten alive by flies and ants. Yet, as it was not fitting that the life of a Mussulman should be sacrificed for having killed a few unbelieving savages, Emin quashed all inquiry. In short, his abilities as a linguist were amazing; his theoretical notions of government good, but his practice was deplorable: he was physically courageous, but morally a coward" (iii. 71).

And Gessi says worse: "Full of deceit and without character," "pretentious," "hypocritical," "cringing," "capable of deceiving the acutest man in the world"; and Junker worse still, but the passage bringing the deepest charge against the men who befuddled Gordon is glozed in the English edition of Junker's Travels.

In future issues, the spelling might be made more conformable to the rules of the Geographical Society, and u, for instance, be everywhere substituted for the old-fashioned oo, as in Tibboo, and for the French ou, as in Touareg, Touggourt and elsewhere. Kafir also should be Kafir, and there are several misprints in the title of Pigafetta's book: relazione for relatione, reame for reame, vicini for circonvicini, Portoghese, for Portoghese, and Filippo for Filippo; and should not nel be del in the title of Merolla's book, same page?

A. H. KEANE.

Laili and Majnun. From the Persian of Nizami, by James Atkinson. (David Nutt.)

IN 1836 Mr. James Atkinson published, through the Oriental Translation Fund, a translation of "Laili and Majnun," one of the famous Panj Ganj, or Five Treasures, of Nizami, who lived from 1141 to 1203. The Rev. J. A. Atkinson, the translator's son, now edits a new edition of that version, on the strength of the "fame of Nizami's poem in the East," and of Prof. H. H. Wilson's opinion that "that version was a sufficiently faithful representation of the original."

The full and perfect translation of Nizami is a work that would task the utmost extent of the Persian scholarship of the present day; and, considering the state of that scholarship in James Atkinson's time, we cannot but commend his courage in taking up so difficult an author. The question that will then suggest itself to students of Nizami is why, having undertaken so ambitious a work, James Atkinson should have chosen "Laili and Majnun" in preference to any other poem of the "Quintuple," considering how inferior in interest the former is to any other of the set. The pathos of the poem is undeniable, its prevailing tone being distinctly melancholy; but pathos which extends through four thousand couplets tends to become somewhat monotonous, and there is no considerable interest of incident to relieve this monotony. The Nizamian subtleties with which the poem abounds have for the most part been carefully eschewed by the translator, whose version indeed is far too free to admit of their being retained. In fact, though they may be of some interest to the long-suffering Persian student, they would be of none to the general reader for whom this translation was made, especially as the underlying thoughts are often of no great depth—that is to say, from a European point of view; for the Persian seems to think one form of depth of thought is coincident with obscurity of expression. In poems where really profound thoughts embodying the principles of Sufism are involved, it is curious to observe how lucidly they often can be and are expressed. In this poem, however, we have no particular Sufi interest; for though spiritual love is indubitably the current underlying the human passion expressed here, there is but little plain allusion to Sufi teaching. In this respect, indeed, Nizami in general contrasts curiously with his great admirer and, to a certain extent, imitator, Jami. The latter offers in his exquisitely melodious poem a consecutive strain of Sufi doctrine; while the former, though deeply imbued with the same principles, does not aim at setting them forth as a system—except perhaps in the "Makhzan-i-Asrar," and to a much more limited extent in the second part of the Alexander Book or "Sikandar Namah-i-Bahri." The "Makhzan," by far the most interesting of Nizami's works from a Sufi point of view, served as the prototype of Jami's "Tuhfat 'l-Ahrar," and is to a certain extent elucidated by the latter. Just as the study of Nizami is a valuable and almost necessary preliminary to that of Jami, so it is almost essential that the student of Nizami should have made some study of Firdausi, by whom Nizami was so greatly influenced. James Atkinson appears to have followed this course; for, previously to his translation of "Laili and Majnun," he had published some versions from the great epic poet.

James Atkinson's work is really a paraphrase of the original. He aims only at giving the general reader a fair idea of the sense and spirit of the poem; and in this he is, on the whole, fairly successful, while his verse has a pleasing and easy flow, and rises in parts to some share of poetic fervour.

The translation is greatly abridged; and is so far an adaptation as to contain not a few ideas which are absent from the original, and which are not always, it must be said, in accordance with Persian modes of thought.

The whole of the introductory portion is omitted, and the story begins somewhat abruptly, owing to the fact that one leaf of the MS. used was wanting. In the original the story opens with an account of the virtues of Majnun's father, Saiyid 'Amiri (spelt Syd Omri), an Arab prince, who had everything he could wish for but a son. Then come some moral reflections of the poet on the divine wisdom shown in withholding certain gifts. However, a son is granted, who receives the name of Kais; and his progress and beauties are described up to his tenth year, when he is sent by his father to school. Here James Atkinson takes up the story, which describes how, Laili being sent to the same school, the two fall in love with each other. But soon Laili is removed to the mountains of Najd, and Kais begins his frantic wanderings in search of his beloved, and earns the title of Majnun, or "the madman." Majnun's father, alarmed at his son's condition, then seeks out Laili's father, and asks her hand for his son. Here James Atkinson has strangely misconceived the spirit of the reception he meets with and the tone of his demand. He translates:

"Come ye hither as friends or foes?
Whatever may your spirit be,
That errand must be told to me;
For none unless a sanctioned friend,
Can pass the line that I defend."

The sense of the original is:

"When the members of the charming one's tribe,
Noble and plebeian, became aware (of their approach);
They went out in hospitality,
(Imbued) with (feelings of) sincerity and kindness.
They stood firm in the station of friendliness,
And brought to them what food there was.
They said at once to Saiyid 'Amiri:
'What is your requirement? Set it forth.
Tell us your object, and we will entertain it;
We will hold it an obligation to grant it.'"

Then comes the reply and demand, in which, according to the translation, occur the expressions:

"But thou'rt the merchant pedlar chief,
And I the buyer; come, sell, be brief,
If thou art wise, accept advice;
Sell and receive a princely price!"

The tone of this demand is certainly not calculated to conciliate; but, according to the original, the sense is as follows:

"I seek to buy a pearl; you have one to sell.
Sell your ware if you are wise.
However great the price you demand,
I will buy (the pearl) for even more."

And this, according to Persian ideas, is a complimentary, not a scornful, mode of address, and the refusal of Laili's father is based purely upon Majnun's madness, and not upon any ill-feeling.

Majnun's madness then takes an aggravated form, and the advice and kind offices of father and friends are exerted in vain. Laili in the meantime is forced to wed an Arab prince whom she abhors, and who ultimately dies. Even then, however, the lovers are debarred from union by their scruples; and in an interview which takes place Laili sits at a respectful distance while Majnun recites one of his odes to her. At last Laili dies, and the news is taken to Majnun:

"Again it was the task of faithful Zyd,
Through far extending plain and forest wide,
To seek the man of woes, and tell
The fate of her, alas! he loved so well.
With bleeding heart he found his lone abode,
Watering with tears the path he rode."

And beating his sad breast, Majnūn perceived His friend approach, and asked him why he grieved?
'Alas!' he cried, 'the hail has crushed my bowers,
A sudden storm has blighted all my flowers;
Thy cypress tree o'erthrown, the leaves are sear;
Thy moon has fallen from her lucid sphere;
Laili is dead.'

There is something of the pathos in this of Dante's beautiful sonnet beginning:

"Un di si venne a me melanconia," and ending:

"Ed io gli dissi: che hai cattivello?
Ed ei rispose: io ho quai e pensiero;
Che nostra donna muor, dolce fratello."

Majnūn spends the rest of his time by the grave of Laili, but dies soon afterwards upon her tomb.

"One promise bound their faithful hearts—one bed
Of cold, cold earth united them when dead.
Severed in life, how cruel was their doom!
Ne'er to be joined but in the silent tomb!"

After their death Zaid (spelt Zyd) has a vision of the lovers united in paradise:

"Upon that throne, in blissful state,
The long divided lovers ate,
Resplendent with seraphic light,
They held a cup with diamonds bright."

* * *
Saki! Nizami's song is sung;
The Persian poet's pearls are strung;
Then fill again the goblet high!
Thou wouldst not ask the reveller why.
Fill to the love that changes never!
Fill to the love that lives for ever!
That purified by earthy woes,
At last with bliss seraphic glows."

James Atkinson had certainly difficulties to contend with in the MS. he used. It is written in a small and rather pretty hand by a calligrapher of some skill, but it is wanting in clearness and it is frequently incorrect. The miniatures in it are specimens of the highest Indian art, containing landscapes with something of the style of the Italian masters, as well as an expression of countenance in the figures almost pre-Raphaelite.

CHARLES EDWARD WILSON.

A Student's Manual of English Constitutional History. By D. J. Medley. (Oxford: Blackwell.)

MR. MEDLEY is a new writer in the historical field, who shows much promise of doing good work, if we are to judge by the present volume.

Notwithstanding the multitude of books on the subject, there was certainly room for a constitutional history on the plan which
Mr. Medley has adopted, of determining "to trace the evolution and growth of each institution or set of institutions separately and apart from the accidental events of the contemporaneous political history, otherwise the institution is lost sight of in a mass of unimportant personal detail: it is difficult to pick up the threads of its development while the attention of the student is at every turn called off to irrelevant matter, and the mind altogether fails to comprehend the great impersonal movement by which an institution shows itself to be something greater than the greatest man who has helped to mould and to work it."

By this method greater clearness is undoubtedly gained in many respects, though occasionally it may involve a certain amount of repetition or a severance of topics naturally connected.

We have first a chapter on "The Land and its Inhabitants," and then in succession are treated the administration, the legislature, the conflicts of the two,
the judicial system, taxation, the liberty of the subject, and the concluding chapter deals with ecclesiastical matters.

Of course, there is not room in a work of this kind for much that is strictly original;
but the author has made a judicious use of his materials. In the points of controversy which are still unsettled, in the early period more especially, his aim has been to give an intelligible and precise statement of the arguments on both sides, without venturing to pronounce an absolute decision.

Thus, for instance, Mr. Medley has discussed the question of the continued existence of Roman and Celtic influences in England, and of the origin of the English land system. Perhaps he is here rather unduly cautious. It certainly seems, after all that has been written, that the weight of evidence and authority remains decidedly in favour of the essentially Teutonic character of the Old-English political and social system, though the case may have been stated too absolutely at times. As Mr.
Medley says, after all concessions have been made,

"there will be problems enough remaining,
such as the comparatively small influence of Roman law and language, which may still give the advocates of pure Teutonism reason and encouragement to hold that English history begins with the landing of Hengest."

In his account of the development of the administrative and legislative systems, Mr.
Medley has, of course, drawn largely on Bishop Stubbs; but he is far from being a mere copier. He has put several points in a somewhat new and more easily intelligible form. His sketch of the development of the representative principle down to the Parliament of 1295 is perhaps the best concise summary of a rather intricate portion of constitutional history that has yet been given, though it may be thought that he unduly minimises the merits of Simon de Montfort as one of the makers of our constitution.

It has often been noticed how, in many cases, a modern reform has been in reality the falling back on an earlier state of things. We see this clearly in the history of the changes in the electoral franchise in England. At first, so far as can be made out, there was a fairly popular constituency in both counties and boroughs, which was narrowed by successive stages: in the former, by the Act of 1430, which confined the franchise to freeholders of the annual value of forty shillings—a substantial sum which has been estimated at between £30 and £40 of present value; and more gradual in the latter, by the monopolisation of political rights by the exclusive corporations. The electoral reforms of the present century have simply undone the work of these reactionary measures of the fifteenth and sixteenth. Again, the proposal that members of parliament should be paid is merely a return to the ancient usage.

"The members were entitled for their services to wages at the rate of four shillings a day for the knights, and two shillings for the burgesses during the parliamentary session, and to a sum for journey money of an amount which was usually fixed in the assembly which elected them. The rate of wages became a settled custom as early as the reign of Edward II., and they were collected by the sheriff from all those entitled to vote, in satisfaction of royal writs de expensis levandis which were issued to the members on the last day of the session. The right, then, to the receipt of wages rested on the common law, and the fixed sum, though usual, does not seem to have been compulsory. At any rate, though in the case of some few large towns an increase of wages was sometimes promised, there are other instances where the constituents bargained with their members to take less. But under Henry VIII. the usual rate was made a matter of legislative grant in the case of the newly enfranchised shires and boroughs of Monmouth and Wales. It was not long, however, before electors took advantage of the increased importance of a seat in Parliament to agree with candidates at elections that they would serve for nothing. The custom, therefore, gradually died away, although in isolated cases payment was demanded and obtained.
The last known instance is in 1681, when the Chancellor gave judgment in favour of a member for Harwich, who sued his constituents for his wages. Thus the payment of members is a lapsed constitutional right; and when it was moved in the House of Commons in 1870
'to restore the ancient constitutional practice of payment of members,' whatever we may think of its wisdom, the form of the motion was strictly correct."

Mr. Medley has not put forward many novel theories of his own; but in one place he makes a rather remarkable assertion, which startles us from its contrast with his usually sober tone: "The Revolution of 1688 was the victory of the great Whig landowners who, in their hatred of the rising merchant class, took all means of increasing their own wealth." This passage sounds almost like an extract from one of Lord Beaconsfield's novels, where our "Venetian oligarchy" is held up to opprobrium and ridicule. It certainly seems a strange view to regard the Whigs as the special enemies of the commercial classes. Did they not, on the contrary, rest largely on the support of this section of the community? Was not the Bank of England a Whig institution?
So it was at least, as history has generally been written; and if Mr. Medley has any new light to give us on the subject, he must advance some stronger arguments than a mere obiter dictum such as is quoted above.
However, this is altogether exceptional with him; and to his work, as a whole, little but praise can be given. We may just mention, in conclusion, the excellent chapter on the history of "The Liberty of the Subject."

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

MARCEL PREVOST AND HIS SHORT STORIES.

Nouvelles Lettres de Femmes. By Marcel
Prevost. (Paris: Lemerre.)

M. MARCEL PREVOST, if he would but keep to pure art, and not (for reasons it might be impertinent to define) endow us with studies of the intolerably ugly and the hardly decent, might attain to a position only perhaps within the reach of one or two besides himself among the younger writers of France. His first distinct success, Made-moiselle Jaufré, was a book admittedly powerful in theme and in treatment. Automne d'une Femme, which appeared scarcely eighteen months ago, had virtues more fascinating than those of mere power. It displayed an observation refined and sympathetic, and was written at once with vividness, elegance, and sensibility of touch. Demi-Vierges, which followed it, showed plainly the cloven foot. Ably enough done, and with much in it to commend, it yet dealt to some extent with a theme which, in the opinion of many serious judges, lies altogether outside of art. It has had its reward of great financial success—a reward looked forward to, I may say, parenthetically, in another case, with not ill-grounded confidence, by the helpmeet of a popular author, who in regard to a MS. of her husband's, at that moment in his desk, cheerfully declared, "C'est ce que mon mari a écrit de plus sâle; cela se vendra comme du pain." Demi-Vierges has paid, just as, speaking broadly, the most to be objected to among the works of M. Zola have paid him the best, Nana and La Terre having enjoyed a circulation denied—I think I am right in saying—not only to such of his novels as Le Ventre de Paris and Au Bonheur des Dames, but also to such an assured masterpiece as Une Page d'Amour. And, if anyone is surprised at this circumstance—at this phenomenon—whether it shows itself in the commercial history of M. Zola, or of M. de Maupassant it may be, or of the younger novelist, M. Prévost, with whom I deal to-day, let him remember how small, even in France itself, is the class really interested in literature in comparison with the classes interested mainly in material appetites, in the grosser forms of sexual affairs. A writer—it cannot be concealed—has but to bid without stint for that greater and grosser public, to secure for himself a circulation never enjoyed by work of art upon its own merits. Nor is this remarkable at all. Which in England, every year, finds readers in the greater number? is it the current police reports, or is it "Comus"?

I cannot but fear that in the Nouvelles Lettres de Femmes M. Prévost has not steered altogether clear of the temptation to which in Demi-Vierges he has unquestionably yielded; yet the book is wrought with a cleverness, conceived often with an insight, calculated to allay discontent. Very light is the expression of a social observation which is often not wanting in penetrating quality. Thus, in the quite untranslatable little story, "La Nuit de Raymonde"—which may have formed an appropriate feuilleton in the Gil Blas or the Journal or the Echo de Paris—that is a very human touch when the bride, forgetting for a moment the incidents of the morning, the religious ceremony and the passing before the mayor, catches herself enquiring, as to her companionship with her lord in the railway journey, "Pourquoi donc me trouvez-vous ici avec ce monsieur si affairé." "Ce monsieur"—a being with whom she is as yet unfamiliar. The stories, though they hark back a little too often to questions too obviously of sex, have, on the whole, a range that is fairly wide, a point of view that is fairly different, a manner that is fairly flexible. Nay, at their worst as at their best, they are told in lucid French, French that is unaffected and nervous and transparent—French that is the serviceable and immediate and always adequate instrument for the conveyance of the thought.

Most of all perhaps is the "cleverness" of M. Prévost, shown, so far as this volume is concerned, in the study of moods of characters in themselves superficial and ordinary. The thoughts and actions of the various people—shallow little ingénue, too experienced widow, wife in whom jealousy assumes the proportions of a pestilent disease—the thoughts and actions of these folk have the uncertainty of life; the writer remembering well that in conduct, as well as in mere outward circumstance, it is the unexpected that happens. And yet, though this praise may be given, I find that of the brief notes in which as I read each particular story I summarised my expression of it, very few are wholly favourable. "Courier National" is "cynical," I see; "Le Respect" is only "clever enough"; "Mon Vieil Ami"—the account of a girl's attitude of mind towards an ancient buck who did sincerely adore her—is "sympathetic, but not beautiful" (and beautiful it might have been). The "Second Mari" is "ingenious, yet cheap"; "Le Trait d'Union" is "clever and sympathetic." The "cheapness" of the "Second Mari"—to justify my comment—consists, to take an instance, in such a thing as the writer imagining for his heroine a quite artificial isolation, that she may the more readily yield to the fascination of a particular companionship. It consists, again, in such a momentary slip as that which causes M. Prévost, after having on one page assured us of Monsieur Jules that "sa tendresse fut grave et passionnée," to assure us on another that that gentleman was the possessor of an "impassabilité très digne."

But we will not be too hard on such lapses, even though they would appear to disprove the presence of that clearness and sharpness of conception which is one of the signs of the work of a serious artist—not to say of a great master. M. Prévost says that there are three methods, in literature, of treating love—"l'ironique, la romanesque, la libertine"; and "ce livre," he adds forthwith, of his lucid and entertaining pages, "ce livre exclut la dernière." Does it? To assert it is to beg the question: it is to assume more than we should quite certainly concede, unless, indeed, it may be understood that "l'ironique" may carry you far—further, I think, than it ever carried La Fontaine or Rabelais. But if M. Prévost treats love alone—love under this form or that, but love always—he does it, he tells us, "through humility." And if, perchance, it should occur to anyone to consider him as a potential prophet lost somehow among story-tellers, how many story-tellers, nowadays, he would remind us, have strayed needlessly into the ranks of the prophets!

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

The Principles and Practice of Teaching and Class Management. By Joseph Landon. (A. M. Holden.)

WHEN we turn to the art of education, the English educationist does not leave himself without witness. Mr. Landon's book is a masterly exposition of technique. He claims that it is

"the outcome of a quarter of a century's experience as lecturer on School Management in a Training College, and of still longer experience as a teacher, as well as of a considerable amount of reading, and of numerous observations and experiments in teaching carried out at various times and in various ways."

The appearance of a book of so admirable a kind is in itself a criticism of the lazy adage "That a teacher is born, not made." It is true that some men are born blind, and cannot by any process of cultivation of the drawing process be brought to a power of eye-vision. But even with a normal eye, how vast the difference effected by a cultivation of observation! Think of the discriminating eye of the painter in oil-colours, and the house-painter—the whole world of art between—though originally with a similar eye-vision. Let the young man from the university, with all his laurels, condescend to read Mr. Landon before undertaking school-teaching. He will there see something of teaching as an art founded on principles. He will recognise a world of experience before him, pointed out in detail by Mr. Landon, not altogether dissimilar to that lying between the artist and the artisan. And if he does not hail the opportunity of reading such books as this, in the hope of learning the art of teaching (in perhaps something less than the painful toil of Mr. Landon's quarter of a century), well then the University first-class man may disclose that as a teacher he has been neither "born" nor "made." It is true that he will only attain the art by practising it. But he will gain much time by listening to wise suggestions and to the results of the experience of others.

Especially is this so in the case of a book founded upon a regard for the scientific aspect of the subject, which is to the teacher what the science of medicine is to the medical practitioner. The teacher comes to see why he aims at such and such an end, and how such and such methods are calculated to produce the end. He makes to a standard for the comparison of ends and of methods. In other words, he rationalises his experience. It is exactly because Mr. Landon has a scientific basis, which is often concealed in his treatment of the subject, that his book is so valuable. You see that he has a reason for even the slightest details of school work. He is so permeated with the science underlying educational practice that he does not need to obtrude his knowledge of it. His book, therefore, reads like a common-sense manual—delightfully clear, systematic, reasoned.

A comparison between this book and books on the same subject thirty or forty years ago, would be the best possible argument for the desirability of a training in the sciences underlying the art of education, especially psychology and ethics. There have been more learned men in classics, and perhaps in other subjects, among the past generations of schoolmasters than at present, but the old teachers were entirely empirical. Their work was not to teach the average boy, but to make classical scholars out of the unusually clever boys. The subject taught was the centre of instruction, not the pupil. Hence a close knowledge of the subject-matter was the end-all and be-all. Now the average boy—yes, and the dullard—are considered by the writer on teaching as worthy of his thought. This requires not merely a knowledge of the subjects taught, but a consideration of how to teach. Hence the necessity of studying the principles and practice of teaching. The publication of such books as this of Mr. Landon is therefore of far-reaching import to the public as well as to teachers. It means a direct effort to bring to bear experience, rationally interpreted, upon the once neglected average boy, and the boy below the average.

Mr. Landon's book is practical. It deals primarily with oral teaching, in which the mind of the teacher is in direct contact with the mind of the pupil. It shows that the giving of a lesson is an artist's task. It therefore deals with the proportion of lessons, both as to subject matter and as to method. It states the principles for the criticism of a good lesson, as distinguished from a relatively bad one. It discusses "teaching devices"—viz., questions, ellipses, illustrations, lectures and "fixing" devices—(i.e., repetition, recapitulation, blackboard summaries, and review). It expounds the principles of class-management, from the points of view of discipline and teaching. It develops the methodology of reading, spelling, and dictation, writing, arithmetic, drawing, geography, history, English, and elementary science.

I have said that Mr. Landon's book has a scientific basis. To some readers this may seem equivalent to saying that it abstracts the work of teaching into the unhuman. Not at all. The doctor, from his intimate acquaintance with the science of medicine, is not in his practice unhuman or unsympathetic. Nor is the trained teacher. For he knows, as a truth derived both scientifically and empirically—to quote the words of Prof. S. S. Laurie (which stand at the head of Mr. Landon's book)—that "the earnest living interest of the teacher in the subjects and objects of his work will not fail to be reflected in the minds of his pupils, and to be more fruitful in results than the most philosophical method in the hands of the formal and half-hearted precision."

I do not wish, heartily as I admire the work as a whole, to be understood as agreeing in all details with Mr. Landon. But here is a book, helpful, suggestive, reasoned—founded on a quarter-of-a-century's thought and work. Putting on one side points of a debatable nature, I recall the words of old Roger Ascham:

"An unhappy master he is, that is made cunning by many shipwrecks: a miserable merchant that is neither rich nor wise but after some bankrupts. It is costly wisdom, that is bought by [personal] experience."

When books so helpful in the practice of teaching are available, it is folly for the teacher to neglect their perusal. If every teacher were to read through Mr. Landon's summing-up of "The more important characteristics of good teaching" once a week, what a transformation of the schools would be the result. No work tends to fall into grooves more desperately than teaching, and in no work is a groove more fatal. Mr. Landon's book should serve to take the careful teacher out of himself, and bring the teacher who teaches by haphazard into a more perfect way—or (Mr. Landon, at least, will not misunderstand me) into a less imperfect way.

FOSTER WATSON.

NEW NOVELS.

Wedded to a Genius. By Neil Christison. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

St. Maur. By Adeline Sergeant. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

William Blacklock, Journalist. By T. Banks MacLachlan. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

The Rajah's Second Wife. By Headon Hill. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.)

Norman. By Colin Clout. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Flats. By Evelyn Everett Green. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

The Silver Christ, and a Lemon Tree. (Fisher Unwin.)

Ploughed, and other Stories. By L. B. Walford. (Longmans.)

A VERY remarkable man indeed is Dr. Courtney, the "genius" to whom Mrs. Neil Christison has wedded the most unfortunate of recent heroines of fiction. Nearly a page has to be given up to a description of him by a "careless observer," who, it appears, would have noted

"firmness approaching obstinacy in the pose of his square-cut head, great power of intellect and understanding sunk in the lines on his brow, a strange mixture of passion and calm, sarcasm and generosity, physical courage and moral cowardice in his keen blue eyes, together with the outward sign of some great master passion, whose depth it would be hard to fathom; a mouth where smiles were no strangers, and cruelty lurked in ambush, where sneers were made welcome guests, and lips that could speak daggers, though the hands were weaponless—lips stamped with an inordinate love of ridicule, kept in abeyance by innate good-breeding; and over this inscrutable face a mask."

Where Dr. Courtney's "genius" comes in it is not easy for even a careful observer to discover. He is, no doubt, an efficient medical practitioner of the unsympathetic sort, and he can deal promptly with the case of a man seriously injured in a railway accident. He would, in truth, have exhibited "genius" had he been able to bring back to reason the son for whose mental (it was almost physical) death he was responsible. As it is, his "genius" is shown in nothing better than in the torturing of his wife because he has discovered, by accident, that she and Victor Phelan were attached to each other before she married him. This torturing is done with great elaboration. Judith is tormented both through her supposed love for Phelan, and also through her painfully real affection for her boy. Courtney acquits himself like a cat with a poor bird that it has managed to seize and maim rather than with a mouse. It is all unnatural. One feels, in reading the book, that Judith and Phelan not only would, but should, elope before the end of the first volume. The wife's rebellion at the end is justifiable, and in any case inevitable; but for the happiness of all concerned, the "genius" included, it should have come a good deal sooner.

Miss Adeline Sergeant's new three-volume novel is much more in the earlier style of Miss Braddon than anything she has before published. It is, indeed, about as good a dish of old-fashioned villany as has been served up to the public for a long time. Kidnapping, conspiracy, at least attempted murder, there is in superfluity; and if only Miss Sergeant had really kept the secret of her story to the last, St. Maur would certainly have been as good as anything by the best of Miss Braddon's disciples. As its name ought to indicate, this story is one of "high life," with a missing heiress and all the rest of it. Miss Sergeant's Duke is, however, rather wooden, and her "society" talk cannot be said to be up-to-date. In these democratic days a Duchess would perhaps be the last person in the world to say, when discussing the question of "a companion":

"I do not see that it matters in the least whether she is young or old. Nobody ever looks at a person of that class in real life. It is only in novels that the son of the house marries his sister's governess or his mother's lady's maid."

Miss Sergeant's villany and camaraderie are much heartier than her "society." Geoffrey Hulme is a mere boarding-school miss's hero; but Ledward, although he is rather a failure as a murderer, has the worst possible intentions, and should therefore be liked by all who admire melodrama that is neither very boisterous nor too crowded with incidents. Mrs. Heriot, too, is an admirable example of the unscrupulous adventuress. Varns, the missing heiress, is rather a poor creature, but the conspiracy to make her out mad is well managed.

William Blacklock, Journalist, is to all appearance the first effort of a new writer. If the surmise be correct, it must be accounted a very creditable first effort. No doubt it falls short of artistic perfection even in plot. Thus, there is, in the first chapter, a most affectionate parting between the dubious hero and his father. An experienced novelist, or even a writer who, like Mr. Barrie, is an artist in spite of himself, would have made good use of this father. But Mr. McLachlan lets old Abel slip through his fingers. But as a study of real life, in the interior of a provincial newspaper office of the present day, nothing better or more life-like has, to my knowledge, been published. The eccentric but able editor of the journal to which William Blacklock is attached as a reporter is a flesh-and-blood personage; and the troubles in the rival, over-tyrannised, and under-manned newspaper are reproduced with a skill which can only come of intimate knowledge. The earnest sub-editor Maitland errs perhaps in being too ambitious; but the flippant reporter, Oliver Grott, is a success—evidently because too great pains have not been taken with him. Mr. McLachlan's female characters are not nearly so good as the best of his men. Ruth Wilton has a fatal incapacity for letting her true feelings be known, and her marriage with the earnest and introspective sub-editor is hurried up at the close. Gertrude, too, whom the weak-willed Blacklock marries, degenerates too rapidly into a mere virago. All things considered, however, William Blacklock, Journalist, shows that its author has wide sympathies and a knowledge of different shades of character, and that he can draw from the life. He ought to have a future before him.

There is no more reason why the populariser of Mr. Zambra, the detective, should not produce such a volume as The Rajah's Second Wife, than why the creator of Sherlock Holmes should not have produced such a book as The Refugees. At the same time Mr. Headon Hill's second success is not nearly so pronounced and unimpeachable as Mr. Conan Doyle's. The Rajah's Second Wife proves absolutely nothing in regard to its author and the possibilities of his future. It is simply a story of a man's self-sacrifice for the woman he loves, of the carefully written kind that could have been produced by anybody—anybody, that is to say, with a gift of style. Perhaps the only thing in this story which really strikes one as original is the impression with which it leaves the reader that after all Amy Forrest did wisely in marrying the Rajah (otherwise Mr. Hari-chand) in spite of his undoubted faults, rather than the Rev. John Deacon, with all of his equally undoubted virtues. Several of the leading characters—more particularly the declassed soldier who takes an active part in the plot against the Rajah and his wife, and the spirited Englishman who is contrasted with him, and who brings help to both, but death to Deacon—are adequately sketched, and there is not one of the not too numerous incidents in the evolution of the plot that is not told with painstaking detail. But the book, taken as a whole, leaves an impression of neatness rather than of high art.

Norman is one of those books which cannot be seriously criticised; surely its author did not mean it to be. He has evidently steeped himself in the pseudo-scientific literature of the day, and so has qualified himself to put dissertations on all sorts of subjects, but especially heredity, into the mouths of his three leading and very odd characters—Noel, Norman, and Goodman. They have also an extraordinary partiality for quotations; even Rosalind, the Circe of the play, who, by a freak of heredity—in other words, she is her mother's daughter—is “one of the most sensual women of her time,” illustrates and justifies her love for “hard” kissing by a few lines from Dryden. And yet there is a good deal of raw cleverness in this book. Noel is quite an original murderer, and Goodman is the reverse of a commonplace swindler. There is a certain Pat, too, who might, under other circumstances, have made a good rollicking Irishman. As he stands, however, he is, like everybody else in the book, a sermonising mass of crudities. Colin Clout ought to think out the problems that are vexing his soul before he commits himself again to print.

Flats is a pleasant story of its kind, but as thin in point of plot as well could be. Captain Lorimer Dalmain, invalided home from Burma, occupies his uncle's flat in Marlborough Mansions, and there he falls in with Chriemhild (otherwise Hilda) York, who, as a poor relation, is living with the Carew family, who occupy the topmost flat in the same mansions. As the two fall in love with each other at first sight; as the lively Floss, who might have been Hilda's rival, becomes her friend and confidante; and as the crabbed uncle, who might have objected to Lorimer's marriage, positively advances it in the most practical fashion, monotonous happiness is the note of Flats. The ordinary critic will say that the story need not have been written; the conventional reader who takes a novel as a sedative will almost certainly enjoy it. There is a reality even in its artificiality.

The new volume of the “Pseudonym Library” contains two exquisitely characteristic studies by Ouida. The one is a study in selfish passion, the other in selfish pathos; for Ouida would not be the Ouida of Strathmore and Puck if she did not give unscrupulousness precedence even to sensuality. There is no room, however, in either of these sketches for the discursiveness which, from the mere standpoint of plots, has spoiled some of their author's more ambitious books. In both we get, almost at once, to the very root of the matter. In other words, one has hardly mastered the first few pages before one can see that the rapacious and ambitious Santina does not care for the love-lorn Caris, but means to utilise him for the furtherance of her ignoble ends. A glance at “A Lemon Tree,” too, will show us that the heroine's love for Cecco, even though it brings her to death, is altogether ignoble, inasmuch as it involves serious injury to the one unselfish character in the story. Of the two studies, “A Lemon Tree” is the more pathetic, but “The Silver Christ” is by far the more powerful. Ouida's large gallery of sin contains nothing better than the portrait of Caris, the most superstitious of Italian peasants, who, altogether inebriated with the alcohol of passion for a worthless creature, desecrates his mother's grave to please her. At the end of the story, Caris, who has been imprisoned for three years for sacrilege—the Silver Christ he has stolen has been sold by Santina, and has enabled her to make her fortune as a singer—is seen handling the haft of the great knife under his waistband, and meditating vengeance. Doubtless he will accomplish his purpose; and Ouida's tale of animalistic love and savage superstition is so fascinating in its own way that it is hardly possible to refrain from wishing that the last scene in the last act of Santina's life had been placed upon the stage.

Whatever Mrs. Walford does, she does on the whole both carefully and naturally; and so the volume of short stories which takes its name from the first, “Ploughed,” will be enjoyed by holiday-readers of the kind that have a distaste for mere sensationalism. At the same time this book will confirm the popular impression that Mrs. Walford requires, to do herself justice, the elbow-room of a novel of the ordinary size. The majority of her new stories are much too slight to take a firm hold of the imagination or to sink into the memory. There is nothing that is striking or even new in “Ploughed,” “Only a Pocket-handkerchief” is commonplace, and “Until Seven Times” suggests Dickens-and-water. By far the best thing in the volume is “An Eastern Cadet.” The dazed sensations of Berty Allerton when he learns on the street, in front of Burlington House on a December day, that he is first in the Ceylon Civil Examination are depicted with a painstaking care, which has all the effect of a consciously humorous description.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

“I protest to thee, Horace (do but taste me once), if I do know myself, and mine own virtues truly, thou wilt not make that esteem of Varius, or Virgil, or Tibullus, or any other indeed, as now in thy ignorance thou dost; which I am content to forgive. I would fain see which of these could pen more verses in a day, or with more facility than I.”

So speaks Crispinus in “The Poetaster”; and Ben Jonson's satire, the luckless critic knows to his cost, is pertinent enough to-day. Here are half-a-dozen volumes of verse, written presumably by persons who think they have something to say, and can say that something well. Yet in four of them one finds the most sacred platitudes feebly and irreverently expressed; while the latest music-hall song, infinitely better by the way, clings not more tenaciously to the memory than the impudent jingle that fills page after page. Perhaps a little plain speaking may warn off further offenders; but trespassers on Parnassus, I fear, cannot be prosecuted.

Poems by Langdon Elwyn Mitchell. (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.). A publisher's note reminds readers of this volume that Mr. Mitchell has produced one other book of verse, also that he is the author of several plays. He cannot claim, therefore, the indulgence due to a beginner. Portions of his work are not wholly bad, but it has no affirmative merits. Any one who cared to might write:

“There is a languor comes with the excess
Of the moon's soft light, and sometimes even a saint

Wand'ring 'mid Eastern fables, will grow faint.”
Fortunately the majority of us have not sufficient ambition.

The Torch Bearers. By Arlo Bates. (Boston: Roberts.) Mr. Bates' poem was recited, the title-page informs us, at the incorporation of Bowdoin College, on June 28 of this year. Though such lines as have a certain prettiness, one cannot but feel sorry for the audience. The poem is flabby in thought, pompous in style, unfortunate in illustration. That Mr. Bates puts his faith in "These States," and bates "England's supreme brutality" is the only thoroughly satisfactory thing about his work. But Mr. Bates must be reminded that, as yet, we have not taken to lynching one another, so he cannot dub us,

“From the thin breezes yearning towards the sea”

"Knaves who claim omnipotence
For bank accounts"

whatever that may mean. Mr. Bates' bad language is often rather unintelligible. As a set-off to this fault, no one will deny that much may be forgiven a man who in "anathema" finds a rhyme for America.

Idylls of the Dawn. (Bell.) Most of these poems have appeared in the Sydney Mail, and should have been allowed to die peacefully in its columns. Not but what there are some remarkable stanzas, as for example the following in a poem called "The Empire Flag":

"O! cast aside the shallow soul
Deems honour less than mammon's mart,
Which for the sake of local part
Would sacrifice a noble whole."

But even an anonymous author cannot be expected to keep so high a level always. Still, the next quotation prays forcibly for pardon, since it contains the unique merit of making ridiculous, for the first time, I imagine, the deadliest of diseases:

"Stands the anxious doctor watching
Life and death in hard-fought strife;
In diphtheria's dread danger
Trembles Essie's lover's life."

There are no extenuating circumstances to soften our verdict in my next selection. Quite frankly, it seems to me almost criminal to imagine, let alone to publish, such stuff as this:

"Bringing to soiled lives a freshness, such as Summer winds carry at close of the day,
When o'er the meadows, and dogrose lined lanes
Bearing the scent of the newly mown hay."

The Flute of Athena. By Reuben Bradley. (Elliot Stock.) Mr. Bradley's sympathies and enthusiasms are so uncontrollable and vast, ranging from his graphophone to the Pilgrim's Progress and Admiral Benbow, that one is eager to admire. To blink the fact, however, that this volume is a bundle of pretentious nonsense, written in a style altogether intolerable, is impossible. No amount of good nature makes us submit to such rhymes as "Arcadian" and "said on," "minstrel" and "big bell," "tended" and "then did." Again, comment is superfluous on such melodious fluting as:

"Blame not then the actor
In the role he's cast,
If he's quite exact or Spoil his part at last."

Nor can such malapert bluster as this—

"O mystery! The space between
The two was but a stride;
What different fates had followed them
Had that other horseman died!"— escape castigation. Old ballads and old heroes ought not to become the prey of every swaggering rhymester who deigns to lay his wanton hands upon them. Mr. Bradley's shameless apology that "I neither pipe nor sing" will fail to reconcile the reader whose intelligence has been insulted by nigh on two hundred pages of wearisome rubbish.

A Book of Songs. By Julian Sturgis. (Longmans.) It is a relief to read this pleasing and unobtrusive volume. Mr. Sturgis, full of quaint fancies and courteous humour, is contented to hymn the trivial. How surely he hits the mark he aims at, those scholarly verses show; his modesty, indeed, leads him to any number of delicate little triumphs. Where all are good, and the whole is small in bulk, it is unfair to quote from his poems. But the last verse of "Through the Ivory Gate," shows him at his most serious, and not least fortunate, moment:—

"So with closed lids I lay,
Lord of the vision fair;
But when 'twas perfect day,
Only the day was there."

Songs from Dreamland. By May Kendall. (Longmans.) Miss Kendall has already made a reputation as a writer of verse, distinguished alike for wit and a certain pathetic quality. Her first book aroused curiosity and hope for a brilliant future. The present collection of verses, grave and gay, is a surprise, though in some measure a disappointment. Discretion is not a feature of the selection: there is much in it that one resents. Yet it were ungracious to emphasise the grievance, for Miss Kendall has never written so well as in some of these poems. "Jim," in its way, is a masterstroke, beautiful though grimy; "The Fatal Advertisements" sparkles with uncommon humour; "The Ballad of the Flag Painter" comes near to being quite faulty, and three such poems should save the most gigantic volume of rhymes from abuse. There are many passages one would willingly quote, but the difficulty of choosing is too great. I had marked a score of such for the purpose; but on second thoughts I prefer to commend the whole, feeling certain that I shall thus gain the goodwill of all sensible readers.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

NOTES AND NEWS.

ACTING upon a suggestion made by Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Royal Historical Society has decided to commemorate the centenary of the death of Gibbon. A committee has been formed, under the presidency of the Earl of Sheffield. Addresses will be delivered at a meeting of the society on Nov. 15 by Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff and Mr. Frederic Harrison, and, it is hoped, by some foreign historians. There will be an exhibition at the British Museum of portraits, manuscripts, and relics of Gibbon. Contributions to the exhibition have been promised by the Earl of Sheffield, Mr. Alfred Morrison, Mr. Hallam Murray, General Meredith Reed, M. W. de Sévery, and others; and the Swiss Government has requested any persons in Switzerland who may be in possession of relics of Gibbon to lend them.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING's new volume of Ballads, which Messrs. Methuen announce, will not be published before May of next year.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co. will shortly issue a new edition, containing some additional poems, of the first series of Mr. Norman Gale's Country Muse, which has been out of print for a considerable time. They will, at intervals, issue other volumes by Mr. Gale, in a style uniform with this new edition.

MR. W. J. HARVEY, the editor of Alumni Cantabrigienses, has two books nearly ready for the press: a History of the several important Families of Harvey (or Hervey), and a Dictionary of British Surnames, for both of which he has been collecting materials, chiefly from original sources, during many years.

A NEW volume by the Rev. Dr. Latham, author of "Pastor Pastorum," will be issued immediately under the title of The Service of Angels. Messrs. Deighton, Bell & Co., of Cambridge, are the publishers.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will shortly publish a collection of essays by Prof. Macmillan of Bombay, the longest of which gives the strange experiences of a globe trotter in India two hundred years ago. Among the other Indian studies included in the volume is a philosophical examination of the Anglo-Indian dialect, which argues, among other things, that the word salam must have been constantly in the mouth of Christ and His Apostles. Another, which treats of the baneful effects of female seclusion, provoked much discussion when delivered as a lecture in Bombay.

MRS. ALFRED MARKS' new novel will be issued, in the first instance, in one-volume form. It is entitled, David Pannell: a Study of Conscience; and the scene is laid partly in Genoa.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON will publish, next month, a new novel, in three volumes, by "Iota," entitled Children of Circumstance.

L. T. MEADE'S new novel, entitled Red Rose and Tiger Lily, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. early next week.

MESSRS. FREDK. WARNE & Co. will shortly issue a novel by Mr. Silas K. Hocking, entitled A Son of Reuben.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will publish immediately an historical romance, by Dr. S. R. Keightley, entitled, The Crimson Sign: A Narrative of the Adventures of Mr. Gervase Orme, Sometime Lieutenant in Mountjoy's Regiment of Foot. The story deals chiefly with the siege of Derry.

MR. A. P. MARSDEN announces for early publication Chin-Chin: or, the Chinaman at Home, which is written by Tcheng-Ki-Tong, and has been translated (? from the French) by Mr. R. H. Sherard. It deals with such subjects as Chinese cooking, tea-drinking, the feast of lanterns, and the evocation of spirits.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK will publish next week Psalm Mosaics, a biographical and historical commentary on the Psalms, by Mr. A. Saunders Dyer.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of Hull, will shortly issue Sutton in Holterness, its cornlands, meadows and pasturage, their owners and occupiers, by Mr. Thomas Blashill, illustrated with views, maps, and plans.

MR. WALTER SCOTT will publish, towards the end of next month, a volume of Passages from Froissart, edited, with an introduction, by Mr. Frank T. Marzials.

MESSRS. CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON will publish next month a work on Modern Journalism, a handbook specially intended for the guidance and counsel of the young journalist, by Mr. J. B. Mackie, of Middlesborough, author of the Life of Duncan M'Laren.

MESSRS. MORISON BROTHERS, of Glasgow, will publish shortly a book by Mr. J. Cuthbert Hadden, of Edinburgh, entitled, Are you Married? Papers on Love, Courtship, Marriage, and Kindred Subjects, with an illustration on the cover by Mr. W. Ralston.

MR. EDWIN CLEMENT WILSON and Mr. John Montgomery Milne have commenced business as publishers at 29, Paternoster-row, where the Investors' Review is now issued. Among the earliest books to be published by them are Heroes in Homespun, by Mr. Ascott R. Hope; and a story entitled Nic-Nod Thain, Materialist, by the author of "Thomas Wanless, Peasant"; also a new edition of the latter, a book that attracted much attention some years ago.

THE English, American, and foreign serial rights of a new story by Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy, entitled A Justified Sinner, have been acquired by Messrs. Tillotson's newspaper syndicate.

THE second edition of Volume II. part I. of Mr. Henry Dunning MacLeod's Theory of Credit will be published by Messrs. Longmans next week.

Correction.—In the sonnet printed in the ACADEMY of last week, line 4 should read:

"The mock of nations, whirled you ever faster."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE forthcoming number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain a facsimile (with translation) of a Persian letter from the Amir of Afghanistan, concerning the Durand mission and his relations with England since 1881; two articles on the Korean question, from a Chinese and a Japanese official; an article on the present condition of affairs in Siam, from a Siamese; "The Situation in Morocco," by Mr. Ion Perdicaris; "The Ottawa Conference," by the secretary, Mr. J. Lambert Payne; "Badakshan: its History, Topography, and People," by Dr. G. W. Leitner; "St. Thomas the Apostle and the Syrian Church in India," from the MS. notes of the late Sir Walter Elliot; "Symbolism and Symbolic Ceremonies of the Japanese," by Mrs. C. M. Salway, with illustrations; and a full report of the proceedings of the recent Congress of Orientalists at Geneva.

THE October number of Blackwood's Magazine will contain an article describing the circumstances attending the accession of the new Sultan of Morocco, written by Mr. Walter B. Harris, who was fortunate enough to be the only European in the city of Fez at the time.

At the beginning of September, a fine brass commemorating Sir Thomas St. Leger, who died in 1408, was discovered beneath the flooring of some pews in Otterden Church, Kent. The existence of this brass, which contains a full length figure of a knight in armour, with a marginal legend, was quite unknown. The Reliquary for October will contain a reproduction of a rubbing of it, together with a description by Canon Scott-Robertson.

MISS FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE contributes a paper to the forthcoming number of the Humanitarian on "Village Life in India." The number will also contain an article by the Rev. Alfred Momerie, on "The Christ of the Past and the Future"; a paper by Surgeon-General Sir William Moore, urging the re-enactment of the Contagious Diseases Acts; and an interview with Sir Benjamin Richardson on "The Humane Extinction of Life in Animals."

A SERIAL story of adventure by Mr. J. Bloundelle-Burton, entitled "The Hispaniola Plate," will be commenced in the St. James's Budget on Friday next, with illustrations by M. G. Montbard. The scene is laid in the West Indies, in the reigns of James II. and Queen Victoria.

TRANSLATION.

THE PRESS-GANG.

From the Chinese of Tu Fu, A.D. 712—770.

THERE, where at eve I sought a bed,
A press-gang came, recruits to hunt;
Over the wall the Goodman sped,
And left his wife to bear the brunt.

Ah me! the cruel serjeant's rage!

Ah me! how sadly she auron

Told all her story's mournful page—

How three sons to the war had gone;

How one had written home to say
That two had been in battle slain;
He from the fight had run away,
But they could ne'er come back again.

She swore 'twas all the family,
Except a grandson at the breast;
His mother, too, was there, but she
Was all in rags and tatters drest.

That she with age was troubled sore,
But for herself she'd not think twice
To journey to the seat of war,
And help to cook the soldiers' rice.

* * * * *
The night wore on, and stopped their talk;
Then sobs upon my hearing fell . . .
At dawn, when I set forth to walk,
The Goodman only cried "Farewell!"

HERBERT A. GILES.

OBITUARY.

DR. W. A. GREENHILL.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER GREENHILL, M.D., who died at Hastings on September 19, in the eighty-first year of his age, was himself a man of some note, and yet more interesting because of his friendships. Educated at Rugby in the early days of Doctor Arnold's rule, he afterwards married a near relation of his old head master. In 1832, he matriculated at Oxford, as a commoner of Trinity, to which college he was always devotedly attached, sending to it two of his sons. On graduating in medicine he continued to reside at Oxford, in "The Broad," and became physician to the Radcliffe Infirmary. But his chief title to fame is, that he was churchwarden to Newman when vicar of St. Mary's. This was probably due to their common connexion with Trinity; for Dr. Greenhill has put it on record that he was not himself a Newmannite. In the ACADEMY of August 30, he printed several letters written to him by Newman, which show that the intimacy between them was never interrupted; and none rejoiced more than he when the Cardinal was elected to an honorary fellowship at the old college.

Another Trinity man with whom Dr. Greenhill was at one time brought into intimate relations was Sir Richard Burton, who lived in his house as a boy during part of the long vacation of 1840. Burton used to tell how he met there both Newman and Arnold, and also Señor Pascual de Gayangos, who gave him his first lessons in Arabic.

Dr. Greenhill was one of the most scholarly of modern physicians, though unfortunately he has left little to show what he might have accomplished. It has been said of him that he alone possessed the knowledge of both languages which is necessary to restore the fragments of Greek medicine that are preserved in Arab translations. For the Sydenham Society, he edited and translated—if we are not mistaken—the Works of Aræteus. But by far his best-known publication is the Religio Medici in the "Golden Treasury" series (1881), which is a model of the way in which a difficult English classic ought to be edited. We believe that he had made considerable collections for a similar edition of the Hydrotaphia. For many years past, Dr. Greenhill had lived at Hastings, loved and honoured by all who were privileged to know him.

DR. J. E. MILLARD.

WE have also to record the death, at Oxford, on September 20, of the Rev. James Elwin Millard, D.D., honorary Canon of Winchester. He was born at Norwich in 1823, being the son—not the youngest, as has been stated—of a gentleman in the navy. Admitted as a chorister at Magdalen in 1835, his name remained on the foundation for more than thirty years. In 1842 he was elected to a demyship, which in those days led inevitably to a fellowship, provided that the demy continued a bachelor. In Millard's case, the fellowship did not fall in until 1853. In the meantime, he had been placed in the third class in the classical school in 1845, when Lord Halsbury was in the fourth; and in the following year he was appointed head-master of Magdalen College School, at the early age of twenty-three. The appointment was justified by the result. For it was mainly through Dr. Millard's energy that this ancient school, which had formerly been limited to the sixteen choristers, was extended to include both day boys and boarders. Among his pupils were "Student" Williams, the greatest coach that Oxford has known; and Canon Hicks, of Manchester. In 1864, Dr. Millard accepted the important college living of Basingstoke, and shortly afterwards married a sister of Lord Basing, by whom he leaves a family. At Basingstoke he led an active life for twenty-six years, taking a prominent part in all local duties. But in 1890 his health broke down, and he retired to Oxford to end his days amid old associations.

Dr. Millard was at one time devoted to mountaineering, being, we believe, an original member of the Alpine Club. A later hobby was that of book-collecting. His liturgical library was sold when he left Basingstoke; but his early-printed volumes he kept to the last, and loved to talk about them even when he could not take them down from the shelves. The books that he published himself were characteristic of his life's work. The first was Historical Notices of the Office of a Chorister; the last (1889)—written in collaboration with Mr. F. J. Baigent—was an elaborate History of Basingstoke, in nearly 800 pages, of which we will only say that it is worthy of the twelve years' research bestowed upon it.

J. S. C.

MR. MARTINUS NIJHOFF, the founder of the great publishing and bookselling house at the Hague, died on September 24, after a short illness. We understand that he had taken into partnership his son and his son-in-law, who will continue the business under the old name.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

CLARENDON PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Theology.—"Liturgies, Eastern and Western," by C. E. Hammond, new edition by F. E. Brightman; "Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine Secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi," ad Codd. MSS. fidem recensuit I. Wordsworth, Episcopus Sarisburiensis: in operis societatem adsumto H. I. White, partis i. fasc. iv. — Euangelium secundum Iohannem; a Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by E. Robinson, edited by the Rev. Dr. Francis Brown, Canon Driver, and Prof. C. A. Briggs, part iv.; "A Concordance to the Septuagint," by the late Edwin Hatch and H. A. Redpath, part iv.; "The Peshito Version of the Gospels," edited by G. H. Gwilliam, part i.; "The Memphitic Version of the New Testament," edited by G. Horner; "Sancti Irenæi Nouum Testamentum," edited by Prof. W. Sanday; "Deuterographs," edited by R. B. Girdlestone; "Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica," series iv., edited by Prof. Sanday; "Philonis Judæi de Vita Contemplativa," edited by F. C. Conybeare; "Legenda Angliæ," edited by Dr. C. Horstmann, in 2 vols.

Classical.—"Plato Republic," Greek Text, edited with notes, prolegomena, &c., by the late Prof. Jowett and Prof. Lewis Campbell, in 3 vols.; "A Glossary of Greek Birds," by D'Arcy W. Thompson; "A History of Greek Religion," by L. R. Farnell, vol. i.; "Thucydides, Book I.," edited by W. H. Forbes; "Euripides, Ion," edited by C. S. Jerram; "Ovid, Heroides," edited by Prof. A. Palmer; "The Latin Language," by W. M. Lindsay.

Oriental.—"Thesaurus Syriacus," editit R. Payne Smith, Fasc. x.; "An Abridged Syriac Lexicon," by Miss Payne Smith; "A Catalogue of the Turkish, Hindustani, and Pushtu MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by Prof. H. Ethé; "A Catalogue of the Armenian MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by Dr. S. Baronian; "A Practical Hindustani Grammar," by Lieut.-Col. A. O. Green, Part I.

General Literature.—"The Complete Works of Dante in Prose and Verse," edited by the Rev. Dr. E. Moore, with Index of Proper Names by Paget Toynbee; "Bibliography of the Oxford Press to the Year 1640," by F. Madan; "Schiller's Maria Stuart," edited by Prof. C. A. Buchheim.

History, Biography, Law, &c.—"History of the New World called America," by E. J. Payne, Vol. II.; "The Universities of the Middle Ages," by the Rev. Hastings Rashdall, in 2 vols.; "Selections from the Whiteford Papers," edited by W. A. S. Hewins; "The Landnama-Bóc," edited by the late G. Vigfusson and F. York Powell; "History of Agriculture and Prices," by the late Prof. Thorold Rogers, Vols. VII. and VIII.; "Italy and her Invaders," Vols. V. and VI., by Dr. T. Hodgkin; "Adamnan's Life of St. Columba," edited by the Rev. J. T. Fowler; "Baedae Historia Ecclesiastica," new edition, based on that of G. H. Moberly, by C. H. Plummer; "Catalogue of the Rawlinson MSS. (D) in the Bodleian Library," by W. D. Macray.

Rulers of India.—"Russell Colvin: the Last Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces under the Company," by Sir Auckland Colvin.

The English Language and Literature.—"Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," Part iv., section 2, edited by T. N. Toller; "A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society, D.," edited by Dr. J. A. H. Murray, and "F," edited by H. Bradley; "The Complete Works of Chaucer," by Prof. Skeat, Vols. V. and VI.

Philosophy and Physical Science.—"British Moralists of the Eighteenth Century," edited by L. A. Selby-Bigge, in 2 vols.; "Index Kewensis," compiled at the expense of the late Charles Darwin, under the direction of Sir Joseph D. Hooker, by B. Daydon Jackson, part III.; "A Monograph on the Oligochaeta," by Frank E. Bernard; "A Manual of Crystallography," by Prof. Story-Maskelyne.

Sacred Books of the East.—Vol. xxxviii., "Vedānta-Sūtras," translated by Prof. G. Thibaut; Part ii., vol. xlv., "Gāna Sūtras," translated from Prākṛit by Prof. H. Jacobi.

Ancient Ozoniensis.—"Firdansi's Yūsuf and Talikhā," edited by Prof. H. Ethé; "Kāva Satapatha Brāhmana," edited by Prof. J. Eggeling; "The Mantrāpatha," edited by Dr. M. Winternitz; "Abu S'elah, History of the Churches and Monasteries of Egypt," Arabic text, edited and translated by Basil T. A. Evetts; "Mediaeval Jewish Chronicles," edited by Dr. A. Neubauer, part ii.; "The Ethiopic Text of the Book of Jubilees," edited by the Rev. R. H. Charles; "English Charters and Deeds recently acquired by the Bodleian Library," edited by Prof. Napier and W. H. Stevenson; "Bale's Index Britanniae Scriptorum," edited by R. L. Poole.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Theology.—"The Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint," edited by Prof. H. B. Swete, Vol. III., completing the edition; "An Introduction to the Greek Old Testament," for the use of Students, by Prof. H. B. Swete; "The Four Gospels in the Old Syriac Version," transcribed from the Palimpsest in the Convent of St. Katharine on Mount Sinai, by the late Prof. R. L. Bensly, J. Rendall Harris, and F. C. Burkitt, with an introduction by Mrs. Lewis; "Origen's Commentaries on S. John," freshly edited by A. E. Brooke; "The Syriac Version of the Fourth Book of Maccabees," edited by the late Prof. Bensly; "Texts and Studies: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature"—"The Rules of Tyconius," freshly edited from the MSS., with an examination of his witness to the Old Latin Version, by F. C. Burkitt; "The Fourth Book of Esdras": the Latin Version edited from the MSS., by the late Prof. Bensly, with an introduction by M. R. James; "Coptic Apocryphal Gospels," translations, together with the texts of some of them," by Forbes Robinson; "The Curetonian Syriac Gospels," re-edited together with the readings of the Sinaitic Codex, and a translation into English, by F. C. Burkitt; "Clement of Alexandria's 'Quis Dives Salvetur,'" re-edited, together with an examination of Clement's text of the Gospels and Acts, by P. M. Barnard; "The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges"—"Psalms," Books II. and III., by Prof. A. F. Kirkpatrick; "The Epistles to Timothy and Titus," by the Rev. A. E. Humphreys; "The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools and Colleges"—"Philippians," by the Rev. Dr. H. C. G. Moule.

Miscellaneous.—"The History of English Law," by Sir Frederick Pollock and Prof. F. W. Maitland, in 3 vols.; "Contracts in Roman Law" (Yorke Prize Essay), by W. H. Buckler; "Chapters on the Principles of International Law," by Prof. J. Westlake; "The Growth of British Policy," by Sir J. R. Seeley; "Statutes of Lincoln Cathedral," arranged by the late Henry Bradshaw, with illustrative documents, edited by Christopher Wordsworth, Part II. containing statutes earlier and later than those in the "Black Book" with the "Novum Registrum" and documents from other Churches of the Old Foundation; "Milton's Paradise Lost," Books VII. and VIII., edited, with introduction, notes, and indexes, by A. W. Verity; "Thomas of London," by L. B. Radford (Prince Consort Dissertation, 1893); "A History of Epidemics in Britain," by Dr. Charles Creighton, Vol. II., from the extinction of the Plague to the present time; "History of Saint William of Norwich," with a Translation by Dr. Jessop and Dr. James; "Catalogue of the MSS. in the Fitzwilliam Museum," by Dr. James; "Catalogue of MSS. in the Libraries of Mount Athos," Vol. I., compiled by Dr. Spiridon Lambros; "The Cambridge Historical Series"—"The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 1789—1815," by J. H. Rose; "Outlines of English Industrial History," by the Rev. Dr. W. Cunningham and E. A. McArthur; "The Europeans in India, from the Invasion of Alexander to the Present Time," by H. Morse Stephens; "The Foundation of the German Empire, 1815—1871," by J. W. Headlam.

Oriental.—"Vollers' Grammar of the Modern Egyptian Arabic," translated by F. C. Burkitt, with additions by the author; "A Grammar of Vernacular Syriac," by Dean A. J. Maclean; "The Jātaka," translated from the Pali under the superintendence of Prof. Cowell, in six or seven volumes (Vol. I., translated by Robert Chalmers, in the press; Vol. II., translated by W. H. D. Rouse; and Vol. III., translated by H. T. Francis and R. A. Neil, in preparation); "Talmudical Fragments in the Bodleian Library": (1) Fragment of the Talmud Babli, Tractate Kerithoth of the year 1123, the oldest dated MS. of this Talmud; and (2) Fragment of the Talmud Jerushalmi, Tractate Berachoth, edited, with introduction and notes, by S. Schechter and Rev. S. Singer, with facsimile.

Classical.—"Sophocles," with critical notes, commentary, and translation in English Prose, by Prof. R. C. Jebb, Part VII., "Ajax"; "Aristophanes, Equites," with introduction and notes by R. A. Neil; "Homer's Iliad," the text edited in accordance with modern criticism by Arthur Platt; "The Mimes of Herondas," the text edited with a commentary by Walter Headlam; "Suetonius' Life of Augustus," edited by E. S. Shuckburgh; "Publilius Syri Mimi Sententiae," edited by R. A. H. Bickford Smith; "Pitt Press Series"—"Thucydides," Book III., with introduction and notes by A. W. Spratt; "Euripides Orestes," with introduction and notes by N. Wedd; "Homer, Iliad," Book XXIV., by G. M. Edwards; "Cicero, Pro Milone," edited by Dr. J. S. Reid; "T. Macci Plauti Asinaria," with an introduction and notes, by J. H. Gray; "Terence, Hautontimorumenos," with notes by J. H. Gray.

French and German.—"Molière, Le Misanthrope," edited by E. G. W. Braunholtz; "Schiller, Wallenstein I." "Schiller, Wallenstein II.," by Dr. K. H. Breul, University Lecturer in German; "Hackländer, Der geheime Agent," edited by E. L. Milner Barry.

Mathematical and Scientific.—"The Collected Mathematical Papers of Prof. Cayley," Vol. VII., with portrait (to be completed in 10 vols.); "The Scientific Papers of the late Prof. John Couch Adams," Vol. I., edited by Prof. William Grylls Adams, of King's College, London, with a Memoir by Dr. J. W. L. Glaisher; "A Treatise on Spherical Astronomy," by Sir Robert S. Ball; "Hydrodynamics," a Treatise on the Mathematical Theory of the Motion of Fluids, by Prof. H. Lamb, of Owens College, Manchester, new edition; "Catalogue of Scientific Papers compiled by the Royal Society of London," new series for the years 1874-1883, Vol. X. Gis-Pet, Vol. XI. in the press; "A Treatise on Geometrical Optics," by R. A. Herman; "An Introduction to Abel's Theorem and the Allied Theory," by H. F. Baker; "A Treatise on Geometrical Conics," by F. S. Macaulay; "An Elementary Introduction to Mineralogy," by R. H. Solly; "Euclid's Elements of Geometry," Books XI. and XII., by H. M. Taylor; "Arithmetic for Schools," by C. Smith; "Cambridge Natural Science Manuals"—"Practical Physiology of Plants," by F. Darwin and E. H. Acton; "Practical Morbid Anatomy," by Dr. H. D. Rolleston and Dr. A. A. Kanthack; "The Distribution of Animals," by F. E. Beddard; "Petrology," by A. Harker; "Text-book of Physical Anthropology," by Prof. Alexander Macalister; "The Vertebrate Skeleton," by S. H. Reynolds; "Fossil Plants," by A. C. Seward; "Elements of Botany," by F. Darwin; "Mechanics and Hydrostatics," and "Electricity and Magnetism," by R. T. Glazebrook.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Fine Art.—"Albert Moore, his Life and Works," by A. L. Baldry, illustrated; "Raphael's Madonnas and other Great Pictures," reproduced from the originals, with biographical and descriptive account by Karl Karoly; "John Russell, R.A., his Life and Works," by G. C. Williamson, illustrated; and in the "Ex-Libris Series"—"American Book-plates," by Charles Dexter Allen, illustrated; "Modern Book Illustration," by Joseph Pennell; and "Alphabets," by E. F. Strange.

Bohn's Libraries.—“Hawthorne's Works,” Vol. IV., containing “Mosses from an Old Manse”; “The Oration of Isocrates,” Vol. I., translated by J. H. Freese; “The Works of Virgil,” translated by A. Hamilton Bryce; “A Handbook to the Ruins of Old Rome,” by the Rev. Robert Burn, with illustrations, maps, and plans; a new edition of “Robert Southey: the Story of his Life written in his Letters,” edited by John Dennis; “Smollett's Novels,” with Cruikshank's illustrations, in 4 vols.

History, &c.—Gregorovius's “History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages,” Vols. I. and II., translated by Mrs. Hamilton; “The Diary of Samuel Pepys,” edited by H. B. Wheatley, Vol. V.; “The British Fleet: the Growth, Achievements, and Duties of the Navy of the Empire,” by Commander Robinson, R.N., illustrated; and “The Age of Pope,” by John Dennis, being the first volume of the “Handbooks of English Literature,” edited by Prof. Hales.

Educational.—The second part (completing Vol. I.) of the “Corpus Poetarum Latinorum,” edited by Prof. Postgate; “Livy, Book VI.,” edited by E. S. Weymouth and G. F. Hamilton; in the “Public School Series,” a new edition of “Plato's Gorgias,” edited by the late Dr. W. H. Thompson; in Bell's “Classical Translations”—“Cicero's Friendship and Old Age,” translated by G. H. Wells; and “Livy, Book IX.,” translated by Francis Storr; in “Bell's English Classics”—“Johnson's Life of Milton” and “Johnson's Life of Dryden,” both edited by F. Ryland; “Milton's Paradise Lost,” Books I. and II., and Books III. and IV., edited by R. G. Oxenham; “Selections from Chaucer,” by J. B. Bilderbeck; and “Goldsmith's Good-Natured Man and She Stoops to Conquer,” by K. Deighton; and “Arithmetic for the Standards,” by Charles Pendlebury and W. S. Beard.

Fiction.—“Amygdala: a Tale of the Greek Revolution,” by Mrs. Edmonds; “Uncle Peter's Riddle,” a story for children, by Miss E. K. Sanders, illustrated; “Life and Death,” poems by the Rev. Marcus S. C. Rickards; and a new edition of “Eros and Psyche,” by Robert Bridges.

Miscellaneous.—In the “All-England Series,” “Dancing,” by Edward Scott, illustrated; in the “Club Series,” “Chess Openings,” by Isidor Gunsberg; “Cotton Weaving,” by R. Marsden, illustrated; new edition of The Pocket Volume Shakspeare, 13 vols., in a case; Mrs. Gatty's “Parables from Nature,” illustrated edition; and an authorised abridgement of “Webster's International Dictionary,” entitled “Webster's Brief International Dictionary.”

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

“The Portuguese in India,” being a history of the rise and decline of their Eastern Empire, by F. C. Danvers, of Her Majesty's Indian (Home) Civil Service, in 2 vols., with maps and illustrations; “The Birth of a Soul,” a Psychological Study, by Mrs. A. Phill; “Allen's Naturalists Library,” new volumes—“British Butterflies,” by W. F. Kirby; “Monkeys,” in 2 vols., by H. O. Forbes; “British Birds,” Vol. II., by R. Bowdler Sharpe; “British Mammalia,” by R. Lydekker; “The Buddhism of Tibet or Lamaism,” with its Mystic Rites, Symbols, and Mythology and its relation to the Buddhism of India, by Surgeon-Major L. A. Waddell; “Maidens in a Market Garden,” by Clo Graves, illustrated by Maurice Gruffenhagen; “The Book of Songs by Heinrich Heine,” translated from the German by Stratheir, new edition; “A Manual of our Mother Tongue,” by H. M. Hewitt, and George Beach, tenth edition, in 2 vols.; “Alice of the Inn,” a Tale of the Old Coaching Days, by John W. Sherer, second edition; “Bengali Manual, with an Assamese Grammar,” by Prof. G. F. Nicholl; “Twenty-one Days in India, or, The Tour of Sir Ali Baba,” by George Aberigh-Mackay, third edition, with illustrations.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A Series of “Commentaries on the Old and New Testaments,” under the editorship of Prof. S. R. Driver, Prof. Alfred Plummer, and Prof. C. A. Briggs, designed to supply English readers with trustworthy manuals, adequate to the requirements of modern scholarship, and based on a philological and critical study of the original texts—archaeology, criticism, and Biblical theology are included in the plan of the series, but not practical or homiletical exegesis, among the contributors are (in England) Profs. Driver, A. B. Davidson, Cheyne, Kirkpatrick, Sanday, Plummer, A. R. S. Kennedy, and G. A. Smith, and (in America) Profs. Francis Brown, W. R. Harper, G. F. Moore, and Warfield; the Commentaries on “Deuteronomy,” by Prof. Driver, and “Judges,” by Prof. G. Moore, may be expected early next year; Prof. Sanday's Commentary on “Romans” is also in the press; “St. Paul's Conception of Christianity,” by Prof. A. B. Bruce; “Syntax of the Hebrew Language,” by Prof. A. B. Davidson; “An Introduction to the New Testament: The Epistles of St. Paul,” by Prof. F. Godet (authorised translation); “New Testament Theology,” by Prof. Willibald Beyschlag, of Halle (authorised translation); “Syntax of the Moods and Tenses in New Testament Greek,” by Prof. Ernest D. Burton, of Chicago; “Studies in the History of Christian Apologetics,” by the Rev. Dr. James Macgregor; “The Last of the Prophets: A Study of the Life, Teaching, and Character of John the Baptist,” by the Rev. J. Feather, Croydon (new volume of “Bible Class Handbook Series”); “Ethics of the Old Testament,” by the Rev. W. S. Bruce; “A History of the Councils of the Church,” by Bishop Hefele, Vol. IV., translated by Canon Clark, of Toronto; “Lotze's ‘Microcosmus’” (a cheaper edition); “Studies in the Christian Evidences: Being Apologetics for the Times,” by the Rev. Dr. Alex. Mair, of Edinburgh (third edition, revised and enlarged); Translations of the late Prof. Dillmann's Commentaries.

MESSRS. GAY & BIRD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

“Timothy's Quest,” by Kate Douglas Wiggin, with over eighty text and full-page illustrations, by Oliver Herford, and portrait of the author; “Melody,” by Laura E. Richards; “Naples and its Environs,” by Clara Erskine Clement, with twenty photogravures of views and objects of interest; “Inez: A Welsh Idyll,” by Mrs. Fred Reynolds; “In the Dozy Hours,” by Agnes Repplier; “Artful Anticks,” by Oliver Herford; “A Complete Dictionary of Synonyms and Antonyms,” by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Fallows; “When Charles I. was King,” by J. S. Fletcher, new edition; “A Worker in Iron,” by Charles T. C. James; “Fallen Angels,” A Disquisition upon Human Existence, an Attempt to Elucidate some of its Mysteries, especially those of Evil and Suffering, by One of Them, new edition; “Famous Composers and their Works,” by Twenty-six Contributors, English, French, German and American, in 4 vols., profusely illustrated with facsimiles of letters and MS. music, views of birthplaces, residences, monuments, medallions, statues, tombs, musical instruments, memorials, and other rare and curious subjects; “Love Lyrics,” by Allan Stanley; “The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography,” in 12 vols.

MESSRS. BEMROSE & SONS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

“The Corporation Plate and Insignia of Office, &c., of the Cities and Corporate Towns of England and Wales,” by the late Llewellyn Jewitt and W. H. St. John Hope; “Devonshire Wills: being a Collection of Abstracts of Early Wills and Administrations proved and granted in the Diocese of Exeter,” by Charles Worthy; “Sketches of Old Derby and Neighbourhood,” by John Keys, edited by George Frederick Gadd, with numerous illustrations of ancient historic buildings; “How to Write the History of a Parish,” by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Cox, new edition, revised and enlarged; “Miners' Leaders,” thirty portraits and biographical sketches, edited by William Hallam; “Brave Men of Old: the Twelve Lesser Prophets,” by the Rev. R. Fisher, new edition; “The Scientific Angler,” by the late David Foster, sixth edition, revised; “Practical Dressmaking, with Diagrams,” by Louisa E. Smith; “Official Report of the Church Congress”; “Southwell Diocesan Church Calendar”; “Derbyshire Red Book”; the annual volumes of the Ladies' Treasury, the Evangelist Monthly, the Christian Progress, and the Reliquary.

MESSRS. GIBBINGS & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

“Madame D'Arblay's Diary,” in 3 vols.; “Two Friends” and “The Patience of Hope,” by Dora Greenwell; “Memoirs of Count Lavalette,” Adjutant and Private Secretary to Napoleon and Postmaster-General under the Empire, with portraits; “The Romance of Reality,” by Charles Morris, Historical Tales—English, French, German, and American, illustrated; “Memoirs of Perdita,” from the edition edited by her daughter, with notes and introduction by Fitzgerald Molloy, and numerous portraits; “Tom Cringle's Log,” in 2 vols., and “The Cruise of the Midge,” by Michael Scott, in 2 vols., with illustrations by Frank Brangwyn; “The Cabinet Maker's and Upholsterer's Drawing Book,” by Thomas Sheraton, with the continuation and appendix printed from the third edition; “Tales of Old Thule,” by J. Moyr Smith, illustrated; Smollett's Novels, edited by George Saintsbury, and illustrated by Frank Richards, in 12 vols.; new editions of Gibbon's “Decline and Fall,” in 4 vols., and of “Evelyn's Diary.”

THE ROXBURGH PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS.

“The Magistracy,” being a Directory and Biographical Dictionary of the Justices of the Peace of the United Kingdom, revised to date and edited by Charles F. Rideal; “Evolution,” a Retrospect, by the Marquis of Salisbury, being the address (slightly revised by the author) recently delivered before the Royal British Association; a second edition of the “Law and Lawyers of Pickwick,” by Frank Lockwood, slightly revised, with an original drawing by the author of Mr. Sergeant Buzfuz; a third edition of “Wellerisms,” selected by Charles F. Rideal, with an Introduction by Charles Kent, and an original drawing of Sam Weller, by George Cruikshank, Jun.; “Woman Regained,” a novel of artistic life, by George Barlow; a second edition of “Charles Dickens's Heroines and Women Folk,” some thoughts concerning them, by Charles F. Rideal, with drawings of Edith Dombey and Dot; “The Reunion of Christendom,” by Cardinal Vaughan, being the slightly revised address recently delivered before the Catholic Truth Society; “Young Gentlemen of To-Day,” by Charles F. Rideal, illustrated by “Crow”; “Phantasms,” original stories illustrating posthumous character and personality, by Wirt Gerrare; “The Mountain Lake and Other Poems,” from the works of Friedrich von Bodenstedt, translated by Mrs. Percy Preston;

"Told at the Club," some short stories, being No. I. of the "Pot-boiler" series, by Charles F. Rideal; "Accidents," by Dr. G. M. Lowe; "Young Babies, Their Food and Troubles," by Mrs. Truman and Miss Edith Sykes, and a second edition of "Food for the Sick," by the same authors; "The Reminiscences of a Septuagenarian Citizen," by Edward Callow.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BRINCKMANN, J. Das Hamburgische Museum f. Kunst u. Gewerbe. Leipzig: Seemann. 15 M.
DUTREUIL, L. Un séjour dans la république de Saint-Martin. Paris: Flammarion. 2 fr.
FÄRDORF, V. Autorrecht u. Rechtssystem. Litterarische u. krit. Studie. Mannheim: Bensheimer. 5 M.
LEDUC, Saint-Germain. Les Campagnes de Thérose Figueur, ex-dragon aux 15e et 9e régiments 1793-1815. Paris: Guillaumin. 3 fr. 50 c.
FROST, F. Ausmeißer Zeit. Lebenserinnerungen. München: Verlagsanstalt f. Kunst u. Wissenschaft. 10 M.
SCHAIKLE, K. H. Die höhere Frauenbildung in Grossbritannien von den ältesten Zeiten bis zur Gegenwart. Karlsruhe: Braun. 2 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- FERNERIS Bihacensis, Salontine, et Spalatensis. Zara: H. v. Schönfeld. 15 M.
GARNOT, le Capitaine. L'Expédition française de Formose. Paris: Delagrave. 10 fr.
WEIL, le Commandant. La cavalerie des armées alliées pendant la campagne de 1814. T. III. Paris: Baudoin. 5 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DARBOUX, G. Leçons sur la théorie générale des surfaces et les applications géométriques du calcul infinitésimal. 5e partie. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 15 fr.
FAUNA U. FLORA des Golfes v. Neapel. 21. Monographie. Die Ostrocoden, v. G. W. Müller. Berlin: Friedländer. 100 M.
GOMPERZ, Th. Griechische Denker. 3. Lfg. Leipzig: Veit. 2 M.
GRULICH, O. Geschichte der Bibliothek u. Naturaliensammlung der k. Leopoldinisch-Carolinischen deutschen Akademie der Naturforscher. Leipzig: Engelmann. 6 M.
MICHALSKI, A. Die Ammoniten der unteren Wolga-Stufe. St. Petersburg: Eggere. 30 M.
OTTEN, A. Einleitung in die Geschichte der Philosophie. Die Gottesidee, die Welt, Idee in der Entwickelg. der griech. Philosophie. Faderborn: Schöningh. 3 M. 60 Pf.
WIEBASTRAß, K. Mathematische Werke. 1. Bd. Abhandlungen I. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 21 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- BARDOWICZ, L. Studien zur Geschichte der Orthographie d. Althebräischen. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Kauffmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
ERRA, E. Das 2. Buch der aristotelischen Schrift üb. die Seele in kritischer Uebersetzung. Jena: Neuenhahn. 2 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MANUSCRIPTS OF THE CANTERBURY TALES.

London: Sept. 20, 1894.

Prof. Skeat has not mentioned, in his list of these in vol. iv. of his Oxford Chaucer, that the Chaucer Society has issued Parts I. and II. of "Parallel-Text Specimens of all accessible unprinted MSS. of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, The Pardoner's Prolog and Tale, edited by Prof. Zupitza, Ph.D." Part I. is in the Society's First Series issue for 1890, and gives the Pardoner's Prolog and Tale from seven MSS.—Cambridge, Dd. 4.24, Christ Church, 152; Additional (Brit. Mus.), 5140; (Duke of) Devonshire; Haistwell (or Egerton, 3726); (Sir R.) Ingilby; (Duke of) Northumberland. Part II. is in the issue for 1892, and gives the Prolog and Tale from ten MSS.—Phillipps (Cheltenham), 6570; Bodley, 686; Harley, 7335; Paris, 39; Selden, B14; Trinity Coll., Camb., R.3.3.; Rawlinson Poet, 223; Glasgow (Hunterian Museum); Brit. Mus. Addit., 25,718; Hatton Donat, 1.

Part III. is in the press for 1893, and will give the sample Prolog and Tale from six MSS.—Helmington, Trin. Coll. Camb., R. III., 15; New Coll., Oxford, 314; Harleian, 7333; Sloane, 1686; Cambridge Univ. Library, II. 3.26. The rest will follow in due course, as soon as Prof. Zupitza is able to determine their different groups. This is a most puzzling task, involving much minute comparison of the endless different readings.

The Chaucer Society has lately issued for its Second Series, 1891, a Study of Chaucer's Language in his Troilus, by Prof. G. L. Kittredge, of Harvard. This work is declared by Prof. McCormick, of St. Andrews, "splendid, perhaps the best bit of work done for the Chaucer Society." Prof. McCormick has long devoted himself to the study of Chaucer's Troilus, and is preparing for the Society an Essay on Chaucer's Metre as shown in the poem.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

THE BAGINBUN STONE.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Sept. 23, 1894.

This is at first sight more uncanny even than the Newton Stone, which, despite its being partly in Latin, perplexed the antiquaries for nearly a century. But in this case, as in that, all that is needed for the inscription's elucidation is a moderate acquaintance with early mediæval writing (especially Celtic) and a proper knowledge of the language. Although I have not the latter qualification, the following decipherment cannot be far wrong—the capitals and the division into words are my own:

Lv maq S'it
aoi Veq Oil
qoigndieqh.

Except the q's, which are fortunately unmistakable, almost every form used may be found on plate 53 of vol. ii. of Petrie and Stokes's Christian Inscriptions in the Irish Language. The v in l. 1, tailed like a y, resembles the y's on the Newton Stone. The right-hand stroke of this v is also made to serve as the first stroke of the m; to which there is an exact parallel in the final vm of the Newton Stone. The S, formed like an 8, has an accent placed in its tail, which, like the apostrophe in the St. Vigean's Stone, serves to aspirate the consonant: in this case the S had to be aspirated because the name is a genitive governed by maq. I am confident that l. 2 begins with an "a" like no. 16 in the plate above referred to, and that the reproduction has failed to show part of the loop. I take aoi to be a genitive of aoe "grandson." The three oi in the inscription are all like the Greek Θ , i.e., an o with an i inside it; this is also found in the St. Vigean's Stone (in P'oircus gen. of Forcus), and in a gen. in -oi in a Latin inscription figured in Westwood's Lapidarium Walliæ (plate 10). Whether the e in l. 2 is e or a combination of e and i is doubtful, and I suspect the reproduction to be imperfect; but both Veq and Veig are correct, being the genitive meq or meig aspirated after the preceding substantive. In l. 3 the n is h-shaped, like one on the Newton Stone, and has a dot underneath to show, like the modern Irish hyphen, that it "eclipses" the following consonant. The stroke on top of the d' is apparently another aspirating apostrophe; and the final q has over it the aspirating sign h.

As to the meaning, in my all but complete ignorance of Irish I don't know why it should not be as follows: "Little son of Sit, grandson of Maq Oil, five days old." Lu is given by O'Reilly as an adjective, "little"; "grandson" being in the genitive refers to Sit, not to his child; Oil looks like a genitive of oil "great." Qoig n- seems to = coic n- "five"; and dhieqh looks like an adjective in -ech from the stem of dia "day," which as the second part of a compound would become dhia in Middle Irish. The name of the deceased person is frequently given in the nominative in Irish sepulchral inscriptions.

Mr. Macalister has done a great service by publishing this one, a service even the greater because, as Prof. Rhys points out to me, Hübner had already published it as an Irish duplicate of a Welsh inscription. Mr. Macalister's reproduction shows that there is no ground whatever for that theory, which was based on a totally erroneous copy—wherein, for example, the letter q was transcribed in three different ways (Ins. Brit. Chr., No. 96).

I have no time to try to trace the proper names contained in the inscription, or to estimate its date on palaeographical grounds. Perhaps Dr. Whitley Stokes (may he be merciful to me!) can settle its age pretty closely from its phonetics alone.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

P.S.—I think the inscription is not earlier than the end of the ninth century, and the aspiration of d in the last line makes me doubt its being so early: its analogies with the Newton Stone suggest the period 955-1031 as more likely. I find that in old Irish MSS. a dot is sometimes placed over an eclipsing consonant (O'Donovan, p. 64).

Cambridge: Sept. 25, 1894.

May I trespass once more on the space of the ACADEMY, to add some further particulars which I have obtained respecting this stone?

First, there are two inscribed stones at Fethard: this, and another, built into the walls of Fethard Castle. The Fethard Castle inscription—which I have not seen—is given by Hübner in the Inscriptiones Britanniae Christianae, and stated to be a copy of the inscription on the Cross at Carew, in Pembroke-shire: an inscription which, in general style, resembles the epigraph at Baginbun.

Secondly, Hübner and the late Rev. James Graves condemn the Fethard Castle inscription as a modern forgery; and Mr. Graves includes the Baginbun stone likewise in this condemnation. He says (Archæologia Cambrensis, Sec. IV., Vol. 10., p. 226.):—

"I have reason to believe that this copy of the Carew Cross inscription . . . was ingeniously carved . . . not more than sixteen years ago; and I could send you a rubbing of a long inscription in similar characters, carved on a granite boulder lying on the cliff's edge, over the Bay of Baganbun, not far from Fethard Castle on the Wexford coast. Of this boulder I have been told of those who know it well (it gives the name of 'White Stone Field' to the land on which it lies) that it never had this remarkable inscription on it until lately."

I have only to remark upon this, that I did not receive any information, either personally at the time of my visit or subsequently by letter from local residents, which in any way tended to confirm these statements.

I must express my acknowledgments to Prof. Rhys for his kindness in giving me some references which enabled me to learn these further facts; and to my friend, the Rev. T. W. Kennedy, Rector of Fethard, for some useful information.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, Oct. 1, 7.30 p.m. Carlyle: "A Passage in Carlyle's French Revolution," by Dr. Eugene Oswald; "Carlyle's Charism and Kingsley's Alton Locke," by Mr. W. Delaplaine Seull.
TUESDAY, Oct. 2, 3 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "Remarks on Russia," by Captain Bridges; "A Translation of Korolenko," by Miss Shatovkhina.

SCIENCE.

TWO BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY.

Law and Theory in Chemistry. By Douglas Carnegie. (Longmans.) This volume is called by its author a "companion-book." It is intended for the use of teachers and advanced students, and treats of several subjects which lie at the foundation of chemical science as now understood. In the first chapter alchemy and, the birth of true chemistry are discussed with adequate fulness. The phlogistic period is the topic of chapter two, in which we may read of the discoveries made by Boyle, Black, Priestley, Cavendish, and Rutherford, and of the uses to which Lavoisier put them in his work of co-ordination and generalisation. Mr. Carnegie rightly says of Lavoisier, that "in making use of these contributions he sometimes, unfortunately for his moral reputation, forgot their sources, and claimed them as original." But there can be no question that his labours finally overthrew the embarrassing theory of phlogiston, and closed for ever the period of its sway. It is idle to speculate as to the further advance which chemical science would have made in the hands of Lavoisier, if his life had not been prematurely ended at the age of fifty by the guillotine. The work which he accomplished is fully appreciated in England; but it does not warrant the assumption, made by some of his countrymen, that chemistry is a French science. We presume that Frenchmen have refrained from celebrating on May 9 in the present year, the centenary of his death, because they did not wish to recall the fact of his cruel murder. The third chapter of Mr. Carnegie's book is devoted to the subject of Chemical Classification. Here are discussed the distinctions between mixtures, homogeneous compounds, and elements. The examples chosen to illustrate methods of separation and sorting are peculiarly characteristic, while the arguments are expressed in clear language and are presented in an attractive form. The history of sorting processes, as applied to coal-tar and to the rare earths, is most instructive. The Atomic Theory and the nature of Molecules constitute the subject-matter of the fourth chapter. Here, as in other parts of the volume, the historical method of treatment is adopted; and we are gradually led into the clearer light of to-day, after having been made acquainted with the dim and dubious conceptions of an earlier time. The three last chapters of the volume are entitled, The Classification of Compounds, Molecular Architecture, and Chemical Equilibrium. Each subject is treated with skill: the reasoning is sound, the illustrations are aptly chosen. The latest theories are discussed, especially those which relate to spatial arrangement in molecules, the nature of solutions, and thermo-chemical phenomena. Although the author does not claim continuity or completeness of treatment for the seven chapters of his volume, their expository value is considerable, and they will serve to stimulate the earnest student in his search after ascertained and ascertainable truth.

A Manual of Micro-chemical Analysis. By Prof. H. Behrens. (Macmillans.) This is an invaluable handbook, the first in the English language on inorganic analysis as conducted under the microscope. Biologists have for a long time been in the habit of employing micro-chemical reactions in the study of animal and vegetable tissues and cell-contents. They have, however, relied mainly upon staining methods; in the volume under review the formation and recognition of crystalline compounds of definite forms and composition constitute the chief means of identification employed. This manual now appears in a translation made by the author himself, but revised by Prof. J. W. Judd, to whom we are indebted for a very useful introductory chapter. This deals with the historical development of micro-chemical methods as applied to the study of minerals and of rocks, and cites the titles of original memoirs and treatises. Prof. Judd, in his introductory observations, refers in some detail to methods of mechanical sorting which have proved of incalculable value in the separation of mixtures of minerals. One of these methods, first suggested and employed by the present reviewer, consists in the employment of solutions of considerable density, in which some minerals sink, but others float. Liquids of this class are numerous; but a solution of cadmium borotungstate having a density of 3.28, and methylene iodide saturated with iodoform, are generally available. In the case of rocks and mixed minerals, it is only after the application of an isolation method that the work of micro-chemical analysis, as described in Prof. Behrens's manual, can be successfully accomplished. The contents of the volume are peculiarly unsuited to a brief and general notice—the details are minute, the precautions many, the observations delicate. But some notion of its nature and scope may perhaps be obtained by citing a couple of examples from its pages. We take the metals nickel and sodium. For nickel three micro-chemical reactions are given: of these the first and most sensitive is precipitation of the solution with potassium nitrite and lead acetate, by which means .008 of a micro-milligram (one thousandth of a milligram) may be detected. As nickel solutions, unlike those of cobalt, give no visible reaction with potassium nitrite alone, or in presence of acetic acid, this test, which results in the formation of yellow cubes of the triple nitrite of nickel, potassium, and lead, is peculiarly characteristic. The second test for nickel is almost as sensitive as that just described. It consists in the production of ammonium-nickelous phosphate. The third test, precipitation with ammonium oxalate, is far less delicate and far less decisive. In regard to sodium four reactions are described. Of these the most sensitive is precipitation with bismuth sulphate, then comes the formation of sodium silicofluoride, then precipitation with uranyl acetate and magnesium acetate, lastly, uranyl acetate alone may be used. It is needless to add that figures are introduced into the text wherever necessary, so that the appearances presented by the various crystalline deposits obtained may be readily recognised by the experimenter. It ought to be mentioned that Prof. Behrens gives all needful particulars as to the apparatus and re-agents employed in those branches of micro-chemical work described in his manual, which include—methods and reactions, examination of mixed compounds, of waters, of ores, of rocks, of alloys, and of some combinations containing rare elements. Many of the most decisive and sensitive reactions described in this volume will be seen to be new by workers in an ordinary chemical laboratory. And it is not to be doubted that some of them will take their proper places in the course of systematic analysis, being substituted for the coarser and often less conclusive test-tube reactions. One cannot but think that the splendid reaction for cobalt given on page 49 will ere long be as familiar to students as the blue borax-bead. It consists in the precipitation of magnificent blue crystals of the mercuric-cobaltous thiocyanate, $\text{Hg Co}(\text{Cy S})_4$. A. H. CHURCH.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEWLY DISCOVERED FRAGMENTS FROM SUETONIUS' LIFE OF LUCRETIVS.

Dundee: Sept. 24, 1894.

To the ACADEMY of June 23 I contributed a short letter containing some new data as to the life of Lucretius, derived from a preface by Girolamo Borgia to an edition of Lucretius (still in MS.) containing Pontanus's text.

I have endeavoured in an article, which is to appear in the Journal of Philology and which has been in proof for fully a month, to show that these extracts are derived from the Life of Lucretius in Suetonius's lost work, De Viris Illustribus. Several scholars who have read this article in MS. or in proof regard the extracts as authentic and as derived from Suetonius. I am glad to see that Dr. Radinger, in a very searching and thorough article in the Berliner Philologische Wochenschrift for last week (September 22) also takes this view. As the Journal of Philology may not appear for some little time yet, I ask you to find room for an abstract of my yet unpublished article.

After reading through Suetonius, I note the following agreements in language and style:

"T. Lucretius Carus nascitur Licinio Crasso oratore et Q. Mutio Scevola pont. cons. quo anno Q. Hortensius orator in foro quom diceret non parvam eloquentiam gloriam est auspicatus (1) Vixit annos IV. et XL: et noxio tandem improbae feminae poculo in furias actus sibi necem conscivit, recte gulam frangens, uel, ut alii opinantur, gladio incubuit: (2) matre natum diutius sterili.

"Cum T. Pom. Attico, Cicerone, M. Bruto et C. Cassio coniunctissime vixit, (3) Ciceroni vero recentia ostendebat carmina, eius limam sequutus, (4) a quo inter legendum aliquando admonitus ut in translationibus servaret verecundiam, (5) ex quibus duo potissimum loci referuntur, (6) nepotum lacunas, (7) et coeli caernas.

Notes.

(1) "Cf. Suetonius, Life of Virgil, 17. 'Poeticam puer adhuc auspicatus in Ballistam . . . distichon fecit.' The word is one which Suetonius is fond of, especially in the meaning 'to begin.'

(2) "Jerome merely says 'propria se manu interfecit.' It is in the manner of Suetonius to quote the two-fold tradition without committing himself to either.

(3) "Cf. Suetonius, Life of Terence. 'Hic cum multis nobilibus familiariter vixit, sed maxime cum Scipione Africano et C. Laelio.' Cf. Cicero, Lael. I., 'quocum coniunctissime et amantissime vixerat.'

(4) "For the unusual phrase, 'limam sequutus,' cf., 'auctoritatem et consilium alicuius sequi.' Cic. ad Fam. IV. 3, 21; Caesar, De B. Civ. I., 2 and 35.

(5) "Cf. Suetonius, de Grammaticis, 10, 'cum sibi sciat nihil aliud suadere nisi ut . . . vitet obscuritatem Sallustii et audaciam in translationibus.' Cicero says (De Oratore, iii. cc. 40-41) 'etenim verecunda debet esse translatio ut deducta esse in alienum locum, non intruisse atque ut precario, non vi venisse videatur.' Again in his Orator, c. 24, he says, 'Ergo ille tenuis [orator] modo sit elegans, nec in faciendis verbis erit audax et in transferendis verecundus et parvus in praeiis.' This principle leads him (De Or. iii. 40) to criticise and blame the expression of Ennius, caeli ingentes fornices, 'the mighty arches of heaven,' because there can be no similarity between a globe and an arch.

(6) "For the use of refero here, compare De Rhetoribus i., 'ex quibus non alienum fuerit unam et alteram exempli causa ad verbum referre.'

(7) "This phrase must come from one of the lost pages. Salsae lacunae occurs of the sea at III. 1031 and V. 794. Lucretius uses this word in a very characteristic way, giving it a vaguer and vaster meaning."

I do not reprint the list of contemporary Roman Epicureans. Dr. Radinger has anticipated me in identifying "Pollius parthenopius:" "The man appears to have been a Campanian Greek and probably a freedman; vgl. das Register zu CIL. x. ein Cn. Pollius Parthenopaeus im der von Galetti gefälschten Inschrift CIL. vi. 5, 3360." Again of C. Velleius Gallus, senator, he adds, "the cognomen Gallus, which was hitherto unknown (if not taken from the 'Fadius Gallus' of the previous line), points again to an authentic source." The new data agree with Probus, whose Life of Virgil Nettleship thought was "compiled independently from the same materials as Suetonius used," in expressly naming Virgil as an Epicurean. The scribe who wrote Polidemum for Philodemum was a literal and ignorant copyist rather than inventive.

We now see that Suetonius certainly meant by "Cicero" the orator. There is also good reason to believe that Suetonius gave the much disputed birth-year of Lucretius as B.C. 95. As to the discrepancy between his birth in 95 and his death in 55, at the age of forty-four, I should prefer to retain both dates, but to assume that Lucretius did not live so long as Jerome (doubtless following Suetonius) asserts. A similar discrepancy occurs in Suetonius' Life of Horace. He says that Horace died in B.C. 8 (V Kal. Dec.) at the age of over fifty-nine, whereas he himself fixes his birth in B.C. 65 (VI Idus Dec.), which would make him fifty-seven in B.C. 8. It is Suetonius who is probably responsible for Jerome's precisely similar self-contradiction as to Catullus dying at the age of thirty. Again, Suetonius blunders in stating that Virgil wrote his Eclogues in three years, instead of five or six.

The authority, anonymously quoted (ex quibus . . . duo referuntur), is probably Varro's De Poetis Latinis. Ritschl thinks that most of the details of literary history and criticism in Suetonius are derived from Varro, though it is noticeable that Suetonius only once names him (Ritschl's commentary on Terence, Reiff, p. 518).

As to the absurd notion of an immense gap in the poem just before l. 4 "concelebras," it could never enter any man's head to imagine, but could only grow up out of misinterpreted tradition. A legend of this kind may, like certain ancient corruptions in MSS., be a sign of antiquity and independent origin. Inventors almost always invent too much and use too much colour. Starting from the legend of the philtre and the poet's suicide, would not an inventor have been likely to give us something much more sensational than these details? There is a certain reasonableness in all of them. Regarding any new data of this kind two points mainly have to be considered. First, are they consistent with what we know already of Lucretius and his poem? Secondly, are they of a kind likely to be invented? I believe that Borgia's information comes down to us entirely independent of Jerome. Munro believes that Jerome's details regarding Lucretius are drawn from Suetonius's lost work De Viris Illustribus, which from his own time downwards was regarded as the chief authority for the literary history of Rome. It appears to me most probable that Pontanus found these data in the preface appended to a MS. of Lucretius's poem by some grammarian, who had Suetonius's Life of Lucretius before him and made a rather fuller abstract of it than Jerome did. Suetonius's biographies were especially liable to be abbreviated in this way. Thus, of the MSS. containing Suetonius' Life of Horace, four cut it down from 69 to 30 lines.

JOHN MASSON.

"ARABIC PAPYRI OF THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY."
Oxford: Sept. 19, 1891.

As the notice of my "Arabic Papyri of the Bodleian Library" in the Literarisches Centralblatt for September 2 is a not unfriendly one, I should be glad if you would allow me to make a few observations upon it.

The words at the beginning of Papyrus I., line 12, are much clearer in the Papyrus than in the colotype, and do not, I think, admit of doubt. The phrase kārihan limakāni is good Arabic, and may be paralleled—e.g., from Tabari II. i. 246, fakariha makānahu hina ra'āhu. The translation "opposing me" is, of course, free. The reviewer's suggestion that ibid., line 13, kushifā should be read instead of kashafā is attractive; but can kashafā quite mean "zur Rechenschaft ziehen," as the reviewer renders it? I presume it will not be denied that the word may have the sense that I have given it. In Papyrus II., line 15, I thought sharr, rather than durr, was meant, because sharr, rather than durr, gives the right antithesis to khair. I chose the reading el-hisn, ibid., line 33, out of many possibilities, because Yaquṭ mentions el-hisn as near Raqqah, and the Papyrus apparently speaks of the measure of Raqqah. If the reviewer have any better argument in favour of either of the readings he suggests, of course I should adopt it.

D. S. MARGOLIOUTH.

SCIENCE NOTES.

DR. WILLIAM KING, formerly of Madras, has resigned the directorship of the Geological Survey of India, which he has held since 1887. Mr. C. L. Griesbach, the senior assistant, has been appointed to fill his place temporarily.

MR. A. R. WALLACE contributes to Natural Science for September (Macmillan's) a reply to a former article on variation and natural selection by the Rev. George Henslow, which concludes as follows:—

"I submit that the whole body of facts in relation to the direct action of the environment indicates that modifications thus produced in the individual are not transmitted to the offspring; and that, until it is demonstrated by experiment that they are so transmitted, theories of plant modification founded on that assumption are altogether worthless."

A TABLE is printed in Nature, compiled from the students' number of the Lancet, showing the instruction given by the medical schools of Great Britain in scientific subjects not purely medical. Natural history forms part of the curriculum in Scotland only; bacteriology is taught at nine medical schools, of which two are in the provinces and one in Scotland; psychology forms a special subject at St. Bartholomew's, Charing Cross Hospital, the Edinburgh School of Medicine, and Queen's College, Cork.

FINE ART.

THE RACES KNOWN TO ANCIENT EGYPT.
Asien und Europa nach Altägyptischen Denkmälern. Von W. Max Müller. (Leipzig: Engelmann.)

ONE of the works most needed by the historian of archaic times, as well as by the Egyptologist, has been a new digest of the evidence to be derived from the ancient monuments of Egypt regarding the neighbouring races with which that country was brought into contact, and more especially regarding those populations which lay beyond the northern and eastern frontiers in Europe and Asia. It is over twenty years since Chabas published a valuable essay on the races known to the Ancient Egyptians in his Études sur l'antiquité historique, and until now it has stood alone. The difficulties of such a work are manifold, not the least being the absence, in most cases, of definite statements as to the geographical position of the regions named in the inscriptions. Theory after theory can be built up only to be overthrown and leave a sense of hopeless confusion in the mind of the student. Mr. W. Max Müller has at last resolutely attacked the baffling problems in their entirety, and has produced a valuable work, which will certainly influence investigation for a long time to come.

The author of Asien und Europa is one of the best-read Egyptologists, familiar to an unusual degree with every form of the now extinct languages and script of the country. He is habitually original, even to a fault, and possesses a critical insight into the character and value of documents, as well as the historical sense, which is indispensable in dealing with records covering so many centuries; so that, as far as imperfect publication of scenes and inscriptions has permitted, he has treated the difficult subject exhaustively and with considerable success. The merit of his performance is certainly not diminished by the circumstance that he has been for some years stationed at Philadelphia, far removed from the great libraries and centres of Egyptian study.

The first chapter, on the Old Kingdom, brings out especially the fact that the Egyptians from the earliest times recruited their armies very largely from foreigners. Indeed, there is evidence that the normal accoutrements of the soldiery were foreign, and that the business of fighting, whether for conquest or defence, was left almost entirely to mercenaries and subjugated foreigners, while the native fellāhiu attended to their natural occupation of agriculture. This is a point worthy of the closest investigation in connexion with the earliest history of the Nile valley, the sources of its civilisation and its monumental fecundity.

Mr. W. Max Müller seems rightly to doubt the wisdom of interpreting the names of peoples preserved in the more ancient documents by the statements of Ptolemaic inscriptions. The world in 3000 B.C. was a totally different thing from the world of Alexander's conquest, and was then unintelligible to both priests and people. At the later date, to periods of literary development had succeeded a period of scholasticism, reviving and defining ancient names after the interruption of tradition had obscured their meaning. Our author even considers that the inscriptions engraved on the temples were ransacked for queer names—fanciful, perhaps, to begin with—to be inserted as embellishments in incongruous contexts and glossed. Hitherto we have depended principally on the texts of Ptolemaic and Roman age, the statements in which are now shown to be sometimes quite at variance with the evidence of earlier records.

Another aid that the author evidently contemns, as a general means of identification, is the modern nomenclature of districts and localities. A great deal of hard work has been done in recent years in the comparison of the Pharaonic lists of conquered cities with the place-names on our maps. But it must be admitted that there is the highest probability, first, of the Egyptian scribe having a very false notion of the spelling and pronunciation of foreign place-names, and, secondly, of the names of the less important villages disappearing or being seriously corrupted in the course of 3000 years; so that the cases in which the ancient name is unknown in its native form must be considered as almost desperate. I learn that the detailed discussion of the lists of Thothmes III. and other conquerors has been omitted from the present work in order to be included in a new treatise by Mr. Müller. Much has been done for these lists by Profs. Maspero and Sayce and Mr.

H. G. Tomkins, so that it is to be hoped that some definite results may be arrived at in this fresh discussion of the subject.

During the New Kingdom foreign names and words were written in a special style of orthography, the beginnings of which the author finds at a much earlier period: but his boldest attempt in this connexion is directed to fixing the syllabic nature of this orthography, which seems to have been intended especially to express the syllables ba, bi, bu; pa, pi, pu, &c. Such combinations are unknown to the ordinary consonantal writing of the Egyptians, although they are main elements in the cuneiform script.

It is to be feared that the general reader will not find the book attractive: its style is too technical for the perusal of any but the most devoted student of Egyptian lore. But as a book of reference it will be welcome to very many. The greater part of the volume is occupied with the orderly discussion of the principal countries, tribes, and cities mentioned in the inscriptions, and there is visible throughout the endeavour (following Chabas) to pay due attention to their material civilisation, dress, weapons, &c. It is a pleasure to be able to state this, and one may fairly say that it is a sign of the times.

As is natural in a work of this kind, there are plenty of small errors. The weapon figured on p. 6 is certainly a dagger: it is found, e.g., at Beni Hasan and at Aswân, and is often carelessly drawn in the paintings. P. 32: the title of Amton, or rather Methen, is "keeper of the gate of the western nations," i.e., of the western frontier (Methen's titles generally relate to the western nomes). P. 34: the stela of Antef in the Louvre is not of the Middle Kingdom, but dates from early in the XVIIIth Dynasty; and the translation of the last part is faulty. P. 38 and 391: the story of Sanehat is not well treated. P. 254: ater en segedt is nothing but the phrase which occurs elsewhere for the itinerary measure ater.

F. L. GRIFFITH.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

It is proposed to establish an Egyptian Research Account, with the object of enabling some of Prof. Petrie's students, whom he has thoroughly trained in his methods, to undertake separate branches of exploration under his direction. Subscriptions may be sent to the treasurer, Mr. F. G. Hilton Price, 1, Fleetstreet, E.C.

THE second exhibition of the Photographic Salon, consisting of selected examples of pictorial photography, will open next week in the Dudley Gallery, and will remain open throughout October. The special exhibition of Cornish pictures in the Art Gallery at Nottingham will also open next week.

MISS M. QUILLER-COUCH is preparing a work on The Ancient and Holy Wells of Cornwall, with many illustrations, which will be published by Mr. Charles J. Clark, of Lincoln's Inn Fields.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish on October 25, the first part of a new serial work, entitled Cassell's Universal Portrait Gallery. Each part will contain twenty-four portraits of men and women of the day, with short biographical sketches.

WE may mention that the September issue of Pears' Pictorial (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) consists of a review of the exhibition of "Fair Women" at the Grafton Galleries, with abundant illustrations in monotint.

THE STAGE.

THE DRAMA.

Paris: Sept. 24, 1894.

THE theatrical season has opened with a series of more or less interesting reprises, such as M. Alexandre Dumas fils' "La Femme de Claude," in which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt plays the part of Césarine. Although the author persists in considering this one of his best plays, it is not likely to remain long on the bills, and will soon have to make room for M. Sardou's "La Duchesse d'Athènes," with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in the title-part, after which we are to have a "surprise"—M. Coquelin in the late M. Delair's adaptation of "Falstaff," and in Molière's "Amphitryon." It is nearly thirty years since we first saw Sardou's "Nos Bons Villageois" at the Gymnase, where it is now being played with renewed success.

The Odéon opened last week with two novelties and two interesting débuts. "Le Sycomore" is a milk-and-water adaptation of "Sweethearts," by J. Paul Alexis and M. Gilbert (Mr. George Moore). The plot is trivial, the dialogue uninteresting, the general impression one of ennui; and the piece would probably have finished amid general indifference but for an amusing incident, quite irrespective of the sycomore tree and its surroundings, which put the audience of the première in good-humour. Adrien, after an absence of thirty years, returns to his native town, where he finds everything changed. "What improvements!" he exclaims; "why, it is quite a large town, and lighted by electricity too!" Scarcely were the words out of the actor's mouth when the theatre was suddenly plunged in darkness, owing to a breakdown of the electric current. Amid roars of laughter, an impromptu illumination was obtained by the simultaneous lighting of hundreds of wax-lights by the audience; but the current was soon switched on again, and in a few seconds light was restored, while Adrien, heedless of the momentary interruption, finished his phrase, saying, "It is scarcely credible!" This was greeted with renewed roars of laughter; and when the curtain dropped the audience was in too merry a mood to show itself over harsh in its verdict. The second novelty was "La Barynia," by Mme. Judith Gautier (a daughter of Théophile). The scene is laid in Russia. The Princess Clelia, persecuted by her wicked guardian, seeks refuge in the humble abode of friendly peasants. In order to while away the monotony of her new life, she flirts with the handsome young moujik André; but when, on the death of her guardian, she announces her intention of returning to her princely home, André shoots himself in despair. La Barynia, in deep remorse, throws herself beside the body of her dead lover, exclaiming, "I loved him!" But it is too late: "On ne badine pas avec l'amour." Such is the moral of the drama which belongs to the romantic George Sand style. "La Barynia" is full of pretty sentiments, but wanting in clearness, both with regard to the plot and the characters, which are imperfectly explained to the audience. The great event of the evening was the début of the "Lauréate" of this year's Concours du Conservatoire—Mlle. Wanda de Boncza, a young lady of great personal attractions, favoured with a fine voice and remarkable dramatic talent: her self-possession was extraordinary under such trying circumstances. It may be said of Mlle. de Boncza that she is a striking example of the advantages and the defects of the dramatic training given at the Conservatoire. M. Magnier (also a "Lauréat"), in the part of André, made a brilliant début. Tall, good-looking, gifted with a sonorous voice, and elegant of attitude, he won the approval of all present.

At the small transpontine Théâtre Cluny, within a stone's throw of the Odéon, an adaptation of "Charley's Aunt" has been given under the title of "La Marraïne de Charley." Unfortunately, the actors are not quite up to the mark, and there are certain details so essentially English that several of the most amusing scenes fall flat on a Parisian audience. It is a great pity it was not produced on the stage of the Palais-Royal, and with better mise-en-scène. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the success of this screaming farce is increasing nightly. It has even met with the approval of M. Sarcey, the omnipotent critic of the Temps, who has hitherto pretended to ignore the possibility of anything original in English playwrights.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

MUSIC.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE twenty-fourth season of the Royal Choral Society will commence with the "Elijah" on November 1. Dr. Hubert Parry's "King Saul," written for the approaching Birmingham Festival, will be performed on February 7, 1895.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 943.—OCTOBER, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—THE STREETS OF PARIS FORTY YEARS AGO. —THE ACCESSION OF THE NEW SULTAN OF MOROCCO, by Walter B. Harris.—WHO WAS LOST AND IS FOUND, chaps xvii.-xx.—FROM WEIR TO MILL, by "A Son of the Marshes."—PORTS AND GEOGRAPHIES, by William Greenwell.—THE SKELETON HAND, by Lady Agnes MacLeod.—THIRTY YEARS OF THE PERIODICAL PRESS, by T. H. S. Escott.—LEAVES FROM A GAME-BOOE, by George Mannes.—THE GOLFER IN SEARCH OF A CLIMATE, by Horace G. Hutchinson.—FAREWELL TO BEN VRACKIE, by John Stuart Blackie.—THE NEW AMERICAN TARIFF.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

OCTOBER.

THE CRIMEA IN 1854 and 1894. By General Sir EVELYN WOOD, G.C.B., V.C.
SIDELIGHTS on the SECOND EMPIRE. Part II. By WILLIAM GRABAM.
OUR WORKMEN'S DIET and WAGES. By THOMAS OLIVER, M.D.
AN ANTIQUARIAN RAMBLE in PARIS. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
THE EXTERMINATION OF GREAT GAME in SOUTH AFRICA. By H. A. BRYDEN.
THE LEGISLATION OF FEAR. By GCIDA.
IN SYRIA. By FREDERIC CARREL.
MADAGASCAR. By VAZARA.
A PRETENDER and his FAMILY. By ALBERT D. VANDAM.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

OCTOBER Number. MIND.

Price 3s.

NEW SERIES, Vol. III., No. 12.

ARTICLES—

MELLONE, S. H.—PSYCHOLOGY, EPISTEMOLOGY, ONTOLOGY, Compared and Distinguished.
SHAND, A. F.—ANALYSIS OF ATTENTION.
SIDGWICK, H.—DIALOGUES on TIME and COMMON SENSE.
SORLEY, W. R.—THE PHILOSOPHY of LORD HERBERT, of CHERBURGH.
WARD, J.—ASSIMILATION and ASSOCIATION.
DISCUSSIONS.
CRITICAL NOTICES.
NEW BOOKS.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, London and Edinburgh.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

CORIDON'S SONG, and Other Verses. With Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON, and Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, 6s.

*Also an Edition de Luxe, limited, super royal 8vo, printed on J. Dickinson & Co.'s hand-made paper, bound in buckram, 30s. net. [THE CRANFORD SERIES.]

LIFE in ANCIENT EGYPT.
Described by ADOLF ERMAN, Translated by H. M.
TIRARD. With 400 Illustrations and 11 Plates. Super-royal 8vo, 21s. net.

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY
TALES. Edited with Notes and Introduction, by A. W.
POLLARD. 2 vols., 10s. [THE EVERESLEY SERIES.]

LAST WORDS in the TEMPLE CHURCH. By C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D., Dean of Llandaff. Globe 8vo, 5s.

THE THEORY of SOUND. By Lord RAYLEIGH, F.R.S., Hon. Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. In 2 vols. Vol. I. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 8vo, 12s. net.

A TEXT-BOOK of PATHOLOGY
Systematic and Practical. By Professor D. J.
HAMILTON. Copiously Illustrated. Vol. II. Parts
I. and II. Medium 8vo, 15s. net each Part. (Vol. I., 21s. net.)

STUDIES and EXERCISES in FORMAL LOGIC. By JOHN NEVILLE KEYNES,
M.A. Third Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. 8vo, 12s.

An INTRODUCTORY ACCOUNT of CERTAIN MODERN IDEAS and METHODS in PLANE ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY. By CHAR-LOTTE ANGAS SCOTT, D.Sc., Girton College, Cambridge. Professor of Mathematics in Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania. 8vo, 10s. net.

TIMBER and TIMBER TREES,
NATIVE and FOREIGN. By THOMAS LASLETT,
Timber Inspector to the Admiralty. New Edition,
Revised by Prof. H. MARSHALL WARD, F.R.S.
Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

THE THEORY of CON-
DITIONAL SENTENCES in LATIN and GREEK.
By RICHARD HORTON-SMITH, M.A., one of Her Majesty's Counsel; formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 8vo, 21s. net.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. GREEN. Illustrated
Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE
NORRIS. Part XXXVII. Super-royal 8vo, 1s. net.
(Vols. I., II., and III. Super-royal 8vo, 12s. each net.)

THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKE-
SPEARE. Edited by WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT.
Edition de Luxe. 40 vols. Super-royal 8vo, 6s. net per vol.

Vol. XXV. TROILUS and CRESSIDA.
Vol. XXVI. The TRAGEDY of CORIOLANUS.

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

A VALIANT IGNORANCE. By MARY ANGELA DICKENS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 420. OCTOBER. Price 1s.
CONTENTS.

1. CROMWELL'S VIEWS on SPORT. By C. H. FRIETH.
2. THE HISTORICAL NOVEL. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
Part III.
3. THE NEW JAPANESE CONSTITUTION. By C. B.
ROYLANCE-KENT.
4. CHAPTERS from SOME UNWRITTEN MEMOIRS.
By Mrs. BIRCHIE. XI.—In Italy.
5. THE LITTLE CLAY GOD.
6. A NEW PIPE-PLOT.
7. SENTIMENTAL TRAVELLING.
8. A REFORMER'S WIFE. By Mrs. STEEL.
9. THE REBELLION in the WEST INDIES. By the Hon. J. W. FORTESCUE. I.—Grenada.
10. BRITISH RIGHTS in EGYPT. By M. J. FARRELY.
11. SISTER CORDELLA.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY.
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
In daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

From the Earliest Period to the End of 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,
Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 310 pages, price 3s. 6d. net.
Globe,—"Is unquestionably useful."
Morning Post,—"Will be of considerable value."
Manchester Courier,—"An invaluable storehouse of facts."
Newcastle Chronicle,—"The Guide may be recommended to librarians as well as to readers of fiction."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.
WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS
BY MR. GLADSTONE.
Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net. With Portrait.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.
THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR
FOR THE SESSION 1894-5.
MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CORNISH, Manchester.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.
THREE YEARS WITH LOBENGULA AND EXPERIENCES in SOUTH AFRICA.

By J. COOPER-CHADWICK.
"A very interesting story of pioneer life in South Africa."—Times.
"A valuable and interesting addition to the literature of the subject.... The account of Lobengula is especially interesting."—Echo.
CASSELL & COMPANY (Limited), Ludgate Hill, London.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.
BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

| | | | | | |
|-------------------------------------|----------------|-----|-----|-----|------------|
| NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTE. | Invested Funds | ... | ... | ... | £4,700,000 |
| | Paid in Claims | ... | ... | ... | £9,000,000 |

Death Duties provided for by Life Assurance.

For Mutual Life Assurance.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.
At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS
BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."
NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTÄNGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIEDEKE BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strassman, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED. Fine Irish Linen, 2s. 1.
free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. or very best Irish Linen, returned free, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner
Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table
Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each,
24 yards by 3 yards, 2s. 9d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10yd. each; real Irish Linen Sheetings, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard;
and Linen Diaper, 8yd. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4yd. per yard;
Surplice Linen, 7yd. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN
HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.
per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow
Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS—
Children's, 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c. woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

WARD, LOCK & BOWDEN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Issue in Monthly Volumes of an Entirely New Edition of THE WORKS OF HENRY KINGSLEY.

NEWLY COMPOSED FROM TYPE SPECIALLY CAST, AND HANDSOMELY PRINTED ON GOOD PAPER.

Edited by CLEMENT K. SHORTER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per Volume.

THE EARLY VOLUMES WILL BE—

1.—GEOFFRY HAMLYN.

* The First Volume contains a Photogravure Portrait of HENRY KINGSLEY, and a Memoir, written by CLEMENT K. SHORTER, and illustrated by Herbert Railton.

2.—RAVENSHOE.

[Just ready.]

[Ready Oct. 25.]

3.—THE HILLYARS and the BURTONS.

[Ready Nov. 26.]

The Publishers believe that the time has arrived for the issue of a Superior Library Edition of the Works of Henry Kingsley, and have great pleasure in announcing this issue, in a form which they trust will recommend itself to every admirer of the Author. It is only of recent years that full justice has been done to Henry Kingsley's genius. Some of the best critics do not hesitate to pronounce Henry Kingsley an even greater novelist than his brother Charles, the famous author of "Westward Ho!" Mr. James Payn said of Charles Kingsley: "As a storyteller he was inferior to his brother. Nothing he ever wrote equalled 'Geoffrey Hamlyn' for vigour and dramatic interest, but while he lived Charles cast Henry in the shade. Now, I think, matters are reversed." In this opinion Mr. Andrew Lang, Mr. Augustus Birrell, and other well-known authors and critics concur.

NEW WORK BY COULSON KERNAHAN.

SORROW and SONG: Psychological Studies in Real Life, and some Criticisms.

By COULSON KERNAHAN, Author of "A Dead Man's Diary," and "A Book of Strange Sins." Crown 8vo, buckram, design in silver, uncut edges, 3s. 6d.

The TIMES says: "By a writer of much originality and insight."

The ATHENÆUM says: "Mr. Coulson Kernahan contributes a tribute to his friend's memory of singular beauty and tenderness, but at the same time full of critical insight."

The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "The Essay by Mr. Kernahan is, as we should expect it to be, a model of sympathetic and discriminating criticism. Exquisitely phrased. This is the criticism which sees its object steadily and sees it whole."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

A SUNLESS HEART. In 2 vols.

M. W. T. STEAD in the REVIEW of REVIEWS writes of "Its intrinsic merit, its originality and its pathos, its distinctively woman's outlook on life, and the singular glow and genius of its author."

The ACADEMY says: "Will inspire exceptional interest, and be made the theme of excited discussion.....Lotus, one of the most impressively sombre creations in modern fiction..... This strange, gloomy, painful, but unmistakably fascinating novel."

The SPECTATOR says: "An exceptionally strong book.....It has genius, imagination, and power, and in the opening story of the brother and sister there are passages of fine pathos and beauty."

A CHARMING STORY BY A NEW WRITER.

SEVEN LITTLE AUSTRALIANS. By Ethel S. Turner. With 26 Illustrations

by A. J. JOHNSON. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "The pictures of their characters and careers seems taken from the life, and for English readers there is a novelty in some of the surroundings of the household which makes the volume eminently readable.....There are not wanting passages of true pathos and some vividly picturesque descriptions of Australian scenery."

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "A capital story charged with incident of a lively and stirring kind, in which children play some interesting parts."

LONDON: WARD, LOCK & BOWDEN, LIMITED, SALISBURY SQUARE, E.C.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER.

ANNIE S. SWAN'S NEW STORY.

The New Story by Annie S. Swan, entitled "A LOST IDEAL," will be published in Edinburgh and London, on MONDAY Next. It will be a handsomely printed volume of nearly 400 pages, price 3s. 6d., cloth extra.

Now ready, fcap. 4to, Art Linen Binding, price 4s. 6d. net.

THE BOOK of the LIFEBOAT.

With a Complete History of the Lifeboat Saturday Movement up to date, numerous Original Illustrations, and thrilling narratives written by eye-witnesses of Shipwrecks and Lifeboat rescues on the coasts of the British Isles. Edited and Arranged by J. C. DISDIN and JOHN AYLING.

"The book is one of absorbing interest."—Queen.

"A veritable nineteenth century book of golden deeds."—Speaker.

NEW EDITIONS OF POPULAR NOVELS.

Linen Fibre Covers, price 1s. 6d. each.

MY DUCATS and MY DAUGHTER. By P. HAY HUNTER (Author of "James Inwick, Ploughman and Elder") and WALTER WHYTE.

THE SANDCLIFF MYSTERY. By Scott GRAHAM, Author of "A Bolt from the Blue."

AFTER TOUCH of WEDDED HANDS. By HANNAH B. MACKENZIE, Author of "Crowned Victor."

SEVENTY TIMES SEVEN. By Adeline SERGEANT, Author of "The Luck of the House."

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

ANY BOOK

Reviewed or Advertised in THE ACADEMY can be obtained post free of Mr. J. F. SPRIGGS, 23, Old Bailey, London, E.C., by forwarding the published price.

HODDER BROTHERS' LIST.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

JOHN MACGREGOR (ROB ROY).

By EDWIN HODDER, Author of "The Life and Work of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury," &c.

With Etched Portrait by H. Manesse, Facsimile Sketches, Plates, and other Illustrations.

"A deeply interesting biography.....will be eagerly welcomed by a very large circle of readers."—Daily News.

EARLY IN OCTOBER.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE WOMEN of SHAKESPEARE.

By LOUIS LEWES, Ph.D.

Translated from the German by HELEN ZIMMERN.

Now ready, demy 8vo, price 14s. at all Libraries and Booksellers.

THE NEW PARTY.

Described by some of its Members (GRANT ALLEN, SARAH GRAND, A. R. WALLACE, WALTER CRANE, R. BLATCHFORD, Lady HENRY SOMERSET, DEAN KITCHIN, Dr. R. HORTON, J. KEIR HARDIE, M.P., W. P. BYLES, M.P., &c.), and Edited by ANDREW REID.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"It contains a number of thoughtful discussions of the most vital topics of our time; it is filled with inspiring suggestions; it positively reeks of independence and courage; it is characterised by the most contagious enthusiasm."

NEW YORK RECORDER.—"One of the most remarkable books, not of the year only, but of the decade."

LONDON: HODDER BROTHERS,
18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

New Series of Historical Handbooks.

THE OXFORD MANUALS OF ENGLISH HISTORY.

Edited by C. W. C. OMAN, M.A., F.S.A., Fellow of All Souls.

In Six Volumes, fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c., 1s. each.

READY ON OCTOBER 1st, No. V.

KING and PARLIAMENT

By G. H. WAKELING, M.A.,
Lecturer on Modern History at Wadham College.

The other Volumes in preparation.

New Series of Modern French Classics.

BLACKIE'S MODERN FRENCH TEXTS.

Edited by FRANCIS STORR, B.A.,
Chief Modern Language Master in Merchant Taylors' School.
Fcap. 8vo Volumes, cloth, with Maps, &c., 1s. each.

NOW READY.

THE LETTERS OF PAUL LOUIS COURIER.

Edited by J. G. ANDERSON, B.A., French Master in Merchant Taylors' School.
Other Volumes in preparation.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1170.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

SOCIAL ENGLAND SERIES.

Edited by KENELM D. COTES, M.A. Oxon.

The following Volumes are already arranged for:—

INTRODUCTION to SOCIAL HISTORY of ENGLAND.
By the Editors.

CHIVALRY. By F. W. Cornish, Vice-Provost of Eton.
TROUBADOURS and COURTS of LOVE. By J. F. ROYVOTHAN.

THE FINE ARTS. By Prof. G. Baldwin Brown.
THE ENGLISH MANOR. By Professor Vinogradoff.
HISTORICAL SKETCH of ENGLISH LAW COURTS. By F. A. Inderwick, Q.C.

EVOLUTION of HOUSEHOLD IMPLEMENTS. By Henry BALFOUR.

Other Volumes by Eminent Writers to be announced shortly.

SIX CENTURIES of WORK and WAGES. By the late J. E. THOROLD ROGERS. A New Edition. 10s. 6d.

SOCIALISM: an Examination of its Nature, its Strength, and its Weakness. By Professor R. T. ELY, F.R.S., LL.D. 6s. "A very useful, interesting and lucid discussion of this thorny subject. A more far-sighted book we never read."—Daily Chronicle.

SOCIAL SCIENCE and SOCIAL SCHEMES. By JAMES MCLELLAND. 3s. 6d.

GERMAN SOCIETY at the CLOSE of the MIDDLE AGES. By E. BELFORT BAX. 5s. "The work is a good and interesting one, and we heartily commend it to all who are interested in his subject."—Daily Chronicle.

SOBER by ACT of PARLIAMENT. By F. A. MCKENZIE. 3s. 6d. "As a summary of drink legislation, and temperance experiment in the past, for those who really desire information it is invaluable, being thorough, in its statistics and comments, impartial to the verge of unnecessary candour."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE GREAT ALTERNATIVE: a Plea for a National Policy. By SPENSER WILKINSON. 7s. 6d. "The lucidity with which the present European situation is reviewed in these pages, and the power and acumen with which all its issues are examined, deserve unqualified praise."—Saturday Review.

THE ENGLISH DEMOCRACY: its Promise and Perils. By ARNOLD WHITE. 7s. 6d. "Contains many suggestive and even penetrating aperçus on the political and social problems of our day."—Times. "Whether one agrees with him or not, one must admire the vigour and epigrammatic points of his jeremiads."—Scotsman.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.
NEW VOLUMES. Each 2s. 6d.

(1.) POPULATION and the SOCIAL SYSTEM. By Dr. F. S. NITTE. "A very valuable work of a well-known Italian economist."—Westminster Review.

(2.) THE LABOUR QUESTION: an Epitome of the Evidence and Report of the Royal Commission on Labour. By T. G. BRYCES, B.A., Ptecis-Writer to the Commission. "Will be found extremely useful by many people who are unable to grapple with the voluminous reports."—Times.

(3.) BRITISH FREEWOMEN. By Charlotte C. Stopes. "A spirited vindication of the political rights of women, treated historically and constitutionally, and the legal, political and economic aspects are not neglected."—Westminster Review.

(4.) SUICIDE and INSANITY. By J. K. STRAHAN, M.D. Second Edition. "He has marshalled an array of statistics, which goes far towards establishing his contention, that the greater part of the increase of suicide is due to hereditary transmission."—Economic Review.

MR. PINKERTON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE FRENCH PRISONER: a Story of Dartmoor and the Western Seas. By THOMAS A. PINKERTON, Author of "John Newbold's Ordeal," &c. 6s.

THE MEMBER for WORKSHIRE; or, Church and State: a Novel. By THOMAS ASPDEN. 6s.

GEORGE ROMNEY and his ART. By HILDA GAMLIN, Author of "Emma, Lady Hamilton," with Photogravures, Collotype, and other Illustrations. [In October.]

DIARY of a CAVALRY OFFICER in the PENINSULAR and WATERLOO CAMPAIGNS. By the late Lieut.-Col. TOMKINSON, of the 16th Dragoons. Edited by his Son JAMES TOMKINSON, J.P., of Tarporley. Second Edition, Revised, with 5 Maps and 3 Etched Plates, 8vo, 7s. 6d. "A delightful book. It is a thousand pities it was not published long ago; for it is one of the works that go to the making of history."—Daily Chronicle. "Of the greatest interest. Excellent reproductions add to the charm of the book, which from cover to cover is full of good reading."—St. James's. "The unpretending work of a modest man and a good soldier."—Times. "Just the kind of material the historian rejoices to possess. Gives us a better idea of the daily life under Wellington's command than any man's book could afford."—Liverpool Post.

A COMPARATIVE STUDY of SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS. PRIMITIVE CIVILISATIONS. By E. J. SIMCOX, Author of "Natural Law," &c. 2 vols., large 8vo, 32s. "To examine so comprehensive a work in any detail is quite impossible in the space at our disposal; but we may say that it is a contribution to economical and social history of exceptional value and importance, which displays much patient and laborious research, keen insight, and rare powers of interpretation and generalisation."—Times.

RECORDS of the HOLE CRAFT and FELLOWSHIP of MASONS. With a Chronicle of the History of the worshipful Company of Masons of the City of London. By EDWARD CONDER, Jun., Master of the Company. Facsimiles and Illustrations. 4to, 21s. net.

LIFE and LETTERS of JAMES MACPIERSON. By BAILEY SAUNDERS. Containing a particular Account of Macpherson's Famous Quarrel with Dr. Johnson. Engraved Portrait, 8vo, 7s. 6d. "Mr. Bailey Saunders may be congratulated on the honesty of purpose pervading his work from end to end, for diligent research, and for the satisfactory results which do ample justice to Macpherson and his Ossian."—Morning Post.

MR. PICKET PIN and his FRIENDS. By PRICE COLLIER. Illustrated, 3s. 6d. "Knowledge and good sense and a pleasant humour characterise the book."—Saturday Review. "A delightful little book, full of fun, on the American Indian as he is after civilisation, whisky, bayonets, Indian agents and white men's greed have nearly done with and for him."—Daily Chronicle.

WOODSIDE, BURNSIDE, HILLSIDE, and MARSH. By J. W. TUTT, F.R.S. Fully Illustrated, 2s. 6d. "A book of varied charm and interest, admirably vivacious. Mr. Tutt is an excellent observer of nature, and writes in a style that is pleasing and unpretentious."—Saturday Review. "Exactly what is required to enable birds, moths, and flowers to be identified and, still better, to be understood. It is a pleasure to commend it."—Academy.

ON EXPRESSION in NATURE. By WILLIAM MAIN, M.D. 3s. 6d. "A very charming and very original treatise, highly suggestive and instructive from beginning to end."—National Observer.

RAINMAKING and SUNSHINE. By JOHN COLLINSON. 3s. 6d.

MORAVIAN and SILESIAN MINERS. By Dr. BENNO KARPELES. 4to, 7s. 6d.

CHEAP EDITION, 3s. 6d.,

OF

THE WAGES OF SIN.

BY

LUCAS MALET.

CHEAP EDITION, 3s. 6d.

SCHOOL EDITION OF SEYFFERT.

DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES. Edited by the late Prof. H. NETTLESHIP and Dr. J. E. SANDYS. School Edition, Revised. With all the Illustrations. 10s. 6d.

COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR of GERMAN and ENGLISH. By Professor VICTOR HENRY. English Edition, by the Author himself. 7s. 6d.

STUDENTS' ANGLO-SAXON DICTIONARY. By J. R. CLARK HALL, M.A., Ph.D. 4to (treble columns), 15s.

PROGRESS in LANGUAGE, with Special Reference to English. By Professor OTTO JESPERSEN (written in English). 7s. 6d.

PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES.—New Vol.

GREEK SYNTAX. By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. Oxon. 2s. 6d.; or, with the "Accidence," in 1 vol., 4s. 6d.

STUDENT'S TEXT-BOOK of BOTANY. By S. H. VINES, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S. Part I. With 279 Illustrations. 8vo, 7s. 6d. (Part II., completing the work in January, 1895.)

LECTURES on HUMAN and ANIMAL PSYCHOLOGY. By Professor W. WUNDT. Translated by Profs. CREIGHTON and TITCHENER. Cuts. 8vo, 15s.

LIBRARY of PHILOSOPHY.
NEW VOLUMES.

(1.) NATURAL RIGHTS. By D. G. Ritchie, M.A., Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of St. Andrews. 10s. 6d.

(2.) LOGIC. By Professor C. Sigwart (Tubingen). Translated by HELEN DENDY. 2 vols., 21s.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY. By Dr. ZIEHEN. Edited by Dr. OTTO BEYER and C. C. VAN LIEW. Second Edition, Revised and increased. Cuts. 6s.

SECONDARY EDUCATION in AMERICA.

(1.) TRAINING of TEACHERS... Amy Bramwell and H. M. Hughes. 3s. 6d.

(2.) METHODS of TEACHING... Alice Zimmern. 3s. 6d.

(3.) EDUCATION of GIRLS... Sara A. Burstall. 3s. 6d.

(4.) GRADED SCHOOLS... Mary H. Page. 2s.

PANTA RYE: a Prelude. By "Eremus" and Another. 6s. "A really remarkable book and quite a curiosity in fiction.....A medley of social satire, startling adventure, and whimsical observations.....always bright and often really witty."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LAURA ARBUTHNOT. By John MEREDITH. 6s. "There is no doubt as to the power displayed in this story, although it is of the painful up-to-date kind."—Spectator. "A cleverly written sketch of the sort of fate which awaits a woman in an unhappy past who chooses to marry a womanist just the wish of all his friends and relatives."—Daily Telegraph.

A QUESTION of CASUISTRY: a Dialogue and a Denouement. By ALEC MAC HEILD. 3s. 6d. "Unquestionably an entertaining and clever story."—Scotsman. "There is an unusual amount of smart and clever writing in it."—Literary World.

A WOMAN'S VERSION of the "KREUTZER SONATA." WHOSE WAS the BLAME? By Mrs. JAMES GREGOR. With a Prologue from the Russian of Prince GALITSKY. 3s. 6d. "There is a note of quiet sincerity in the sad autobiography."—Literary World.

MARGARET DUNMORE; or, a Socialist Home. By JANE H. CLAPPERTON, Author of "Scientific Meliorism." Second Edition. 1s.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| TWO BOOKS ON RELIGIOUS HISTORY, by A. W. BENN | 247 |
| THREE VOLUMES OF POETRY, by LIONEL JOHNSON | 248 |
| Prof. DOUGLAS'S SOCIETY IN CHINA, by the Rev. C. J. BALL | 250 |
| M. LAVIETTE'S FREDERICO THE GREAT, by Prof. MORSE STEPHENS | 250 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN | 251 |
| CURRENT LITERATURE | 252 |
| BOOKS OF TRAVEL | 253 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 253 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 254 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "SUMMER SONNETS FROM MY GARDEN," by Mrs. FRELIGHATH-KROEGER | 254 |
| MAOZINES AND REVIEWS | 255 |
| MR. ELWIN MATTHEWS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 255 |
| MESSESS. FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 255 |
| MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 255 |
| MESSESS. DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 255 |
| MESSESS. BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 255 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 256 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Septuagint versus the Hebrew Text of the Old Testament , viii., by Sir H. H. Howorth; The Fethard and Carew Stones , by E. W. B. Nicholson; "La Mesnie Hollequin," by Paget Toynbee; The Russian Name for a Betrothed Woman , by H. Krebs | 256 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 258 |
| TYRRELL & PURSER'S CORRESPONDENCE OF CICERO, by Prof. WILKINS | 258 |
| PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS | 258 |
| OBITUARY: WILLIAM TOPLEY | 259 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Prof. Jensen on the Hittite Inscriptions , by Prof. SAYCE | 259 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 260 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 260 |
| FERGUSON'S HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE, by REINALD HUGHES | 260 |
| INDIAN JOTTINGS | 261 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 262 |
| THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 262 |
| MUSIC NOTES | 263 |

ARTIST and WIFE, well known, experienced travellers, wish for several AMATEURS (or others) to join them. Leave England end October for Riviera. Terms by arrangement. References exchanged.—CANNES, "ACADEMY" Office, 27, Chancery Lane.

THACKERAY'S WORKS for SALE, First Editions, cheap.—ESMOND, 3 vols., 3 final cloth, clean, 1852.—VANITY FAIR, Half-bound, 1848.—P. DENNIS, vols., 1849.—HARRIS, Brunswick Terrace, Stafford

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE CO., Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

ORIENTAL WORKS.

MESSESS. LUZAC & CO. have a large Stock of ORIENTAL WORKS, and can supply them, if not in stock, quickly and at moderate prices.

LUZAC & CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.
Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly. Annual Subscription (post free), 3s.
*The ACADEMY, Feb. 4, 1893, writes: "Messrs. Luzac & Co.'s Oriental List . . . deserves the support of Oriental students. . . . It gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere."
Vol. V., Nos. VIII. and IX. (August and September, 1894), just out. A few copies of Vols. I. to IV. are still to be had (half-bound, with full Authors' Index, &c.) at 5s. net each volume.
Lists and Catalogues of Oriental Works to be had on application.
LUZAC & CO., Publishers to the India Office, 46, Great Russell Street (opposite the British Museum), London, W.C.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART.

ROYAL COLLEGE of SCIENCE,
STEPHEN'S GREEN, EAST, DUBLIN.

SESSIONS 1894-95.

The Royal College of Science supplies Courses of Instruction in the Sciences applicable to the Industrial Arts, especially those which may be classed broadly under the heads CHEMICAL MANUFACTURES, ENGINEERING, and MINING.

A Diploma of Associate of the College (A.R.C. Sc., I.) is granted at the end of Three Years' Course, the required conditions being complied with.

Four Royal Scholarships, of the value of £50 yearly each, with free admission to the Lectures and Laboratories, are attached to the College. Two are offered for competition each year to associate students not being Royal Exhibitioners, on completion of their first year's course.

The Fees payable for Non-Associate Students are—£2 for each separate Course of Lectures; £3 for Session—Pure Mathematics, 1st year, £2 for term, do, do.

For ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month; £3 for Three Months; £9 for Six Months; £12 for the Entire Session.

For PHYSICAL LABORATORY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month; £4 per Month (for 6 hours a day); or £6 for the Session (one hour per day), £12 for the Entire Session.

For ASSAYING.—£5 for the Three Months; £9 for Six Months; £12 for the Entire Session.

For ZOOLOGICAL LABORATORY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month; £3 for 1st Medical or 2nd Arts Course Royal University of Ireland; or £5 for a Special Course of Three Months.

For BOTANICAL LABORATORY.—Same as Zoological Laboratory.

For GEOLOGICAL LABORATORY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month.

For DRAWING SCHOOL.—£5 for the Session; £3 for One Term.

The Chemical, Physical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories and the Drawing School are open daily for practical instruction, and the Geological Laboratory is open for Non-Associate Students at hours to be arranged with the Professor.

| | |
|---|---|
| Applied Mathematics and Mechanism | Professor W. McF. ORR, M.A. |
| Descriptive Geometry, Drawing, Engineering, and Surveying | Professor JAS. LYON, M.A. |
| Chemistry (Theoretical and Practical) and Metallurgy | Professor W. N. HARTLEY, F.R.S., F.C.S., F.R.S.E., Dean of Faculty for the Session. |
| Physics (Theoretical and Practical) | Professor W. F. BARRITT, F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A. |
| Geology | Professor G. A. J. COLE, F.G.S., R.I.A. |
| Mining and Mineralogy | Professor J. P. O'REILLY, C.E., M.R.I.A. |
| Botany | Professor T. JOHNSON, D.Sc., F.L.S. |
| Zoology | Professor A. C. HANCOCK, M.A., F.R.S., M.R.I.A. |

The Courses of Chemistry, Physics, Botany, Zoology, Geology, and Mineralogy are recognised by the Royal University of Ireland, and Certificates of Attendance are granted to Medical and other Students attending the Courses, and the Chemical, Physical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories.

Programmes may be obtained on application at the College, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal College of Science, Stephen's Green, Dublin.

The First Term of the Session will commence on MONDAY, the 1st October, 1894.

NOTE.—Intending Associate Students will be required to pass an Entrance Examination in Elementary Mathematics and Elementary Physical Science, as indicated on Page 5 Programme, copies of which may be had on application from the Secretary.

Professor J. P. O'REILLY, Secretary.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

(Under the Patronage of H.R.H. the PRINCESS OF WALES.)
No. 13, Kensington Square (close to High Street, Kensington, Station).

In this department Lectures are given to ladies in the various subjects of a University education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College.

The Lectures are adapted to ladies above the age of 16. Besides the usual Lectures Special Courses will be given as follows:—

MISS JANE HARRISON on "THE PARTHENON MARBLES." Mrs. TIRARD on "LIFE IN ANCIENT EGYPT."

Courses of Lectures will be arranged, if desired, for students preparing for the Examinations of the University of London.

On October 13, at 2 p.m., the INAUGURAL ADDRESS will be delivered by the Rev. G. F. BROWNE, Canon of St. Paul's, to which all students and their friends are invited.

The MICHAELMAS TERM BEGINS ON OCTOBER 15. All Lectures are held at 13, Kensington Square.

For a prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss L. M. FAIRFELL, at the above address. In return for four stamps a complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY.

LECTURER IN METALLURGY.

APPLICATIONS are invited for the above POSITION. Salary £400 per annum. Duties to commence on March 4th, 1895. £60 allowed for passage money.

Further particulars can be obtained from Sir SAIL SAMUEL, K.C.M.G., C.B., Agent-General for New South Wales, 9, Victoria Street, London S.W., to whom applications, stating age, and accompanied by two copies of testimonials, should be sent not later than 13th October, 1894.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £20; Sturt Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLE-

MEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 48, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W. References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. G. Goschen, M.P., and Mr. Goschen; John Usher, Esq., of Norton, Middlewich; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgway, 36, Porchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

TO MEDALISTS and Others.—The CORPORATION of the CITY of LONDON INVITES DESIGNS (models not drawings) for a MEDAL to be struck in COMMEMORATION of the opening of the TOWER BRIDGE by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, K.G., on behalf of her most Gracious Majesty the Queen, on the 30th June last.

The medal to be three inches in diameter.

Premiums of 35 guineas for the first selected model and 15 guineas for the second selected model will be paid.

The selected models to be the property of the Corporation. Each design must bear a distinguishing word or motto, and be sent in not later than noon of Monday, 12th November next, and be addressed to the City Comptroller, Guildhall.

Guildhall, 2nd October, 1894.

JOHN A. BRAND, Comptroller.

MESSRS. HODGSON beg to announce the following ARRANGEMENT of SALES by AUCTION at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C. at 1 o'clock each day:—

On MONDAY, OCTOBER 8, and Four Following Days.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including the Scientific and General Library of the late H. GOTHELD, Esq., for many years Curator of the Borough of Cambridge (by order of the Executors), comprising Paleogeographical Society's Publications, 3 vols.—Renouf's Book of the Dead—Layard's Nineveh, 2 vols., folio—S. Augustini Opera, 10 vols.—Richardson's Monastic Ruins, 2 vols.—Cuthbert's Wanderings—Old Feudal Castles, arranged in 4 vols.—Gaily Knight's Architecture of Italy, 2 vols.—Hogarth's Works, by Heath—Vanity Fair, 38 vols.—Brough's Sir John Falstaff—Egan's Boxiana, 4 vols.—Walpole's George III., Letters and Journals, 14 vols.—Froude's England, 12 vols.—Herculaneum et Pompei, 8 vols.—Spalding Club Books, 30 vols.—Kilmiscott Press Publications, 3 vols.—Original Editions of Dickens's Novels, Modern Poetry and the Drama—Voyages and Travels, &c.

On MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, and Four Following Days.

The valuable and extensive MISCELLANEOUS LIBRARY of the late W. WHITTAKER, Esq., of Cranbrook House, Huddersfield, including Owen Jones's Alhambra, 2 vols., Large Paper—Robert's Holy Land, 3 vols.—Bowyer's Hume, 10 vols.—Claude's Liber Veritatis, 3 vols.—Marbrough Gems, 2 vols.—Cotman's Etchings, 2 vols.—Ormerod's Cheshire, 3 vols.—Allen's Great Cathedral, 2 vols.—Pennythorne's Geometry of Ancient Architecture—Muir, Vases Antiques, 2 vols.—Richardson's Old English Mansions, 4 vols.—Wickes's Spires and Towers, 3 vols.—Selected Pictures, 4 vols.—Warrington's Stained Glass—Divers Works of the Early Masters, 2 vols.—Millington's Ancient Monuments—Castles and Mansions of the Bishops, 4 vols.—Ackermann's Mansions of Lancaster and Chester, 5 vols.—Kings's Monumenta Antiqua, 4 vols.—Rogers's Italy, Largest Paper—Scots of Vanity Fair, Sporting, and Dramatic News, Art Journal, &c.—Meyrick's Antient Armour, 2 vols.—Scottish Antiquaries' Proceedings, 17 vols., and others relating to Scotland—Illustrated Books on Art and Architecture, Dress and Decoration, Antiquities and Topography, Historical and Theological Works—Publications of the Learned Societies.

On TUESDAY, OCTOBER 23, and Following Days.

MANY THOUSAND VOLUMES of MODERN PUBLICATIONS, in Cloth and Quires (by order of several Eminent Publishing Houses), comprising 50 Liguard's England, 10 vols., Library edition—38 Jeremy Taylor's Works, 10 vols., last edition—150 Christie's Book of Revelation, and 500 Controversy of Zion—315 Hornby's Gleanings from the New Testament, 2 vols.—330 Nichol's Political Life, 2 vols.—185 Gerard's Life and beyond the River, 2 vols.—96 Lady Hamilton, by Hilda Gamlin, 4to—150 Spenser's Shepherds Calendar, 4to—140 Sidney's Arcadia, 4to (21s.)—259 Wordsworth's Prose Works, 3 vols.—11 Lytton's Novels, edition de luxe, 32 vols. (116 11s.)—10 Lever's Novels, 9 vols. (43 7s. 6d.)—17 Rider Haggard's Allan's Wife, Large Paper—150 Egan's Life of an Actor, royal 8vo—78 Jago Exposition, English Edition—83 Macquarrie's New Zealand Alps, royal 8vo—30 Ruskin's New Zealand, 3 vols.—110 Lowe's Beautifully-illustrated Plants (21s.)—50 Greene's Parrots in Captivity, 3 vols.—25 Houghton's Fishes, Imperial 4to. The smaller numbers consist of Audsley & Bowes's Ceramic Art of Japan, 2 vols. (42s.)—Ruskin's Modern Painters, 5 vols., and Stones of Venice, 2 vols.—Tennyson and his Friends (42 6s.)—Dante, by Stradano (55 6s.)—and other attractive Modern Books. Also the Copper-Plates of Snelling's Coinage, 4to—Westwood's Paleogeographia Sacra—Strutt's Regal Antiquities, &c., 2 vols.—Pugin's Works, 5 vols.—Claude's Liber Veritatis, 3 vols., &c.

May be viewed two days prior to Sale, and Catalogues forwarded (when ready) on application.

MODERN PICTURES.—Important

PUBLIC SALES of the celebrated collection WILHELM HARTOG, with prominent works by Van Beers, Brown, Castres, Delobbe, VAN MARCKE, Ch. Meissonier, Struys, Verboeckhoven, Ziem, Artz, Bisschop, Bles, Bosboom, ISRAËLS, Maris, Mesdag, Neuhuys, Verschuor, &c., at

AMSTERDAM, the 23rd OCTOBER, 1894.

Illustrated Catalogue (4s.) with MR. BESSOD, VALADON & CO., Bond Street, 1867; H. KÖRBER, 100, C. Piccadilly, 72; or through the DIRECTORS of the SALES, C. F. ROOS & CO., BRAKKE-GROND, AMSTERDAM.

To follow at same date and place:—The Sale of the Gerard A. Heineken Collection of Modern Drawings and Water-Colours.

THE BEST and CHEAPEST GERMAN GRAMMAR FOR SCHOOLS and COLLEGES.

NEW EDITION READY IN A FEW DAYS.

MEISSNER (MATTHIAS).—A NEW PRACTICAL and EASY METHOD of LEARNING the GERMAN LANGUAGE.

Twenty-third Edition, Entirely Revised, price 2s. 6d.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"How to learn languages? The solution of this problem can be nowhere better found than in the new and improved system of learning languages by M. Meissner."

British Journal of Commerce.

"Is certainly one of the best books on the subject in our language."—Gentleman of Commerce.

NOTE.—Bona fide teachers who wish to examine this excellent grammar with a view of introducing it into their schools, will receive a free copy on application to

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

GERMAN BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON, W.C.

EDINBURGH.—SUPERIOR BOARD

offered for STUDENT in professional gentleman's family; large house; good locality. Highest references.—No. 593, Robertson & Scott, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

THE UNDERSIGNED, Lecturer in the University of Marburg, RECEIVES as BOARDERS Gentlemen who wish to attend the University or to study German and other languages. Pupils prepared for Examinations—University, Army, &c.—Address, Schwanallee 4, Marburg i. H., Germany. W. TILLEY.

GERMANY.—HALLE (near Leipzig).—

HOME OFFERED to ONE or TWO LADIES wishing to study or see German life, by Daughter of late Prof. Karl Elze, Chaperon. Advantages in Music, Painting, and Literature. Moderate terms. References: Miss Toulmin Smith, Highgate, London, N.; Dr. L. Proescholdt, Friedrichsdorf, Homburg-Taunus. Exchange desired.—Address FRAUEN I. ELZE, 2, Bernburger-str., Halle-a-S.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Masters may send their pupils to be examined and gain experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

S. R. CROCKETT'S NEW WORK.

THE LILAC SUNBONNET.

By S. R. CROCKETT,

Author of "The Raiders," &c. Cloth, gilt top, 6s. At all Booksellers.

* * The First Edition of 10,000 Copies having been exhausted on the day of publication, a SECOND EDITION is now in the press and will shortly be ready.

FIRST REVIEW.

"A charming love-story, bright, tender, and vivacious, marked by distinction of treatment, and steeped in the sweetness and freshness of the open air."—Daily News.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

VENICE. By the Hon. Alethea Wiel.

Profusely Illustrated, and furnished with Maps and Index. Cloth, 6s.

"This interesting work."—Daily Telegraph.

"Shows great industry and research."—Observer.

SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION.

ANNIE BESANT: an Autobiography.

With Illustrations. Large Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

W. E. GLADSTONE, speaking of this work in the September number of the Nineteenth Century, says: "This volume presents to us an object of considerable interest, it inspires sympathy with the writer, not only as a person highly gifted, but as a seeker after truth."

THE NEW "PSEUDONYM."

A HUSBAND of NO IMPORTANCE.

By RITA. 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"As daring as it is fascinating."—Newcastle Journal.

"A brightly-written little story."—Glasgow Herald.

THE NEW "AUTONYM."

BY REEF and PALM. By Louis Becke.

With Preface by the EARL of PEMBROKE. 24mo paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE REFORMER'S BOOKSHELF."

TITLED CORRUPTION: the Sordid

Origin of some Irish Peorages. By J. G. SWIFT MACNEILL, M.P., M.A. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

"It is almost too painful an argument for the repeal of the Union."—Daily Chronicle (leader)

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' LIST.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

Edited by E. ABBOTT, M.A.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.; Roxburgh, 6s.

CICERO, and the FALL of the ROMAN

REPUBLIC. By J. L. STRACHAN-DAVIDSON, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. With Maps and Illustrations. [Ready.]

HENRY the NAVIGATOR, the Hero of Portugal and of Modern Discovery. By C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. [November.]

Already Issued.

NELSON. By W. Clark RUSSELL. THEODORIC. By Thomas HODGKIN, D.C.L.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS. By C. R. L. FLETCHER, M.A. SIR PHILIP SIDNEY. By H. R. FOX-BOURNE.

PERICLES. By Evelyn ABBOTT, M.A. JULIUS CAESAR. By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A.

JOHN WYCLIF. By Lewis SERGEANT. NAPOLEON. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS.

HENRY of NAVARRE and the HUGUENOTS in FRANCE. By P. F. WILLETT, M.A., Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford.

OLIVER CROMWELL: a History. Comprising a Narrative of his Life, with Extracts from his Letters and Speeches, and an Account of the Political, Religious, and Military Affairs of England during his Time. By SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH. With Portrait and Plans of Marston Moor and Naseby. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

LEROY-BEAULIEU'S The EMPIRE of the TSARS and the RUSSIANS. Translated from the French by Z. A. RAGOZIN, Author of "The Story of Assyria," "The Story of Chaldea," &c. 3 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 12s. 6d. a vol.

Vol. I. THE COUNTRY and its INHABITANTS.

Vol. II. THE INSTITUTIONS.

TWENTY-SIXTH THOUSAND.

7,000 WORDS OFTEN MISPRONOUNCED.

A Guide to Correct Pronunciation. Carefully Revised, with a Supplement of 1,400 words. 16mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW CATALOGUE ON APPLICATION.

21, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

Messrs. Bell's New and Forthcoming Works.

ALBERT MOORE: his Life and Works.

By A. LYS BALDRY.

Illustrated with 10 Photogravures and about 70 other Illustrations. Super-royal 4to, £3 3s. Also 50 copies on Large Paper, with the Plates in duplicate, printed on India paper and on Japanese Vellum, £5 5s. net. [Ready in November.]

RAPHAEL'S MADONNAS and other

Great Pictures. Reproduced from the Original Paintings. With a Life of Raphael, and an Account of his Chief Works. By KARL KAROLY, Author of "A Guide to the Paintings of Florence."

In One Volume, with 53 Illustrations, including 9 Photogravures. Small Columbian 8vo, in special binding designed by Gleeson White, 21s. net. A few copies on Large Paper, with the Plates on India Paper, £2 2s. net (all sold). [Ready.]

JOHN RUSSELL, R.A., "The Prince of Crayon Portrait Painters." By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, D.Litt. With an Introduction by Lord RONALD GOWER, F.R.S.

With 101 Illustrations. Small Columbian 8vo, handsomely bound, 250 copies only, 25s. net. Large Paper Edition, 100 copies only, £2 2s. net. [Next Week.]

SIR EDWARD BURNE-JONES, Bart.:

a Record and Review. By MALCOLM BELL.

Third Edition, in special binding designed by Gleeson White. Small Columbian 8vo, 21s. net. [Ready.]

THE BRITISH FLEET: the Growth,

Achievements, and Duties of the Navy of the Empire. By Commander CHARLES N. ROBINSON, R.N.

With about 150 reproductions of Paintings, Prints and Drawings illustrative of Battles, Ships, Persons, Customs, and Social Life in the Navy. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the DUKE of YORK.

Ordinary Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. 150 copies in fcap. 4to, with extra Engravings, 21s. net.

AMYGDALA: a Tale of the Greek Revolution. By Mrs. EDMONDS. With cover designed by Gleeson White. Small fcap. 8vo 6d. net.

"'Amygdala' is a pure and touching story of love and patriotism."—Athenaeum.

"The person who finds 'Amygdala' dull must have spoiled the delicacy of his palate by literary condiments.....the book is good all through."—Daily Chronicle.

"The book, as a whole, is ably written, and deserves to be widely read."—Scotsman.

EROS and PSYCHE: a Poem in Twelve

Measures. By ROBERT BRIDGES.

Second Edition, thoroughly Revised. Printed on Hand-made Paper at the Chiswick Press, with binding designed by Gleeson White. [Immediately.]

A SERVICE of ANGELS. By the

Rev. H. LATHAM, M.A., Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, Author of "Pastorale Pastorum."

A STUDY of the ARGONAUTICA of VALERIUS FLACCUS. By WALTER C. SUMMERS, B.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

HANDBOOKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Edited by J. W. HALES, M.A.,

Late Clark Lecturer in English Literature at Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of English Literature at King's College, London.

* * It is proposed in this series to deal with the chief epochs of English Literature in separate volumes of moderate length, but in such a manner that, taken together, they will ultimately form a consecutive history. Though designed mainly for the use of students, it will be the aim of the writers to adapt the volumes in style, no less than in subject matter, for all readers who have an interest in English Literature. Several volumes are in preparation, and a Prospectus will be sent on application.

The following Volume is now ready, small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE AGE of POPE. By John Dennis, Author of "Studies in English Literature," &c.

NEW VOLUME OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SERIES.

PLATO.—GORGIAS. Edited, with

Introduction and Notes, by the late W. H. THOMPSON, D.D., Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. A New Edition. 6s.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

CAMBRIDGE: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE FATAL CARD. Messrs. William Terriss, Murray, Carson, Charles Fulton, W. L. Abington, Richard Purdon, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Vane, Laura Linden, Sophie Larkin, and Miss Millward.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE NEW WOMAN. Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. J. G. Graham, Mr. Wykes, Mr. Champion, Mr. Byron; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Alma Murray, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Gertrude Warden, Miss Rickards, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE CASE OF REBELLIOUS SUSAN. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Mr. Kemble, Mr. Fredk. Kerr, Mr. C. P. Little, Mr. Ben Webster, Mr. E. Dagnall; Miss Fanny Coleman, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Nina Boucicault, and Miss Mary Moore.

DALY'S THEATRE. LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffie, Eric Lewis, Geo. Grossmith, jun., Lawrence D'Orsay, Farren-Sontar, E. Somerville, Gilbert Porteous, Charles Eaton, and Rutland Barrington; Misses Kate Cutler, Nellie Malone, Marie Stodhome, Louise Pounda, Kate Hodaan, Violet Robinson, Nina Martino, and Lottie Venne.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir Augustus Harris.
TO-NIGHT, at 7.30, THE DERBY WINNER. Mrs. John Wood, Misses Beatrice Lamb, Alma Stanley, Pattie Browne, Evelyn Hughes, L. Moodie, Hettie Dens; Messrs. Arthur Boucher, George Giddens, Lionel Rignold, Harry Eversfield, Charles Dalton, East, Lawford, Harding, and Charles Cartwright.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. John Hare.
MR. WILLARD'S SEASON.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE PROFESSOR'S LOVE STORY.
MATINEES SATURDAY and WEDNESDAY NEXT, at 2.30.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves, Nina Boucicault, and S. IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE QUEEN OF BRILLIANTS. Messrs. Hubert Wilke, Arthur Williams, W. H. Denny, John Le Hay, Avon Saxon, Owen Westford, Fred Wright, jun., Compton Coutts, Geo. Honey, and Fred Storey; Madame Amadi, Miss Lizzie Ruggles, Miss Annie Meyers, Mesdames Leonard, Burle, Leigh, Comyns, and Miss Lillian Russell.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS (New Edition). Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, Thompson, W. S. Laidlaw, H. Gregory; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Maud Holland, M. Love, A. Newton, E. Greville, D. Thorne, F. Wilson, V. Cassell, M. Marsden, and Florence St. John, &c. At 7.15, THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

OPERA COMIQUE.

GERMAN PLAYS.—THIS EVENING, at 8.0, VEILCHENFRESSER, celebrated Comedy in Four Acts, by G. v. Moser. Misses Eleonor von Driller, Anna Hocke, Milli Elsing, Lily Arndt, Frau Dr. Reinhold-Themann; Messrs. Cesar Beck, Max Weilenbeck, Heinrich Kamm, Siegfried Philipp, Albert Schmidt, Ludwig Schubarth, &c.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Proprietress, Mrs. Harriet Gooch.
THIS EVENING, at 8.0, ODETTE. Mrs. Anna Ruppert, and Mr. Charles Warner will be assisted by the following: Messrs. Bernard Gould, Herbert Flemming, Paul Berton, Rothbury Evans, S. Lascelles, E. Howard, C. F. Lander, G. Tompkins, and Roscoe. Mesdames Marie Cecil, Ettie Williams, B. Sheridan, W. L. Abington, B. M. de Solla, E. Valmard, E. Dupre, Doreen Dennis, and Earlin.

PRINCE OF WALES THEATRE.

MR. ARTHUR ROBERTS'S SEASON.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CLAUDE DUVAL. Messrs. Eric Thorne, Fitzroy Morgan, H. O. Clarey, E. Stevens, and Mr. Arthur Roberts. Misses A. Liddon, E. Ellerslie, N. Arline, Thornhill, L. Norman, I. Young, F. Schubert, G. Edwards, M. Crichton, A. Peppiatt, M. Burdell, and Miss Marie Halton.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, OUR FLAT. Misses Georgie Esmond, Annie Goward, May Edouin, Annie Esmond, Grace Lane, F. Loveridge; Messrs. C. Fawcett, H. Ross, E. Hendrie, E. Silward, Cecil Paget, D. Gordon, and Willie Edouin. At 8, PARALLEL ATTACKS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE FOUNDLING. Messrs. Charles Groves, Sydney Brough, Huntley Wright, Oswald Yorke, George Warde, Stanley Kennis; Misses Ellis Jeffreys, Emmeline Orford, Susie Vaughan, Lizzie Webster, Gwynne Herbert, Minnie Cliford, Fauny Erris. At 8.15, THEN FLOWERS GREW FAIRER.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Messrs. Arthur Helmore, J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, T. Kingston, J. L. Mackay; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer, A. Beet. Preceded, at 8.15, by LOYAL.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CON-

CEPTS.—The THIRTY-NINTH ANNUAL SERIES of these world-famous Concerts will COMMENCE on OCTOBER 12th, at 3. Numbered Stall Tickets (transferable) for the Twenty Concerts, Three Guineas, inclusive of Admission to the Crystal Palace on dates of Concerts, and Two Guineas exclusive of Admission to Palace.—Prospectus post free on application to the MANAGER, Crystal Palace, S.E.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S

ENTERTAINMENT (under the Management of Mr. ALFRED GERMAN REED and Mr. CORNEY GRAIN) will REOPEN for the AUTUMN SEASON on MONDAY NIGHT, October 8th, with MISSING, by Somerville Gibeby. Music by King Hall. Mr. Corney Grain's latest Musical Sketch, BOND STREET, 4 p.m., and WALLS HAVE EARS. Booking Office now open, from 11 to 6. ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham-place.

A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

From the Earliest Period to the End of 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 320 pages, price 3s. 6d. net.

Globe.—"Is unquestionably useful."

Morning Post.—"Will be of considerable value."

Manchester Courier.—"An invaluable storehouse of facts."

Newcastle Chronicle.—"The Guide may be recommended to librarians as well as to readers of fiction."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net. With Portrait.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR

FOR THE SESSION 1894-95.

MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CORNISH, Manchester.

1 vol., cloth, 124 pp., 2s. 6d.

THE BRITISH NATION: and the ANTS,

an Allegory.

"Quiet satire and shrewd observation."—Scotsman.

A. ALLAN, 33, Lorne Street, Leith.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

BLACKIE & SON'S
NEW BOOKS.

The NATURAL HISTORY of PLANTS.

From the German of ANTON KERNER von MARILAU, Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna. By F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc., Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London. With about 1,000 Original Woodcut Illustrations, and 16 Coloured Plates. To be completed in 16 Monthly Parts at 2s. 6d. each net, and in 4 Half-Vols., cloth, at 12s. 6d. each net. Now ready: Parts I. to VI., and Half-Vol. I.

BLACKIE'S SCHOOL and HOME
LIBRARY.

A selection of the best and most interesting books, carefully edited to render them suitable for young readers, cloth, 1s. 4d. each. New VOLUMES:

Deerslayer. By J. FENNIMORE COOPER.

Parry's Third Voyage.

Other volumes in preparation.

THE OXFORD MANUALS of ENGLISH HISTORY.

KING and PARLIAMENT;

A.D. 1603-1714. By G. H. WAKELING, M.A., Lecturer in History at Wadham College. Cloth, 1s.

Other volumes in preparation.

BLACKIE'S MODERN FRENCH TEXTS.

THE LETTERS of PAUL LOUIS

COURIER. Edited by J. G. ANDERSON, B.A., French

Master in Merchant Taylors' School. Cloth, 1s.

Other volumes in preparation.

CÆSAR'S INVASIONS of BRITAIN.

Parts of Books IV. and V. of the Gallic War. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, English Exercises, and Vocabulary, by JOHN BROWN, B.A., formerly Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. With Map. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

HORACE.—THE HISTORICAL and POLITICAL ODES. Edited, with Introduction and

Notes, by the Rev. A. J. CHURCH, M.A., sometime

Professor of Latin at University College, London.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

READINGS from CARLYLE: a

Selection of Representative Extracts from the Works of Thomas Carlyle. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by W. KEITH LEASK, M.A., late Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

DESCHANEL'S NATURAL PHILO-

SOPHY. Translated and Edited by Professor EVERETT,

D.C.L., F.R.S. With nearly 800 Wood Engravings, and

3 Coloured Plates. Thirteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised and much enlarged. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s.; also in Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I.—Mechanics, &c. Part III.—Electricity, &c.

Part II.—Heat. Part IV.—Sound and Light.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERK HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on hand.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary

Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes

in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of

Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,

Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,

Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Fourth Edition, pp. 200, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against

Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer

Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

Harrison & Sons, 59, Pall Mall.

VINOLIA CREAM

Is a good Prescription

FOR

SUNBURN, INSECT BITES, and any SKIN IRRITATION

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

DAVID NUTT,
270-271, Strand, London.

FOLK-LORE.

A Quarterly Review of Myth, Tradition, Institution, and Custom.

[Incorporating The Archaeological Review and The Folk-Lore Journal.]

Vol. V., No. 3. SEPTEMBER, 1894. Net 5s.

CONTENTS.

FURTHER NOTES from COUNTY LEITRIM. By LELAND L. DUNCAN, F.S.A.

WATER and WELL-WORSHIP in MAN. By A. W. MOORE, M.A. (20 pages.)

ON the CLASSIFICATION of PROVERBS and SAYINGS of the ISLE of MAN. With a Collection of Manx Proverbs in the Original, and Translated. By G. W. WOOD, F.I.C. (40 pages.)

CORRESPONDENCE.—"Superstitions in the Canons." W. R. PATON.

MISCELLANEA.—"Folk-Lore Items from North Indian Notes and Queries." W. H. D. ROUSE.—"Blood Covenant." A. NUTT.—"Fire o' Stones." NORMA HOPPER.—"Irish Folk-Lore Items." E. C. A. WINDLE.—"Folk-Lore Bibliography."

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. VIII., No. 8. OCTOBER, 1894. 1s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

CONJECTURES on the CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ATHENS. H. BIGGICK.

SUR les ACTES de XANTHIPPE et POLYXENE. MAX BONNET.

COLLATION of the ATHOS MS. of the HOMERIC HYNNS. H. CONSTANTINIDES.

SHORT NOTES.—REVIEWS: Jebb's "Electra," A. S.; Hübner's "Monumenta Linguae Ibericae," R. S. CONWAY; Bolderman's "Studia Luciana," A. L. FULLER; Author of "Supernatural Religion" on the Gospel according to Peter, A. E. BROOKE.

SHORTER NOTICES.—ARCHAEOLOGY: W. R. PATON, "Calymna and Leors."—SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.—BIBLIOGRAPHY.

NOW READY,

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

THE LEGEND of PERSEUS.

A Study of Tradition in Story, Custom, and Belief. By E. SIDNEY HARTLAND, F.S.A., Author of "The Science of Fairy Tale," &c. Vol. I. THE SUPERNATURAL BIRTH. Crown 8vo, pp. xxxiv-228, 7s. 6d.

* Vol. II. of the "Grimm Library," the First Volume of which, "Georgian Folk-Tales," Translated by Marjory Wardrop, published in May last, sells at 5s. net.

STUDIES in BIBLICAL ARCH-

EOLOGY. By JOSEPH JACOBS. Crown 8vo, 172 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d.

* Reprinted, with additions and revision, from the Archaeological Review and other specialist periodicals. These "Studies," which have excited considerable interest among scholars, are now made accessible to the wider circle of all students of the Old Testament.

SONGS and SAGAS of the NORSEMEN and ENGLISHMEN. By ALBANY F. MAJOR. Crown 8vo, 134 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

TALES from WELSH WALES.

By P. H. EMERSON, Author of "A Son of the Fens," "English Lagoons," &c. Crown 8vo, 304 pages, fancy cloth, 3s. 6d.

BEGINNINGS of WRITING in CENTRAL and EASTERN ASIA; or, Notes on 450 Embryo-Writings and Scripts, by TERRIEN de LACOUPERIE. Demy 8vo, 210 pp., cloth, £1 1s. net.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE LANGUAGES of CHINA

before the CHINESE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

THE OLDEST BOOK of the CHINESE.—The YH-KING and its Authors. Demy 8vo, sewn, 10s. 6d. net.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH NOVEL.

From its Origin to the Publication of "Waverley."

By Professor RALEIGH, University College, Liverpool.

This work is bound in two forms, either as a library book or as one of the Series of "University Extension Manuals." [Just out.]

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A SELECTION FROM THE WRITINGS OF DEAN STANLEY.

Edited by the Venerable A. S. AGLEN, Archdeacon of St. Andrews.

[Just out.]

A NEW SERIES, 8vo, 11s.

DR. DÖLLINGER'S ADDRESSES ON HISTORICAL AND LITERARY SUBJECTS.

Translated, in accordance with the wish of the late Author, by MARGARET WARRE.

[Just out.]

CONTENTS.

I.—UNIVERSITIES. PAST and PRESENT.

II.—FOUNDERS of RELIGIONS.

III.—THE EMPIRE of CHARLES the GREAT and his SUCCESSORS.

IV.—ANAGNI.

V.—THE DESTRUCTION of the ORDER of KNIGHTS

TEMPLARS.

VI.—THE HISTORY of RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

VII.—VARIOUS ESTIMATES of the FRENCH REVO-

LUTION.

VIII.—THE LITERATURE of the UNITED STATES of AMERICA.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

NEW VOLUME of CANON LIDDON'S LIFE OF DR. PUSEY.

LIFE OF EDWARD BOUVERIE PUSEY, D.D.

By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D.

Edited and prepared for publication by the Rev. J. O. JOHNSTON, M.A., Vicar of All Saints, Oxford, and the Rev. ROBERT J. WILSON, D.D., Warden of Keble College.

(4 vols., 8vo.) With Portraits and Illustrations. Vols. I. and II., 36s. (ready). Vol. III. 18s. [Just published.]

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN begs to announce that
A DRAMA IN DUTCH, a Novel, by Z. Z., in 2 volumes, price 12s., is now ready, and can be obtained at all Libraries.

21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE (New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY, 10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER, Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

List of New and Forthcoming Books.

MISS COBBE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.
THE LIFE of FRANCES POWER
COBBE. By Herself. With Illustrations. In 2 vols., square crown 8vo., 21s.

BY MR. BAINES, C.B.
FORTY YEARS at the POST-OFFICE,
1850-1890: A Personal Narrative. By FREDERICK E. BAINES, C.B. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo., with diagrams, &c., 21s.

MR. HISSEY'S NEW BOOK OF ROAD TRAVEL.
THROUGH TEN ENGLISH COUNTIES
By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "On the Box Seat," &c. In demy 8vo., with Illustrations, 16s.

MR. BARKER'S RAMBLES IN FRANCE.
TWO SUMMERS in GUYENNE, 1892-1893. By EDWARD HARRISON BARKER, Author of "Wayfaring in France," &c. In 1 vol., demy 8vo., with Illustrations, 16s.

BY MR. BALDWIN.
AFRICAN HUNTING and ADVENTURE
from NATAL to the ZAMBESI. By WILLIAM CHARLES BALDWIN, F.R.C.S. A Third and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

BY MRS. BISHOP.
A MEMOIR of MRS. AUGUSTUS CRAVEN (Pauline de la Ferronnays, author of Le Recit d'une Seur). With Extracts from her Diaries and Correspondence. By MARIA CATHERINE BISHOP. In 2 vols., crown 8vo., with Portrait, 24s.

BY W. P. COURTNEY.
ENGLISH WHIST and ENGLISH WHIST PLAYERS. By WILLIAM PRIDEAUX COURTNEY. In 1 vol., demy 8vo., 14s.

BY COLONEL CAMPBELL.
LETTERS from the CRIMEA. By COLIN FREDERICK CAMPBELL. With Introduction by Field-Marshal Lord WOLSELEY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., with Map, 7s. 6d.

BY C. W. WOOD.
A MEMOIR of MRS. HENRY WOOD. By CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Through Holland," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., 6s.

BY PROFESSOR MOMMSEN.
THE HISTORY of ROME. By Theodor MOMMSEN. Translated by WILLIAM PURDIE DICKSON, D.D., LL.D. New and Cheaper Edition. In 5 vols., crown 8vo., to be issued at monthly intervals. The First Vol. will be ready in December, 1894.

EDITED BY MR. GOSSE.
NOLLEKENS and his TIMES. By JOHN THOMAS SMITH, formerly Keeper of the Prints and Drawings in the British Museum. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

EDITED BY MISS DE MORGAN.
THE REMINISCENCES of the late MRS. DE MORGAN. Edited by her daughter, MARY A. DE MORGAN. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., with Portrait.

BY PERCY FITZGERALD.
MEMOIRS of an AUTHOR. By Percy FITZGERALD, M.A., F.S.A., Author of "Recreations of a Literary Man," &c. In 2 vols., demy 8vo., with Portrait, 28s.

BY MR. STORY.
THE LIVES of JAMES HOLMES and JOHN VARLEY. By ALFRED THOS. STORY, Author of "The Life of John Linnell." In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

BY A RESIDENT AT TEHRAN.
PERSIAN PICTURES—SAFAR NAMEH: A Book of Travel in the East. In crown 8vo., 6s.

BY REV. R. H. BARHAM.
THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS; or, Mirth and Marvels. By THOMAS INGOLDSBY, Esq. A New Edition, edited by Mrs. E. A. BOND. In 8 vols., demy 8vo., 81s. 6d.

BY MISS FITZGIBBON.
A VETERAN of 1812. (The Defence of Canada.) The Life of James Fitzgibbon. By his Daughter, MARY AGNES FITZGIBBON, Author of "A Trip to Manitoba." In crown 8vo., 7s. 6d.

PRESIDENT THIERS.
THE HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION (1789-1800). By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated by FREDERICK SHOEBEL. New Edition. In 5 vols., demy 8vo., to be published monthly. The First Volume will be issued in January, 1895. (Delivered only to purchasers of entire Sets.)

RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Now ready, price 5s.

POMONA'S TRAVELS.

A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from her former Handmaiden.

BY

FRANK R. STOCKTON,

Author of "Rudder Grange," &c., &c.
Illustrated.

Just published, price 6s.

THE HIGHWAY of SORROW.

By HESBA STRETTON and *****.

This is a story of intense interest, in the course of which the sorrows and martyrdom of the "Stundists," a sect of Russian people now suffering "for conscience sake," are powerfully depicted. Its author has had the assistance of a well-known Russian writer now an exile in England, who has supplied the outlines of the work and the facts and incidents in regard to prison life in Siberia.

COMPLETION of "OLD and NEW PARIS."

OLD and NEW PARIS.

A Narrative of its History, its People, and its Places.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Profusely
Illustrated. Complete in 2 vols. Cloth, 9s. each; or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d. each.

[Now ready.]

Now ready, price 7s. 6d., the FIRST VOLUME of

CASSELL'S GAZETTEER of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.

A Complete Topographical Dictionary of the United Kingdom.

With numerous Illustrations and Maps in Colours.

Now ready, Vol. III., 7s. 6d.

THE STORY of AFRICA and its EXPLORERS.

By Dr. ROBERT BROWN, M.A., F.L.S., F.R.G.S., &c. With 200 Original Illustrations.

Now ready, cloth, 3s. 6d.; extra cloth, 5s.

RED ROSE and TIGER LILY.

By L. T. MEADE, Author of "A World of Girls," &c. With 8 Full-page Plates.

Second Edition, now ready, boards, 2s.

CAMPAIGNS of CURIOSITY.

Journalistic Adventures of an American Girl in London.

By ELIZABETH D. BANKS. Illustrated.

NEW BOOKS for 1894-5.

 A List of Cassell & Company's NEW and FORTHCOMING VOLUMES for the SEASON 1894-5 will be sent post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.*PERSONAL MEMOIRS

OR

GENERAL GRANT

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo., cloth, 6s.

HEALTH and CONDITION in the

ACTIVE and the SEDENTARY. By N. E. YORKE-DAVIES, Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London, M.R.C.S., Author of "Foods for the Fat,"
"The Dietetics of Obesity," &c. Crown 8vo., cloth, 3s. 6d.

THERMO-DYNAMICS. Treated with

Elementary Mathematics, and containing applications to Animal and Vegetable Life, Tidal Friction and Electricity.
By J. PARKER, M.A., Author of "Elementary Thermodynamics." With numerous Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, 10s. 6d.

A PLUNGE into SAHARA: an

Adventure of To-Day. By G. DEMAGE. With Illustrations by Paul Crampel. Crown 8vo., cloth, 6s.

A NIGHT in the WOODS, and other

Tales and Sketches. By JAMES WESTON. With 50
Illustrations. 4to, cloth, 8s. 6d.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND THE LIBRARIES.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL

HIGHLAND COUSINS

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

One Volume, cloth extra, 6s.

PERLYCROSS

A Tale of the Western Hills,

By R. D. BLACKMORE,

Author of "Lorna Doone," &c.

TWELFTH THOUSAND.

One Handsome Volume, cloth extra, 6s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Humour of a most healthy and English kind pervades every page."

SPECTATOR.—"A noteworthy book.... In essence a study of rural life in south-western England."

TO-DAY.—"When the last page of 'Perlycross' is turned, the reader, if he shares my tastes, will heave a sigh of regret. But he will presently find consolation in reflecting that if 'adieu' to the homely little village must be said, he leaves it the richer by several delightful friends."

CLEOPATRA. By Professor George

EBERS. 2 vols., cloth, 6s.

BOYS. — Second Annual Volume.

Containing nearly 800 Illustrations, including numerous Coloured Plates, besides Serial and Short Stories by G. A. HENTY, GEORGE MANVILLE FENN, J. A.
STUART, ASCOTT R. HOPE, FRANK COWPER, ROBERT OVERTON, R. D. CHETWODE, and many other equally well-known and popular Authors. 840 pp., handsomely bound in red cloth, gilt bevelled boards, unique and attractive design, 7s. 6d.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

OCTOBER NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

RAILWAY TRAVEL in ENGLAND and AMERICA.
(Illustrated.) H. G. Prout.

AN AUTUMN SUNSET. Edith Wharton.

LENOK. (Illustrated.) George A. Hibbard.

THREE WAIFS in an ALMSHOUSE. Painted by Adrien
Henri Tanoux. With Frontispiece. Philip Gilbert Hamerton.

TARAHUMARI DANCES and PLANT WORSHIP.
(Illustrated.) Carl Lumholtz.

DAYS. John Hall Ingham.

LITTLE DABBY.—II. (Concluded.) Thomas Nelson Page.

RED LEAVES. Henry Tyrrell.

IN the HOSPITAL. (Illustrated.) J. West Roosevelt, M.D.

JACQUES and SUZETTE. Julia C. R. Dorr.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. 62-69. George W.
Cable.

FROM MACEDONIA. Mary Tappan Wright.

&c. &c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1894.

No. 1170, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

TWO BOOKS ON RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

The Message of Israel. By Julia Wedgwood. (Isbister.)

The Claims of Christianity. By W. S. Lilly. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE message of Israel is a theme that has been very variously commented. A modern orthodox Jew would probably tell us that the great business of his race, from the first dawn of history down to the present day, has been to set before mankind a true account of the origin and government of the world, to embody in its national institutions a perfect moral code, to guard itself from external contamination by an elaborate system of ritualistic prescriptions, and to set an example of unshakeable fidelity to this creed and to this code in the face of every attempt from within and from without to sap or to submerge or to batter them down. A modern heterodox Jew, disbelieving altogether in the supernatural, might say—or, rather, if I am not much mistaken, has said—that Israel's peculiar excellence lay in the abnegation of all transcendental interests, in single-minded devotion to the cause of individual and national self-preservation. A Christian theologian of the old school interprets the whole of Hebrew history, literature, and ritual as a prophetic annunciation by word and symbol of the coming Christ and of the Church that He was to found. M. Renan views the Prophets as theoretical Socialists, the Law as an attempt to put Socialism into practice. M. James Darmesteter, with more reason, claims as the distinctive service of his people that they alone among the nations of antiquity conceived God as an entirely moral Being, as nothing if not the guardian of righteousness.

Like the two writers last mentioned, Miss Wedgwood fully accepts the results of modern Biblical criticism: indeed, one object of her book is to commend Graf's theory of the Pentateuch to the acceptance of the religious public. But her version of the message of Israel, though startlingly new, is quite independent of the new criticism, and might as well have been gathered from the Bible of Ewald or Dillmann, perhaps even from the Bible of Pusey, as from the Bible of Wellhausen. According to her, what Israel proclaimed was the intimate interdependence of monotheism and monogamy. "Traced to a single family with a definiteness unknown in other history, that race is called on to show forth the principle of family life, the mutual and exclusive fidelity of those who share the divine prerogative of creating new life." "The idea of Hebrew espousals is the ideal of Christian espousals in its utmost purity, and even what might be called its rigidity" (p. 91). When one considers that the extremely detailed Hebrew codes contain no law against polygamy, that no prophet mentions it with disapproval, that the eponymous patriarch of Israel had four wives, that David the greatest and Solomon the wisest of its kings kept harems without blame, this talk about "mutual and exclusive fidelity" involves too great a draft on our credulity. It was solely the fidelity of the wife to the husband on which Hosea insisted; it was that which he and his successors took as the symbol of monotheistic purity: in Mrs. Carlyle's favourite phrase the reciprocity was all on one side. Against this vast consensus of national tradition, opinion, and sentiment, Miss Wedgwood has nothing to set but the single saying, "therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother and cleave to his wife," which she declares to be "meaningless for the possessor of a harem" (ib.). But surely a Jacob may leave his parents as completely for Leah and Rachel together as for Leah alone. Furthermore, it is pleaded that "the Old Testament is such a picture of the wretchedness of polygamy as we meet nowhere else in consecutive history" (p. 92). Some of the instances quoted to prove this are rather strained; but, accepting the evidence as perfectly relevant, what does it prove? Simply that polygamy is a very mischievous form of family life, not that the Hebrew narrators recognised in it the true source of the evils that they related. Besides, family discords are a constantly recurring motif in all fictitious or legendary narratives, whatever constitution of the family they assume—Cain and Abel, Esau and Jacob, were the offspring of monogamic unions—and among the Hebrews, as elsewhere, they sink into insignificance with the rise of authentic history. The peaceful succession of Judaic kings was undisturbed by their evident practice of polygamy; the sanguinary annals of the Ten Tribes owe none of their horror to its prevalence: indeed, Ahab and Jezebel seem to have been exemplary in their domestic relations.

Miss Wedgwood has not failed to notice that from Eve onwards "woman is mostly the tempter" in the Jahvist narratives of Genesis (p. 108); but it does not seem to occur to her that the habitually low view of women taken by Orientals betrays itself here, and renders the stories in question a rather unedifying text-book of morality for the West. Indeed, the idea, in which she seems to take such pleasure, of "typifying the human relation to the Divine by the female relation to man" (p. 108) involves an assumption of corresponding male superiority utterly alien to our conception of the relation of the sexes. Of course, Miss Wedgwood may reply that Jahve was no more superior to man than the average husband is to the average wife, and that like Jahve he very properly withholds from her the knowledge of evil which he has himself acquired by regrettable experience; but that is a view of religion that the world has not learned from Israel, and is not likely to learn from him now. Hegelian pantheism may be illustrated, but cannot well be taught, from the Bible.

The unhistorical character of Miss Wedgwood's fundamental thesis leaves us free to admire the excellences of detail with which her work abounds. Her observations on human life may not really have been suggested by the Biblical history, but at any rate they are just and penetrating; when she is not bent on extracting moral lessons from it, her interpretations of the sacred text are fresh and stimulating; her style, though too laboured and sometimes wanting in clearness, always has dignity and distinction, occasionally a certain eloquence, at once feminine and austere. The learning shown is considerable, though not so complete as might be wished. Let me note some points requiring correction in the order in which they occur. When Miss Wedgwood describes the Septuagint as "the first complete Greek version of the Old Testament" and then adds that it "was made in the third century B.C." (p. 60), she must by inadvertence have written "Old Testament" for "Pentateuch," for she must know that the Book of Daniel and other Hagiographa did not then exist. Had she read that very interesting book, Budde's Urgeschichte, she would not have said that "critics detect the work of only one author in the earlier (Jahvist) chapters of Genesis" (p. 78), and her own analysis would have gained immensely by the light Budde has thrown on the subject. The assertion that "if touches have been added here and there to the 'Iliad,' or some small fragment has been lost, the change is in either case imperceptible" (p. 131) is simply incomprehensible. A protest against the use of the term "Second Elohist" by the critics (p. 147) is entirely gratuitous, seeing that the term has been dropped ever since it became inapplicable—i.e., since the post-exilic origin of P has been recognised. Critics now only recognise one Elohist—the part-author of the Prophetic Narrative. There is to my knowledge no reason or authority for attributing the words quoted from Micah on page 154 to Balaam. It is in the highest degree probable that Micah had before him the same narrative of the scene between Balak and Balaam that we now read in Numbers, and no allusion is there made to human sacrifices. That entirely mythical personage, Lycurgus, is gravely spoken of as an historical character (pp. 207 sq.)—which is perhaps not wonderful in a discussion where Grote figures as "our latest historian of Greece." "Jeremiah's Chaldaism was to an aristocratic section of people what Medism would be two hundred years later to the Athenians" (p. 227). Whether the parallel be just or not, the chronology is wrong by a hundred years, for we must assume that the reference is to the time of the great Persian war, not to the time of Conon.

By the "Claims of Christianity" Mr. Lilly, as might be expected, understands the pretensions of the Roman Church to tell men what they ought to believe as divine truth, and what they ought to do in order to carry out the divine will. Along with these there seems to go another pretension, implied rather than expressly named, the pretension to command the assistance of the public authorities in exacting obedience to her behests. Apart from two chapters on Buddhism and Islam, pleasant to read but adding nothing to our knowledge of their respective subjects, the book may be described as a brief account of how the Roman Church exercised her authority during the middle ages, how she lost much of it through the Renaissance, the Protestant Reformation, and the modern Revolution, and how she may hope to recover it in the future.

In dealing with medieval history, according to the not very felicitous metaphor of our author, "the great rock upon which most students strike is generalisation" (p. 96). It is, at any rate, a rock of which he has not himself kept quite clear. The chapter in which this caution occurs supplies some instances in point. It opens with a very sweeping assertion:

"Christianity is the perfect law of liberty. . . . It is based upon the claims and prerogatives of conscience. It teaches that every member of the human race is . . . independent of all earthly power in that sacred domain. The separation between temporal and spiritual authority was its great gift to civilisation" (p. 87).

We are told elsewhere that neither in the Greek Church nor in the Protestant communities has such a separation been observed. Accordingly, the words, as they stand, can only apply to the Roman Catholic Church, and their truth must be tested by a comparison with its history. Mr. Lilly himself warns us that "an apologist for a religion should deal with it as an existing fact; should take it as it is, not as he thinks it ought to be" (Summary, p. xvi.). Perhaps, also, he should take it at the time when it was best able to manifest its proper genius. In the case of Catholicism, the middle ages seem best to fulfil that condition. Now, Mr. Lilly will not deny that they were a time of extreme religious intolerance. Indeed, he says as much in this very chapter. A Church that merely insists on the right (and duty) of everyone to agree with her is not teaching liberty in the true sense at all. Equally untrue is the assertion that Christianity (as already defined) supplied "a force able to destroy the domination of the State over the immaterial part of our nature" (ib.). On the contrary, it made that domination more intense than ever it had been. Any authority that can exile, or imprison, or put to death is really temporal, whether exercised by ecclesiastics or not. Any organisation that can wield the whole power of the State for the suppression of opinions that it dislikes is a part of the State machinery, whether it is called the Church or anything else. Mr. Lilly is full of admiration for the services of the Jesuits in winning back to Catholicism a great part of the territory lost to Protestantism. Now, it is notorious that this was done by a free use of the royal authority in the countries reclaimed.

Another generalisation on which the author splits, or, rather, which itself splits on the rock of history, is his assertion (to quote again from the very convenient Summary) that in the middle ages "Christendom was conterminous with the Catholic Church" (p. xx.). Was the Greek Church, then, not a part of Christendom?

Once more, we are told that "Europe was considered as one vast moral territory, of which the Pope was the supreme magistrate" (p. xxi.); and we are given to understand that the papal power was exercised in a disinterested spirit, with a view to the maintenance of peace and order. But the only illustration of this moral magistracy that I find adduced is "an armistice concluded between Edward III. and Philip VI. at the instance of Clement VII." (p. 118). We hear nothing about the papal sanction given to William the Conqueror's buccannering invasion of England, or about the infamous Crusade against Constantinople, or the bringing of Charles of Anjou to Naples with the subsequent advice to execute Conradin, or the too effectual obstacles put in the way of German and Italian unity—to mention some only among the many rocks on which this generalisation also goes to pieces.

Mr. Lilly, as I have said, fully admits and, indeed, half justifies the ferocious intolerance of the medieval régime. One might suppose that so far it was fatal to at least one claim of Christianity, the claim to set men's consciences free. On the other hand, whatever toleration we now enjoy is clearly due either to the Renaissance, or to the Protestant Reformation, or to the modern spirit, or to the resultant of their various tendencies. Yet, in considering those three movements, our author treats them rather as hindrances than as helps to what he calls Christianity. They certainly were adverse to the authority of the Papacy and of ecclesiastics generally. But to pretend that "Protestantism, when the popular movement in its favour had waned, allied itself with monarchical absolutism" (p. 208) sounds a little too preposterous, when one thinks of the French Huguenot nobles, the Dutch Republicans, the Scotch Covenanters, the English Puritans and Nonconformists, and the New England settlers. A publicist of a somewhat different order, the late M. Taine, observes that "but for St. Bartholomew and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, France would now [1873] be enjoying a liberal and regular parliamentary government." Whether Protestantism really contributed much to the absolutism of the German princes may be doubted; but it is certain that in Germany the spirit of the Reformation has led to an unrivalled liberty of forming religious convictions without regard to the preferences of persons in authority. Another outrageous assertion is that "Luther's tenet of justification was productive of far worse results in the lives of men than had been the traffic in indulgences so strongly denounced by him" (p. 192). The doctrine of justification by faith alone may have been used as a pretext for moral laxity—just as St. Augustine's doctrine of predestination may have been—but in practice it has usually been allied with extreme moral rigour.

In the last chapter the Roman Catholic Church is again extolled as "the champion of the rights of conscience against the dechristianised State" (p. 236). An ancient fatalist has told us what happened to the sheep when they surrendered their dogs and placed themselves under the protection of the wolf. Non tali auxilio—we are not going to entrust our liberties to the guardianship of the Church that burned Giordano Bruno in the sixteenth century and kidnapped little Mortara in the nineteenth.

If Mr. Lilly is resolved to pose as a teacher of the age, he should try to be a little more accurate. One who translates "Nous avons été précédés de loin, dans la recherche des libertés publiques, par ces bourgeois du moyen âge . . ." "those burghers went far beyond us in the pursuit of public liberties" (p. 123), cannot be trusted to understand the meaning of the simplest French sentence. The "publicist" who can refer to a most conspicuous and celebrated chief of the Girondists as "another Jacobin orator, one Isnard" (p. 220), has great need to study the history of the French Revolution over again. A professed admirer of scholasticism should not fall into the vulgar error of saying that "the only philosophy which the schoolmen knew was Aristotle's, as filtered through the Arabian intellect" (p. 143). Aquinas used translations made direct from the Greek text of Aristotle, and always combated the Arabian, that is, the Averroist, interpretation of his metaphysics. The tradition of Platonism also was never entirely lost in the middle ages, when it gave birth to and sustained the doctrine of Realism. A period of five centuries should not be spoken of as "the brief days of the Alexandrian school" (p. 150). The function of Greek tragedy (according to Aristotle) was not "to purge the emotions by pity and terror" (p. 151), but to purge pity and terror themselves. Who was the South who "remarked a century ago that the Church of England alone made Protestantism considerable in Europe?" (p. 226). The only South known to fame is the great Caroline divine of the seventeenth century.

ALFRED W. BENN.

THREE VOLUMES OF POETRY.

A London Rose and other Rhymes. By Ernest Rhys. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

Homeward Songs by the Way. By A. E. (Dublin: Whaley.)

Eremus. By Stephen Phillips. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

MR. ERNEST RHYS has written the briefest and the brightest of autobiographies.

"Wales England wed: so I was bred. 'Twas merry London gave me breath.

I dreamt of love, and fame: I strove. But Ireland taught me love was best; And Irish eyes, and London cries, and streams of Wales may tell the rest.

What more than these I asked of Life, I am content to have from Death."

The lines serve also for a summary of his book; it keeps, happily, close to the experience of life, to emotions really felt. There are no poems of a perfectly idle and insincere imagination, false lyrical cries, postures and poses of fashionable sentiment: a personality makes itself felt throughout. It is work of a modest and delicate simplicity, without forced notes or lack of reticence: the kind of poetry which has a right to be written by virtue of its truth: the writer has his "vision," and records it worthily. There is distinctly something here which separates this poetry from the dull dexterities of the average versifier: a certain accent of genuine passion, and much of that incommunicable grace, which never rests upon mere metre-mongering. It were doing violence to the spirit of the book to pour superlatives upon it: it is just a book, full of an individual charm, which some readers will strongly feel. The poems fall into three chief divisions: London, Welsh, and Love poems. The London poems are pleasantly natural expressions of London's appeal to a poet. Sang Suckling:

"Black-Friars to me, and old Whitehall,
Is even as much as is the fall
Of fountains on a pathless grove,
And nourishes as much my love."

But that is the cheerful spirit of Urbanus, your Lambs and Addisons and Johnsons, your wits and merry worldlings and students of the crowd; there is more of Umbratilis in Mr. Rhys. He feels the fascination of contrast between the multitudinous life of London and the single soul of its contemplator; he notes the little, sudden things that meet him against the vast background: a girl dancing in the street, a harp played in the fog, a rose sold in the road; or the monumental greatness of ancient art, with its flashes or solemnities of appeal among the distracting confusions of the modern city. "London Feast" is the most memorable of them: it turns to poetry a theme painfully familiar, in a way that is strangely moving and imaginative: the flocking of the country into the town, "sunburnt herdsmen of the hill," and "country lads" and "village maidens, April girls," and "ancient dalesmen of the North," all "go to taste of London Feast."

"Too late, dear children of the sun:
For London Feast is past and gone!
I sat it out, and now, released,
Make westward from its weary gate.
Fools and unwise, you are too late:
You cannot taste
Of London Feast."

The "westward" way led to Wales, to holy Dee and Dinas Bran. And in the Welsh poems, Mr. Rhys is at his happiest, is at home. There is a note of the exile or of the stranger in his London verse, and the occasional pieces, for all their frequent daintiness and grace, are not clearly characteristic. But the Welsh and the Love poems are unmistakably so: they strike the note of delicate passion in a way most personal and distinctive. The poet sings how, of all the poets read and loved in his "Mountain Cottage,"

"Of all whose hearts have sung,
One there is, of older tongue,
Tunes his woodland note apart
Still more near to touch the heart:
Davyth of the leafy line
Pours for us his lyric wine,
Till our pulses thrill with song,
And all wondrous fancies throng

With an elfin melody,
And a strain of old romance,
Every glade and green expanse
Of the poet's forestry."

This, and some other pieces of a like character, have a delightful poetry of the hearth and heath, the fireside and hillside, in their quiet graces. "The House of Hendra" is among the most successful of modern Celtic romances, stately in style and measure, with many such haunting phrases as "the darker grace of death," and an excellent ghostliness in it. Vague as is much talk about "the Celtic note," Mr. Rhys has conveyed into these poems something of a spirit definitely Welsh; and the love poems in celebration of "Diana" have an exquisite shyness and delicacy, which are unlike the good and the bad qualities of modern English love poetry. It says much for the personal power of the writer, that his book has but few, if any, brilliancies and purple patches, while yet the effect of the whole is very marked and memorable. It is verse not made, but born of true emotions and rare impulse: it has no exasperating cleverness and dexterity. In brief, it is one of those books which delight their reader, but, if he be a critic, trouble him as well; for he cannot in any adequate degree convey a sense of its charm through quotation, and is left to fumble among tame phrases for words expressive of its quality. Mr. Rhys has it in him to give us much of that Welsh poetry, whether by translation, or by infusion of its spirit into original work, which is little known to English literature: the romance, the fairy lore, the legends and the lyrical soul of Wales, are not wholly contained in the Arthurian cycle. Such a labour of love would be a signal service to "Cymru Fydd."

"A. E.'s" poems come to us from a new publishing house in Dublin, admirably produced; and, for the literary good of Dublin, we wish the venture all success. It may be inevitable, but it is not natural or wholesome, that Dublin and Edinburgh should consign their native work to London hands. This latest of Irish poets has written some fifty lyrics, all noteworthy, some as nearly perfect, if not indeed perfect, as possible. Mystical, contemplative, he is also an artist of rare accomplishment, who has little of the irritating incompleteness common to most modern poetry of the kind. Nor does he sing riddles, and epigrams, and oracles, and proverbs, in the least happy style of Emerson or Garth Wilkinson: his lyrics are finely wrought pieces of pure imagination, the result of pondering and meditating upon ideas. The high things of his song have been made presentable in poetry: their vastness or aloofness, or, to some minds, vagueness, have not been suffered to cloud and to obscure their inherent beauty, which is, as is all beauty, in itself definite and precise. Here, certainly, is wisdom: that kind of universal wisdom, however particular or prepossessed, which is among the finer philosophical elements of poetry, and unites, let us say, Dante with Shakspeare, in a true catholicity. This poet's themes are just the eternal commonplaces which are the eternal mysteries; and he has cast them into exquisite moulds. That he finds inspiration and sustenance in eastern wisdom, of a kind often travestied by its friends and foes, can hardly blind any competent reader to the excellence of his art. The estate and fortune of the soul travelling in eternity are here rendered into verse, that seizes with imaginative power their moving times and aspects, profoundly yet lightly also.

"The ancient mystery
Holds its hands out day by day,
Takes a chair and croons with me
By my cabin built of clay.

"When the dusky shadow flits,
By the chimney nook I see
Where the old enchanter sits,
Smiles, and waves, and beckons me."

It is poetry kindled from deep experience in simple things, which have in them all the wonder and greatness of existence, for the wise and resolute contemplator.

"I heard them in their sadness say
'The earth rebukes the thought of God;
We are but embers wrapped in clay,
A little nobler than the sod.'

"But I have touched the lips of clay:
Mother, thy rudest sod to me
Is thrilled with fire of hidden day,
And haunted by all mystery."

Or again:

"I pitied one whose tattered dress
Was patched, and stained with dust and rain:
He smiled on me; I could not guess
The viewless spirit's wide domain.

"He said, 'The royal robe I wear
Trails all along the fields of light:
Its silent blue and silver bear
For gems the starry dust of night.

"The breath of Joy unceasingly
Waves to and fro its folds starlit,
And far beyond earth's misery
I live and breathe the joy of it."

In almost every poem there is a haunting interaction between the simplicities of sorrow and joy in the life on earth, and the diviner simplicities of the universal life: the "ancient wisdom" passes to and fro between them with interpretation. In Shelley's phrase, this poet is a "Pilgrim of Eternity," and might say with S nancour, Eternit  deviens mon asile! He has questionings, recollections, glimpses of other lives and states, a sense of tragedy or romance played out in other worlds, a consciousness of moving among mystery, yet with no confusion in his transference of it all to poetry. Many of the lyrics have a strange gaiety, and brightness, and gentleness: a grave gladness of resignation. True mystic, peace and quietness are favourite words with him, being the desirable possessions. Yet not quite so; for the wisest song of all is this:

"It was the fairy of the place,
Moving within a little light,
Who touched with dim and shadowy grace
The conflict at its fever height.

"It seemed to whisper 'Quietness,'
Then quietly itself was gone;
Yet echoes of its mute carress
Were with me as the years went on.

"It was the warrior within
Who called, 'Awake, prepare for fight;
Yet lose not memory in the dim;
Make of thy gentleness thy might:

"Make of thy silence words to shake
The long-enthroned kings of earth;
Make of thy will the force to break
Their towers of wantonness and mirth.

"It was the wise, all-seeing soul
Who counselled neither war nor peace :
'Who be thou thyself that goal
In which the wars of time shall cease.'"

Assuredly these poems, faint and savourless to some, will be by others most intimately treasured for their wisdom and for their art.

Mr. Stephen Phillips in Eremus, though in many ways very modern, both in style and in imagination, still follows a somewhat outworn tradition. Festus, Balder, Manfred, Paracelsus, to mingle bad and good, are recalled by his design; even the excellent satire of Firmilian is not wholly dissimilar. There is a little of Alexander Smith in Mr. Phillips: fine rhetoric, fine imagery, but a touch of "madness," which is not at all "fine." Such things as "space-singed brow" or "my skull grin to the moon" are distinctly spasmodic; and there is too much of "O ye" this, that, and the other. A life's experience, the tragedy of a soul, the confession in blank verse monologue, are dangerous and difficult to handle. Dante and Bunyan, with their marvellously definite scenes and phrases, carry with them a profound conviction: they do not lend themselves to mouthing and declamation. Not that Mr. Phillips mouths and declaims; his poem is full of serene and stately beauty. But it fails to satisfy, as an whole, by reason of its frequent drift towards that fault. It is yet a poem of great power and grace, written with a singular carefulness of style. Mr. Phillips has the secret of his arduous metre in no slight degree:

"I stood in a waste place, and it was night;
A wild warm night of soft and stormy winds."
So begins the confession of Eremus, and the dignified charm of the verse prevails throughout:

"On thee, God flung the fires of his delight,
But gave thee no control, and let thee drive
Like some tall ship aflame, that throwing off
Spar after blazing spar upon the waves,
Down the great melancholy waters burns."

The poem is rich in such solemn images and rhythmical movements. The burden of it is the old burden: the hunger of a heart, dissatisfied and agonised and lonely. Eremus journeys through space, among the stars, to other worlds, under the guidance of a great spirit; he sees the immensities and the eternities, with feelings of awe and horror; he doubts, despairs, hopes, questions; and awakes upon earth to find it a dream, and to recover something of sympathy and peace with homely earth. That, most roughly put, is the gist of the argument: the poem is less, in truth, narrative or systematic, than personal: it is a series, not disorderly nor desultory, of imaginative thoughts upon the meaning, value, destiny of human life. It excels in the presentation of contrasts: the infinite spaces revealed by the "terrible Muse, Astronomy," with their wasting fires and stricken desolation, and then, the full life of earth, the grass and flowers, the consoling fields and streams. Mr. Phillips displays a very keen and lively imagination in these passages: he writes with a large and simple beauty, sometimes almost grandeur, of expression, austere and finely, in a way somewhat Lucretian. A not quite fortunate structure and form seem to have prevented the poem from attaining a success which we feel to be well within its writer's reach; but it is none the less a distinguished and remarkable performance.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

Society in China. By Robert K. Douglas. (Innes.)

IF supply is any index to demand in the economics of publishing, it would seem that there has been for some time past a great and growing curiosity about everything that concerns the Celestial Empire. Its history, its literature, its language, its laws, manners, and customs, have all been treated in recent works of more or less ability, with the result that myth and fable have largely given place to sober fact in the general apprehension as it affects this old-world land and people.

Prof. Douglas, as everybody knows, may claim foremost rank among the few who can speak of things Chinese with the authority which rests upon a thorough practical command of the language, a wide acquaintance with its literature, both classical and current, and an intimate knowledge of the people and their ways acquired by residence among them. The crisis of affairs in the Far East enhances the intrinsic interest of his latest work. We are presented with a truthful picture of contemporary China, sketched in strong, clear outlines from personal memory, from native novels and dramas, and from the extraordinary and by no means flattering revelations of the King Pao (Peking Gazette), supplemented by that discriminating use of Blue Books which none but those who already possess a first-hand acquaintance with their subject-matter can pretend to make. Prof. Douglas holds and expresses decided opinions as to the proper attitude of European diplomacy in its dealings with the Tsungli Yamen; and the chapters discussing political and commercial relations and the history of past misunderstandings ought to be read by all who have any voice in the direction of English interests in China.

In the present volume the author makes only one or two brief references to the archaeology of Chinese writing. In a future edition it might be worth while to mention that not only is a star the symbol for Ti, "god," but also for suk, sui, "ear of corn"; just as in Accadian a star does duty for essu (an-sug), "ear of corn," as well as for dingir, "god." Apart from the double agreement, it would hardly be certain that the similarity in question was more than a coincidence, as a star symbolises god in Egyptian also. The character hwang, "emperor," anciently pronounced gong or gung, did not originally mean "self-ruler," whether in the sense of autocrat, or of one who rules himself; although the Chinese literati have altered it so as to suggest one or other of these ideas. The essential part of the hieroglyph is but little modified from the symbol for an eye; and both word and sign agree with the Accadian uginnu (= ugin, gun), "lord," "king," which in linear writing looks like an incomplete eye. The lower part of the Chinese character is an added phonetic. The imperial designation of "The One Man" (p. 10), so common in the Shu, also has its exact parallel in Accadian, where we find the numeral gi, dish, "one," explained by the Semitic word sarru, "king." The character is the same in both scripts.

It is to be hoped that of those who read this fascinating volume some at least may be stimulated to begin the study of the Chinese language, with a view to independent investigation of its wonderful memorials of the forgotten past. For those so minded, no better handbook could be suggested than Prof. Douglas's Chinese Manual (W. H. Allen).

C. J. BALL.

La Jeunesse du Grand Frédéric. Par Ernest Lavissee.

Le Grand Frédéric avant l'Avènement. Par Ernest Lavissee. (Paris: Hachette.)

SOME surprise was expressed in England when M. Ernest Lavissee was elected a member of the Académie Française. His works were almost unknown, and his reputation had extended only to very few persons on this side of the Channel. Yet M. Lavissee is no ordinary man, and historical students in France rejoiced that he had been thus honoured. His work at the Ecole des Chartes has been singularly successful, and the pupils there with one accord speak of him with enthusiasm. He has done more than any living man to elevate and strengthen the character of historical study in France. The labours of the great mediaevalists who work in the school have been worthily supplemented by M. Lavissee. He has supplied a certain element of modernity, and has prevented many a young historical student from becoming a mere Jonathan Oldbuck, by impressing the necessity of wide knowledge and a sense of historical proportion upon him. It is particularly interesting to examine the historical attitude of one who holds so important a place among modern historical French teachers. For it is doing M. Lavissee no injustice to say that it is as an historical teacher more than as an historical writer that he is destined to be remembered.

The writings of M. Lavissee have been devoted entirely to the history of Prussia. The blow struck by Germany in 1870 has induced Frenchmen to examine with peculiar care the modern history of their conquerors. That the Prussia of Jena should develop into the Prussia of Sedan seemed so surprising that elaborate inquiries were made into the early history of the nation which was to become the leader of Germany, and humble the power of France. Of the many books which have been written by Frenchmen about Prussian monarchy since the war, undoubtedly the ablest is the Formation de la Prusse Contemporaine of M. Godefroy Cavaignac. Only one volume of this superb historical study has yet been published; and it is to be feared that M. Cavaignac's entrance into politics has postponed, if it has not terminated, his career as a historian. Lighter in tone are the works of M. Lavissee on the same subject. His Etudes sur l'Histoire de Prusse is a charming volume of essays well suited for the general reader, if not so scientific in treatment and so thorough in analysis as M. Cavaignac's volume. His study of the early years of Frederick the Great is also intended for the general reader, and possesses the same charm of style. It is not an original work based on the study of newly discovered documents, but rather a psychological analysis of the nature of one of the most conspicuous personalities in modern history, and the one which has done the most to create the Prussia of to-day. The taste for these psychological studies of great historical characters is one of the marked features of modern French historians. On the one hand, they are devoted to the scientific and critical examination of documents; on the other, they are impelled by the interest they take in the theories of heredity to analyse the origin of the tendencies of important individuals. Taine's book on Napoleon is a remarkable instance of this tendency, and M. Lavissee's volumes on Frederick the Great are the latest example of its popularity in France. For such work a writer must possess great literary power: the faculty which is of least importance in appreciating documents is indispensable for analysing character.

A quotation from the preface to his second volume gives in a few words M. Lavissee's attitude towards his subject:

"I have no intention," he says, "of writing the history of Frederick II. I am very curious to investigate origins, whether of a state or of an individual, because it is a rare pleasure for me to reach the beginnings of things, and because the understanding of the behaviour of individuals is learned at the price of exertion which is practically a pleasure. I have therefore given myself time and space to study the formation of a lucid intellect and a strong will by which the whole course of history has been modified."

This being the intention of M. Lavissee, it is absurd to expect elaborate criticism of historical authorities; for his volumes do not profess to contain more than a statement of facts which justify his psychological analysis couched in a clear and exquisite style. English readers will find it difficult to read M. Lavissee without comparing him with Carlyle. Their judgments as to Frederick's early years are singularly alike; but the French author has the advantage of being more clear, more logical, and less of a hero-worshipper. He makes no parade of the books he has read or consulted, and his one endeavour is to be intelligible to his readers. He is never seduced into philosophical digressions, and avoids the danger of recondite allusions. His grasp of personality is as great as Carlyle's; but he has more sense of the importance of details, and is careful to preserve harmony in his colouring. M. Lavissee and Carlyle are in many ways the exact opposites of each other, and the fact that their portraits are so similar argues that a correct idea has been formed of the character of Frederick the Great. The three great figures of the eighteenth century are the elder Pitt, Frederick, and the Empress Catherine. These three transformed England, Prussia, and Russia; and it is a misfortune that there are no such complete studies extant of Pitt and Catherine as Carlyle and M. Lavissee have given us of Frederick.

It is impossible to analyse the evanescent charm of literary style. It can be felt but cannot be explained. M. Lavissee is a master of style in a nation of stylists: more cannot be said. Personally he is more interesting to English students from his authoritative position in the modern historical school in France; but it is a pleasure to find that one who is accounted so eminent a teacher should likewise be conspicuous for literary merit. M. Lavissee declares his intention of not pursuing further his study of Frederick the Great; it would be interesting if he would give us a companion picture of Frederick's greatest contemporary, Catherine of Russia.

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

NEW NOVELS.

The Friend of the People. By Mary Rowsell. In 3 vols. (Fisher Unwin.)

Led On. By Helen F. Hetherington and Rev. H. Darwin Burton. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Suit and Service. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Thunderbolt. By the Rev. J. Middleton Macdonald. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Gladdie's Sweetheart. By Theodora C. Elmslie. (Ward & Downey.)

George Mandeville's Husband. By C. E. Raimond. (Heinemann.)

The Curse that Came Home. By Jessie K. Lawson. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

The Hypnotic Experiment of Dr. Reeves. By Charlotte Rosalys Jones. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

THE French Revolution is a theme of which we never tire, and which of itself invests with an interest the productions of the poorest writer. The author of The Friend of the People is, however, not at all a writer of this sort; and if her conceptions do not rise to the level of brilliancy, her narrative is composed with commendable care and due regard for scenic effect. The story turns upon the impersonation of the Marquis de Ravnac by his half-brother Gervais Touton, who strongly resembles him in features. The pseudo-Marquis, who is a prominent Revolutionist, makes over to the nation the ancestral estates of the Ravnacs, and under the name of Citizen Crassus poses as a leader of the most advanced party. Many incidents in the book are drawn with a remarkably skilful hand. The opening chapters, where Gervais, by assuming the cassock and tansured wig of a father-confessor, extracts from his dying mother the truth concerning his own parentage; the device by which Maurice de Ravnac is carried away and immured in Alsace; and the prison scene where, after four years' separation, Maurice once more meets Marcelle, his married, but maiden, wife, are particularly worthy of mention. And at every turn we meet with the terribly real and imperishable characters who played their part in the most ghastly of the world's tragedies. The ill-fated Queen of France and her butterfly court, the sans-culottes, the citoyennes knitting around the guillotine and screaming for fresh blood, the famous leaders who one after another rose and fell, above all the pale-faced, meagre little man with whose name the Terror is chiefly associated, in his blue coat and nankeen pantaloons—these stand out upon the canvas, and impart to the picture a lifelike reality.

There is a mild sort of interest about Led On, the joint production of a lady and an Anglican clergyman, which will carry a reader uncomplainingly through the regulation three volumes now, not undeservedly perhaps, threatened with extinction. To the credit of the authors, it may be said that they have chosen a title which, to some extent at least, indicates the nature of the story. Captain Hugh Manners, who has resigned his commission and embarked in the wine trade, is sent by his firm to Spain, to take charge of a branch establishment there, and leaves his newly married wife at home. In his absence Mr. Frank Wood, a youthful stockbroker, who admires Mrs. Manners, and has already induced her to commit the enormity of staking a sovereign upon a horse running for the Derby, now further persuades her to invest £30 in a financial speculation, by which she gains £120. The ease with which this sum is obtained encourages a speculative rashness which enables Mr. Osgood Lewin, a bucket-shop man, to relieve her not only of the £120, but also of some £200 out of a legacy of £500 bequeathed to her husband, and left by him in her charge. All this is very dreadful, no doubt, and sufficient perhaps to justify the young woman in attempting to drown herself rather than face her husband on his return; but it may strike a good many readers as being a somewhat tame exemplification of the gambling fever. A far stronger and more impressive portion of the narrative is that connected with Arabella Schonte—a baby-farmer, who insures the lives of the children committed to her care and then does them to death. In the second chapter of the book there is a mystery about a young woman which is never subsequently explained—an oversight due, perhaps, to divided authorship.

One can hardly help regarding it as a needless expenditure of labour when a novelist creates a character to suit one particular scene, and makes no use of it afterwards. In the first chapter of Suit and Service we are introduced to Mrs. Winter, whose unbounded generosity prompts her to empty her pocket of its contents at the appeal of any passing beggar, and who has been known to divest herself of a flannel petticoat in the interests of some thinly clad damsel who encounters her in the street. A good deal of amusement might have been elaborated out of this trait of quixotic benevolence; yet throughout the remainder of the book Mrs. Winter is nothing more than a motherly, kind-hearted person of an ordinary type. For the rest, the novel is pleasant reading enough in its way, though the author seems to delight in the introduction of characters little resembling those met with in everyday life. We have Giles Cunliffe, who succeeds to a baronetcy when over sixty years of age, but is unable to shake off the penurious habits of a poverty-stricken life, and inhabits Castleton Manor in squalid seclusion, buying his daily bits of meat or smoked herrings from the neighbouring town and carrying them home in his pocket. His only associate is Richard Thornton, a blacksmith's son, his coachman and general servant; and living in the house also is his grand-niece, Rachel Malleson, a plain-faced, shy, and sensitive young woman, the heroine of the story, and endowed presumably with much undiscovered depth of character, but disappointingly dull and seldom interesting. At all events she secures the dog-like devotion of Richard Thornton, who, when the old man dies and leaves him the bulk of his property, develops into a popular country gentleman. Mrs. Martin has a vigorous touch, and is in the main a painstaking and careful writer. Perhaps it is too much to expect of a lady that she should pay attention to the legal aspects of a narrative; but we really ought to be informed how it came to pass that, if the Castleton estates were not entailed, Sir Giles inherited them from the previous owner—who refused to recognise even the fact of his existence—or, if they were entailed, how he had the power to devise them to Richard Thornton, a man in no way related to him.

It cannot be said that Mr. Macdonald brings with him any striking qualifications for the task of writing a story of Australian life. Thunderbolt takes its title from a famous bushranger known by that name, who for seven years defied the efforts made to capture him by the police of New South Wales and Victoria. The writer, who is described as a Bengal chaplain, has no doubt visited Australia in person, and has picked up some knowledge of the country and an acquaintance with its peculiarities of phraseology; but the dialogue is of that gossipy, irrelevant, and disjointed style which suggests transcription from a diary of after-dinner conversations about anything and everything, which formed part of Mr. Macdonald's actual experiences, while for most of the incidents in the pursuit of Thunderbolt that require particularly vivid description he has recourse to lengthy extracts from the Sydney Morning Herald and other papers. There is, however, a very spirited and entertaining description of an Australian football match. A glossary is appended; but as no notice of the fact is given at the outset, it is possible for a reader to make his bewildered way through allusions to cockatoos and henatoos, and bael budgerie, and what not, before discovering that an explanation of them is anywhere to be found.

Gladdie's Sweetheart is a story of an impulsive and rather foolish young lady of seventeen, who allows herself to be carried off at a day's notice and married by an impulsive young gentleman, one year her senior. Miss Gladys Somers, an orphan, has been brought up in the house of an uncle and aunt since the age of six; and having now developed unusual personal attractions and incurred the jealousy of her cousin, Miss Esmeralda Skewton, she falls under her aunt's displeasure, who threatens to send her away as a governess. She is, however, rescued by Mr. Charles Boldrewood, fresh from Eton, and heir—upon coming of age—to thirty thousand a year. The sequel may be left to take care of itself. The style is easy and natural throughout, and the story claims to be a true one. This may be so; but we should like to know how the young couple managed to take the morning train from Bournemouth and be married in London on the same day without having procured any special licence or having either of them resided in the district for the statutory period. Mr. Boldrewood scarcely solves the difficulty when he boastfully asserts that "once there [i.e., in London], I know a fellow who will soon marry us safely enough. He was once a tutor of mine, and is an out-at-elbow sort of chap who won't be sorry to earn a small cheque so easily."

In George Mandeville's Husband we have an amusing caricature portrait of a "woman with a mission." Miss Lois Carpenter was "a young woman of indomitable energy and high-coloured vitality, who, even at school, had developed the gift of impressing herself forcibly upon her surroundings. Her friends declared with one voice that there was no saying what she couldn't do. But at the same time it was hard to say precisely what she could do, for she had not as yet positively declared her mission."

However, after her marriage to Ralph Wilbraham, she assumed the name of George Mandeville, and decided to be a novelist and a leader and teacher of men. "She would champion the cause of Progress, she would hold high the Banner of Woman's Emancipation," and so forth. With the exception of a play which fails, she obtains considerable success as a writer, and entirely eclipses the personality of her rather invertebrate and weak-willed husband, who spends a humdrum existence in company with his little child Rosina. The death of the latter gives a tragic termination to the book.

Yet once more we light upon a novel from a lady's hand containing situations likely to challenge objection from the legal standpoint. The plot of The Curse that came Home mainly turns upon the theft of a will drawn up by David Ogilvie in favour of his wife and step-daughter. When the wife dies, and David goes out in distraction and is supposed to have fallen down a disused mining-shaft, his nephew, Sandy Brunt, conceals the will and takes possession of the property, to the exclusion of the step-daughter, who is reduced to poverty. But inasmuch as the document never seems to have been attested, there is no reason—at least according to English law—to take for granted that Sandy was not the rightful heir. In other respects the tale is stirring and romantic enough, and little fault can be found with anything except the quantity of Scotch dialect imported into some of the conversations.

A neatly got-up little volume, entitled The Hypnotic Experiment of Dr. Reeves, contains four other stories from the pen of a graphic and pleasing lady writer. They are all short, light stories of the magazine order, and display considerable promise.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Letters addressed to a College Friend during the Years 1840-1845 by John Ruskin. (George Allen.) It would really seem to be a question of some moment whether everything a famous author has written is worthy of publication. The drawers of the writing-table—even the contents, one is tempted to think, of the waste paper basket—are ransacked for scraps, and the findings are heaped together and metamorphosed into a volume. Reverence for a great teacher or poet should not be so sentimental; the more dignified and respectful attitude is to acknowledge frankly that quite half of the noblest author's work will not sustain his reputation, and should not, therefore, be given to the world. The editor of this volume discreetly conceals his identity behind a publisher's note, wherein it is announced that Mr. Ruskin, though he countenanced the publication of the letters, "is in no way responsible for their arrangement and editing." Consequently, the blame for irritating us with a good deal of trivial matter, well enough and pleasant enough in a private letter, does not rest with their writer; and we are unfeignedly glad, for Mr. Ruskin has been, and still will be for many years, we hope, a foremost teacher of the generation. There are delightfully tender, brilliant, witty, and wise passages plentifully scattered throughout this volume, which make the greater half of it well worthy of attention and even admiration. But there is a good deal that is neither witty nor wise nor brilliant, which, out of our respect and affection for Mr. Ruskin, we could wish had never been printed.

Books and Players. By Allan Monkhouse. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.) In spite of the aggressively ugly and bilious cover, there is a good deal of pleasure to be got out of this book. It is evidently the work of a man who has taken the trouble to think: it reveals a more than ordinary knowledge of English literature; and the style, if not particularly distinguished, is thoroughly adequate and at times noticeably vigorous. Mr. Monkhouse's essay on George Meredith's poems is the best of the collection: probably no one has dealt so justly with them before. Perhaps the reason he has been so conspicuously successful in his most difficult task is that he is one of those who agree with Ruskin that "all high art should appeal to the emotions through the intellect." And certainly no one whose intellect is not uncommonly wide-awake can hope to derive much pleasure or profit from "The Woods of Westernmain." It is a creditable achievement to prove to the sceptic, as Mr. Monkhouse has done, that the difficulties can be successfully tackled, and much wisdom gained by surmounting them. The essay on Mr. Meredith's novels is good, but scarcely so well knit: it sprawls a little in places. The author has something to say towards the end of the volume about the theatre, for the lack of literary quality in the modern stage-play distresses him. He puts his case well and temperately, and his attitude is quite intelligible. But he fails to realise that the novel has superseded the drama, and that people go, and will probably continue to go, to the theatre to be amused. Nor are we quite sure that they are wrong. Some of us prefer to study literature in the quiet of our studies. But Mr. Monkhouse, even when most inclined to preach, is never dull, and deserves to be congratulated on an earnest and capable book.

Sorrow and Song. By Coulson Kernahan. (Ward, Lock, Bowden & Co.) Heine, Rossetti, and Philip Marston are familiar enough, both as personalities and through their writings, to most people who read at all. Every young essayist repeats the familiar truths about one, at least, of them; but Mr. Kernahan treats us to dissertations upon all three. His boldness makes one hope that he has some new and profound truths to utter. But he only tells us again pretty much what every other writer has said. His style, moreover, is not strong enough to carry easily so big a load of commonplace. In "A Singer from over Seas" he says some graceful words about Mrs. Chandler Moulton; but faith in his judgment is destroyed when he compares a poem of hers "to the work of Mrs. Browning and Miss Rossetti—our two supreme and pre-eminent women poets." The name of Emily Brontë starts to the lips at the sound of these superlatives. Whether Robertson of Brighton was worth writing about at this time of day must remain a matter of opinion; it is fair to suggest that his affinity to sorrow and song is rather remote. Mr. Kernahan's work is earnest enough; and should he leave the beaten track, finding something new to describe, it is possible that he may do something very good in the future.

Interludes: Second Series. By Horace Smith. (Macmillans.) This small volume contains two essays, a farce of the order dubbed "screaming" in old play-bills, and a collection of verses somewhat in the style of Ingoldsby. Mr. Smith probably does not expect to be taken very seriously as an author, though he writes better than most people, albeit his manner is a trifle old-fashioned; but he has every right to claim recognition as a teller of good stories. Shrewd, humorous, ludicrous anecdotes trample on each other's heels through seventy delightful pages. A suggestive criticism or keen comment springs up here and there, proving the writer to be thoughtful as well as witty. He complains that the School Board teacher is destroying "original character," and makes a distinct point by a neat reference to Punch. "In the days of John Leech, the pictures and the letterpress at the foot of the pictures were redolent of originality of dress, manner, speech, and inner character." Nowadays he declares that everybody is like everybody else, and "Punch has recourse for his mirth to the absurdities of fashionable life and the playfulness of ingenious satire." There is a good deal of truth in this remark. We commend the book to the busy man who wants to be amused over his after-dinner pipe. It were hard to find a more genial companion than the author of Interludes.

SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran. By George Milner. (Longmans.) An enthusiast on the beauty of the Isle of Arran here pours out his love in the daintiest of volumes. Adorned with copperplate views of mountain and glen, and studded with well-chosen poetical quotations, this is just the book to thrust into one's pocket at the seaside. Mr. Milner is eminently appreciative: no effect of light and shadow, no sunset glory of the waves escapes him. Arran means to most men a remembrance of waist-deep heather dominated by Goat Fell. Here they may read of every subtle beauty on its hillsides, every point of jutting rock swept by the silver fringe of sea; of the tangle of wild flowers, and the quaint Scotch characters to be met in its villages. Some of these are familiar to most tourists in Scotland—as, for instance, the seaside "laddie," who is "three-fourths trousers and nearly one-fourth blue bonnet." The author writes with much good taste when rock and glen are in question, but has occasionally caught the Scotch fondness for imposing verbiage. Clothes at one time are "slender integuments," at another "habilitory environments." The little book does for Arran what another well-known volume has done for Iona. An index of quotations in such a book is useful, though some ungrateful folk may be found who will turn to these more frequently than to the pages which they ornament; but people will be perverse and thankless to the end. Mr. Milner's study of Arran is a graceful purpose, gracefully carried out.

On Sunny Shores. By Clinton S. Collard. (Gay & Bird.) Mr. Collard writes pleasantly, and his book is not without considerable merit. He has the faculty of seizing the salient points in a description, whether it be of a scene or of a human being. But On Sunny Shores is too scrappy, and deals with too great a variety of places, to demand very serious attention. The author is at his best in a really charming reminiscence of a visit to Bellagio. There is both sympathy and a restrained humour in this little sketch, and we are sorry when we have read to the end. Mr. Collard should concentrate his attention on one country, say, North Italy for choice, and give us a book of his impressions. It would be well worth having. The illustrations to the present volume are unpretentious, but none the worse for that.

AN interesting description of Matabeleland and its late monarch is to be found in the pages of Mr. J. Cooper Chadwick's Three Years with Lobengula, just published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. Mr. Chadwick is a good type of the pioneers of whom we heard so much during the recent expedition, which ended in the downfall of Lobengula's power; but he did not take part in the war, as a distressing gun accident had already cut short a very promising career. As a trooper in Methuen's Horse, an officer in the Bechuanaland Border Police, and finally as one of the Chartered Company's agents at Bulawayo, Mr. Chadwick has a stirring story to tell; and his three years' residence at Lobengula's court gave him special opportunities of studying savage life, of which he was not slow to make use. The book may be confidently recommended, both for veracity and picturesqueness—an unusual combination.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are glad to hear that Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have in the press a volume of hitherto uncollected papers by the late Walter Pater, to be entitled Greek Studies.

WE are now able to give some details about the collection of essays on the Higher Criticism, which—as already announced in the ACADEMY—Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have in preparation. The volume will be entitled Lea Mosaica, and will consist of fourteen essays, together with an introduction by the late Bishop of Bath and Wells. The editor is the Rev. Dr. Richard Valpy French, rector of Llanmartin, who himself writes on the period of the Judges. Among the other contributors are—Prof. Sayce, on "The Archaeological Witness to the Literary Activity of the Mosaic Age"; Canon Rawlinson, on "The Levitical Code"; Prof. G. C. M. Douglas, of Glasgow, on "The Deuteronomical Code"; Prof. Stanley Leathes, on "The Eighth Century"; Dr.

Robert Sinker, on "The Seventh Century"; and Prof. R. Watts, of Belfast, on "The Post-exilic Period. The volume will conclude with a summary by the Rev. Henry Wace, principal of King's College, London. The publishers hope to issue it before the end of November.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce a new biography of Warren Hastings, by Colonel G. B. Malleon, the historian of the French in India and of the Mutiny. It will be in two volumes, illustrated with a portrait.

MESSRS. BELL are about to publish a volume on The British Fleet, by Commander Robinson, R.N. The historical portion of the work will be largely illustrated with copies of old prints, and of paintings by well-known marine artists; the caricatures of Rowlandson, Gillray, &c., have also afforded material for the illustration of social life and costume. The large paper edition will contain numerous engraved portraits.

THE History of the Portuguese in India, upon which Mr. F. C. Danvers, of the Record Department of the India Office has been engaged for some time past, will be published by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., in the course of the present month. It is in two volumes, illustrated with reproductions of plates from rare books, and of original sketches.

THE Cambridge University Press will issue immediately The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 1789-1815, by Mr. J. H. Rose, of Christ's College. This is the first volume of the new "Cambridge Historical Series," which is being prepared under the general editorship of Mr. G. W. Prothero, the new professor of history at Edinburgh.

FOLLOWING the fashion, Mr. Percy Fitzgerald has written his autobiography. It will be published by Messrs. Bentley, under the title of Memoirs of an Author, in two big volumes, with a portrait.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish within a few days The Life and Adventures of John Gladwyn Jebb, by his widow, with an introduction by Mr. Rider Haggard. It will be a small volume, illustrated with a photogravure portrait.

CHAMBERS'S Concise Gazetteer of the World, topographical, statistical, and historical, which has been in progress for some considerable time, is now in the press, and will be ready shortly. It will form a stout, but handy, crown octavo volume of between 700 and 800 pages. The type is small, but distinct and clear, and the page double column. Special attention has been given to the pronunciation of the more difficult names of places, to etymologies, and to the origin of names; while there are many interesting local, literary, and historical references not usually found in works of this kind.

MR. CONAN DOYLE'S new book will be published by Messrs. Methuen, on October 10. It is entitled Round the Red Lamp, and contains the experiences of a general practitioner, round whose "red lamp" cluster many dramas—some sordid, some terrible. It is on one of the episodes of this book that the author founded his play "A Story of Waterloo," which Mr. Irving lately produced.

MR. FRANK R. STOCKTON'S new work, Pomona's Travels, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. on October 6, and will be issued simultaneously in America. In this work, Pomona of "Rudder Grange" fame takes a journey across the Atlantic, and records her impressions of England and Scotland. The work is illustrated by Mr. A. B. Frost.

DURING the present month a volume of verse by Mr. W. E. A. Axon will be published by Mr. John Heywood, of Manchester. In addition to the piece which gives its name to the book, "The Ancoats Skylark," the collection will contain translations from several languages, and a series of mediæval legends from Welsh, Italian, Irish, and other sources. Many of these deal with the relations between man, bird, and beast. It will include some of Mr. Axon's verse contributions to the ACADEMY.

A NEW volume of poems by Lady Lindsay, entitled The King's Last Vigil, will be issued by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. about the middle of the present month.

Tales o' Main Streets is the title of Mr. Arthur Morrison's East-End sketches, including "Lizerunt," "Without Visible Means," "Three Rounds," &c., which Messrs. Methuen & Co. will issue presently.

ON October 25 Messrs. Cassell & Co. will issue the first part of a new serial work, entitled The Story of the Sea. This has been prepared under the editorship of "Q.," and will contain a series of original illustrations by the following: W. H. Overend, J. Nash, Gordon Browne, Paul Hardy, W. C. Symons, C. de Lacy, C. W. Wyllie, R. Peacock, Wal Paget, W. Hatherell, W. H. Margetson, Fred Jane, and H. C. Seppings Wright.

The next volume of Mr. Elliot Stock's "Popular County History" series will be The History of Lancashire, by Colonel Fishwick, author of "The Lancashire Library."

MR. W. H. SPENCER, of Selby, will shortly issue an illustrated volume entitled The Story of Selby Abbey, from rise to restoration, written by Mr. W. Herbert Scott, author of "Old-Time Stories," of which the Archbishop of York has accepted the dedication. The London publisher is Mr. David Nutt.

LORD DUFFERIN has accepted the dedication of On the Cars and Off, a book on Canada, from Halifax to Victoria, by Mr. Douglas Sladen, which Messrs. Ward, Lock & Bowden are going to publish in the course of a few weeks.

MESSRS. GEORGE NEWNES & Co. will publish next week a story by Carlton Grange, entitled The Beechcourt Mystery.

THE following is a list of the forthcoming publications of the Kelmascott Press: (1) The Wood beyond the World, a romance by William Morris, with a woodcut designed by Sir E. Burne-Jones, and new borders and ornaments—Chaucer type, in black and red; (2) The Poems of Percy Bysshe Shelley, in 3 vols.—golden type; (3) Beowulf, Englished by William Morris and A. J. Wyatt—Troy type, in black and red; (4) Psalmi Penitentiales, a fifteenth century paraphrase in English verse of the Seven Penitential Psalms, written in Gloucester about 1420, edited by F. S. Ellis—Chaucer type, in black and red; (5) The Life and Death of Jason, by William Morris, with two woodcuts designed by Sir E. Burne-Jones—Troy type, in black and red. Needless to say that all of these will be issued in very limited editions, and at proportionately high prices.

MESSRS. REMINGTON & Co. will shortly issue the following books:—Under the Apple Trees, by Clement Scott; Australia Revenged, by "Boomerang"; The Accountant, by F. H. Mel; An Election Journal, by "M."; Shitrick the Drummer, by Miss Julia A. Fraser; and In a House of Pain, by Frederic Vynon.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish this month the following books: A Perfect Fool, by Florence Warden, and A Tragic Honeymoon, by Alan St. Aubyn, both in two volumes; also John Strange Winter's tenth Christmas Annual, entitled The Stranger Woman, in paper covers.

THE first edition of Mr. Stanley Weyman's new novel, My Lady Rothera, having been exhausted before publication, a further edition, completing the twentieth thousand, is being prepared as rapidly as possible.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish this week an eleventh edition of Miss Marie Corelli's latest novel, Barabbas, thus bringing the sale of this book, in its one volume form, up to its twentieth thousand.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co., publishers, have removed from 6, Bouverie-street, to 93, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

BEFORE closing up his work on the old A B C Hornbook, which is to contain something like 200 illustrations, Mr. Andrew Tuer, of the Leadenhall Press, asks to be favoured with notes from those who may remember the horn-book in use, or who may have in their possession examples which he has not yet seen. Information about spurious horn-books, from the sale of which certain persons are at present said to be reaping a golden harvest, is also sought.

THE Rev. and Mrs. Haweis's autumn "lectures" at Queen's House begin on Saturday next, October 13, with one by Surgeon-General Sir William Moore on the opium question. Mr. Theodore Wright has promised an Ibsen afternoon, and Mr. Israel Gollancz an Anglo-Saxon one.

M. E. DUCÉRE, under librarian of Bayonne, invites subscriptions towards the publication of a "Histoire Maritime de Bayonne: les Corsaires i.e. privateers) sous l'Ancien Régime." M. Ducéré writes from original documents, and the exploits often touch on English history. In the parochial registers of the region we have frequently met with the record of the deaths of these privateers in English prisons, usually those of Plymouth and Falmouth. The publication will begin as soon as 150 names are received. The price of the octavo volume will be 12 francs; the publisher, M. E. Hourquet, 5, Arceaux du Port-Neuf, Bayonne.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

FULL term will begin both at Oxford and at Cambridge towards the end of next week. At Cambridge the Rev. A. Austen Leigh, Provost of King's, enters upon his second year of office as Vice-Chancellor; while at Oxford the new Vice-Chancellor will be the Rev. Dr. J. Magrath, Provost of Queen's, who succeeds, in virtue of seniority, the Principal of Hertford.

By the appointment of Dr. Kitchin to the Deanery of Durham, he is again afforded an opportunity of displaying his interest in education; for the Dean is ex-officio Warden of Durham University, which includes the Science College at Newcastle.

MR. D. G. RITCHIE, of Jesus College, Oxford—who is well known for his numerous contributions to philosophical literature—has been elected to the chair of logic and metaphysics at St. Andrews, vacant by the transfer of Prof. Henry Jones to Glasgow. This is the chair formerly occupied by T. Spencer Baynes.

ON Friday of this week the Duke of York was to open the new buildings of Yorkshire College, Leeds.

MR. G. P. MORIARTY, of Balliol College, Oxford, has been appointed lecturer in Indian history at Cambridge, in succession to Prof. H. Morse Stephens.

THE last number of The Pelican Record (published by members of Corpus Christi College, Oxford) contains some interesting reminiscences, signed, J. W. O., of Mr. Ruskin's residence at Corpus, which began on his election as an honorary fellow in 1871. We are glad to observe that this little periodical is now in its fourth year of existence.

THE Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, of Altrincham, has been appointed to a professorial post at Manchester College, Oxford.

THE late Miss Margaret Harris, of Dundee, has bequeathed about £35,000 to the University College of that city, which still remains, for many purposes, distinct from the neighbouring University of St. Andrews.

BY the death of Commendatore Giovanni B. de Rossi, the famous Roman archaeologist, Prof. F. Max Müller becomes the senior of the seven surviving foreign members of the Académie des Inscriptions. He was elected so long ago as 1869. His colleagues are Sir Henry Rawlinson (1887); Prof. Ernst Curtius, of Berlin (1890); Dr. Theodor R. von Sichel, director of the Austrian Institute at Rome (1890); Mr. Whitley Stokes (1891); and Prof. G. Ascoli, of Milan (1891).

IT is with much regret that we record the death of Dr. J. G. Greenwood, which took place at Eastbourne on September 25, in his seventy-third year. The son of an Independent minister, and one of the earliest graduates in classical honours at London University, he was eminently fitted by character and administrative talents for his life-work of presiding over the first of English provincial colleges. After being for a short time assistant master at University College (where he had been educated), on the foundation of Owens College in 1851, he was appointed to the combined chair of classics and history at the early age of twenty-nine. In 1857, he succeeded to the office of principal, which he held (together with the chair of Greek) until ill-health compelled him to resign in 1889. He was also the first Vice-chancellor of Victoria University. Dr. Greenwood's published works consist only of a translation of the Pneumatics of Hero of Alexandria (1851), and The Elements of Greek Grammar (1857), which has passed through several editions. The address which he delivered to the students at the opening of the new buildings in 1873, on "Some Relations of Culture to Practical Life," was printed in the commemorative volume of Essays and Addresses (1874).

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SUMMER SONNETS FROM MY GARDEN.

Voices.

I'm like the girl that tumbled down the well
Into Dame Hollis's dim enchanted ground,
Who heard strange voices calling all around,
And rose up from the meadow where she fell.
And first the fruit tree: "Lo, my apples swell, Gather them now while they are ripe and sound!"
"My loaves are ready, take them, baked and browned!"
The oven next implored (Old Grimm doth tell).
Thus I, when I my garden pass along
Hear voices many calling unto me,
"Out me!" the grass doth whisper, "I'm too long!"
"My hives are full," murmurs the honey bee;
"Gather us!" cries the berries' jocund crew—
Nay! Shall I have my fairy guerdon too?

Honey.

When bees wend forth in black continuous stream,
And steadily return unto the hive,
When all the air with humming is alive
From pearly dawn to day's last golden gleam;
Then it behoves to work and not to dream!
Up! if your honey store you want to thrive
(Ere hungry drones with robber-bees connive),
That you may gather all the blossom-cream.
Yet let me pause a moment on the brink—
Between yon flower-calyx and its spoil
What labour interveneth! Only think,
What you deem play, to bees and me 'tis toil,
Yet labour, perspiration, many a sting,
So I've the honey—cheerfully I sing!

Summer Dawn.

I like to draw the curtain at the dawn
And look upon the sky ere it be day,
When all the lands lie silent still and gray,
And wan doth gleam the wet and dew-drenched lawn;
The veil of night is solemnly withdrawn,
And strange new lights on things familiar play,
While changing slowly, neutral tints give way
To warmer shades of russet and of fawn.
But up above in the pure zenith high
Pale opals blend with faintest turquoise green,
Till living flecks of fire throb o'er the sky,
Forerunners they of the great orb unseen—
Then, sudden pours a throistle forth its lay,
And see, the summer dawn hath changed to day!

KATE FREILIGRATH-KROEGER.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Altpreussische Monatsschrift for 1894 deals chiefly with topics of historical and anthropological interest. The articles in the first quarterly part (Heft 1 and 2) are on "The International Relations of Lithuania to Poland under Jagellon and Witold," by A. Lewicki (an attempt to modify the common view of the terms of union by reference to Slavonic sources); a continuous correspondence between Lavater and Hamann, between 1777 and 1785, communicated by H. Funck, full of the eccentric humours of both "prophets"; and a character-sketch by H. Lohmeyer, of Max Toeppen, a schoolmaster at Marienburg and Elburg, known in wider circles for his services to the advancement of German historical studies, both general and provincial. An appendix of nine pages gives a list of his contributions to various journals. The second quarter (Heft 3 and 4) begins with an account of "A Prince's Funeral at Königsberg in the Seventeenth Century," by P. Kalwelt, the said prince being the Elector of Brandenburg, George William; the article shows how sectarian antipathies displayed themselves between Lutheran and Reformed at the grave. This paper is followed by a copious and interesting article on "Folk-Lore from the Plant World," especially for West Prussia, by A. Treichel; and two studies of the times of the Teutonic Order, the first by H. Bonk, "the Towns and Towers (Burgen) in Old Prussia, in relation to the Formation of the Soil," and the second by P. Reh, proposing to set out clearly the relations of the Order to Bishop Christian (thirteenth century). One or two reviews and other communications complete the contents of these two numbers.

THE Boletín of the Real Academie de la Historia, July to September, opens with a valuable study of the conquest and colonisation of Mexico, by J. García Icazbalceta. The writer defends the action of the Spaniards in Mexico after the wars of the conquest. The faults of the colonial system, or no-system, were common to the time. The labours of the missionaries, especially of the Franciscans, were praiseworthy, though they have not altogether prevented a mixture of heathen superstitions with Christianity. The article affords a temperate account of what can be said in favour of Spanish rule in Mexico. A Roman bell with inscription, found at Tarragona, gives a new Latin word, cacabulus, the origin, according to Hübner, of the Spanish cascabel and its cognates. The longest and most important paper is by Father Fita, on the epigraphy of Merida and its neighbourhood. He prints 150 inscriptions, seventy of which are not to be found in the Corpus. It is to be hoped that this will give an impulse to archaeological research in Estremadura, a province rich in Roman remains, but comparatively untouched since.

Jiménez de la Espada prints, with full comment, an anonymous MS. of the fifteenth century, advocating the constant harassing of the Barbary coast by expeditions from the south of Spain.

THE Revista Contemporánea of September 15 has twelve sonnets in Spanish on the Creed, by Luis Cánovas, which recall singularly the Ecclesiastical Sonnets of Wordsworth.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"English Episodes," by Frederick Wedmore; "Poems," by Lionel Johnson, with a title design by H. P. Horne; three volumes in the "Diversi Colores" series—"Carols and Poems," by Selwyn Image; "Essays upon Matthew Arnold," by Arthur Galton; "Poems," by Ernest Dowson; "Out of Egypt: Stories from the Threshold of the East," by Percy Hemingway, with cover designed by Gleeson White; "The Happy Wanderer," by Percy Hemingway, with a title designed by H. P. Horne; "Preferences Old and New," by Harry Quilter; "The Shadowy Waters," by W. B. Yeats; "Some Account of the Old Church at Chelsea, and of its Monuments," by R. R. Davies; "The Wind among the Reeds," by W. B. Yeats; "Occasional Portraits," by Will Rothenstein; a volume of Irish Stories, by Mrs. H. A. Hinkson (Katherine Tynan); "Songs," by Dollie Radford; a volume of imaginative prose pieces, by Ernest Dowson; "Songs from Vagabondia," by Bliss Carman and Richard Hovey, with decorations by T. Meteyard; and "Revolted Woman: Past, Present, and to Come," by Charles G. Harper, illustrated.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Vol. II. and Section 4 of "The Royal Natural History," edited by Richard Lydekker, containing descriptions and very many illustrations of the larger mammals; "Cameos of Literature," based on Charles Knight's "Half Hours with the Best Authors," but also representing authors of the present day; a new edition of "The Edinburgh Edition of the Waverley Novels," in 25 vols., with vignettes by Lancelot Steed and others; "Union Jottings" by W. W. Lloyd, with coloured illustrations; Max O'Rell's new volume "John Bull & Co., the great colonial branches of the firm, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, illustrated; "A Son of Reuben," by Silas R. Hocking, with illustrations by H. R. Steer, also a booklet by the same author, entitled "Sweethearts Yet"; a revised edition of Edward Lear's "Nonsense Songs and Stories," with rhymes and illustrations never before published, and a biographical notice by Sir Edward Strachey; "Stirring Tales of Colonial Adventure," by Skipp Borlase; "The Horse Doctor," by Geo. Armitage, with special reference to sheep farming in the Colonies, also a revised edition of Mr. Armitage's "Horse Doctor"; two new volumes, "Waiting at Table," and "The Duties of Servants," by the author of "Manners and Rules of Good Society"; "Homer's Iliad and Odyssey," in the Albion Poets; "The Century Reciter," Second Series, edited by Leopold Wagner.

Children's Books.—"Angels Unawares," by C. H. Barstow; "The Magic Half-Crown," by the author of "Crib and Fly"; "The Girls' Own Book," by Mrs. Valentine; "Cris Fairlie's Boyhood," by Mrs. Eiloart; and "Sea-Fights and Land Battles," by Mrs. Valentine; "The Little Folk's Picture Book"; "The Little Folk's Gift Book"; "The Alexander Picture Book"; "The Animal Object Book";

"Over the Wide World"; "One, Two, Three, Four"; "The Circus A.B.C."; "British Soldiers Past and Present"; and "The Surprise Circus," a novelty in toys.

MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Life, Letters, and Last Poems of Lewis Morrison-Grant," by Jessie Annie Anderson, with portrait and illustrations; "The History of Civilisation in Scotland," by Dr. John Mackintosh, in 4 vols., Vol. III.; "Ancient Lives of the Scottish Saints," translated by the Rev. Dr. W. M. Metcalfe; "An Account of the Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, written in Egypt during the years 1833-1835," by William Lane, with sixty-seven illustrations and twenty-seven full-page plates; "Twixt Gloamin' and the Mirk: Tales and Sketches of Scottish Life," and "Housing of the People: an Example in Co-operation," by Sir Hugh Gilzean-Reid; "Thistledown: a Book of Scotch Humour, Character, Folk-lore, Story, and Anecdote," by Robert Ford, illustrated edition; "Proverbs, Proverbial Expressions, and Popular Rhymes of Scotland," collected and arranged, with introduction, notes, and parallel phrases, by Andrew Cheviot; "James Macpherson, the Highland Freebooter," a stirring tale of love and revenge, by J. Gordon Phillips; "Cartsburn and Cartdyke," by George Williamson.

Poetry.—"Poems, Songs, and Sonnets," by Robert Reid; "The Agnostic, and other Poems," by George Anderson; "Songs of Thule," by Laurence J. Nicolson, with portrait.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Fiction.—"The Eccentrics," in 3 vols., by Percy Ross; "Absent, yet Present," in 3 vols., by Gilberta M. F. Lyon; "The Other Bond," by Dora Russell; "Her Loving Slave: a Romance of Sedgemoor," by Hume Nisbet, illustrated by the author; "The Westovers," by Algernon Ridgeway; "The Vengeance of Medea," by Edith Gray Wheelwright; "Une Culotte or, The New Woman," a Story of Modern Oxford, by Tivoli, illustrated by A. W. Cooper; "A Ruined Life," by Emily St. Clair; "A Dawnless Fate," by Ivon H. Campion; "First Davenport of Bramhall," by Joseph Bradbury; "An Unknown Power," by Charles E. R. Bellairs; "Lillieville: a Tale of Adventure," by Maurice J. Sexton; "The Flaming Sword," being an Account of the extraordinary Adventures and Discoveries of Dr. Percival in the Wilds of Africa, written by himself; "Lost, £100 Reward," by Miriam Young; "Studies in Miniature," by a Titular Vicar; "Pipe Lights," being a collection of random thoughts concerning a variety of subjects, by Harold T. Whitaker; "His Last Amour," by Jane Rumbelow; "A Police Sergeant's Secret," by Kilsyth Steller.

Miscellaneous.—"The Needs for a Happy Life," by Edward Howley, with seven photographic illustrations; "Ibsen and the Drama," by Zanoni; "Leaves from a Lawyer's Diary," by William Holloway; "Glad Thoughts of Great Minds," a Birthday Book, by Julia C. de Micy.

Tales for the Young.—"Seven Imps," by Kathleen Wallis, with full-page illustrations; "Thought Fairies," by Helen Waters, with a frontispiece.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Lays of the Dragon Slayer," by Maxwell Gray; "The Daughters of Danaus," by Mona Caird; "An Agitator," by Clementina Black; "A Winter Jaunt to Norway," by Mrs. Alec Tweedie, second edition; "Dust before the Wind," by May Crommelin; "The Country Month by Month," by J. A. Owen, and Prof.

G. S. Boulger—the remaining monthly volumes, and “Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter,” in four volumes; “By Voel Woods and Waters,” by Edward Step, illustrated: “A History of the United States Navy from 1775 to 1893,” vol. ii., by Edgar Stanton Maclay, with technical revision by Lieutenant Roy. C. Smith, U.S.N.; “Strikes, Labour Questions, and other Economic Difficulties,” by the author of “The New Utopia”; “The Legend of Birse and Other Poems,” by Lord Grauville Gordon; “Hercules and the Marionettes,” a story for children by R. Murray Gilchrist, illustrated by Charles P. Sainton; and a cheap edition of “The Story-Book Series.”

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BÜCHER-VERZEICHNISSE der herzoglichen Bibliothek zu Wolfenbüttel. 2. Bd. Wolfenbüttel: Zwissler. 20 M.
CLAVIER, P. Pages détachées: Notes de voyage. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
GRÉVILLE, H. Fiddike. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
GUYOT, le lieutenant. De Montémar à Constantinople par mer et retour à bicyclette. Paris: Plon. 4 fr.
MENNUEUR DE KEMPTEN, V. Pratique brève pour tenir livres de compte à la guise et manière italienne. Publié d'après l'édition de 1550 par J. G. Ch. Volmer. Stuttgart: Brettinger. 3 M. 50 Pf.
MERLET, L. Poètes Beaucérons antérieurs au XIX^e siècle. T. II. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BARRÉ, E. Le nabab René Madoe, histoire diplomatique des projets de la France sur le Bengale et le Pendjab (1772—1808). Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
BISMARCK, F. Fürt, politische Reden. 11. Bd. 1885—6. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
BLENNERHASSETT, L. Talleyrand. Eine Studie. Berlin: Paetel. 12 M.
ERNSTHAUSEN, A. E. v. Erinnerungen e. preussischen Beamten. Bielefeld: Velhagen. 8 M.
GAFFARELLI, P. Bonaparte et les Républiques italiennes. Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
GSEOROVIVUS, F. Briefe an den Staatssekretär Hermann v. Thile. Hreg. v. H. v. Petersdorff. Berlin: Paetel. 6 M.
LEONHARD, R. Institutionen des römischen Rechts. Leipzig: Veit. 11 M.
THÉBAULT, Mémoires du général Baron. T. III. 1799—1806. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- FROMENT, A. Les merveilles de la flore primitive. Basel: Georg. 2 M. 40 Pf.
LIVRET-GUIDE géologique dans le Jura et les Alpes de la Suisse. Paris: Alcan. 15 fr.
RITTER, E. Le centenaire de Diez. Basel: Georg. 2 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BRANDTETTER, R. Malaisio-polynésische Forschungen. III. Luzern: Doleschal. 2 M.
MUELLER, H. Studia Statiana. Berlin: Heinrich. 1 M. 20 Pf.
RITTER, E. Le centenaire de Diez. Basel: Georg. 2 M.
STUDEN, Prager, aus dem Gebiete der klassischen Alterthumswissenschaft. 1.—4. Hft. Prag: Dominicus. 7 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SEPTUAGINT VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

VIII.

Athenæum Club: Sept. 27, 1894.

The autumn holiday having come to an end, perhaps you will allow me to resume my sermon upon a text whose importance cannot be exaggerated. I venture to think it is little short of scandalous that the matter should have been allowed to lie dormant so continuously in this country, which has the most learned clergy in Europe. We have a continual outcry against the results of modern criticism from many men who yet permit without question or protest a text of the Bible, which seems unquestionably to have been prepared and edited by the fanatical enemies of Christianity, and largely as an antidote to Christianity, to be used and quoted by learned and simple. Not only so; but when the new translation of the Bible was projected, this very text was, most unfortunately, made the basis of it, and almost every blunder and sophistication it contains was given the imprimatur of the representatives of English Biblical science, in spite of the teaching of the Church for 1500 years, and in spite of the warnings of such an ancient authority as St. Augustine, and such a modern critic as Lagarde.

The scandal is especially great, it seems to me, on the part of those filling richly endowed university chairs of Divinity, who are apparently as much devoted to the Masoretic text as Taylor the Platonist was to the bust of Jupiter to which he said his regular prayers, and as comfortable in their faith as is the ostrich who thinks he baffles pursuit by hiding his head in the sand. I have to repeat that the question is only in a secondary way a philological one. In a discussion on Hebrew grammar or Hebrew lexicography, some of us would, indeed, be impertinent to intervene; but on a question of literary and historical evidence, we claim to have had as good a training in as intricate a field of enquiry as most people, and the issues raised by the problem really consist of questions of historical and literary criticism.

In the last of a series of letters which you have allowed me to print in the ACADEMY, I tried to show that the Pentateuch as represented by the Hebrew text is grossly corrupt, and that the Samaritan and Septuagint versions, which have neither of them suffered mutilation or sophistication so far as we know for polemical reasons, are very superior to it, and ought to be followed in preference. I now propose to say something of the Book of Joshua, which is particularly interesting in view of the discussion raised in these letters, because in several cases the Hebrew text has apparently been deliberately changed with an anti-Christian motive.

I would just remark that it is naturally difficult to find evidence before the time of Josephus, showing that the Septuagint was used in Palestine, and not the Hebrew Bible, after the time of the Seleucidae. The Second Book of Maccabees does, however, supply us with a slight piece of evidence, in the name “Odollam,” which the Septuagint gives for the “Adullam” of the Hebrew text.

Again, it is curious that throughout Joshua, as in the case of the Pentateuch, the name Gergashites has been changed to Gershonites in the Hebrew. The former name always occurs in the Samaritan and Septuagint versions of the Pentateuch, and in the Septuagint version of Joshua.

Let us now turn to other particulars which have been collected, and pointed out by many critics, notably by Bishop Horsley, Canon Espin, and Dr. Davidson, among those easily accessible.

Joshua iv. 9. The Septuagint and Vulgate have “twelve other stones” for “twelve stones,” which is assuredly right.

v. 2. The Septuagint, Vulgate, and almost all the ancient versions have “flint knives” for “sharp knives.”

viii., 26. This verse is entirely omitted by the Septuagint. As Horsley says, the circumstance is very improbable. The stretching out of the spear was a signal for the ambush to rise, and there was no reason to continue it so long. The interpolation was probably made to produce a resemblance between this story and the defeat of the Amalekites (Exodus xvii.); but the two stories are altogether different.

viii., 17. The words “or Bethel” should be omitted, as they are omitted in the Septuagint. Houben has argued this point forcibly.

viii., 12 and 13. Horsley says: “It seems very improbable that 5000 men should now be placed in ambush on the very same side of the city where 30,000 had already taken their station. The Septuagint makes no mention of this second ambush of 5000 men.”

viii., 30-35. Mr. Espin says: “It is difficult to escape the conviction that these verses are here out of their proper and original place.” This he gives some reasons for, and continues: “Nearly all the MSS. of the Septuagint place verses 30-35 after ix. 2.”

x. 40. The word translated “springs” is made a proper name, Ἀργυρῶν, in the Septuagint.

x. 15. This verse is omitted in many MSS., notably A and B of the Septuagint. Its irrelevance is otherwise apparent, and nearly all the commentators treat the verse as an interpolation.

xiii. 4. “From the south” of the Hebrew ought to be “on the south,” and connected with the previous words, as in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, &c., &c.

xii. 7 and 8. Horsley says:—

“These two verses, as they stand in the Hebrew text and in our public translation, are inconsistent with the history. For the half-tribe of Manasseh, which had received its inheritance with the Reubenites and the Gadites on the east of Jordan, was not to have another settlement in this land on the west of the river, but the other half of that tribe was to be settled here. The true sense of the passage, as it was originally written, is unquestionably preserved in the version of the LXX, which is to this effect, ‘And now divide this land for an inheritance to the nine tribes and to the half of the tribe of Manasseh. From Jordan unto the great sea thou shalt assign it. The great sea shall be the boundary. For to two tribes, to Reuben and to Gad and to half of the tribe of Manasseh, Moses had given their allotment on the other side Jordan. On the east he had made their allotment.’”

xv. 30. Chesil, which means “the fool,” is clearly a Jewish polemical alteration for the original “Bethel,” as some MSS. of the Septuagint have it.

xv. 59. After this verse the Septuagint names eleven towns which are omitted in the Hebrew. “Tekoa and Ephrata which is Bethlehem, and Phagor and Altan and Kulan and Tatum and Thobes (or Sores), and Carem Galem and Thethir or Bether and Mancho, eleven cities with their villages.” Mr. Espin argues conclusively that this verse has dropped out of the Hebrew; and the reason, like the alteration of the name in verse 30, is assuredly that given by Jerome, who in Micah. v. 2, notes that the variation between the Hebrew and the Greek existed in his day, and says that it was uncertain whether the passage was suppressed by the Jews in order to get rid of the mention of the Saviour’s birth-place or interpolated by the LXX. The former alternative will hardly be doubted by those who have followed these letters. It was long ago perceived by Whiston, who urged that while the LXX had no possible motive to get rid of such a verse, the Rabbins had, since Bethlehem, where Christ was born, is there called Ephrata, and is there also shown to have belonged to the tribe of Judah.

xviii. 21. The Valley of Keziz, as Mr. Espin says, ought to be read Emek Keziz, as in the Septuagint.

xix. 26. Shihor-libnath in the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac are the names of two places, and not of one as given in the Hebrew text.

xix. 34. The name Judah, which occurs in this verse in the Hebrew and has greatly puzzled commentators, is omitted in the Septuagint and is clearly a mistake.

xxi. vv. 41 and 42 tells us that the Levitical cities were 48, and that they had been all described. In all the Masoretic copies the omission of the two verses 36 and 37 reduces the number of towns to 44. The two verses, however, occur in many Hebrew MSS., and in the Greek the words omitted in the English version run thus: “And out of the tribe of Reuben a city of refuge for the slayer, Bezer in the wilderness with her suburbs; and Jahazah with her suburbs; Kedemoth with her suburbs; and Mephaath with her suburbs: four cities." This shows how even the Masorets dealt with their texts when it suited them. The number of these verses is necessary, in order to make the number of verses in Joshua 656 according to the Masora, and not 658 as in our received Bibles; and the explanation, doubtless, is that they were omitted either by accident or purposely from the mother manuscript followed by the Masorets.

xxi. 42. After this verse the Septuagint introduces a passage recording a grant of a special inheritance to Joshua, and also that he buried at Timnath Serah the flint knives with which he had circumcised the people. There can be very little doubt that this is a perfectly genuine statement, which has been omitted in the Hebrew.

xxii. 34. The name Ed given to the altar is omitted in the Septuagint and most MSS., and seems a mistake.

xxiv. 1. The Septuagint here reads Shiloh for Shechem, which is in the Hebrew. Here again we have traces of a polemical alteration.

xxiv. 30. The Septuagint here has a sentence recording the burial in Joshua's tomb of the stone knives with which he circumcised the people at Gilgal. This clause does not occur in the Masoretic text, and was doubtless excluded for some polemical reason. It is epitomised in the Arabic version.

xxiv. 33. To the end of the verse, as given in the Hebrew version, the Septuagint and the Syro-Hexapla add a clause to the effect that from that day the children of Israel took the ark and carried it about with them, and Phinehas served as priest, instead of his father Eleazar, until his death, when he was buried at Gabsar (Gibeah), which belonged to him. But the children of Israel, having gone every one to his own place and city, worshipped Astarte and Astaroth, and the other gods of the nations around them, and the Lord delivered them into the hands of Eglon, king of Moab, who had dominion over them eighteen years. Although this passage condenses facts also reported in the Book of Judges, there is no reason to doubt its being a perfectly reliable part of the old text.

These examples will suffice to show that in the Book of Joshua, as in the Pentateuch, the Rabbins who edited the Bible at the end of the first century, edited it with distinctly polemical motives, and did not scruple to garble and alter their text in order to satisfy the needs of their controversial strife with the Christians, and imposed upon Hebrew students from Jerome to our own day a deliberately corrupted Bible, which ought never to have had a place in a learned Christian Church.

The next letter will deal further with this issue.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

THE FETHARD AND CAREW STONES.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Oct. 1, 1894.

I have written for photographs of the Baginbun Stone, its neighbour the Fethard Castle Stone, and the Stone at Carew in Pembroke-shire. But I have seen the engraving of this last in Westwood's book, and have been lent by his niece, Miss Emma Swann, the rubbing he had received of the Fethard Castle Stone, supposed to be copied from it; and I can now give approximately correct transcripts of these two and explain their relation.

The Fethard Castle Stone almost certainly reads

Maq Git
Ev Tre=
cet.teqh

The capitals and division into words are mine. A photograph may show aspirating marks to the G and T; in any case, the S'it of the Bagin-bun Stone will pretty certainly be found to be Git or G'it. The final h is a h over the q.

This is a march-stone. Like the Aboyne Stone ("Maq Oitall Vorr, the hearth Vrobbac-cennevv"), it consists of the name of the occupier followed by that of the holding. And as in the St. Vigeau's Stone ("Ev B'ret") the holding is called by the name (in the locative case) of the family to whom it belonged or had belonged, the descendants (†aibh, pronounced ev) of Trecett'raqh (gen. -aigh, pronounced -eqh).

The Pembroke-shire inscription is one of two panels on a tall cross, the other panel being left blank. It almost certainly reads

Maq Git
Ev Tre
cet.teqh

The capitals and division into words are again mine. The final h is formed as in the Fethard Stone, but the r and first q are of totally different type. A photograph will doubtless show another (aspirating) dot after the last t. If the dot under the first v is not a mere natural mark in the stone, it is meant as a cancel-point, either to strike out the letter altogether or to show that it was not to be sounded separately from the q.

This is obviously a monument (giving his name and that of the place in Ireland from which he came) of one of the same family, and living on the same property. Whether he was the same man mentioned in the Fethard Stone depends partly on whether Maqv = Maq or signifies some more distant relationship. After reading Prof. Rhys's remarks on the word (Lectures on Welsh Philology, pp. 407-9), I cannot help thinking maqv to be merely the provincial survival of the earlier form of macc, which we know had maqv for its genitive. I may add, that in the Ogam inscriptions of Scotland, Maqq and its genitive Meqq are four times spelt with the q—Ogam, which = qv (Rhys, Lectures, pp. 265-7) or qu (ib., Chambers's Encyclopaedia, vii. 583)—never by the Ogam for c.

The idea of the Irish Stone being copied from the Welsh must of course be dismissed for ever. The idea of its being a modern forgery is not worth a parting kick.

The name of the ancestor, Trecett'raqh, is doubtless an adjective in -ach from the stems tre- and cet, and = a man of three battles (cf. Cond C'et'cat'ach, Cond "of the hundred battles").

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

"LA MESNIE HELLEQUIN"—"ALICHINO," INF. XXI. 118.

Dorney Wood, Burnham, Bucks: Sept. 24, 1894.

An interesting reference to the "mesnie Hellequin," the troop of devils of which we hear so often in mediaeval French literature, occurs in the Speculum Historiale of Vincent of Beauvais. After a chapter, "De Cognitione Hominis et animabus post mortem apparentibus" (Lib. xxix., Cap. 117, ed. Venice, 1494), follows one headed "Exemplum adhaec de familia Hellequini" (Cap. 118). In this chapter is related a story told by a certain Bishop of Orleans, "Henricus Aurelianensis Episcopus," of an incident which he had heard direct from the lips of the person to whom it had occurred—"rem . . . quam ipse audierat ab illo qui viderat scilicet Johanne Aurelianensis Ecclesiae canonico."

It appears that the bishop's informant, the said "Johannes canonicus," lent his steward to a friend who was undertaking a journey.

† Cf. aib, p. 346 of the Chronicon Scotorum (Rolls series).

The friend, before dismissing the steward, asked him for an account of the moneys which had passed through his hands; whereupon the latter, resenting what he regarded as a reflection on his honesty, in a hasty moment, wished himself at the devil, and the devil unluckily taking him at his word, he was incontinently drowned. After his death the steward appeared to his former master, and besought him to pray for him. The canon, having promised to do his best, proceeded to inquire of him as to whether he had been enrolled as a member of the "militia Hellequini." To this inquiry the steward replied in the negative, explaining that the infernal soldiery had lately ceased to "walk." Then, after enlightening his master as to the etymology of the word "Hellequinus," and having renewed his prayer for intercession, he disappeared with a wail:—

"Dicebat Johannes iste . . . 'Certe inquam ego vobis succurram quantunque potero. Sed obsecro ut dicatis mihi si vos estis deputatus in illa militia quam dicunt Hellequini.' Et ille: 'Non Domine. Illa militia jam non vadit, sed nuper ire desit, quia penitentiam suam peregit. Corruptus autem dictus est a vulgo Hellequinus pro Karlequino. Fuit enim Karolus Quintus, qui peccatorum suorum longam egit penitentiam et nuper tandem per intercessionem beati Dionysii liberatus est; sed rogo vos ut misereamini mei.' Et hoc dicens cum fletu evanuit."

An explanation of this popular derivation of "Hellequin" from "Charles Quint" is given in the Exposition de la doctrine chrestienne (apud Godefroy):—

"De la mesnie Helquin je te di communement ce sont deables qui vont en guise de gent qui vont a cheval trotant. . . . Tu dois savoir, mon enfant, que quint Charles qui fu en France, si emprunt une grande bataille et mourut. Apres sa mort l'en vit plusieurs au champ on la bataille avoit esté, auxi comme une grant assemblee de gens trotans à Charles. Et disoit ou que c'estoit le quint Charles qui estoit mort et qu'il revenoit au champ ou il avoit esté mort lui et sa gent. Et pour celui Charles quin, c'est à dire le quint Charles l'en dit Helquin. Si que pour celle apparence dit on encore quant l'en voit ou on ot auxi comme une assemblee de gens trotans a cheval par nuit: 'Ce sont la mesnie Hellequin,' ausi comme qui deist: 'Veci la gent au Charles quint.'"

In an interesting article on the subject of "Hellequin" in the Études romanes dédiées à Gaston Paris, M. Gaston Raynaud points out how this word was first transported into Italy as a name of the devil, in which capacity it appears in the Divina Commedia under the form Alichino, and was later probably transformed into the Arlecchino of the Commedia dell'Arte and the Arlequin of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The black mask, originally surmounted by a horn or horn-like excrescence, worn by the harlequin, seems to point back to his diabolical origin (see Romania, No. 85, pp. 138-140).

PAGET TOYNBEE.

THE RUSSIAN NAME FOR A BETROTHED WOMAN.

Taylorian Institution, Oxford: Sept. 29, 1894.

It occurs to me that it may be not without interest to put on record the name which the Russians give to a betrothed woman (fiancée or Verlobte). Down to the seventeenth century Russian parents were accustomed to conclude marriage contracts between their sons and daughters, who had often never seen each other. Accordingly, the Russian word for a betrothed woman, nevēsta, meant in its origin not merely a virgin who has not known a man, but distinctly one who is unknown to her intended husband; it is derived from ne vedat, "not to know, to ignore." In a well-known Russian folk-song (Ralston's Songs of the Russian People), a girl who is given in marriage by her parents against her own wish, laments:

"To him I gave my hand
Whom I had never known;
Alas! one stands aside
Whom I had truly loved."

(cf. Alexander von Reinhold's Russian Literature, p. 28.)

H. KREBS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Oct. 8, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Head and Neck," by Prof. W. Anderson.

THURSDAY, Oct. 11, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Trunk," by Prof. W. Anderson.

SCIENCE.

"DUBLIN UNIVERSITY PRESS SERIES."—The Correspondence of M. Tullius Cicero. Edited by R. Y. Tyrrell and L. C. Purser. Vol. IV. (Longmans.)

THE fourth volume of the edition of Cicero's Epistles, by Prof. Tyrrell and Dr. Purser, contains a larger number of letters than any previous volume, including Epp. cccci-dxlv. in chronological order, and covering the years B.C. 49-46, with a few letters of B.C. 45, written before the death of Tullia. This is by no means the most interesting part of Cicero's life; and the letters, to Atticus especially, during B.C. 49 are rather wearisome in their long-drawn hesitancy between the two parties, neither of which he could heartily support. Nothing but a sympathetic understanding of Cicero's character and position can save a reader from the weariness and irritation which naturally arise as he follows the orator's shifting and irresolute purposes. But the editors have already shown that they are able to take, and to help others to take, this sympathetic interest, and so to lighten a task which must have been a heavy one. Students by this time know pretty well what to look for in a new instalment of this edition. They expect to find in the first place some most ingenious suggestions as to the restoration of a text, often almost hopelessly corrupted. Then they look for a number of spirited renderings of difficult passages, often requiring and showing a delicate sense of Latin idiom and of Ciceronian usage. And last, but hardly least, they anticipate some brilliant historical essays in which literary skill is combined with sobriety of judgment to a degree by no means common. In all these respects this volume will be found to fall in no way short of any of the preceding ones.

More than thirty original emendations find a place in the text, some of which approach a high degree of certainty. In Att. viii. 12A Dr. Reid's nec alia is more attractive than the editor's talita, though a little further from the tradition. Their reading in Att. viii. 6 seems quite certain, and the same may be said of not a few others (e.g., in cclvi., cclix., cclxiv., cclxxii., ccxcv., cccclxxii., &c.). Some, of course, are more doubtful and may be regarded as desperate attempts to stop a gap. But it is no slight service to have given, even though at times by such means, a text which is intelligible throughout. The editors duly acknowledge the help which they have derived from the admirable work of Lehmann and Mendelssohn.

With regard to the renderings, one or two alternative versions may be suggested. "Take care will it look respectable?" (cccx.) is an idiom more in favour to the west than to the east of St. George's Channel. P. 31 for "their regular order" read "its." In cccxvi. quoniam illius alterum consulatum a re p. ne data quidem occasione reppulimus may best be rendered "since we have not refused his application to stand for a second consulship, even when we had the chance of doing so." The translation given by the editors appears less natural in itself, and inconsistent with the facts: cf. cccxxvi. and cccxliii. 7. There seems something wrong in the note in cccxxvi. 2 Parthicus casus; the meaning must be "there will be a terrible war unless we are as unexpectedly lucky as Bibulus was." A better parallel than those quoted from Aristophanes on cclvi. would be Hor. Sat. i. 10, 36. On cclx. ibis should probably be iturus sit. On cclxii. is recuso more than "refuse to undergo"? The meaning suggested is a little forced. On cclxxxii. 6 a distinction is drawn between what has come from nature and what is due to heredity, which it is not easy to follow. The phrase in ccccxv. 1 cries aloud for Prof. Nettleship's rendering of invitavit, "entertained." The note on cccxlv. 2 is by no means clear. It was expected that Caesar would sail straight from Patrae to Sicily. But P. Sulla, who had been sent by Caesar to take over the legions in Sicily, was said have been stoned and driven away by them. If this is true, says Cicero, he must needs come here—i.e., to Brundisium: ac mallem illum, on which the editors remark, "'I should prefer that he should go by sea from there,' from Patrae to Sicily, even though this would bring him to Brundisium." But it is plain that he would come to Brundisium only if he did not mean to go to Sicily. In that case Cicero would be unable to avoid waiting for him at Brundisium. The text is hardly sound, for illum is only due to conjecture, and is by no means satisfactory; it is not the starting-point, but the point of arrival, which Cicero would have otherwise.

A very welcome addition in this volume, and one which we may hope will be made in new editions of the preceding volumes, is the discussion of the order of the letters (pp. lxxxv.-xcviii.). When editors have taken the trouble to determine for themselves the true chronological order, it is but fair that they should give their readers the reasons on which the determination rests. It would have been worth while revising from this point of view the traditional Latin summaries prefixed to each epistle. The editors are unquestionably right in the order in which they print the letters to and from Caeina (ccclxxxviii., dxxxii., dxxxiii.); but the summary to the first refers to the third as "superior epistles," and the summary to the second refers to an alter liber, of which nothing has as yet been heard. So in ccl. "adiungit exemplum" refers to a letter printed six pages back. There are more trivial misprints than one expects in the beautiful work of the Dublin University Press.

The editors have now accomplished about two-thirds of their great task without any sign of flagging, or failure in care or fertile ingenuity. It is earnestly to be hoped that they will be able to finish what will be a great honour to British scholarship, as well as an inestimable boon to all students of Cicero.

A. S. WILKINS.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

The Runes, Whence came They? By Prof. George Stephens. (Williams & Norgate.) The veteran runologist has here given a classified descriptive catalogue of the more important runic inscriptions which have been discovered up to the present time. His object, in which he is conspicuously successful, is to show, in opposition to Prof. Wimmer and his school, that the runic writing was the ancient heritage of the Scandinavian race, and that it could not have been transmitted to them by the Germans, who were unacquainted with it. Prof. Wimmer contends that the runes were evolved out of the Roman alphabet in Gaul or some other Roman province, in which case they could only have reached Norway, Sweden, and Denmark by way of Germany; and it is quite incredible that all evidence of any knowledge of the runic writing should have utterly disappeared from the lands where it must have been practised for a lengthy period, whereas in Scandinavia it held its own against the Roman alphabet for many centuries, not being disused for mortuary inscriptions till after the Reformation, while the earliest monuments date from the first centuries of our era. The upshot of Prof. Stephens's enumeration is that more than 10,000 runic inscriptions have been discovered in Scandinavia, Iceland, Greenland, and in those parts of the British Isles which were subject to Scandinavian influence, while in German lands and all the rest of Europe only nineteen objects inscribed with runes have been found. Not only the number but the nature of these inscriptions is significant. A considerable number of the Anglian and Scandinavian inscriptions are monumental records, on rocks, gravestones, walls, doorposts, or on bulky objects such as fonts or crosses, which from the nature of the case must have been engraved on the spot; whereas the nineteen inscribed objects, found in Germany, Pomerania, Russia and elsewhere, are finger rings, brooches, or spearheads with runic inscriptions of ownership, merely the personal adornments or effects of some travelling warrior or merchant. Not less curious is the distribution of the runic inscriptions in Great Britain. None have been found in the Saxon counties. They are confined to those shires which were conquered or colonised by the Angles, Danes, or Norwegians: that is, practically the Danelagh and the shires north of the Trent. We find them in Yorkshire, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Lancashire, in the Shetlands, the Orkneys, the Isle of Man, and the Danish counties of Lincoln and Derby; the curious exceptions to the rule being East Kent and the Isle of Wight, which were colonised not by Saxons but by Jutes. It seems plain that, while the runic writing was known to the Danes, Norwegians, Jutes and Angles, who came to England from those regions where runic inscriptions are found, there is no evidence that it was known to the Saxons, or to any German people except the Goths. The earliest German gravestones are in the Latin alphabet; and Prof. Stephens is justified in asking Prof. Wimmer to explain how, if the runes were evolved or transmitted by the Germans, all records of such an important acquirement as the art of writing should have so nterly disappeared from Germany, while in Scandinavia the runes held their own against the Latin alphabet for so many centuries. Prof. Stephens contends that the only reasonable solution of the difficulty is that propounded by Dr. Isaac Taylor: that the runes were evolved from an early form of the Greek alphabet, obtained from traders who penetrated to the North from the Greek colonies on the Euxine.

Altitalische Forschungen von Dr. Carl Pauli. Zweiter Band, 2. Abteilung. (Leipzig: J. A. Bartl). This is the latest contribution to the literature of the famous pre-Hellenic inscription of Lemnos. The first section of this second volume, published in 1886 and noticed in the ACADEMY at the time by Prof. Sayce, contained Dr. Pauli's preliminary studies, in which he endeavoured to maintain the close affinity of the language of this "Pelagic" inscription with Etruscan, and to interpret it, from this point of view, as a funeral epitaph, belonging to the seventh century before Christ. Now after a long delay, caused mainly by his labours on the Corpus Inscriptionum Etruscarum, Dr. Pauli returns to the subject, replies to the objections of critics, develops and on some points modifies his former views, and supports them with a greater wealth of arguments. This theory was met with warm approval by some scholars, with not less emphatic rejection by others. Now he claims to have established his main points incontrovertibly, while leaving numerous points of detail to be worked out by younger scholars, to whom he charitably indicates the abundant material which it furnishes for the doctoral dissertation for which it is not easy to find fresh themes. Four rival interpretations, by Bugge, Deecke, Apostolides, and Moratti, are rejected as "equally valuable, i.e., equally worthless." Against Bugge he brings the charge of rapid and repeated changes of opinion, and a capricious selection of the language by which Etruscan is to be explained—now Armenian, previously the Italian dialects, before that Greek. Hence the method is purely subjective and unscientific. Deecke he treats as prejudiced against any interpretation which does not support his favourite theory of the Indo-Germanic connexion of Etruscan. Against Apostolides he establishes the fact that the Phrygian inscriptions furnish no points whatever of grammatical contact with that of Lemnos. Moratti's theories as to the origin of the "linguaggi asiatici" in Armenian, and their gradual extension in Europe, are rejected as entirely chimerical. Naturally Dr. Pauli has made much use of the Etruscan forms given in the famous "Mumienbinde" of Agram. His work is distinguished by admirable method and sobriety, and he recognises how much yet remains to be done. But he has indisputably strengthened by this fuller discussion a case which was already recognised to be very strong. It is to be regretted that the clearness and sound system of his method of argument have not extended to his arrangement. The study of a treatise of 260 pages is not facilitated by the entire absence of any subdivision into chapters or sections, and also of a table of contents, while the index is extremely meagre.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM TOPLEY, F.R.S.

GEOLOGISTS, not only in this country, but on the Continent and in America, will hear with much surprise and equal regret of the death, at the comparatively early age of fifty-three, of Mr. William Topley, F.R.S.

For more than thirty years Mr. Topley had been attached to the Geological Survey, and was one of its most active and popular officers. His field work had lain mostly in the Wealden area and in the Northumberland coal-field, but for several years past he had settled in London and was practically editor of the Survey publications. His monograph on the Weald is a standard work, and he was also a recognised authority on geological questions relating to water and to petroleum.

Mr. Topley succumbed to an attack of gastritis, contracted (it is believed) during a brief sojourn, a few weeks ago, in Algiers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROF. JENSEN ON THE HITTITE INSCRIPTIONS.

London: Sept. 18, 1894.

I have just been studying the latest attempt to decipher the Hittite inscriptions, that made by Prof. Jensen in the last number of the Zeitschrift der Deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft (xlviii. 2). Unfortunately, I cannot say that it is more successful than those that have preceded it. It is, however, a little difficult to discuss it, as in a note prefixed to his paper the author says that, since his MS. went to press, he has made so many additional discoveries as to render necessary the correction of whole paragraphs in it. But as I shall not be in England when the next part of the paper appears, I must assume that the basis of the decipherment will remain unchanged.

Like most of his predecessors, Prof. Jensen has trusted too much to the published texts. Only those who (like Mr. Rylands and myself) have had to do with the publication of most of them can have any idea how uncertain is a large part of the published characters. Where the characters are in relief, and we do not know how they are to be read, any obliteration of them makes it quite impossible to determine their forms with certainty. The improved squeezes of the Hamath inscriptions which have recently arrived from Constantinople have shown how very faulty were our previous copies of these texts.

In his discussion of the name which we ought to apply to the inscriptions, Prof. Jensen has forgotten that anthropologists consider the question to be settled by the casts of Hittite profiles made by Prof. Petrie for the British Association from the Egyptian monuments. The profiles are peculiar, unlike those of any other people represented by the Egyptian artists, but they are identical with the profiles which occur among the Hittite hieroglyphs.

As for the chronology of the texts, most of the points brought forward by Prof. Jensen in support of his results are inconclusive. He has not taken into consideration the possibility of local differences in art or in the individual artist, and he is mistaken in supposing that characters in relief are a mark of antiquity in the Egyptian monuments. In fact, a study of Egyptian art would have taught him that, unless we had been able to decipher the inscriptions engraved upon them, the art of the Egyptian monuments would have afforded us a very insecure basis for their chronological arrangement. But Prof. Jensen's strong point is philology, not archaeology.

He agrees with me in the age which I should assign to "the boss of Tarkondemos." But Prof. Hilprecht, our best authority at present on cuneiform palaeography, tells me that the cuneiform inscription upon it must be of the age of the Tel el-Amarna Tablets, instead of that of Sargon; and he would read the last two characters of the inscription—which, by the way, has suffered grievous things at the hands of Prof. Jensen—Me-tan, that is to say, Mitanni.

Prof. Jensen's system of decipherment mainly rests upon two assumptions: (1) that the double obelisk, in which everyone has hitherto seen the ideograph of "country," is a mere unmeaning duplicate of the single obelisk, the ideograph of "king," which immediately precedes it; and (2) that the second word in the royal inscriptions which precedes the ideograph of "king" is not the name of the king but of the kingdom over which he ruled. The first assumption is against the evidence of the "boss," which, after all, is the only solid fact the decipherer at present possesses, and it is also against common sense. The second assumption is most improbable: can remember no other case in the ancient East in which a king prefers to give his territorial titles before giving his own name.

Moreover, the territorial names with which Prof. Jensen has identified certain groups of characters are all doubtful. We are not absolutely certain that Jerablus represents the site of Carchemish; if it is really called Jerabis, it is more likely to have been Europus. The Hamath king was, I believe, a conqueror, so that there is no reason for supposing that the name of Hamath will occur in the Hamathite texts, and that Mer'ash is the ancient Marqasi is merely a probable conjecture. There is one place, however, the ancient name of which we know. That is Malatiyeh; and a monument, which Prof. Jensen has not seen, has recently been found in the old mound there, with a Hittite text running along over a representation of a lion hunt in the Assyrian style. The inscription is well preserved and complete; but none of Prof. Jensen's values will enable us to find the name of Milid or Malatiyeh in it. On the contrary, a name identical with the second word in the inscription of Mer'ash occurs in it, in a position which I think even Prof. Jensen will admit must indicate a proper, and not a local, name.

I must pass over the improbabilities of a system of decipherment which finds no proper names, but only territorial ones, on the clay Hittite seals discovered at Kouyunjik, in spite of the fact that the Assyrian, Egyptian, and Phoenician seals discovered along with them contain proper names and not territorial ones. Nor need I say anything about the ideograph in which I see the determinative of a deity, while Prof. Jensen believes it to denote a place, although Prof. Ramsay has stated that no one who has seen the monument of Fraktin can reasonably doubt that I am right. Nevertheless, it is upon the assumption that the sign in question represents a place that a good deal of Prof. Jensen's system is built. But I cannot omit to note the improbability that one of the most commonly-used characters should have the consonantal value of s. If there are symbols denoting vowels, and Prof. Jensen agrees with me in thinking there are, the doctrine of chances would oblige us to assign to it a vocalic sound.

The fact is that the insufficiency of our materials, and the uncertainty of the reading of much that we possess, make the phonetic decipherment of the Hittite texts impossible. A graphic decipherment of them is another affair; and, thanks to the use of ideographs, I believe I can tell what the general meaning of the inscriptions must be. But I have long been convinced that we shall never be able to read them until a bilingual text of some length is discovered. That so keen-sighted and well-equipped a philologist as Prof. Jensen should have failed, is but a further proof of the hopelessness of the task. I have tried every combination, possible or impossible, that I could think of; but all in vain. Some of the combinations have given names like Labarna and Urkhamme, which we actually find in the Assyrian records; but they all rest upon unproved and unprovable assumptions, and sooner or later some new text turns up which shows that they cannot be right. I do not mean to say that Prof. Jensen's paper has been written in vain; he has in it advanced the study of the texts by putting old facts in a new light, and establishing new ones. And I believe that he must be correct in the arrangement which he proposes for the Hittite characters on the boss of Tarkondêmos. It suggests the question whether the little line, which we have hitherto supposed to be a word-divider, does not really denote that the word which it follows or precedes is a proper name.

A. H. SAYCE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE annual Harveian Oration will be delivered by Dr. T. Lander Brunton at the Royal College of Physicians on Thursday, October 18, at four p.m.

THE meetings of the Physical Society will henceforth be held in the rooms of the Chemical Society, at Burlington House, on the same days and hour as heretofore. The council have also decided to attempt the printing of a series of abstracts of papers on physics appearing in foreign magazines, to be published monthly (beginning next January), as a supplement to the Proceedings of the Society.

THE trustees of the late Richard Berridge have now transferred to the British Institute of Preventive Medicine the residue of his legacy of £20,000, for the purpose of building and endowing a laboratory for the chemical and bacteriological examination of water-supply and the investigation of processes of sewage purification. The permanent laboratory is now in course of erection on the site secured by the Institute at Chelsea; but, pending its completion, a temporary laboratory has been fitted up, in order that work may be commenced at once. Mr. Joseph Lunt, formerly assistant to Sir Henry Roscoe, has been appointed to carry on this work under the director's supervision. The Institute is now prepared to undertake the chemical and bacteriological examination of any samples of water that may be submitted. In addition to this, the Institute will give expert assistance in the bacteriological or pathological diagnosis of any pathological material. The demand for this kind of work has so greatly increased that, though Dr. Ruffer will still retain charge of this department, a specially trained bacteriologist has been appointed to work under his direction. Particulars may be obtained at the temporary offices of the Institute, 101, Great Russell-street, W.C.

A CLINICAL Research Association has been formed, under the patronage of Sir James Paget, Dr. Wilks, Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, Sir W. H. Broadbent, Sir George Humphrey, Dr. Clifford Albutt, and others, with the object of assisting medical practitioners in the investigation and treatment of disease, by furnishing trustworthy reports upon excretions, tumours, and other morbid products. A laboratory has been fitted up, which will be under the direction of Dr. J. Galloway and Messrs. J. H. Targett and F. G. Hopkins. Further particulars can be obtained from the secretary of the association, at 5, Denman-street, S.E.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE first volume of Father C. A. de Cara's important work on the Hittites and Pelasgians is now passing through the press. It is expected to appear before the end of this month.

PROF. H. ANTHONY SALMONÉ has nearly completed a translation into classical Arabic of two of Swedenborg's works, Heaven and Hell and The Doctrine of Charity, which he undertook last autumn at the request of the Swedenborg Society. The volume is now being printed by Messrs. Sarruf, Nimr, & Makarius, of Cairo, and is expected to be published, in England, Egypt, and India, before the end of the year.

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co., Oriental publishers, announce the following: Jindānkāra or the Embellishments of Buddha by Buddhārakkhita, edited by J. Gray; Chrestomathia Baidawiana, the commentary of El-Baidāwī on Sura III., translated and explained for the use of students of Arabic, by Prof. D. S. Margoliouth; Western Asia according to the most recent Discoveries, Rectorial address by Prof. C. P. Tiele, translated by Elisabeth J. Taylor; The Origin of the Canon of the Old Testament, an historico-critical enquiry by Prof. G. Wildeboer, translated by B. W. Bacon, and edited, with preface, by Prof. George F. Moore.

FINE ART.

A History of Architecture. By James Fergusson. Third Edition. By R. Phené Spiers. Vols. I. and II. (John Murray.)

THE work of the late Mr. Fergusson, extending as it does from the earliest times to the present day, and literally surveying mankind from China to Peru, is indeed monumental. It has been accepted by most Englishmen, as M. Viollet-le-Duc's enterprise has been accepted by most Frenchmen, as the Bible of Architecture; and this acceptance is nearly, if not quite, as unqualified as that which the Scripture Canon obtains from the new criticism. The Architectural Bible has also its Apocrypha, in the shape of that famous volume on Rude Stone Monuments, which identifies Stonehenge with the work of the Romanised provincial Ambrosius Aurelianus.

The first two volumes of the history now issued in a third edition contain, for the most part, less controversial matter. Part I. deals with the ancient architecture of Egypt, Assyria, Greece, Etruria, Rome, and Persia. Part II. is devoted to Christian architecture, including that of the Byzantine style, of the mediæval Italian styles, and those of the Low Countries, Germany, Scandinavia, Great Britain, and the Iberian Peninsula. A third part contains an account of Saracenic architecture in what are, or once were, Christian countries, such as Syria and Egypt, Spain and Turkey, and also in Persia and Turkestan. Central America and Peru fill out this portion of the work, which otherwise remains in the same pinched condition in which the author left it when he removed the Indian and Oriental chapters to a separate volume. The work of the editor has been done not only with marked ability, but in an admirably considerate spirit, alterations being only admitted in the limited number of instances where the incorrectness of the old statement of facts or the untenability of the old theories has been conclusively proved. The additions have been governed by a similar rule, and confined to cases where new facts have been but now brought to light. Where the opinions expressed in the history are still sub judice new adverse arguments are set forth in footnotes, the ingenious and suggestive arguments of Mr. Ferguson being left intact. In short, while the work has been skillfully brought up to date, the design of its original architect has been scrupulously respected. The fewness of the alterations is indeed a marvellous tribute to his accuracy and clear-sightedness; and it is not too much to say that, though in matter of theory room for divergent opinion remains, in matters of fact he is almost invariably trustworthy. As regards Egypt, the most important changes consist in the correction of the account of the Pyramids in accordance with the results of Prof. Flinders Petrie's explorations, and the correction of the Lepsian view of the Labyrinth—this was, of course, inevitable, as the English explorer demonstrated that what the Prussian expedition mistook for original walls and chambers are only the houses and tombs of the village built on the site of and out of the débris of the destroyed labyrinth. In the Byzantine and Byzantine-Romanesque chapters considerable emendations, particularly in the sequence of presentation, have been necessary to give a consecutive character to the history of early Christian architecture in Italy. The Mosque of Omar in Jerusalem has been transferred to its true builder, Abd-el-Melik, and the plan and elevation of the great Mosque of Kerauan is shown for the first time. This is a most noteworthy addition, for now, to use the editor's phrase, we can trace the parentage of the Mosque of Cordova, and similar Spanish structures, which seemed, when this work was first written, to be cut off from all connexion with the East and to stand utterly alone.

Oddly enough, while in all other respects Mr. Fergusson's reputation as a teacher has been steadily growing with all classes of his countrymen, his practical influence as an architect seems to have diminished in like ratio. Twenty-nine years ago he wrote:

"I may be deceiving myself, but I cannot help fancying that I perceive signs of a reaction. Some men are becoming aware of the fact that 'archæology is not architecture,' and would willingly see something done more reasonable than an attempt to reproduce the Middle Ages. The misfortune is, that their enlightenment is more apt to lead to despondency than to hope. 'If,' they ask, 'we cannot find what we are looking for in our own national style, where are we to look for it?' The obvious answer, that it is to be found in the exercise of common sense, where all the rest of the world have found it, seems to them beside the mark. Architecture with most people is a mystery—something different from all other arts; and they do not see that it is and must be subject to the same rules as they all are, and must be practised in the same manner, if it is to be successful."

"Whether the nation will or will not soon awaken to the importance of this prosaic anti-climax, one thing at least seems certain and most hopeful. Men are not satisfied with what is doing—a restless, inquiring spirit is abroad; and if people can only be induced to think seriously about it, I feel convinced that they will be as much astonished at their present admiration of gothic town-halls and Hyde Park Albert Memorials as we are now at the gothic fancies of Horace Walpole and the men of his day."

This passage was written in 1865. It is well worth reading in 1894.

REGINALD HUGHES.

INDIAN JOTTINGS.

It is proposed to hold next year at Earl's Court an exhibition of the artistic and industrial products of India, under the direction of Mr. C. Purdon Clarke. A prominent feature will be a number of houses and shops, fitted up to represent typical streets of Lahore, Shikarpur, and Ahmadabad, in which skilled native workmen will show the processes of their several crafts.

In a recent number of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Mr. C. J. Rodgers, honorary numismatist to the government of India, makes a powerful appeal for an annual grant for the purchase of rare coins which are continually coming into the market. Quite apart from the collections that are dispersed from time to time, he states his conviction that, were the bazaars of all the towns of Northern India to be carefully examined, a vast number of coins hitherto unknown might be obtained. For himself, he never pays a visit to any town without finding some novelties. He gives a list of several collections that have lately been sold, of which not a single coin has been acquired for any Indian museum. Two of these collections, it appears, have gone to the United States. There is now for sale the cabinet of General Gossett, which contains many rare coins and some that are unique. Mr. Rodgers has disposed of his own collection to the Lahore Museum, of which he is now engaged in compiling the catalogue.

In both the last parts of Epigraphia Indica (Kegan Paul & Co.), the most important articles are those contributed by Prof. G. Bühler of Vienna. Part xiv. contains two papers from him—on the archaic Jain sculptures found by Dr. Führer about four years ago, in the course of his excavations at Mathura; and on the inscriptions on the Buddhist relics discovered by Mr. Rea in the Bhattiprolu Stupa, in Southern India. With regard to the latter, Prof. Bühler has already expressed a preliminary verdict in the ACADEMY of May 28, 1892. He now supports his opinion with the help of facsimile plates and a table of the alphabet used. The characters resemble those of Asoka's inscriptions, though showing a few peculiarities met with nowhere else. Unfortunately they contain no historical statements attesting their date, though on palaeographical grounds, they may be assigned to the end of the third century B.C. From their divergence from the Asoka alphabet, Prof. Bühler draws an argument for his view that the art of writing must have already been practised in India for several centuries. In the other paper, Prof. Bühler deals with an almost entirely new subject, the characteristics of Jain art at a period which can be dated from inscriptions to before the Christian era. His conclusion is that the ancient art of the Jainas did not differ materially from that of the Buddhists, the explanation being that both alike were derived from the common sources of national art, which is to be found likewise in the oldest Brahmanical remains. He believes that the characteristic emblems of Buddhism—the wheel of the law, the stupa, and the sacred tree—were really heirlooms handed down from remote times before the beginning of the historical period of India. In part xv., Prof. Bühler deals with the large collection of new votive inscriptions found at Sanchi by Dr. Führer in the course of his tour last year through Central India. The fragment of the Asoka inscription recovered at the same time is not of great importance. The votive inscriptions, to the total number of nearly 500, mostly dating from the third century B.C., are interesting for the names of persons and places they contain, as well as on palaeographical grounds. Of later date is an inscription in Indo-Scythic characters beneath a statue of Buddha, containing the name of an unknown king, Shahi Vasushka, who is perhaps to be identified with Vasudeva of the coins. There are also inscriptions in ordinary Nagari, which prove that Buddhist pilgrims continued to visit Sanchi as late as the ninth or tenth century. Finally, we must mention what we believe to be the first contribution to Epigraphia Indica from an Englishman. This is an account, by Prof. Arthur Venis, of some copper-plate inscriptions which were found recently in the neighbourhood of Benares. One set of them, held together by a sort of hook, record the grant of villages in far-off Kamrup by a certain Vaidyadeva, who describes himself as hereditary minister of one of the Pala kings. We are thus furnished with the names of three new members of that dynasty, who apparently reigned in Bengal during the twelfth century, contemporaneously with the Senas. Two others of the copper-plates, which are dated in 1105 and 1139 A.D., both record grants made by Govindrachandra, of Kanauj.

THE Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.) has recently contained several articles of permanent value. In the April number Mr. F. J. Fleet reprints from an old Marathi magazine a table of intercalary and expunged months for the expired Saka years 1 to 2105. In the May number Prof. Kielhorn gives the first instalment of dates of the Saka era, which he has collected from inscriptions, numbering about 370 in all. Of these, he tells us "About 100 dates contain no details for calculation or verification, and in rather more than 30 others the wording of some of the details is doubtful. Of the rest, the calculation of about 140 dates has yielded results which theoretically satisfy the requirements of the cases; while that of about 70 has proved unsatisfactory, and in the case of about 20 dates my examination has shown either how a particular term of the original date ought to be understood, or, in what manner the wording of the date should be amended."

In the present instalment Prof. Kielhorn gives an annotated list of 122 regular dates, including a few that have been already examined by Mr. Fleet. In the same number, Prof. Kielhorn also supplies some dates of the Burmese common era, from an inscription edited by Mr. Taw Sein Ko, but asks for further information about the modern Burmese calendar. In the June number, Prof. G. Bühler begins a long article, entitled "The Roots of the Dhatupatha not found in Literature," in which he argues against the views of the late Prof. Whitney (and his pupil, Prof. Edgren)—that the vast number of false roots in the Dhatupatha "casts a shade of unreality over the whole subject of voice-conjugation," as taught by the native grammarians. In particular, he points out how the Pali Jatakas have preserved representatives of verbs of which there is no trace in the explored works of Sanskrit literature. The same number contains a translation of Prof. Jacobi's paper on "The Date of the Rig Veda," in which, arguing from astronomical data, he assigns the period of Vedic civilisation to between 4500 and 2500 B.C. It will be remembered that a native scholar, Prof. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, has independently arrived at an almost identical conclusion. The July number opens with an account of several modern Jain works, by the late Johannes Klatt, of the Royal Library at Berlin. He mentions an inscribed statue of Parsvanatha, now in the Ethnographical Museum at Munich. Mr. Bernard Houghton praises the chapter on languages in the Burma Census Report, but criticises the theory there put forward of the primitive character of "tones."

At a recent meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Mr. Umes Chandra Batavyal read a paper upon a copper-plate inscription of the Pala dynasty of Bengal, which was found last year near the ancient city of Gaur. It is dated in the fourth year of Dharma Pala, the second of the dynasty, whose reign may be placed about 830 A.D. Hitherto, this king has been represented by a single epigraph at Bodh Gaya, which gives little information. But the chief interest of the new copper-plate is that it contains a grant to one Bhattacharaya, the name of one of the five Brahmans brought into Bengal by King Adisura. If the two persons are identical, it would follow that Adisura preceded, instead of following, the Pala dynasty. Mr. Batavyal points out that the traditional genealogy of the Brahman families who claim descent from Bhattacharaya is consistent with this identification.

NUMBER 1, Part I. of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1894 (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) contains several interesting articles. The Rev. H. B. Hyde describes a Chinese inscribed slab now lying in a Calcutta churchyard, which had originally been the foundation-stone of a fort erected by the Manchu Tartars on the island of Chusan (circa 1642), while they were subduing the Chinese of Ningpo. It is supposed that the stone must have been brought to Calcutta by the British troops who occupied the island of Chusan from 1840 to 1846. The Rev. F. B. Shawe, Moravian missionary at Ladak, argues, as against Babu Sarat Chandra Das, that Tibetan orthography, despite its extreme divergence from the present pronunciation, represents fairly correctly the pronunciation of the seventh century, when the alphabet was first introduced into Tibet. Babu Sarat Chandra Das himself writes about a MS. of the Kamma-vaca, known as the Buddhist Golden Book, which Sir Charles Elliott had obtained from Chittagong. It is written on thick gilt lacquer leaves in what is called by the Burmese the "tamarind seed" character. This resembles square Pali, but differs from it much as Devanagari differs from Bengali. From a comparative table of the several alphabets Babu Sarat Chandra Das infers that, while later than the Asoka characters, it is older than the square Pali in which the earliest Buddhist books are generally supposed to have been written. Mr. G. A. Grierson describes and figures a stone image of Buddha, which he found some years ago among a mass of ruins on a hill near Rajgir, spoken of by the Chinese pilgrims.

We quote the following from the annual report of Mr. Edgar Thurston, superintendent of the Madras Government Museum:

"The following articles from the Buddhist remains at Arugolu, in the Godavari District, were received from Mr. A. Rea, of the Archaeological Survey: (1) A small crystal relic casket, found inside the cavity of a rough laterite boulder; (2) a pierced glass (?) cylinder, with groove on rim, from the centre of a stupa in the vihara; (3) a small disc of earthenware; (4) a brass finger-ring."

"Four sculptured slabs from the Buddhist Stupa of Amaravati were received through the Collector of the Kistna District. These, together with a large number of Amaravati marbles in a good state of preservation, which have been provisionally arranged in the Museum grounds, remain to be set up in the archaeology gallery, wherein a large number of these marbles are already exhibited."

"To the Rev. J. E. Tracy, the Museum was indebted for a donation of earthenware cups, from Cromlechs, near Kovilpatti, in the Madura District. "A selection of arms from the old Tanjore armoury was added to the collection already exhibited on the staircase leading to the art gallery. It is much to be regretted that the Museum possesses no suitable space in which this beautiful collection of arms can be displayed in its entirety."

"No important find of coins in Southern India during the year has to be recorded.

"The Museum collection of coins of the East India Company was enriched by the purchase of a small collection, which includes a dollar counter-struck with the die of a double Arcot rupee; leaden double pice, Bombay; copper pice; leaden two cash and silver fanam of Charles II.; and silver three fanam and double fanam of George I."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE annual loan exhibition at the New Gallery this winter will be devoted to the art of Venice and the territories of the Republic, from the origin of the characteristic Venetian style down to the close of the eighteenth century. Besides pictures and drawings, it is intended to include sculpture, engraving, goldsmith's work, pottery, glass, metal work, arms, armour, furniture, wood-carving, embroidery, lace, and articles of costume. An influential committee has been formed, under the presidency of the Duke of Westminster.

THE Burlington Fine Arts Club proposes to hold an exhibition of Egyptian art and antiquities in the spring of next year. Contributions have already been promised from well-known collectors; but there must be many persons possessing collections or single objects of interest from whom the committee would still be glad to hear.

AN Exhibition of Artistic Posters will be opened on October 23, at the Royal Aquarium, under the direction of an honorary committee. Examples of the following English artists will be exhibited: H. Herkomer, Walter Crane, Dudley Hardy, Aubrey Beardsley, "Pal," Cleaver, Griffenhagen, Steer, the Brothers Beggartaff, Halls, Brangwyn, Mortimer Menpes, and Furness; while the French school will be represented by Cheret, Grasset, Lautrec, Steinlen, Willette, Grevin, Forain, Boutet de Monvel, Guillaume, Metivet, Van Beers, and Bonnard. An illustrated catalogue in colours is in preparation, edited by Mr. Edward Bella.

MR. CHARLES J. CLARK has in the press a work on The Sculptures in the Lady Chapel at Ely, by Mr. M. R. James, keeper of the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, with a chapter on the heraldry of the chapel by the Bishop of Ely. It will be illustrated with sixty colotype plates.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK will publish immediately a revised edition of Coins and Medals: their Place in History and Art, by the staff of the British Museum Medal Room, edited by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole.

THE "Art Annual," or, extra Christmas number of the Art Journal, will deal with the life and work of Sir Edward Burne-Jones. The letterpress is written by Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Henry Ady), and the illustrations will number fifty-four in all, including full-page plates of the following pictures: "The Golden Stairs," "Chant d'Amour," "The Mirror of Venus," and "The Star of Bethlehem."

THE following awards have been made at the Antwerp Exhibition: diplomas and medals of honour, to Sir J. E. Millais and Mr. Alma Tadema; first-class medals, to Sir E. Burne-Jones, Mr. H. B. Davis, and Mr. Henry Moore.

MR. W. G. BLACK, secretary of the Glasgow Archaeological Society, has issued a circular appealing for funds, in order to provide a suitable building for the reception of the unique series of early Christian monuments in the churchyard at Govan. These include at least forty slabs, ornamented with interlaced work of pre-Norman date, most of which now serve the purpose of modern gravestones.

AT the meeting of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, to be held in Dublin on Tuesday next, the two following papers (among others) will be read: "The Gortatlea Ogham Stone, co. Kerry," by the Bishop of Limerick; and "Oghams found in the County Kilkenny," by the Rev. Edmond Barry.

THE September number of the Illustrated Archaeologist (Charles J. Clark) contains some interesting articles. We have a full account of the recent find of silver coins at Bangor. Eight of the coins are Anglo-Saxon, and five are Eastern; but they are all of the same period, between 901 and 925. One of the pieces has a design impressed upon it by means of different kinds of punches; and another has marks showing that it has been purposely cut off a bar of silver. These features are all characteristic of numerous similar finds that have been made in Scandinavia, and also in those parts of Great Britain where Scandinavian influence was strongest. Mr. Arthur G. Langdon reports the discovery of a second Ogham inscribed stone at Lewannick in Cornwall. The stone, which is built into the north porch of the church, contains also an inscription in debased Latin capitals: IACIT VLCAGNI. The Oghams cannot be read properly until the stone is removed from the wall. Mr. Harold Hughes gives illustrations of an old mazer bowl at Clynnog Fawr, dating from the end of the fifteenth century, which is now used for collecting the offertory. The editor (Mr. J. Romilly Allen) describes a fire-drill still used in the mountains of Neuchâtel, and traces its connexion with the wide distribution of the superstitious rites of "need-fire." There is also a popular article on Sussex iron, illustrated with ornamental fire-backs, andirons, tongs, candlesticks, &c., of local manufacture. The "Notes in the Sale-room" are very useful.

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.

Birmingham: Oct. 3, 1894.

THE programme of the week's music contains enough good things to satisfy the most enthusiastic amateur. There is an excellent orchestra, with Messrs. Burnett and Schiever as principal first violins; a choir which has already given proofs of its capabilities, and of Mr. Stockley's excellent services as chorus-master; an able organist, Mr. Perkins; and a conductor, Dr. Hans Richter, in whom everyone has confidence. With regard to the selection of important works there is no cause whatever for complaint; and the programmes of the miscellaneous concerts contain nothing but high-class music.

The festival opened yesterday morning with Mendelssohn's "Elijah," in which the principal vocalists were Mue. Albani and Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Andrew Black. The performance, which was good, was well attended, and duly appreciated. At most festivals the "Elijah" is a special attraction, and nowhere more so than in Birmingham, the city where it was originally produced nearly half a century ago. In the evening the concert commenced with the "Te Deum" of Berlioz. This extraordinary work was brought out at St. Eustache, Paris, in 1855, under the direction of the composer. Mr. Manns gave it at the Crystal Palace in 1885. As music it may not be all inspired, but it is extremely interesting: the orchestration alone attracts and sustains the attention. Of the sixth and concluding number of the work Berlioz says in his Mémoires:—"Le finale (Judex crederis) est sans aucun doute ce que j'ai produit de plus grandiose." A composer is not always the best judge of his own works, but in this instance we believe Berlioz was perfectly right. Schumann, although he could not approve of everything the French composer wrote in his Symphonie Fantastique, recognised his genius; and in the finale of this "Te Deum" Berlioz rose to a height of which, perhaps, Schumann scarcely deemed him capable.

Part 2 included Brahms's Symphony No. 2, magnificently played; Dr. Mackenzie's humorous and clever "Nautical Overture," given with great spirit under its composer's direction, and received with enthusiasm; and Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 4. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel sang the "Monologue and Duet" from "Die Meistersinger" with marked success.

This morning Dr. Parry's "King Saul" was performed. It is difficult enough to write a successful opera, but to win the ear of the public with an oratorio is still more difficult. Our three Doctors of Music—Mackenzie, Stanford, and Parry—have bravely devoted themselves to this branch of composition; yet it cannot honestly be said that any one of their works has become truly popular. The exciting music-dramas of Wagner, and the short, sensational operas of the new Italian school, have affected public taste; the oratorio, with its sober solos and reflective choruses, in comparison appears formal, not to say dull. In the absence of stage scenery and stage action, elaborate choral writing formed a prominent and appropriate feature of the Handel, and, indeed, of the Mendelssohn, oratorio; and Dr. Parry, though seeking to shape his work more in conformity with the spirit of the age, has wisely worked on the same lines. Handel and Wagner have exerted a strong influence over Dr. Parry, and, though his music is not patchy, the two styles form at times rather singular contrasts. Admiration for Wagner so frequently implies antipathy to Mendelssohn that one is somewhat surprised to find passages, especially in the choruses, more or less inspired by the composer of "Elijah." Dr. Parry has a healthy, catholic taste: to show contempt for Mendelssohn, after the fashion of certain so-called advanced musicians, would probably be as distasteful to him as to indulge in that excessive praise which has brought about a reaction with regard to that composer's music. Handel wrote an oratorio named "Saul," but the poem deals chiefly with the king's jealousy of David: it opens, indeed, with a chorus of rejoicing at the overthrow of Goliath by the shepherd youth. Dr. Parry first shows us Saul as a brave and mighty monarch. He is anointed by Samuel, and the rebuke of that just, if not generous, judge after the defeat of the Amalekites strikes, as it were, the key-note to the tragedy, and gives special point, later on, to Saul's demand of the witch: "Bring up for me Samuel." Although, as stated, Dr. Parry, in his music, reflects at times the spirit of Handel, he has written a work that cannot, in any way, be called a copy of the earlier oratorio.

The first thing in examining modern music is, to see if it is based on the system of representative themes—one which has many advantages, yet also certain dangers. We are glad to find that Dr. Parry, with his great knowledge, skill, and experience, has ventured to put that system to a further test. It needs close study to discover the various uses and modifications of his themes; for the music has been thought out in a true Wagnerian sense, and they are not mere labels. The bitterest opponent of the system could not fail to recognize the genuineness and skill of the workmanship.

The oratorio opens with an instrumental introduction, which is little more than an exposition of the principal themes. It commences appropriately with one typical of Saul and closes with a brief phrase from the "Lamentation." The "Evil Spirit" motive is highly characteristic. We cannot now discuss each scene of the work, but must speak of the music generally, pointing out a few of the many features of interest.

In Saul's first solo, before he had greatness thrust upon him, in Michal's song of rejoicing after the death of Goliath, and, again, in the love duet between Michal and David, there is a certain Volkslied and at times pastoral character, both in the melody and in the accompaniment. All this is quite appropriate, and, moreover, forms a welcome contrast to the elaborate choruses and to the gloomy "Evil Spirit" and "Endor" music. In the choruses the composer puts forth his full contrapuntal strength. Now, as in the "Lift up your voices, ye children of Israel," there are strains which have something of the diatonic simplicity and directness of Handel; now, as in "The Lord go with thee," we are reminded of Mendelssohn's flowing manner; but, for the most part, the composer writes in a style which may be fairly called his own. In his mastery of counterpoint, both single and double, he shows himself a worthy disciple of Bach; but there is not a single bar which reminds one directly of the old master. Dr. Parry displays his mastery in that he makes science always a means, never an end. The three most striking choruses are the "Goliath," the closing one of the second act, and "Thy beloved is in the hand of the Lord," in the last act. The light, graceful chorus of "The Maidens at the Well," in the first act, deserves mention: it shows Dr. Parry in one of his most genial moods. In the suggestions of the "Evil Spirit" and the scene at Endor the composer seems to us to be highly original, and, especially in the "Endor" music, altogether at his strongest. We have so much to praise that, if only for the sake of contrast, we should like to name what, in our judgment, is the weakest portion of the oratorio; and that is the love duet between Michal and David. The picture of Saul—with his cruel wars, his jealousy of David, and his downward career ending in suicide—is a gloomy one, and the admiration and love of the king's daughter for the brave youth offers, apparently, refreshing contrast; yet, after all, Michal is not a personage calculated to arouse one's interest or sympathy.

The music of the "Evil Spirit" is very weird and original, but that of the "Endor" scene surpasses it in imaginative power and in tone colouring. It is rare for Dr. Parry to spin out his music; but, in the latter, all that follows after the ghost of Samuel warns the fate-pursued king that "to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me in the grave" seems to us anti-climax. Instrumental music on Wagner lines might surely have formed the transition from these prophetic words to the closing lamentation.

It is a thankless task to tell a composer that his work wants cutting, and in most cases it is a useless one. Apart from the alteration just suggested—and unless something of the sort be done, the wonderful effect of the earlier part of this scene will be marred—the third Act especially will well bear shortening. We plead earnestly for the pruning-knife, and the best person to wield that weapon is the creator, not the critic. We have spoken in a somewhat dogmatic manner about the "Endor" scene, because we admire it greatly, and feel vexed at anything which may prove detrimental to it. We plead earnestly with Dr. Parry for some revision of his score, because the work is so strong, so interesting, that nothing should be left in it calculated to imperil its success. "King Saul" is a very long work, and any dull, or, rather, useless moments make it seem even longer than it is. We believe it could be made the most important oratorio ever produced from the pen of an English composer.

Dr. Parry, like Pilate, may refuse to alter what he has written; but if there be any truth in our remarks we fancy he has already perceived it. He was probably the most critical listener in the Town Hall this morning.

With regard to the performance a few words must suffice. The soloists were Miss Anna Williams (Michal), Miss Marie Brema (the Evil Spirit), Miss Hilda Wilson (the Witch), Mr. Henschel (Saul), and Mr. Andrew Black (Samuel). They all acquitted themselves well, but Miss Brema's fine declamatory rendering of her part deserves special mention. Mr. Henschel made the most of his important part. Chorus and orchestra put forth all their strength and secured a triumphant reception for the composer, who conducted his own work. The choir is of excellent quality: the basses are especially fine.

On Wednesday evening the concert commenced with a cantata, a posthumous work by Arthur Goring Thomas, entitled "The Swan and the Skylark." After the death of the composer in 1892 the vocal score was discovered among his papers, and search was made for a competent musician to provide the necessary orchestration. Surely no better man could have been found than Dr. C. Villiers Stanford, who, in addition to his wide experience, was a personal friend of the composer's, and was well acquainted with his method and style of work. The libretto is a somewhat strange compound. It opens with a prologue by Mr. Sturges (who wrote the poem for "Nadeschda"), in which a "Grecian poet" regrets that he was "born too late"; Nymphs no longer sing; Phoebus' shell has disappeared: he finds himself, in fact, "in a sullen world of stock and stone." The composer has treated this in simple declamatory style. Then follow words by Mrs. Hemans, with lines intermixed from Keats and Shelley. The music is not strong, but displays much of that charm and refinement characteristic of the composer's music. And the plaintive words and plaintive strains have a strange pathos: the composer was writing his own death-chant. This cantata, if not Goring Thomas's best work, will serve to recall one who, during his short career, achieved much, but promised more. The choir, after their arduous morning's work, showed some signs of fatigue. The soloists were Mme. Albani, Miss Brema, and Messrs. Lloyd and Brereton; Mr. Lloyd's expressive singing deserves special mention. There were loud calls at the close for Dr. Stanford, who has scored the cantata with great ability, but in vain.

This work was followed by Sir Arthur Sullivan's "In Memoriam." Overture, magnificently rendered under Dr. Richter's direction. The concert concluded with a spirited performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," with Mme. Albani, Miss Brema, and Mr. Lloyd as soloists. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

M. CHARLES-BORDES, the well-known organist of St. Gervais, Paris, and an enthusiastic Bascoophile, has put out the first number of a publication, to contain Cent Chansons Populaires Basques, taken down on the spot by himself. M. Bordes notes the airs, gives a French translation with the Basque words, and traces the melodies to their earliest sources, often to Gregorian tones. The subscription to the whole is 5 francs.

The ninth season of the Sunday Popular Concerts at South Place, Finsbury, will begin on October 7, at 7 p.m. The programme includes Schubert's posthumous Quartet in D minor, and Haydn's Quartet in G (Op. 77, No. 1). Admission is entirely free.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

BY I.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

By the Author of
"Bootles' Baby," "Army
Society," "Garrison Gossip,"
"The Soul of the Bishop," "Aunt Johnnie," "A Seventh Child," &c.
1 vol., gilt cloth, 6s.

[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

II.

By Mrs. Hungerford—PETER'S WIFE.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn," "Nora Creina," "An Unsatisfactory Lover," "April's Lady," &c. 3 vols., 18s.

[At all Libraries.

III.

By Mrs. Edward Kennard—The CATCH of the COUNTY. By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "The Hunting Girl," "Just like a Woman," "Wedded to Sport," &c. 3 vols., 18s.

[At all Libraries.

"Mrs. Kennard deals with her material in a vivacious fashion..."
Globe.

IV.

By Mrs. Alexander—A CHOICE OF

EVILS. By the Author of "The Wooing O't," "Found Wanting," "A Woman's Heart," "For His Sake," &c. 3 vols., 18s.

[At all Libraries.

"Mrs. Alexander's is a fluent pen, and she has made a readable story of the strange experiences of her present heroine... Janet is a fine character."—Athenaeum.

"Mrs. Alexander has done a remarkable thing in her latest novel.
...The writer shows us once more the freedom of exaggeration, the keen and not unkindly observation of life in many phases, and the true faculty of story-telling which made her mark long ago."

"...this clever lady's wide and steadfast public must recognise the same hand and the same cunning which first delighted them when 'The Wooing O't' and 'Found Wanting' were amongst the newest things upon the bookstalls. Mrs. Alexander has written very pleasantly."—Daily Telegraph.

V.

By Mrs. Alexander Fraser—A MAY-FAIR

TRAGEDY. By the Author of "A Professional Beauty," "Daughters of Belgravia," "The New Duchess," "A Modern Bridegroom," &c. 8 vols., 18s.

[At all Libraries.

"In 'A Mayfair Tragedy,' by Mrs. Fraser, that very capable and experienced novelist has given another stimulating and rather sensational story... Cecil and Bell Beland are two charming girls, making the story pleasant as well as interesting."—Courier Journal.

"'A Mayfair Tragedy' is likely to share the popularity of Mrs.
Fraser's former works. The characters are well drawn and the interest thoroughly sustained... It is such a book as once taken up will not readily be laid down, or if laid down the reader will seize the opportunity to know the outcome of the maze of passions and hidden aspirations that are woven into this charming story of love and intrigue."—Life.

VI.

By the Author of "There is no Death"

THE SPIRIT WORLD. 1 vol., cloth, 6s.

[At all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

VII.

By Fergus Hume—WHOM GOD HATH

JOINED: a Question of Marriage. By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "Miss Meph-istopheles," "The Man with a Secret," "The Gentleman who Vanished," &c. (3rd Edition.) In Picture Boards, 2s.

[At all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
11, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

- A HISTORY of EPIDEMICS in BRITAIN. Vol. II. By Charles Creighton, M.D., M.A.
formerly Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Cambridge.
Vol. II. FROM the EXTINCTION of the PLAGUE to the PRESENT TIME. Demy 8vo, 20s. [Immediately.]
- INTERNATIONAL LAW, CHAPTERS on the PRINCIPLES of. By J. Westlake, M.A., Q.C., Whewell Professor of International Law. Demy 8vo. [Nearly ready.]
- THE APOSTLES' CREED: its Relation to Primitive Christianity. By H. B. Swete, D.D., Regius
Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 2s.
- THE FOUR GOSPELS in the OLD SYRIAC VERSION. Transcribed from the Palimpsest in the Convent of St. Katherine on Mount Sinai, by R. L. BENSLEY, M.A., late Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic, J. R. HARRIS, M.A., Fellow of Clare College and University Reader in Palaeography, and F. C. BURKITT, M.A., Trinity College; with an Introduction by Mrs. LEWIS. Demy 4to, half-buckram, 25s.; paper covers, 21s.
- AN ELEMENTARY INTRODUCTION to MINERALOGY. By R. H. Solly, M.A., F.G.S., Demonstrator of Mineralogy in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 15s. [Immediately.]
- THE STEAM-ENGINE and other HEAT-ENGINES. By J. A. Ewing, M.A., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E.,
Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
- THE PRINCIPLES of BOOK-KEEPING by DOUBLE ENTRY. By A. Cayley, Sc.D., F.R.S., Sadlerian Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 6d.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

GENERAL EDITOR—G. W. PROTHERO, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh.

- THE REVOLUTIONARY and NAPOLEONIC ERA, 1789-1815. By J. H. Rose, M.A., Christ's College. 4s. 6d. [Now ready.]

. Other Volumes are in preparation.

CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL ESSAYS.—No. VII.

- THOMAS of LONDON before his CONSECRATION. By Lewis B. Radford, M.A., late Scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge. (Prince Consort Dissertation, 1891.) Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

STUDIA SINAITICA.

- No. 1. A CATALOGUE of the SYRIAC MSS. in the CONVENT of ST. KATHERINE on MOUNT SINAI. Compiled by AGNES SMITH LEWIS. 10s. 6d. net.
- No. 2. AN ARABIC VERSION of ST. PAUL'S EPISTLES to the ROMANS, CORINTHIANS, GALATIANS, and PART of EPHESIANS. Edited from a Ninth Century MS. in the Convent of St. Katherine on Mount Sinai by MARGARET DUNLOP GIBSON. 5s. net.
- No. 3. A CATALOGUE of the ARABIC MSS. in the CONVENT of ST. KATHERINE on MOUNT SINAI. Compiled by MARGARET DUNLOP GIBSON. 6s. net.
- No. 4. A TRACT of PLUTARCH on the ADVANTAGE to be DERIVED from a MAN'S ENEMIES. The Syriac Text, Edited from a MS. on Mount Sinai, with Translation and Critical Notes, by Dr. EBERHARD NESTLE. 2s. net.

. Other Numbers of this Series are in course of preparation.

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.

- HOMER'S ILIAD. The Text, Edited in accordance with Modern Criticism, by Arthur Platt,
M.A., Professor of Greek in University College, London. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.
- HOMER'S ODYSSEY. By the Same Editor. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCE SERIES.

General Editor, A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College.

- PRACTICAL PHYSIOLOGY of PLANTS. By F. Darwin, M.A., F.R.S., and E. H. Acton, M.A.
[Nearly ready.]
- PRACTICAL MORBID ANATOMY. By H. D. Rolleston, M.D., F.R.C.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Assistant Physician and Lecturer on Pathology, St. George's Hospital, London, and A. A. KANTHACK, M.D., M.R.C.P., Lecturer on Pathology,
St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. 6s. [Nearly ready.]

PITT PRESS MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

NEW EDITION OF C. SMITH'S ARITHMETIC.

- ARITHMETIC for SCHOOLS. Second Edition. By C. Smith, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex
College, Cambridge. With or without Answers, 3s. 6d.; or in Two Parts.
Part I., Chapters I.-VIII., Elementary, with or without Answers, 2s.
Part II., Chapters IX.-XIX., with or without Answers, 2s.
- KEY to C. SMITH'S ARITHMETIC. [In the press.]

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

NEW EDITION OF DR. MILL'S ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY.—1s. 6d.

[Nearly ready.]

- ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. A Sketch of the Commodities and the Countries of the World. By H. R. MILL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E., Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.
- CICERO.—PRO MILONE. New Edition. With Introduction and Notes by J. S. Reid, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.
- SCHILLER.—WALLENSTEIN'S LAZER and DIE PICCOLOMINI. With Introduction, English
Notes, and Appendix, by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in German at the University of Cambridge. 3s. 6d.
- SCHILLER.—WALLENSTEIN'S TOD. By the Same Editor. [In the press.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1171.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

The CHEMISTRY of the BLOOD, and other Scientific Papers. By the late S. C. WOOLDRIDGE, M.D., D.Sc., Assistant Physician and Lecturer on Physiology at Guy's Hospital. Arranged by VICTOR HORSLEY, B.S., F.R.C.S., and ERNEST STARLING, M.D., M.R.C.P. With an Introduction by VICTOR HORSLEY. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"A QUITE ADMIRABLE BOOK."

METHODS of PRACTICAL HYGIENE. By Prof. K. B. LEHMANN, Würzburg. Translated by W. CROOKES, F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 31s. 6d.

A CONTRIBUTION to our KNOWLEDGE of SEEDLINGS. By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart, M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. With 684 Figures in the Text. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s. net.

REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION.

The QUATRAINS of OMAR KHAYYAM. Translated into English Verse by E. H. WHINFIELD, late of the Bengal C.S. Second Edition, Revised. Large Post 8vo, 5s.

[Trübner's Oriental Series.]

CENTENARY EDITION.

The COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY. The Text newly Collated and Revised by GEORGE EDWARD WOODBERRY. Steel Portrait. In 4 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. net.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

FOUR CENTURIES of ENGLISH LETTERS. A Selection of 350 letters by 150 Writers, from the Period of the Paston Letters to the Present Time. By W. B. SCOTTES. New and Cheaper Edition. Large crown 8vo, 5s.

The PRISON LIFE of MARIE ANTOINETTE and her CHILDREN, the DAUPHIN and the DUCHESSE D'ANGOULEME. By M. C. BISHOP. New and Revised Edition, with Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The ELEMENTS of HYPNOTISM. The Induction of Hypnosis: its Phenomena, its Dangers, and Value. By R. HARRY VINCENT. With 20 Illustrations, showing Experiments. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A CHESS CLASSIC.

CHESS STUDIES. Comprising 1,000 Games. A Collection of Classical and brilliant Specimens of Chess Skill. By B. G. WALKER. New edition. With Preface by E. FREEBOROUGH. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HALLECK'S INTERNATIONAL LAW ; or Rules Regulating the Intercourse of States in Peace and War. Third Edition, thoroughly Revised, and in many parts re-written. By Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., of the Middle Temple and of the Western Circuit, Barrister-at-Law, Recorder of Barnstaple and Bideford, Author of "The Laws Relating to Quarantine," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 88s.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES, Vol. LXXVI.

RACE and LANGUAGE. By ANDRÉ F. LEFÈVRE, Professor in the Anthropological School, Paris. Crown 8vo, 5s.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES, Vol. LXXIII.

HANDBOOK of GREEK and LATIN PALÆOGRAPHY. By E. MAUNDE THOMPSON, Principal Librarian, British Museum. With Tables of Alphabets and Facsimiles. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS of GEORGE MAC DONALD'S NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

The ELECT LADY.

FLIGHT of the SHADOW.

WEIRD TALES from NORTH-ERN SEAS. From the Danish of JONAS LIE. Translated by R. NISBET BAIN. With 12 Illustrations by Laurence Housman. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"CLEVERLY ILLUSTRATED."

PROVERBS in PORCELAIN, to which is added "AU REVOIR," a Dramatic Vignette. By AUSTIN DOBSON. With 25 Illustrations by Bernard Partridge. Small 4to, 5s.

A limited number of copies may be had printed on Large Paper, 21s. net.

"A SUPERB QUARTO VOLUME."

FANS of JAPAN. By C. M. SALWEY. With Introduction by WILLIAM ANDERSON, F.R.C.S., late of H.B.M.'s Legation, Japan. With 10 Full-Page Coloured Plates, and 39 Illustrations in Black and White. Large 4to, 31s. 6d. net.

"A FASCINATING STORY."

DAVID GARRICK: a Biography. By JOSEPH KNIGHT. With New Portrait by W. Boncher, from a Painting by Gainsborough. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A few Large-Paper Copies may be had, 21s. net.

The BOOK of GOVERNORS: the Historia Monastica of Thomas, Bishop of Marga, A.D. 840. Edited from Syriac Manuscripts in the British Museum and other Libraries. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D. F.S.A., Keeper of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities, British Museum. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 42 net.

Vol. I. The SYRIAN TEXT, INTRODUCTION, &c.

Vol. II. The ENGLISH TRANSLATION.

BOOKS ABOUT BOOKS. Edited by A. W. POLLARD. Printed on Hand-made Paper, and bound in buckram, post 8vo, 6s. net.

New Volume.

The BINDING of BOOKS. By HERBERT P. HORNE. Being the Sixth and Concluding Volume of "Books about Books."

EARLY EDITIONS: a Bibliographical Survey of the Works of some Popular Modern Authors. By J. H. SLATER. Demy 8vo, half-roxburghie morocco, 21s. net.

A few Large-Paper Copies on Hand-Made Paper are issued at 42s.

NEW VOLUME OF TRÜBNER'S ORIENTAL SERIES.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ANCIENT INDIA BASED on SANSKRIT LITERATURE. B.C. 2000 to A.D. 1000. With Maps. By ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT, C.I.E. Revised Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

INDIA. By Sir John Strachey. New and Revised Edition. With Map. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION.

A COSTLY FREAK. A New Novel. By MAXWELL GRAY, Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland." With Frontispiece by Everard Hopkins. Crown 8vo, 6s.

FACSIMILE OF FIFTEENTH CENTURY ALMANACK.
The KALENDAR of SHEPHERDES. Edited by H. OSKAR SOMMER, PhD. Royal 8vo, boards, £2 2s. net.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

The COUNTESS of PEMBROKE'S ARCADIA. Written by Sir PHILIP SYDNEY. Royal 8vo, boards, £2 2s.

Only 100 Copies now remain unsold for.

"A VERY CHARMING BOOK."

LIVING ENGLISH POETS. MDCCCXCIII. With Frontispiece by Herbert Ralston. Large crown 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, parchment or cloth, 12s.; vellum, 15s.

Contains Selections from the following Poets:—Frederick Tennyson, Thomas Gordon Hake, Aubrey de Vere, Philip James Bailey, Frederick Locker-Lampson, Coventry Patmore, William Alexander, Christina Georgina Rossetti, Sir Edwin Arnold, Lewis Morris, Richard Watson Dixon, William Morris, Alfred Austin, Sir Alfred Lyall, Lord de Tashley, Walter Theodore Watts, Algernon Swinburne, Wilfrid Scawen Blunt, Austin Dobson, Augusta Webster, Mrs. Hamilton King, Robert Buchanan, William John Courthope, Frederick W. H. Myers, Robert Bridges, Andrew Lang, Edmund Gosse, Walter Herries Pollock, Robert Louis Stevenson, Theophile Marzials, Margaret S. Woods, Mary Darnesteter, Lord Houghton, Norman Gale, Katharine Tynan, Herbert P. Horne, Arthur Symonds, Rudyard Kipling, Richard le Gallienne.

A limited Edition printed on Large Paper.

REVISED EDITION.

SONGS WITHOUT NOTES. By LEWIS MORRIS, Author of "The Epic of Hades," &c. Second Edition, with several new Poems. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

THIRD EDITION.

The ART of MUSIC. By C. H. H. PARRY, Mus. Doc. Oxon., Cantab., and Dublin. Demy 8vo, 12s.

TENNYSON: Poet, Philosopher. Idealist. Studies of the Life, Work, and Teaching of the Poet Laureate. By J. CUMING WALTERS. With Portrait after a Photograph by Mrs. Cameron. 8vo, 12s.

The COMPARATIVE PATHOLOGY of INFLAMMATION. Lectures delivered at the Pasteur Institute in 1891. By ELIAS METCHNIKOFF, Chef de Service à l'Institut Pasteur. Translated from the French by E. A. STARLING and E. H. STARLING, M.D. With 65 Figures in the Text and 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 8vo, 12s.

BIBLIOGRAPHICA: a Magazine of Bibliography. In Twelve Quarterly Parts. Subscription per annum (Four Parts), 30s. net, per Part, 10s. net.

PART I. contains articles by W. Y. Fletcher, Charles I. Elton, H. Oscar Sommer, Andrew Lang, R. Proctor, Octave Uzanne, S. T. Pridaux, E. Gordon Duff, and A. W. Pollard, on 'A Copy of Celsus from the Library of Grolier,' 'Christina of Sweden and her Books,' 'Raoul Lefevre and Le Recueil des Histoires de Troye,' 'Names and Notes in Books,' 'The Accipies Woodcut,' 'La Bibliophilie Moderne,' 'Thoinan's Les Itellours Français,' 'The Stationers at the Sign of the Trinity,' 'The Books of Hours of Geoffrey Tory.'

PART II. contains articles by E. Maunio Thompson, H. B. Wheatley, Austin Dobson, Paul Kristeller, R. C. Christie, E. Gordon Duff, and Falconer Madan, on 'English Illuminated MSS.,' 'Samuel Pepys,' 'Henry Fleckling,' 'Woodcuts as Bindings,' 'The Chronology of the Early Aldines,' 'The Stationers at the Sign of the Trinity,' and 'Early Representations of the Printing Press.'

ST. MICHAEL the ARCH-ANGEL: Three Encomiums by Theodosius, Archbishop of Alexandria; Severus, Patriarch of Antioch; and Eustathius, Bishop of Trake. The Coptic Texts, with extracts from Arabic and Ethiopic versions, edited, with a Translation, by E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, Litt.D. Large 8vo, 15s. net.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | |
|--|-----|
| CURZON'S PROBLEMS OF THE FAR EAST, by STEPHEN WHEELER | 271 |
| STAVENSON'S THE EBB-TIDE, by PERCY ADDLESHAW | 272 |
| DEAGE ON THE UNEMPLOYED, by J. A. HAMILTON | 273 |
| ON THE ART OF WRITING FICTION, by J. A. NOBLE | 278 |
| FEILBERG'S DICTIONARY OF JUTLAND DIALECTS, by J. S. THORNTON | 274 |
| NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH | 275 |
| CLASSICAL BOOKS | 276 |
| TWO VOLUMES OF VERSE | 277 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 277 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 278 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE CREVISTS SEEN FROM THE NORTH," by MICHAEL FIELD | 278 |
| ORITUAAY: OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, by WALTER LEWIN | 279 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 279 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 279 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| A Newly Discovered Recension of the Gregorian Sacramentary, by MARTIN RULE; The Septuagint, by PROF. SWETE: An Autograph MS. of Defoe's in the British Museum, by PROF. BULBRIDGE; "The Old Street," by H. BRADLEY; The Baginbun Stone, by the Earl of Southesk and the Rev. Dr. E. McClure; M. Ernest Lavoisier, by SALOMON REINACH | 280 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 282 |
| THE ORIGIN OF CULTIVATED PLANTS AND DOMESTICATED ANIMALS, by PROF. SAYCE | 282 |
| PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS | 283 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 284 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 284 |
| THE LIFE AND WORK OF CIMA, by B. BERENSON | 284 |
| THE LIMER IN GERMANY, by F. HAYFIELD | 285 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 285 |
| THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 285 |
| MUSIC PUBLICATIONS | 286 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. O. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

PRIVATE SECRETARY.—LADY (28) desires ENGAGEMENT to either LADY or GENTLEMAN—Literary, Scholar, or Professional. Shorthand. Good Correspondent. Methodical.—Address TRENDS, Post Office, Waterloo, Liverpool.

PRIVATE SECRETARYSHIP, or similar Appointment, desired by a competent SHORTHAND-WRITER and TYPIST. Student of Oriental Archaeology. Excellent Testimonials and Press Opinions. Personal Reference to F.R.S. Salary moderate.—ALPHA, 15, Lankar Villas, W.

TOWER-DESIGN.—A Classified Collection of about 400 Photograph and Views, illustrating nearly every known type of Tower.—Romanesque, Gothic, Renaissance, and Mahometan.—To be DISPOSED OF.—Apply to R. S. L., care of Messrs. Deacon, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING. AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET (Opposite the British Museum). Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices. Catalogues on application.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4jd.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR FOR THE SESSION 1894-95. MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON. J. E. CORNISH, MANCHESTER.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS OF CONSTANCE NADEN. With an Explanatory Fore-Word by ROBERT LEWIS, M.D., Surgeon-Lieut.-Colonel (Retired). With Portrait. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s. Bickers & Son, 1, Leicester Square, W.C.]

BOROUGH of WEST BROMWICH.

The Corporation of West Bromwich require the services of a PRINCIPAL to undertake the general control of the Day and Evening Teaching in their Science School. The salary has been fixed at £300 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st April next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Municipal Technical Instruction Committee. Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 1st December next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter. The Institute, West Bromwich. T. GILBERT GRANT, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE DIPLOMA AND TITLE OF L.L.A. to WOMEN. The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c. For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

A COURSE OF SIX LECTURES ON "EGYPTIAN HISTORY OF THE SEVENTEENTH to the TWENTIETH DYNASTIES," will be given by Professor W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE, D.C.L., on SATURDAYS, at 2 p.m., beginning on OCTOBER 6th. Fee for the Course, £1 1s. J. M. Housburgh, M.A., Secretary.

THE POETRY OF BROWNING.

TEN LECTURES by J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A., commencing on THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18th, 1894, at 3 p.m., at 16, SOMERSET STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, W. (by kind permission of the Rev. R. P. Thompson). Tickets for the Course, £1 1s., may be had of Miss REES, Hon. Sec., 84, Finchley Road, N.W. Admission to Single Lecture, 2s. 6d.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholarly Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN, 36, HANDEL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £20 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

FINISHING SCHOOL FOR GENTLEMEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 45, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Usher, Esq. of Norton, Middlethorpe; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, 36, Portchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Hisset, R.E., C.I.E.

EDINBURGH.—SUPERIOR BOARD offered for STUDENT in professional gentleman's family; large house; good locality. Highest references.—No. 598, Robertson & Scott, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

THE UNDERSIGNED, Lecturer in the University of Marburg, RECEIVES as BOARDERS Gentlemen who wish to attend the University or to study German and other languages. Pupils prepared for Examinations, University, Army, &c.—Address, Schwanallee 4, Marburg i. H., Germany. W. TILLEY.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS. From the Earliest Period to the End of 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL, Author of "The Author's Manual," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 310 pages, price 3s. 6d. net. Slogator.—"Mr. Russell's familiarity with every form of novel is amazing, and his summaries of plots, and comments thereon, are as brief and lucid as they are various." Globe.—"Is unquestionably useful." Morning Post.—"Will be of considerable value." Manchester Courier.—"An invaluable storehouse of facts." Newcastle Chronicle.—"The Guide may be recommended to librarians as well as to readers of fiction."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE. Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. net. With Portrait. LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

MESSRS. LUZAC'S

NEW BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

WESTERN ASIA, according to the most Recent Discoveries. By C. P. TIELE, Professor of Comparative Theology. Translated by ELIZABETH J. TAYLOR. Demy 8vo, cloth, pp. 36, 2s. 6d.

CHRESTOMATHIA BAIDAWIANA.

The Commentary of El-Baidawi on Sura III. Translated and Explained for the Use of Students of Arabic. By D. S. MARGOLIOUTH, M.A., Laudian Professor of Arabic in the University of Oxford, &c., &c. Post 8vo, cloth, pp. xvi. -216, 12s. 6d. net.

THE SEVEN POEMS suspended in the Temple at Mecca. Translated from the Arabic. By Capt. F. E. JOHNSON. With an Introduction by SHAIKH TAIZULLABHAH. 8vo, pp. xxiv, 238, 7s. 6d. net.

JINALANKARA; or, Embellishments of Buddha. By BUDDHARAKKHITA. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Translation, by JAMES GRAY, Professor Rangoon College. 2 Parts in One, demy 8vo, cloth, pp. 112, 1s.

London: LUZAC & Co., Publishers to the India Office, 46, Great Russell Street. (Opposite the British Museum.)

1 vol., cloth, 124 pp., 2s. 6d.

THE BRITISH NATION: and the ANTS,

an Allegory. "Carrying us back to first principles."—Scotsman.

A. ALLAN, 33, Lorne Street, Leith.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

It is the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munch, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary

Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on Application. Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW WORKS.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH.

By IAN MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, bound in Art Linen, gilt top, 6s.

CONTENTS:—Domsic—A Lad o' Pairts—How we carried the News to Whinnie Knowe—In Margets' Garden—A Scholar's Funeral—A Highland Mystic—What Eye hath not seen—Against Principalities and Powers—A Doctor of the Old School—A General Practitioner—Through the Flood—A Fight with Death—The Doctor's Last Journey, &c., &c. [Ready.]

JANE BARLOW'S NEW STORY.

KERRIGAN'S QUALITY. By Jane

BARLOW, Author of "Irish Idylls," "Bogland Studies," &c. Crown 8vo, bound in Art Linen, gilt top, 6s. [Next week.]

TAMMAS BODKIN. Swatches o'

Hodden Grey. By W. D. LATTO. Crown 8vo, bound in Art Linen, gilt top, 6s. [Next week.]

LOVE and QUIET LIFE. Somerset

Idylls. By WALTER RAYMOND, Author of "Gentleman Upcott's Daughter," "Young Sam and Sabina," &c. Crown 8vo, bound in Art Linen, gilt top, 6s. [In a few days.]

CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE: a Series of Discourses. By R. W. DALE, LL.D., of Birmingham, Author of "The Living Christ and the Four Gospels," "The Atonement," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

THE PSALMS.

By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. Volume III. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

This Volume completes the work, and the Seventh Series of THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE. [Ready.]

M. MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

RUYSBROECK and the MYSTICS

With Selections from Ruysbroeck. By MAURICE MAETERLINCK. Authorised Translation by JANE T. STODDART. Cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d. [In a few days.]

THE "CONTEMPORARY WRITERS" SERIES.

Edited by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D.

1. THOMAS HARDY. By Annie

MACDONELL, Containing a Portrait of Mr. Hardy, and a Map of Mr. Hardy's Wessex. 16mo, 3s. 6d. [In a few days.]

The volumes of this series are intended to be introductions and companions to the works of the greater contemporary writers.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

With Six Maps, specially prepared, 8vo, cloth, 15s.

THE HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE HOLY LAND.

By GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, Free Church College, Glasgow.

"In English, at least, there is no book from which the reader can carry away in his mind's eye so clear, connected, and permanent picture of Palestine as from Dr. Smith's." Daily News.

Sixth Edition. 8vo, cloth, 12s.

CHRIST IN MODERN THEOLOGY.

By A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.

"His work is, without doubt, one of the most valuable and comprehensive contributions to theology that has been made during this generation."—Spectator.

Third Edition, with Maps and Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE CHURCH in the ROMAN EMPIRE BEFORE A.D. 170.

By W. M. RAMSAY, M.A., D.C.L., Professor of Humanity in the University of Aberdeen. "The whole volume is full of freshness and originality."—Prof. W. SANDAY in the Expositor.

Gilt top, price 9s. net.

LIFE OF ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

By PAUL SABATIER. Translated from the French.

TWO NEW STORIES.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d., with Eight Illustrations.

1.—THE LONE HOUSE.

By AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Cluny Macpherson," &c.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. With Eight Illustrations.

2.—LED BY LOVE: a Story of Every-day Life.

By M. A. PAULL, Author of "The Flower of the Grassmarket," &c.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

THE BOOKMAN.

An Illustrated Monthly Journal for Bookreaders, Bookbuyers, and Booksellers.

CONTENTS for OCTOBER. Price 6d.

"BESIDE the BONNIE BRIER BUSH." With Portrait of "Ian MacLaren" By Prof. GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D.

SOME FORMER MEMBERS of the GARRICK CLUB. By the Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends." Printed from a Manuscript Volume lately discovered.

THE LITERARY ASSOCIATIONS of HAMPSHIRE. By W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D. With a Portrait of "The Angel in the House," and other Illustrations.

A COMPLAINT AGAINST PRINTERS. By an Editor.

NEW WRITER. Miss VIOLET HUNT. With Portrait.

MARY QUEEN of SCOTS. To her Marriage with Darnley. By D. HAY FLEMING.

DR. PFLEIDERER'S GIFFORD LECTURES. By the Rev. WALTER LOCK, M.A., Oxford.

MR. STEVENSON'S "THE EBB TIDE." By Y. Y.

NEW VOLUME NOW COMMENCING.

THE

WOMAN AT HOME.

(ANNIE S. SWAN'S MAGAZINE.)

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED. 6d. MONTHLY.

THE OCTOBER NUMBER COMMENCES A NEW VOLUME.

Many striking features will be introduced during the year. Prospectus will be sent on application.

THE WOMAN AT HOME is the Best Illustrated

Magazine of its kind, and has the best staff of Writers of any Woman's Magazine. Amongst the Contributors are—

J. M. BARBIE.
MAARTEN MAARTENS.
IAN MACLAREN.
SARAH GRAND.
"Q."
L. T. MEADE.
S. BARING-GOULD.
MRS. HUNGERFORD.
ADELINE SERGEANT.

MRS. ALEXANDER.
MRS. MACQUOID.
LADY CHARLES BERESFORD.
LADY DOROTHY NEVILL.
THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK.
LADY BURTON.
LADY BUTLER.
BARONESS VON ZEDLITZ,
And many others.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

WITH INTRODUCTION BY H. RIDER HAGGARD. THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES

OF
JOHN GLADWYN JEBB.

By HIS WIDOW.

With an Electrochrome Portrait of Mr. Jebb.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Next week.]

"Rarely, if ever, in this nineteenth century has a man lived so strange and varied an existence. 'Adventures are to the adventurous,' the saying tells us, and certainly they were to Mr. Jebb. From the time that he came to manhood he was a wanderer; and how it chanced that he survived the many perils of his daily life is nothing less than a mystery."

Extract from Mr. RIDER HAGGARD'S Introduction.

SIXTH EDITION, ENLARGED.

The FORESTER: a Practical Treatise on the Planting and Tending of Forest Trees and the General Management of Woodlands. By JAMES BROWN, LL.D. Edited by JOHN NISBET, D.C.E., Author of "British Forest Trees," &c. In 2 vols., royal 8vo, with 350 Illustrations, 42s. net.

HISTORICAL ROMANCE BY A NEW WRITER.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

IN FURTEST IND; being the Narrative of Mr. Edward Carhon of Ellwether, in the County of Northampton, and late of the Honourable East India Company's Service, Gentlemen. Wrote by his own hand in the year of grace 1697. Edited, with a few Explanatory Notes, by SYDNEY C. ORMER. Post 8vo, 6s.

"A veray parfit gentil knight."

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY,

SERVANT OF GOD.

By ANNA M. STODDART. Illustrated by Margaret L. Huggins. With a new Portrait of Sir Philip Sidney. Small 4to, with a specially designed cover. 5s.

[This day.]

NEW BOOK BY "A SON OF THE MARSHES."

FROM SPRING to FALL; or, When

Life Stirs. Edited by J. A. OWEN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Ready this day.]

CHEAP UNIFORM EDITION OF WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

WITH the WOODLANDERS | WITHIN an HOUR of
and by the TIDE. | LONDON TOWN.

ANNALS of a FISHING | ON SURREY HILLS.
VILLAGE.

POPULAR EDITION.

LIFE OF THE

RIGHT HON. W. H. SMITH, M.P.

By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P. New Edition. With a Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A STUDY OF

ETHICAL PRINCIPLES.

By JAMES SETH, M.A., Professor of Philosophy in Brown's University, U.S.A. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By R. J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., First English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College. Crown 8vo, 380 pp., 3s.

BLACKWOOD'S NEW SERIES OF THREE- AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

JUST ADDED.

MISS MARJORIBANKS. By Mrs. Oliphant
THE PERPETUAL CURATE, and The RECTOR. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

SALEM CHAPEL, and The DOCTOR'S FAMILY. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

THE STORY of MARGRÉDEL. By D.
STORRAE MELDRUM.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A SHAKESPEARE CONCORDANCE. A New and Complete

Concordance or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare, with a Supplementary Concordance to the Poems. By JOHN BARTLETT, A.M., Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. Demy 4to, cloth, £2 2s. net. Half-morocco, £2 6s. net. (Prospectus, with Specimen Page, may be had on application.)

TIMES.—"Deserves cordial recognition from all who love Shakespeare."

PEN DRAWING and PEN DRAUGHTSMEN. Their Work and their Methods. A Study of the Art To-day, with Technical Suggestions. By JOSEPH PENNELL. A New and Enlarged Edition, with over 400 Illustrations. Demy 4to, 42s. net.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of ALFRED LORD TENNYSON.

In 1 vol. With Portrait Engraved on Steel by G. J. Stodart. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CORIDON'S SONG, and OTHER VERSES. With Illustrations

by Hugh Thomson, and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, 6s.

[CHAMFORD SERIES.]

TIMES.—"We are also indebted to Mr. Dobson for a delightful Introduction to a very pretty volume of selected and illustrated verse. Mr. Thomson's charming illustrations. They are full of quaint life and spirit."

CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES. Edited, with Notes and

Introduction, by A. W. POLLARD. 2 vols., 10s.

[THE EVERSLY SERIES.]

TIMES.—"Such readers have every reason to be grateful to an editor so learned and scholarly as Mr. Pollard."

THE ENGLISH POETS. Selections, with Critical Introductions

by various writers, and a General Introduction by MATTHEW ARNOLD. Edited by THOMAS HUMPHRY WARD, M.A. Vol. IV. (Wordsworth to Tennyson). New Edition (including Tennyson, Browning, and Matthew Arnold). Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. Vol. I., Chaucer to Donne. Vol. II., Ben Jonson to Dryden. Vol. III., Addison to Blake. 7s. 6d. each vol.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By John Keble. With Introduction

by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. Pot 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

[GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.]

LOVE in IDLENESS. A Bar Harbour Tale. By F. Marion

CRAWFORD. Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

MY NEW HOME. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by Leslie

Brocke. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE USE of LIFE. By the Right Hon. Sir John Lubbock,

D.C.L., F.R.S. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LIFE of SWIFT. By Henry Craik, C.B. 2 vols. With Portraits.

New Edition. Globe 8vo, 10s.

[EVERSLY SERIES.]

A VALIANT IGNORANCE. By Mary Angela Dickens. Crown

8vo, 3s. 6d.

[MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.]

CHRONOLOGICAL OUTLINES of AMERICAN LITERATURE.

By SELDEN L. WHITCOMB, A.M. With an Introduction by BRANDER MATTHEWS, Professor of Literature in Columbia College. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

LIFE in ANCIENT EGYPT. Described by Adolf Erman. Translated by H. M. TITARD, with 403 Illustrations and 11 Plates. Super-royal 8vo, 21s. net.

TIMES.—"A skilful translation of a well-known and esteemed German work which treats of Egyptian antiquities in the light of modern discoveries."

THE HISTORY of GREECE from its COMMENCEMENT to the CLOSE of the INDEPENDENCE of the GREEK NATION. By ADOLF HOLM. Translated from the German. In 4 vols. Vol. I. To the end of the Sixth Century, B.C. 8vo, 6s. net.

A CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of the HOUSE of LORDS.

By LUKE OWEN PIKE, of the Public Record Office. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

PERSONALITY, HUMAN and DIVINE. Being the Bampton

Lectures for 1894. By Rev. J. R. ILLINGWORTH. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

LAST WORDS in the TEMPLE CHURCH. By C. J. Vaughan,

D.D., Dean of Llandaff. Globe 8vo, 6s.

TIMES.—"A volume of sermons for which the title and the name of the preacher will speak more than any recommendation of ours."

ON PRESERVATION of HEALTH in INDIA. By Sir Joseph

FAYRER, K.C.S.I., President of the Medical Board at the India Office. Pot 8vo, 1s.

FROM the GREEKS to DARWIN. An Outline of the Development of the Evolution Ideas. By H. F. OSBORN, Sc.D. 8vo, 9s. net.

TEXT-BOOK of the DISEASES of TREES. By Professor

R. HARTIG. Translated by Dr. W. SOMERVILLE, Professor of Agriculture and Forestry at the Durham College of Science. With a Preface by Prof. H. MARSHALL WARD, F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 10s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO, LONDON.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HAGGARD.

THE PEOPLE OF THE MIST.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations by ARTHUR LAYARD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[On Monday next.

NEW VOLUME OF CANON LIDDON'S LIFE OF DR. PUSEY.

LIFE OF EDWARD BOUVERIE PUSEY, D.D.

By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D.

Edited and prepared for publication by the Rev. J. O. JOHNSTON, M.A., Vicar of All Saints, Oxford, and the Rev. ROBERT J. WILSON, D.D., Warden of Keble College.

(4 vols., 8vo.) With Portraits and Illustrations. Vols. I. and II., 36s. (ready). Vol. III., 18s. [Just published.

"This volume deals with what may be considered, on the whole, the most important period of all in the history of the Oxford Revival."—Standard.

NEW BOOK BY MR. FROUDE.

LIFE and LETTERS of ERASMUS: a Series of Lectures delivered at Oxford. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, Regius Professor of History in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 15s.

"These lectures are probably the most fascinating that were ever delivered by a Regius Professor. Mr. Froude's picture of Erasmus will be acceptable to the English reader for many a year to come."—Illustrated London News.

NEW BOOK BY SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

WANDERING WORDS. Reprinted by permission from Papers published in the "Daily Telegraph" and Foreign Journals and Magazines. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, M.A., K.C.I.E., C.S.I., Author of "Seas and Lands," "The Light of Asia," &c. With 23 Plates and 22 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 18s.

"This volume is a varied medley of reminiscences, reflections, and experiences.....Marked by a pleasant, rational optimism, and a strong insistence on the keen enjoyment derivable—though so many miss it—from the common sights and sounds of even an ordinary English landscape, as well as from the more unfamiliar and picturesque surroundings (which he graphically brings before us) of camp life in an Indian district."—Athenaeum.

FROM EDINBURGH to the ANTARCTIC: an Artist's Notes and

Sketches during the Dundee Antarctic Expedition of 1892-93. By W. G. BURN MURDOCH. With a Chapter by W. S. BRUCE, Naturalist of the Barque Balena. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 18s."A racy chronicle of a remarkable voyage.....With its cheery good-humour, its graphic narrative, and its abundant illustrations, it is sure to be a successful book of the season."—North British Daily Mail.

SIR SIMON VANDERPETTER, and MINDING his ANCESTORS:

Two Reformations. By B. B. WEST, Author of "Half-Hours with the Millionaires." Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. WALFORD.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith,"

"One Good Guest," &c., 8 vols., crown 8vo.

"We have here a novel that is the equal of the author's well-known and popular 'Mr. Smith,' which means that it is very well worth reading."—Observer.

MR. ASTOR'S NEW ROMANCE.

A JOURNEY in OTHER WORLDS: a Romance of the Future. By JOHN JACOB ASTOR. With 10 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The author of 'A Journey in Other Worlds,' who has had the assistance of a very clever artist, has produced a diverting book in the style and manner of Jules Verne, which quotes a few scientific approximations and theories, but is for the most part pure fancy and romance. It is delightful reading and deserves success."—Athenaeum.

NEW TALES OF AUSTRALIAN LIFE.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "A

Bride from the Bush," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A very vivid and impressive book, which abounds in strong passages, and is well sustained throughout.....harrowing and tragic in parts, but undeniably forcible and touching. It is, indeed, the best story we have yet read of Mr. Hornung's."—Westminster Gazette.

NUGGETS in the DEVIL'S PUNCH BOWL; and other Australian

Tales. By ANDREW ROBERTSON, Author of "The Kidnapped Squatter." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, No. 370,

Will be Published on OCTOBER 16th.

CONTENTS.

- | | |
|--|--|
| 1. LORD WOLSELEY'S LIFE of MARLBOROUGH. | 8. FLINT on the PHILOSOPHY of HISTORY. |
| 2. ENGLISH TOWNS in the FIFTEENTH CENTURY. | 7. LOCKYER'S DAWN of ASTRONOMY. |
| 3. THE LONSDALE PAPERS. | 8. THE SHERIDANS. |
| 4. THE REPORT of the LABOUR COMMISSION. | 9. PROJECTILES and EXPLOSIVES in WAR. |
| 5. THE LETTERS of EDWARD FITZGERALD. | 10. THE EDUCATIONAL CRISIS. |
| | 11. NAVAL WAR in the EAST. |

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

DIARY of a CAVALRY OFFICER in the PENINSULAR and WATERLOO CAMPAIGNS. By the late Lieut.-Col. TOMKINSON, of the 18th Dragoons. Edited by his Son JAMES TOMKINSON, J.P., of Tarporey. Second Edition, Revised, with 6 Maps and 3 Etched Plates, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"A delightful book. It is a thousand pities it was not published long ago; for it is one of the works that go to the making of history."—Daily Chronicle."Of the greatest interest. Excellent reproductions add to the charm of the book, which from cover to cover is full of good reading."—St. James's Gazette."The unpretending work of a modest man and a good soldier."—Times."Gives us a better idea of the daily life under Wellington's command than any man's book could afford."—Liverpool Post.

A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

PRIMITIVE CIVILISATIONS. By

E. J. SIMON, Author of "Natural Law," &c. 2 vols., large 8vo, 32s. "A contribution to economical and social history of exceptional value and importance, which displays much patient and laborious research, keen insight, and rare powers of interpretation and generalisation."—Times.

GEORGE ROMNEY and his ART. By HILDA GAMLIN, Author of "Emma, Lady Hamilton," with Photogravures, Collotype, and other Illustrations. [In October.

CHEAP EDITION, 3s. 6d.,

OF

THE WAGES OF SIN.

BY

LUCAS MALET.

CHEAP EDITION, 3s. 6d.

MR. THOMAS PINKERTON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE FRENCH PRISONER: a Story of Dartmoor and the Western Seas. By the Author of "John Newbold's Ordeal," &c. 6s.

THE MEMBER for WORKSHIRE; or,

Church and State: a Novel. By THOMAS ASPDEN. 6s.

A WOMAN'S VERSION of the "KREUTZER SONATA."

WHOSE WAS the BLAME? By Mrs.

JAMES GREGOR. With a Prologue from the Russian of Prince Galitzin. 3s. 6d. "There is a note of quiet sincerity in the sad autobiography."—Literary World.

RECORDS of the HOLE CRAFT and FELLOWSHIP of MASONS. With a Chronicle of the History of the Worshipful Company of Masons of the City of London. By EDWARD CONDELL, Jun., Master of the Company. Facsimiles. 4to, 21s. net.

LECTURES on HUMAN and ANIMAL

PSYCHOLOGY. By Professor W. WUNDT. Translated by Profs. CREIGHTON and TITCHENER. 8vo, 15s.

SCHOOL EDITION OF SEYFFERT.

DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL ANTI-

QUITIES. Edited by the late Prof. H. NETTLESHIP and Dr. J. E. SANDYS. School Edition, Revised. With all the Illustrations. 10s. 6d.

COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR of GER-

MAN and ENGLISH. By Professor VICTOR HENRY. English Edition, by the Author himself. 7s. 6d.

STUDENTS' ANGLO-SAXON DIC-TIONARY. By J. R. CLARK HALL, M.A., Ph.D. 4to (treble columns), 15s.

PROGRESS in LANGUAGE, with

Special Reference to English. By Professor OTTO JESPERSEN (written in English). 7s. 6d.

PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES.—New Vol.

GREEK SYNTAX. By Prof. E. A.

SONNENSCHN, M.A. Oxon. 2s. 6d.; or, with the "Accidence," in 1 vol., 4s. 6d.

ON EXPRESSION in NATURE. By

WILLIAM MAIN, M.D. 3s. 6d. "A very charming and very original treatise, highly suggestive and instructive from beginning to end."—National Observer.

RAINMAKING and SUNSHINE. By JOHN COLLINSON. 3s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.

THE SECOND EDITION OF THE LIFE

OF

FRANCES POWER COBBE By HERSELF.

Is NOW READY at all Libraries and Booksellers.
In 2 vols., square crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 21s.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

NOW READY.

THE INTENDED.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

".....The situation thus far is strange enough, but that is the mere beginning of a plot which has extraordinary wild and sensational developments. The story is conceived with no little ingenuity and much daring, and told in a vigorously athletic style."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE
OTHER GIRLS," &c.

THE OLD OLD STORY.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY,

Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Carey's story is, in fact, wholesome and sweet, full of refinement of thought, and true to a not impossibly high standard of action. An invincible dignity of purpose, a chastened outlook upon life, impart to the tale a certain spirituality."—Globe.

NOW READY.

THE PRINCESS ROYAL.

By KATHARINE WYLDE,

Author of "Mr. Bryant's Mistake."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

THE ADVENTURES.

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES,

Author of "A Gilted Girl," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of the subtlest and most fascinating stories we have read for many a long day. One reads it with a delighted sense of the comedy of life, of the diplomacy of society dames and damsels, of the clever insincerity of such a circle as that adorned by the heroine."—Leeds Mercury.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Very powerful, admirably written, and absolutely void of offence."—Spectator.

"An interesting study in psychology."—Athenaeum.

A NEW EDITION, now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GREATER GLORY.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,

Author of "God's Fool," &c.

At all Booksellers and Libraries.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

LONDON UP TO DATE.

BY

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA

In One Volume. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

THE

SENILE HEART:

Its Symptoms, Sequelæ, and Treatment.

By GEORGE WILLIAM BALFOUR,

M.D. (St. And.), LL.D. (Ed.), F.R.C.P.E., F.R.S.E.,

Consulting Physician to the Royal Infirmary, to the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, and to the Royal Public Dispensary, Edinburgh; Consulting Physician to Leith Hospital; formerly Physician to Chalmers Hospital, Edinburgh, &c.;
Member of the University Court of St. Andrews.

In crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 5s.

HISTORICAL PROGRESS

AND

IDEAL SOCIALISM.

By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON,

Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.

In One Volume. Crown 8vo, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON:

ADAM & CHARLES BLACK,
SOHO SQUARE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES'S The

LIFE OF LEAF. Illustrated by George W. Edwards and F. Harkinson Smith. Being a Reproduction of the large 4to Edition of the same Person published nine years ago at £2 2s., and now produced in post 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, at 7s. 6d. [Just ready.]

* With characteristic Facsimile Letter, dated July 12, 1894, addressed to "my Publishers and Friends."

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By William
BLACK. Author of "A Daughter of Heath." 1 vol. 10 1
8vo, cloth, 6s. [Eighth Thousand.]

"'Highland Cousins' is the first of Mr. Black's works to renounce the vanity of three-volume dress, and to appear at once before the public in a single volume—a highly praiseworthy proceeding."—Guardian.

PERLYCROSS: a Tale of the Western

Hills. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lore,
Do ne," &c. 1 vol. cloth extra, 6s. [Twelfth Thousand.]

IN the DAY of BATTLE. By J. A.
STEUART. Author of "Kilgroom: a Story of Ireland,"
&c. 8 vols. crown 8vo, cloth. [October 20.]

The MAN from OSHKOSH. By John
HICKS. 1 vol. crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [October 15.]

NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE BY PROF. GEORGE EBERS.

CLEOPATRA. 2 vols. cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

CHEAPER EDITION, demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL. A Thousand Miles towards the Sun. By HENRY BLACKBURN,
Editor of "Academy Notes," &c. NORMANDY, BRIT-TANY, PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. With 130 Illustrations by John Philip, R.A., E. Lundgren, Gustave Doré, Sydney Hall, R. Caldecott, &c. [Ready.]

RECOLLECTIONS of a VIRGINIAN, in the MEXICAN, INDIAN, and CIVIL WARS. By General DANIEL H. MAURY. With Portrait, 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

GENERAL GRANT, PERSONAL
MEMOIRS of. New and Cheaper Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

NEW SCIENTIFIC WORKS.

HEALTH and CONDITION in the
ACTIVE and the SEDENTARY. By N. E. YORKE-
DAVIS, Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London, M.R.C.S., Author of "Foods for the Fat,"
"The Dietetics of Obesity," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
[Ready.]

SPECIFICATIONS. For the Use of Surveyors, Architects, Engineers, and Builders. By J. LEANING. Crown 8vo, cloth 3s. 6d.

THERMODYNAMICS. Treated with Elementary Mathematics, and containing applications to Animal and Vegetable Life, Tidal Friction and Electricity. By J. PARKER, M.A., Author of "Elementary Thermodynamics." With numerous Diagrams. Crown
8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The work contains elementary discussions of the principle of energy, perfect gases, Carnot's principle, entropy, the entropy of the universe, evaporation, fusion, the thermodynamic potential, &c.

A TEXT-BOOK of MECHANICS and HYDROSTATICS. By HERBERT HANCOCK, M.A.
F.R.A.S., &c., late Scholar and Triple prizeman at St. John's Coll., Camb., Lecturer on Geometry to the Architectural Association, London, and Mathematical Master in Baueroft's School, Woodford, London. With over 400 Diagrams. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

It is hoped that this book may be useful both for schools in the ordinary course of study, and for private students who may be reading for any of the elementary current examinations.

NEW VOLUME OF LOW'S HALF-A-CROWN NOVELS.

The OLD HOUSE at SANDWICH.
By JOSEPH HATTON, Author of "By Order of the Czar," &c. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author.

JUVENILE LITERATURE.

CLAUDIUS BOMBARNAC. By Jules
VERNE. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1894.

No. 1171, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Problems of the Far East. By the Hon. George N. Curzon, M.P. Japan-Korea-China. (Longmans.)

TWICE within the past twelvemonth I have protested in the ACADEMY against the notion that China, by reason of her military strength, was a factor of the first importance in all Far Eastern questions. To a certain school of writers, the might, majesty, and dominion of the Celestial Empire have seemed indisputable. In the East, also, the prestige of China has been widely recognised. Sir Henry Howorth mentions that in the last century the conquest of Tsungaria and Eastern Turkestan by a Manchurian army caused a panic throughout Asia, and was looked upon as confirmation of a Mahomedan tradition that China would one day conquer the world. There is a story that the Amir Abdur Rahman once said that he feared neither the English nor the Russians, but hoped the Chinese would never attack him. If they did, he would climb down at once. It is not altogether surprising that such ideas should be entertained in Kabul, the Afghans being singularly deficient in political wisdom. The wonder is that they should be echoed in London. To quote a single instance, the Spectator, three months ago, laid it down as a fact beyond dispute that China was the only great native power in Asia, and the only one which, if we had ever to fight for India, could make an effective diversion on our behalf.

One of the chief aims of Mr. Curzon's book is to show how incompatible such theories are with fact. Chinese armaments, he says, are in their present state a delusion, and China's military strength a farce. The events of August and September more than bear out this view. Since it was made public, China has been routed by both sea and land. The army, which was thought to be so admirably drilled and so well equipped for a campaign, has been annihilated. The Japanese command the sea, and there is nothing to prevent them marching to Peking: that is, if China gets no help from outside. It is idle to imagine that they can be stopped by any number of Honan Braves. To Mr. Curzon, therefore, must be given the credit of having forecast the situation with absolute accuracy. Not that he was the first to discover China's impotence. Years ago Mr. J. G. S. Wyllie, of the Indian political department, insisted that the fiction of China's strength as a military state was based on nothing but the "incredible brag" of her statesmen. Gen. Prejevalsky and Col. Mark Bell, both of whom are quoted by Mr. Curzon among his leading authorities, also detected the fraud; and it is greatly to be regretted that more heed was not paid to their opinions in this country. The English Government has been far too deferential to China, mainly because our Foreign Office believed in her "incredible brag." Mr. Curzon devotes a whole chapter to a magazine article published in England, in 1887, under the signature of the Marquis Tseng, and entitled "China—the Sleep and the Awakening." People who ought to have known better were taken in by the specious account it gave of recent progress, of military and naval reforms, of railway extensions, and of an energetic endeavour to raise China to the level of the Western nations. Mr. Curzon has no difficulty in exposing the fallacy of these pretensions; but there is something he might have added to his argument. The article was not written by Marquis Tseng at all, had not been approved by him, and was printed without his knowledge. These may be considered rather bold assertions, but I doubt if they will be contradicted by any credible authority.

Mr. Curzon refers with derision to the "mysterious paragraphs" one so often sees about Chinese activity in the furthestmost confines of the Empire, and about the fixed resolution of the Peking Government not to cede an inch of territory in the Pamirs. "The world," he writes, "is invited to believe that China is as solicitous of her Turkestan frontier as Great Britain is, for instance, about the Hindu Kush." This, he justly observes, represents only what the Chinese would like us to believe. Nothing is more certain than that China could not fight and has no intention of fighting for the Pamirs or any part of them: indeed, whenever the Russians choose to make a move against these or other outlying provinces, it will be "a mere military promenade attended by very little fighting and by no risk." But Mr. Curzon is not always consistent. Speaking of the advantages of a sympathetic understanding between China and Great Britain, he writes:—

"Nor, though Chinese armaments are, in their present state, a delusion, and China's military strength a farce, can anyone deny that her prodigious numbers, her vast extent, her obstinate and tenacious character, and her calculating diplomacy, render her an ally in Central and Eastern Asia of the highest value."

In the preceding page he had denounced "the large corps of writers who never cease to press upon the public an implicit belief in the strength and resolution of China in Central Asia." A country is not valuable as an ally by reason of its prodigious population and wide area. A populous nation is one thing, a great and powerful nation is another. China, to be of any use to her friends, must have an administration under which her resources can be developed and applied to practical ends. Why "her calculating diplomacy" should add to the value of her friendship, I fail to see. There is more truth in Mr. Curzon's remarks on the methods of the Peking Foreign Office:

"Business can with difficulty be conducted with a body so constituted. Their lack of individual experience insures irresolution; their freedom from all responsibility, ineptitude; and their excessive numbers paralysis. The Board is in reality a Board of delay. Its object is to palaver, and gloze, and promise, and do nothing."

In more than one way, the latter chapters of Mr. Curzon's book show signs of being written without sufficient deliberation. Not only are there inconsistencies, but one may even find examples of faulty composition such as the author himself, when he "turns reviewer," is wont to censure with the utmost severity. Here is a case in point. We read:

"In proportion, however, as the memory of the war of 1860 has receded, and the power for menace of the foreigner been diminished, so has the arrogance of the Chinese grown; and nothing now gives greater pleasure than the sullen and sometimes insolent rejection of the 'foreign devil' from the doors to which he once gained undisturbed entry."

This might refer to the foreigner's power of menacing China, or China's power of menacing the foreigner. But, if Mr. Curzon is a little confused here and there in his argument, there are vivid and striking descriptions of what he himself saw during his travels. His account of a street scene in Peking is too long to quote; but room may be found, perhaps, for a few extracts from a single sentence:

"In the side aisles or alleys . . . purveyors . . . are jammed together; barbers shaving without soap . . . chiropodists proclaiming their extraordinary skill, auctioneers screaming the glories of secondhand blouses . . . gamblers shaking spills or playing dominoes . . . charm sellers and quacks . . . acrobats performing feats of agility, sword players slashing the air with huge naked swords, story-tellers enchainning an open-mouthed crowd . . . country folk vending immense white cabbages or ruddy red persimmons, soldiers with bows and arrows behind their backs going out to practice, coolies drawing water from the deeply grooved marble coping of immemorial wells, and men and boys of every age carrying birds in cages or a singing chaffinch. . . ."

Summing up his impressions, Mr. Curzon speaks of the street life of Peking as "a phantasmagoria of excruciating incident, too bewildering to grasp, too aggressive to acquiesce in, too absorbing to escape." More than four hundred years ago Mendez Pinto saw much the same sight, and described with no less keen an eye for detail the inward riches of the wonderful City of Peking, "Whereat we 9 Portugals were exceedingly astonished." In the Observatory at Peking, Mr. Curzon found "two objects which no modern traveller, whose writings I have seen, appears to have noticed." One was a clepsydra "probably dating from the Mongol era," and the other a bronze guomon. I may remark that Mr. Wyllie, quoted in Sir Henry Yule's Marco Polo, saw both these instruments. Further information on the subject may be found in Dr. Terrien de Lacouperie's learned work on The Western Origin of the Early Chinese Civilization (Asher).

But Mr. Curzon's book covers so much ground, and deals with so many complicated questions—some of which, however, are in process of solution at this very moment—that its value as a work of reference cannot easily be tested by criticism on matters of detail. Published at the very outbreak of hostilities between China and Japan, it made its appearance just when a work of this kind was needed; and if it does not keep its place permanently among standard authorities, that will not be the author's fault. He has collected and digested a mass of information and opinion from all quarters; and his journeys, though not very extensive, if we leave out the time spent on board ship, have doubtless helped him in the selection of material. And should the issue of the war now raging oblige him to rewrite the volume, the task will be attacked, we may be sure, with alacrity.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

The Ebb-Tide. By Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne. (Heinemann.)

A DELIGHTFUL thrill of excitement comes over one when a new volume arrives labelled with Mr. Stevenson's name. There is ever in his work a curious fascination, a wit gentle or terrible, a fine feeling for the swing of a phrase. Even when least successful, he contrives delicate effects unattainable by others. His unique style, his fastidious method, seemed to render it impossible that he should at any time seek the crude aid of another: hero, surely, was a man sufficient unto himself. But, while this comfortable feeling of security lulled the reader, the unexpected swooped upon him. A hope that the new venture would be equally successful was hugged tightly. But, alas, the inevitable has happened. Excellent as a great deal of the joint work is, one realises, with a keen sense of annoyance, that the old Stevenson reveals himself but seldom. In each new story the rare excellencies, the unerring choice of words, the subtle charm are harder to discover.

Yet even half a Stevenson is better than none at all; and had that proportion been strictly observed, perhaps some consolation were to be found. But the hand of the junior partner grows each year more masterful. Doubtless Mr. Osbourne can write, and well too, though at best he remains merely clever and fortunate Mr. Osbourne. The stuff manufactured by the firm is good, truly; it has few rivals in the market. Only Mr. Stevenson's never had any rivals. It may be urged that the discoverer of Treasure Island, the historian of Alan Breck, invented and wrote the greater part of The Ebb-Tide. If so, the conclusion is the more lamentable, for it shows less of the Stevensonian quality than any book that has borne his name. A law declaring literary partnerships illegal should not want a majority. For Mr. Stevenson is doing himself an injury, seeing that he can still write as finely as ever: the witchcraft stories of The Island Nights, published last year, are born of genius strong and mature. Association with less excellent, though creditable, work may well shipwreck the most admirable on its perilous voyage through the centuries.

The Ebb Tide, when all is said, is a capital story, not unconvincing, despite improbabilities. Faults it has, and of a kind we had scarcely expected; but it is a book to be read and discussed. At the beginning the reader is introduced to three persons, each with peculiar and exaggerated characteristics, each thoroughly alive. The fourth actor in the drama, one Attwater—prig, scholar, religious enthusiast, half charlatan, half honest man—is aggressively impossible. Not that these conflicting elements cannot go to mould one human being, but simply because the authors seem to have written "with tongue in cheek," and made him incredible of set purpose. Balancing, in some measure, this preposterous failure, there is Huish, the cockney clerk. I doubt if anywhere in fiction a more loathsome creature may be found. Without a redeeming virtue, save courage and a coarse wit, he flaunts his vices in our faces with a smirk of hideous honesty. Undeniably he fascinates, snakelike, compelling a disgusted admiration. He dies pluckily, and one ought to feel a throb of sympathy, for courage is not common or mean, were it not that the atmosphere becomes suddenly the purer for his death. The prodigious Attwater is his executioner; and though the reader has prayed for a kindly catastrophe to carry off this irritating giant, no one with a spark of humanity could wish his contest with Huish had ended differently. If The Ebb Tide is to live, the cockney clerk, the memory of whose companionship through two hundred pages cannot be forgotten, will give a plausible explanation. Also that fine scene at the end, when the drunken American skipper has become Attwater's "pet penitent," may furnish a reason. His last speech, with which the volume closes, is a fine stroke of grisly humour.

"But, O! why not be one of us? Why not come to Jesus right away, and let's meet in yon beautiful land? That's just the one thing wanted; just say, Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief! And He'll fold you in His arms. You see, I know! I've been a sinner myself!"

The authors know human nature better than the reviewers, who have attacked this passage as conceived in a spirit of "pure farce." Davis is the exact type of man who, unnerved by a reckless career of debauchery and crime, would take to religion and find comfort in Evangelistic excitement.

To give the details of the story, not a long one by any means, were unfair. There will probably be divers opinions as to its merits. For my own part, I would suggest, very humbly, that, as this is the best book Mr. Osbourne has achieved, he should now be strong enough to run alone. Again, that Mr. Stevenson, having done right loyally by his step-son, should now remember his duty towards his admirers and himself.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

The Unemployed. By Geoffrey Drage. (Macmillans.)

We opened this book with high expectations. The unemployed are always with us; and from Mr. Drage it is reasonable to expect some advice which may lead to their being not quite so much always with us and perhaps occasionally a little more with somebody else. But the book turns out to be one, which is laid down—and not necessarily at the end of it—with disappointment and regret: regret, because it is in so many respects unworthy of Mr. Drage; disappointment, because it is in so few respects helpful to his public. It seems to have been inspired by an obscure sort of pique, prompting Mr. Drage to relieve his wounded feelings by a petulant outburst against the Board of Trade's Blue Book on the Labour Question. Why his feelings should have been wounded he knows best, nor amid much explanation does he explain this. From the preface it appears that he thinks no apology is needed for his own work, but a great deal for the Board of Trade's; and he winds up what he gravely calls a "critical review" of that work with the following tirade:—

"In conclusion, I may remark that for slovenly thinking and pretentious writing the chapters dealt with in this appendix [i.e., parts i. and vi. of the report thus 'critically reviewed'] have no parallel, as far as I am aware, in the whole range of the literature, professional or official, on the subject of the labour question. I very much doubt whether a parallel can be found in the ephemeral publications which make no claim to serious consideration. It passes my understanding how any one not 'inebriated with the exuberance of his own verbosity,' could, after committing such matter to writing, have solemnly corrected the proofs; it is almost incredible that the proofs should have passed under any supervision worthy of the name, before being issued to the world as a publication of a large and well-known English Government Department like the Board of Trade."

Now, why anyone should take upon himself so awful a censorship as this is perhaps a thing which lies between himself and his conscience; but, without either prying or censoriousness, two things at least may be said to be clear: the censor's own hands should be clean, and himself free from suspicion of self-interest. Mr. Drage succeeds in neither respect. He attacks the Board of Trade for its index at the beginning of his book, and refers, as above quoted, to correction of proofs at the end. Yet neither in the matter of proof-correcting nor of indexing is he himself immaculate. A full third of his book consists avowedly of a mere re-arrangement of the information contained in the Board of Trade report, with supplementary footnotes. But these footnotes, except when they are mere cavillings at the report, consist, with only two exceptions, of references to the Reports of the Labour Commission, to which Mr. Drage was himself secretary, and to his own reports made to that Commission, with which the Board of Trade appears to have been most scandalously unacquainted. Under these circumstances the whole tenor of his criticism is to suggest, either that Mr. Drage is offended because the Board of Trade did not cite him as an authority, or that he is outraged because it did not give him employment in connexion with its report. It is difficult otherwise to understand the personal comments of the preface on the salaries of the Board of Trade officials, or the sedulous enrichment of this work with footnotes, principally devoted to pointing out the fact, that the authority of Mr. Drage's other works has been crassly overlooked. The book teems with self-advertisement. It refers to projected treatises of the author's own with Herodotean frequency, and appends, in sheets that might as well have been incorporated in the text, some lavishly laudatory notices of Mr. Drage's previous publications, his novel, his lectures, and his translations from the German.

A great space is occupied with an elaborate classification of the hundred and one existing modes of dealing with the unemployed. The account given of each of them is brief: hardly longer than is sufficient for classifying purposes. It may be that this is a useful thing to have done; it may be that the Board of Trade will be illuminated by this new pigeon-holing of the schemes it has so inefficiently reviewed. Possibly, too, it may be that, if the powers which control philanthropy keep this classification in mind, we may see something less of the unfortunate overlapping of remedial agencies, which in the past has led to so much waste of energy, money, and time. But the reader's appetite for knowledge is left unappeased. This jejune analysis tells experts nothing that they did not know before, and the public very little that the public is concerned to know at all. Still, Mr. Drage does arrive at conclusions, and he does point out pitfalls; and if the nett result is that most remedies are dangerous, that no one remedy will cure everything, and that the whole problem is very difficult, this vagueness is certainly not Mr. Drage's fault, but the problem's. Some of the unemployed—no man knows how many—are beyond the reach of help; some do not want to work if they could, and some cannot do continuous work if they would; some are criminal, some shiftless, some simply convinced that of all human ills work is the worst. For such charity can do little. The workhouse and the gaol are their temporary resource; and the cure for this sort of thing is only to be found in generation after generation of an improved standard of moral and physical life. Then there are some—let us hope a great majority of the unemployed—thrown out of work by fluctuations of trade, some temporarily, as by over-production, change of fashion, seasonal fluctuations, or financial crises; some permanently, by increased use of machinery or by the introduction of processes beyond their skill. For these much may be done. Provided there is sufficient federal organisation to prevent overlapping and waste, the diversity of the remedies applied and the free scope for individual effort and inquiry are actual advantages. Relief works—strictly temporary and limited—labour registries for those who are known as good and honest workmen, greater self-restraint on the part of the public with regard to caprice in changes of fashion and procrastination in giving its orders, more intelligent foresight, and a less self-regarding energy on the part of manufacturers in the matters of over-production and cut-throat competition, will tend to steady the demand for workmen, to increase the fluidity of labour, and to make it more easily transferable from place to place; and in such ways we may tide a man over evil times without either withdrawing him from his trade or teaching him to look for permanent help not to himself but to the State. In a civilised community want ought rarely to be so imminent, as to leave no time for inquiry: nor is there any difficulty in the way of remedial agencies which deal with the unemployed, greater than the fitful support which they get from the public. Impulsiveness and sentiment are the charitable public's worst faults. They give to the person who can make the wryest mouth; and only by drawing tears from their eyes can coin be coaxed from their pockets. Yet there is no greater injustice than to confound the honest and capable unemployed with the professional out-of-work, or the migrating artisan with the casual loafer. At the same time, without organisation of remedial agencies (which involves regular and uniform support), and without intelligent sifting of applicants, the first is deprived of what to him would be friendly help, in order that it may be lavished on the second in the form of demoralising alms. There is a business in giving money as in making it, and the best philanthropy is often the most professional. This business Mr. Drage understands very well, and he can, if he will, do much to commend it to the public. He could take up no more useful task. Let us hope that in the promised treatises, which are to supplement the present one, he will remember this business a little more and himself a little less, and so worthily obliterate the memory of this regrettable self-injustice.

J. A. HAMILTON.

On the Art of Writing Fiction. (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

HERE is a little volume consisting of eleven essays all dealing in a more or less practical way with the methods and aims of fiction, and the eleven authors are well-known novelists or tale-writers. Among them may be noted Mr. W. E. Norris on "Style in Fiction," Mrs. Parr on "A Story to Tell," Mrs. L. B. Walford on "The Novel of Manners," the Rev. S. Baring-Gould on "Colour in Composition," and so on; so it need hardly be said that the book is exceedingly interesting, for with such scribes and such themes lack of interest would be all but impossible. Nor can a competent literary worker in any field write of the methods of his craft without being not merely interesting but instructive also. And yet I think that the able writers who have collaborated in the production of the volume largely fail (indeed, the failure is inevitable) to achieve the special kind of instructiveness at which they nominally aim. These papers are really addressed to the literary beginner—that sort of literary beginner who writes letters to eminent novelists, saying, "I, too, want to write a novel, and I shall be grateful to you if you will tell me how I am to set about it: what I am to do and what I am to avoid." Of course, it is, as Mr. Zangwill some time ago remarked, only the weaklings who do this kind of thing. The really strong beginner, from whom something may rationally be expected, does not write a letter: he writes his novel instead, and in writing learns what he desires to know, and what the eminent novelists, with the best intentions in the world, could not have told him. Therefore, howsoever wise a book of this kind may be, it must always be characterised by a certain ineptitude: to use a colloquial phrase, it will be wholly or largely up in the air. Mr. Norris, who adds humour and good sense to his many other admirable gifts, is quite alive to this fact, and does not take too seriously the educational efforts made by himself and his companion instructors. Like Abraham Lincoln, he makes his point in a "little story":

"In a certain country house there was a Scotch cook whose scones were beyond all praise. Implored by a Southern lady to reveal the secret of her unvarying success, she replied, after long consideration, 'Aweel, m'ern, ye just take your girdle, ye see, and—and make a scone.' Quite so: you just take your pen and paper and—write a novel. No directions could be more beautifully succinct; but, unfortunately, it is almost as difficult for a writer who has reached a point of moderate proficiency in his calling to say how this is to be done as it was for the cook to explain how scones ought to be made."

Mr. Norris would have been nearer the mark if, instead of writing "almost as difficult," he had written "quite as impossible." But he could hardly be expected to exhibit a candour which would have stultified himself and all his fellow contributors; for, if a competent novelist is really powerless to tell how a novel is made, what raison d'être has a manual of the art of writing fiction?

At first sight the difficulty of the task seems lessened by splitting up a big problem into a number of small ones. If no one can formulate a short and easy method for the writing of successful fiction, it may nevertheless be quite possible for Mr. Norris to instruct the beginner in the matter of style, or for Mr. Baring-Gould to teach him how to get colour into his composition, or for Mrs. Parr to impress upon him the importance of having a story to tell. But, alas! though these topics are indeed smaller than that of the production of fiction as a whole, they are far too big to be adequately or helpfully treated in the chapters of a little book which contains fewer than 150 pages. Each really demands a treatise to itself; and, therefore, to say that these essays consist of generalities which are admirably sensible, but which give no practical assistance, and meet no practical difficulty, is not to censure their writers or to disparage their work: it is simply to state a fact of which they must be as well aware as anyone else can be.

For example, Mr. Norris's own paper covers fifteen pages, and capital reading it is from its first page to its last; but it contains only two thoughts that can be of positive service to the beginner. One is that "naturalness" in writing does not come by nature, but is a result of study and labour; and the other that the tyro, if he be wise, will put away all temptations to be brilliant and original, and strive solely to be lucid. These are true words of wisdom, but even here, if the beginner asks, "How am I to study naturalness and gain lucidity?" he gets no answer to his question. How could he? Ends may be indicated in fifteen pages; means could be expounded only in ten times that number.

Every now and then the reader lights upon a sentence which inspires the hope that something really practical is just ahead of him. Thus, Mrs. Macquoid, in her essay on "Vision in Literature," writes as follows:—

"Earnest literary students may greatly help themselves at the outset by using certain tests in trying to make sure whether they have or have not any portion of the gift without which perseverance will only lead to disappointment. It may not be possible to teach the art of writing novels; but one may try, as well as one can, to help beginners to find out for themselves whether they have or have not 'natural faculty' for this calling."

Now this is really something. A system of self-measurement which would enable the beginner to ascertain whether his dimensions were those of the born novelist might not in all cases be a sweet boon, but it would certainly be a useful one. What will be the disappointment of the student when he finds that Mrs. Macquoid makes no attempt to supply it! She simply cites several striking examples of "vision in literature," and summarily adds that

"if, after many trials, he [the beginner] cannot call up a picture which is at the same time distinct and true to Nature, he had better bring himself to believe that his attempt is not a creation of the imagination; it is at best but a passing fancy not worth the trouble of writing down."

Thus does Mrs. Macquoid promise bread and provide a stone.

The essay which seems to me most practically serviceable is Mr. Baring-Gould's paper on "Colour in Composition," because in it he gives the naked facts of experience. Mr. Baring-Gould apologises for being autobiographical; but, as a matter of fact, the other writers ought to apologise for not being autobiographical. When he tells us the story of the inception of such novels as Mahalah, Urith, and The Queen of Love; when he further tells us that his backgrounds are always drawn from memory rather than from immediate vision, because on the spot he finds his imagination fail him; when he describes (pp. 40, 41) the growth of a colour picture in black and white—we have something helpful because tangible; and tangibility is the one thing wanting in most of these pleasant pages. Readers of Mr. Baring-Gould's specially picturesque novels will find something to interest them, and to bear out their own impressions, in one of his autobiographical statements.

"It may not be with others as with myself, but with me it is always the scenery and surroundings that develop the plot and characters. Others may work from the opposite point, but then it seems to me they must find it hard to fit their landscape to their dramatis personæ and to their dénouement."

After Mr. Baring-Gould, the writers whose utterances come nearest to being really educational are "Lance Falconer" and Mrs. Molesworth, who treat of the departments of fiction which they have made specially their own—the short story and the story for children. On these topics there could hardly be more trustworthy authorities than the author of Mademoiselle Ixe and the author of Carrots. Unfortunately, however—or ought I to say fortunately?—the goodness of these two papers is of a kind to which sampling by quotation would do less than justice; they must be read—and we hope will be read—in their entirety by those beginners in literature who have a personal interest in the subjects with which they deal. Even more useful still, because it is addressed not merely to tyros in fiction, but to those who are ambitious to succeed in any branch of literature whatsoever, is the article, by Mrs L. T. Meade, entitled "From the Editor's Standpoint." True, Mrs. Meade has less to say about what to do than about what to avoid; but in a path so plentifully riddled with pitfalls as is the approach to the great highway of letters, a friend who will simply direct the wayfarer how to pick his steps is a friend in need and indeed. Nowadays the preliminary to finding a welcoming publisher is to find an appreciative editor; and Mrs. Meade, who has been an admirable editor herself, can at any rate tell the aspiring scribe how not to do it. How to do it he must learn for himself.

Whatsoever be the defects of this little book as an educational manual, it is an interesting contribution to literature, and it can be honestly commended to all lovers of pleasant reading.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

FEILBERG'S DICTIONARY OF JUTLAND DIALECTS.

Bidrag til en Ordbog over Jyske Almuesmaal.
Af H. F. Feilberg. Udgivet af Universitets- Jubilæets Danske Samfund.
Første Bind. A—H. (Copenhagen: Thieses Bogtrykkeri.)

THE affinities between the Jutland dialects and the English spoken in what was once known as the Danelagh are so close, that this work claims a hearty welcome from English scholars, and the more so when some special features in its plan become known. The author, Pastor Emeritus H. F. Feilberg, though a graduate in arts, philosophy, and theology of the University of Copenhagen, makes no claim to profound learning. For nine years in Sleswick and over twenty-three years in West Jutland he has been absorbed in his work as a clergyman of poor country parishes, and has had neither time nor money to consult many learned works. But from the first he was deeply interested in those among whom his life was cast, and so, drawing his materials from the mouths of the peasants themselves, he has made a more valuable contribution to human knowledge than would have been possible had he been more of a student of books and less a student of men. While still a young bachelor in Angol (South-East Sleswick), he was a welcome guest in the farmhouses of his parishioners, and would there tell ghost story or saga and do his best to lead the conversation into channels where he might gain information respecting superstitions, beliefs, and the inner life of the people. Thus he gained his materials for his first book Fra Heden ("From the Heath"). Twenty-six years later (1889) came his second book Dansk Bondeliv ("Danish Peasant Life"), which is similar in subject, but embodies his experience in South-West Jutland. The hope expressed in the preface that the peasants would recognise the book as "flesh and bones of their own" has been amply realised by a large sale among the people themselves.

This Jutland Dialect Dictionary was to have been compiled by the late Prof. K. Lyngby, of Copenhagen, who died suddenly about twenty years ago, leaving behind him the collections he had made for his intended work. To these collections his old college friend, Pastor Feilberg, had made frequent contributions; and so it was urged upon him that no sense of his lack of philological training should deter him from going on with his friend's work, especially when it was considered how intimate was his knowledge of peasant ways and speech. Early in 1877 he first put pen to paper, and at the close of last year his first volume issued from the press.

The dictionary is not one of curious, scarce words only, but of the whole Jutland speech. The leading word is taken from the king's Danish, or spelt as it would be in the king's Danish. In giving the exact sound of each dialect word in the various parts of the country, the author has followed the phonetic system elaborated by Lyngby, not because he was insensible to the improvements of Sweet in this country and of Jespersen in his own, but because he felt the danger of changing his plan in the middle of his work, with only limited time and strength before him. Full particulars of locality and inflection are given, the verbs in particular being set forth in great fullness, some of them (e.g. "give") in as many as twenty or twenty-five paradigms. The word is next exhibited in phrases, proverbs, puns, witticisms, and ballads in the different dialects, so as to present a small picture of the peasant's ideas and ways of thinking. For instance, "Thank thou God, it is not thy horse," are the words of sympathy addressed to a peasant so poor that he will find it easier to get a new wife than a new horse. And in the saying, "Better well seduced than ill married," we can see that the faithful lexicographer has been more than a match for the clergyman with his keen sense of the proprieties.

Whenever the word under treatment enters into customs, superstitions, sagas, riddles, and jests, an attempt is made by quotations and full references to illustrate the Danish folk-lore by that of Norway and Sweden, England and Germany, the Latin and the Slav peoples. From thirty to forty English books are in this way laid under contribution. Perhaps the only other work carrying out the same plan is Staub and Tobler's Schweizerisches Idiotikon. So thoroughly has Pastor Feilberg executed this part of his plan, that if some one of the longer articles were taken, e.g., "cat," "dog," "tree," "Christmas," or "Twelfth Night," it would form the nucleus of a paper for a Folk-lore Society meeting. In this way all the leading points in popular beliefs and customs have been recorded and illustrated.

At the end of each article comes a short notice of the cognate words in Norse, Swedish, Icelandic, High German, Low German, and English. To carry out this part of his plan more fully, lay outside the writer's purpose. He has had to be careful lest the better should prove the enemy of the good.

Pastor Feilberg has derived much help from collections which friends, chiefly country teachers, have made for him, and also from the peasants that come from every part of the country to the *Folkhøjskoler in the winter. In putting his materials into shape for the press, which has involved the writing of some hundreds of thousands of slips, he has worked single-handed, and must therefore be complimented on the successful execution of so large a portion of his task. Its completion within a reasonable time has been greatly helped by the offer some years ago of a University society to charge itself with the expense of printing, and more recently by a life-pension conferred by the Danish government. In further recognition of his labours, Pastor Feilberg was one of the recipients of honorary degrees on the occasion of the silver wedding of the Crown Prince of Denmark.

J. S. THORNTON.

NEW NOVELS.

Disillusion. By Dorothy Leighton. In 3 vols. (Henry.)

A Choice of Evils. By Mrs. Alexander. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Catch of the County. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. In 3 vols. (White.)

Bruno the Conscript. By Marie Hutcheson. (Hutchinson.)

Catherine. By Frances Mary Peard. (Innes.)

In a New World. By Mrs. Hans Blackwood. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Journey in other Worlds: a Romance of the Future. By John Jacob Astor. (Longmans.)

The Wedding Garment. By Louis Pendleton. (Boston, U.S.: Roberts.)

THERE is a distinct vein of originality in Miss Leighton's Disillusion—"a story with a Preface"—and yet it is far from perfect in literary execution. With the root of the matter in her, however, the writer will doubtless go on to acquire greater skill and finish. As for the narrative itself, it seeks to grapple with some of the moral and intellectual aspirations of the time. Mark Sergison and Linda Grey were members of the Spade Club, so called because its keynote was work—devoted work for the race, and not for the selfish individual. Mr. Carpenter, the author of Towards Democracy, has supplied the name of the club in his sentence, "A spade will serve." Sergison was moved in turn by Browning, Carpenter, Whitman, and Swinburne. He wrote a successful play, in whose composition he had received assistance from Linda. These companions were friends, not lovers. The women "Spades" accepted the woman question, but not divided skirts and platform speaking. They sought to elevate woman as a whole, and to raise man's ideal of her. Alas! for Sergison, there breaks in upon his life a vision of beauty in the shape of Celia Adair, the fascinating daughter of a British diplomatist. Although she has had some love passages with the handsome but worthless Alec Watson, she speedily manages to hold Sergison in thrall. Then ensues a struggle between his duty to the race, which is continually pressed upon him by his sister "Spades," and his growing passion for Celia. Ultimately Sergison marries the latter, and devotes himself to the profession of journalism, first in Paris, and subsequently in London. As a matter of fact, the couple were never suited to each other. Sergison's affection was genuine enough, but his wife's was not; so the process of disillusion speedily began. After showing great heartlessness towards her child, and also towards her husband, Celia eloped with her old lover, Alec, only to find out in a few weeks his utter selfishness. Then she returned to her faithful husband, at a moment when the latter had just discovered that Linda Grey indulged a passionate love for himself. There are several embarrassing scenes towards the close. Linda escaped from one of them by "throwing on a cloak and hat, and plunging recklessly into the impenetrable fog." Meanwhile Celia dies, and the novel closes uncertainly with regard to Sergison and Linda. In the dearth of really striking novels, Disillusion is deserving of praise, not so much because of its fulfilment as of its promise.

Mrs. Alexander would scarcely have earned her deserved reputation with A Choice of Evils, which falls below her level both in conception and execution. Janet Rowley, a beautiful human flower adorning the country village of Langford, is seen by Randal Palliser, the head of one of the best county families; and as they are filled with a mutual passion, an engagement ensues. Janet's father, a retired naval captain, is also a man of good connexion; and although his daughter leads a retired life, she soon shows that she is fitted to adorn any sphere. She has had a girlish attachment to Maurice Winyard, the vicar's son, who goes out to India, but the attachment has been deeper with Maurice than with Janet. The latter ultimately marries Palliser, who begins to make his mark in the political world. But his love for Janet soon flickers out, and matters are made worse by the sudden appearance on the scene of Palliser's first wife, whom he believed to be dead. Mrs. Alexander says nothing about bigamy, but the law would have done so. What Palliser does in this case is to start an action for divorce against his first wife; and conclusive evidence being readily forthcoming, he obtains a decree. He then hopes that Janet will re-marry him, but since there is now no love on either side, she absolutely declines to do so. She loses wealth and position by this, and her action is severely criticised by those who are ignorant of the real facts; but in the end she justifies her step in the eyes of the world. The selfish Palliser then marries a lady of title, who is able to help him on in the political sphere, and Janet is wooed and won by Lord Darrell, a nobleman who has befriended her all through and admired her sterling character. The novel is rather one of incident than of character, though Janet and her old father are somewhat carefully drawn. But, taken altogether, we cannot regard the story as striking or powerful.

Mrs. Kennard has not been so successful as usual in The Catch of the County. The story is lively enough, and the movement is well sustained; but there is an air of unreality in the whole affair, as though it had not been written from inspiration. Young Lord Moor succeeds almost in the outset to the Marquisate of Heatherlands. The family had the royal blood of Scotland in its veins; it possessed many fine seats, and a rent-roll of nearly £60,000 a year. The late marquis was a statesman, and was named for the premiership, when he was stricken down with a fatal illness. His widow, still comparatively young, formed ambitious schemes for her son, just of age, including a high matrimonial alliance. He, however, had no political ambition, and fell in love with pretty Mary Mardon, the vicar's daughter. To cure him, Lady Heatherland's brother furthered his amour with the soi-disant Princess Bogosloffsky, and the cure nearly overshot its mark. The princess is the one weak feature in the book. She is theatrically introduced, and inartistically depicted all through. We feel that she is an impostor, and no surprise is created when she turns out to be an English girl of low birth and an ex-circus rider. The marchioness repents bitterly of trying to force her son's inclinations, and in the end all ends happily by his marriage to Mary. Some of the political passages of the novel might have been omitted, without detracting from the readableness of the whole.

One of the best short stories we have read for some time is Miss Hutcheson's Bruno the Conscript. The features of Italian life and scenery have been admirably seized upon and described. The character drawing is unusually good. Bruno, a young sculptor, whose dreams of future success in art are ruthlessly crushed by the necessity of the conscription, is a figure to haunt one. The story of his brief life, and its premature end, is inexpressibly sad, and yet the mystery and the pain of it seem somehow inevitable. The two girls who love Bruno, but in a different way, are very cleverly posed against each other—the one is beautiful and selfish, yet she is the most beloved of Bruno, whose guileless soul does not fathom her nature; while the other is somewhat plain in appearance, but deep, tender, and true. This transcript of life is ably and gracefully written, and cannot fail to afford real pleasure to the reader.

* An account of these interesting schools, all but unknown as yet in England, may be seen in the Oxford University Extension Gazette for September, or in the Times of September 15, 1891.

Miss Peard's Catherine is a pretty story of the French Wars. The handsome but rather volatile Catherine has two lovers—George Wilmot, an honest soldier; and Frank Leslie, a sentimental youth with expectations, but no heart. There is a good deal of trouble before right is done. Catherine is severely injured in the hunting field, and when—as she fears—she is disfigured for life, she discovers the utter heartlessness of Leslie, for whom she has thrown over the worthier suitor. Wilmot, however, has never failed her; and when he returns home, after making a name in the Peninsula, he forgives the erring girl, and takes her to his heart. The sketch is slight, but it is written with feeling and true literary instinct.

In a New World, if a first work, gives no promise of future excellence. There is nothing to redeem it from the commonplace, either in description or in the drawing of character, and this is fatal to a would-be novelist nowadays. The scene between Daisy and one of her lovers in the chapter headed "Under a Greenwood Tree," is ridiculous. She confesses to his face that she loves him, and yet has not the courage to tell him that she is engaged to another. Difficulties arise which might have been dissipated by a word; and the story at once becomes unreal. The hero inherits a title, and Daisy a great fortune; but neither these facts, nor the numerous Tennysonian quotations, impress us with any feeling that the author has written because she must.

The science of the future enables the characters in A Journey in other Worlds to accomplish expeditions through the air, which fairly take one's breath away. But if the author had called his book "The Secret of Apsergy," he would probably have excited more curiosity, as people would naturally have inquired, "What is that, anyhow?" Apsergy is a marvellous force, obtained by blending negative and positive electricity with electricity of the third element or state. By charging a body sufficiently with this fluid, gravitation is nullified, or partly reversed, and the earth repels the body with the same or greater power than that with which it attracted it, so that it may be suspended or caused to move away into space. Col. Bearwarden, President of the Terrestrial Axis Straightening Company, Richard Ayrault, a scientific vice-president, and Prof. Cortlandt, LL.D., United States Government expert, visit Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and other planets in their aerial car, the "Callisto," and are witnesses to some very astonishing things. The objects of the Company, in whose interests they made their "heavenly" excursions, were—to straighten the axis of the earth, to combine the extreme heat of summer with the intense cold of winter, and produce a uniform temperature for each degree of latitude the year round. How they accomplish this "large order"—scientifically—is told by Mr. Astor with a wealth of language and of detail. However, we are glad to find that, after all his gigantic enterprises, young Ayrault had the sense to come back to Mother Earth, and marry a beautiful girl named Sylvia Preston, who had long been devoted to him.

Mr. Louis Pendleton has made another attempt to pierce the veil in The Wedding Garment, "a tale of the life to come." Some of his conceptions are not devoid of originality, but others appear to us to descend into bathos. The author takes us through several intermediate stages of existence after leaving this earth, before the spirit is finally prepared to don the heavenly wedding garment. The general conception of the narrative is admittedly Swedenborg's, but the details are those of Mr. Pendleton. He endeavours to show, by a series of living pictures, what the soul is—that it is the very man himself, who, when he has thrown off the covering of this frail material body, rises higher and higher in the plane of existence. The speculations are interesting in their way; but we are afraid that the average novel reader will not deeply interest himself or herself in the process of manufacturing angels.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CLASSICAL BOOKS.

A History of Rome to the Battle of Actium. By E. S. Shuckburgh. (Macmillans.) The translator of Polybius has some obvious advantages in writing a history of Republican Rome; and (though it is odd he should tell us that Polybius wrote a "Universal History") Mr. Shuckburgh's History shows many signs of close intercourse with one of the most robust and best educated minds of antiquity. It is shrewd and impartial; its statements are carefully weighed and guarded; and we are fairly surprised at the quantity of matter for which Mr. Shuckburgh, writing of 700 years in about 700 pages, has found room. Our knowledge of Roman history has made a long-continued advance on the constitutional side; the military history is fairly well understood, except the details of the defence of frontier provinces. What we now want most is a re-appreciation of the great men and the emperors of Rome—the two terms not being synonymous. Baring Gould's Cæsars, suggestive and clever, was not the work of a specialist. Unfortunately, Mr. Shuckburgh has not chosen to go far into these problems. We find his history weak or even dull on the great men, and on the legends too. The men do not seem quite alive; and the legends are indicated, rather than told, in a somewhat wooden way. We cannot even make out clearly whether he accepts the current statements about the Kings and about the early Republic; he tells both, but with reservations which will not let us see the bottom of his mind. But other aspects of Roman affairs he has treated with great success, giving a useful resumé of the present state of knowledge. Wishing to present vividly "the wonderful story of the gradual extension of the power of a single city over so large a part of the known world," and holding it "impossible that a history of Rome can be other than a warlike one," he has written a distinctly military history. He has much to tell on the military politics of the Mediterranean, on the strategy of Roman campaigns, and on the tactics of Roman battles. With all this goes necessarily a careful attention to geography, and his little maps are numerous. But the internal development of the conquering Republic is not neglected. The constitutional history is traced, sometimes over doubtful ground; but the reader has fair opportunities of judging for himself, for Mr. Shuckburgh's method is argumentative and thoughtful, rather than didactic. Space for so much matter (there is more detail than in Prof. Pelham's recent History) could only be found by skill in the art of leaving out. The result is a school history of merit, well proportioned, and nearly complete so far as it goes. But Mr. Shuckburgh, who urges the essential unity of Roman history and teaches that its successive periods are inextricably connected, must regret the necessity of leaving off at the battle of Actium. It is true that the constitution which he has traced so far was then broken down; but its ruins were used to build a new one; and it is ill stopping at the moment when, after a century of civil war, "a statesman had been found capable of re-modelling the constitution and organising the vast empire."

The "Wasps" of Aristophanes. By C. E. Graves. (Cambridge: University Press.) The "Wasps"—so Mr. Graves informs us—had, at the time when he began editing it, "been more neglected than any of those [plays of Aristophanes] which are commonly read in schools." It is not a happy phrase, but it means, we suppose, that the "Wasps" is not very commonly read in schools. We can well believe that this is true, and are not surprised to hear it. The truth is, that to contemporaries the fun of the "Wasps" was evidently fast and furious; but it is not altogether so to a modern reader: the jests are too technical, too minutely allusive, to have the broad effects which make the "Acharnians" and "Knights" so fit for school reading. The "Clouds" and "Birds" will never lose their charm while Socrates is interesting and romantic extravaganzas fascinate; but the "Wasps" needs very much more effort to appreciate it, and many of its best hits have for ever lost their echo. We entirely agree with Mr. Graves (Introd., p. ix.) that to view the "Wasps" as a satire on "Athenian litigiousness" and the dicastic system in general, is to misconceive its purport: it is an attack on the demagogues, and an endeavour to show the dicasts—that is, the citizens of Athens—that they are being befooled by their leaders. We agree also that "few plays suggest matters of more varied interest." But, for modern readers, we cannot without reserve admit Mr. Graves's dictum that few "contain more genuine fun." It is of the essence of fun to be readily comprehensible; and this is more than can be said of many things in the "Wasps." It was, perhaps, inevitable, in a school edition, that the play should be in some measure expurgated; we rather demur, however, to the liberty (Pref., p. vi.) of altering words in the original—though we are aware that respectable authority may be quoted for it. The commentary appears to us to be thorough and useful, but rather unduly dry. No author suffers more than Aristophanes by being treated too formally: it is his perception of this that makes the present Rector of Lincoln College so felicitous an annotator of the comedian—and Mr. Graves would have done well to trample down the scruples (Pref., p. vi.) which have debarred him from consulting Dr. Merry. There are, we think, too many notes which really only save the use of the lexicon—e.g., those on ἀνδροπύς (l. 910) βοβναίς (l. 1206) τρόποις and διαταρ (l. 1102): it is, we suppose, too late in the day to object to the form of one note on l. 213—"Lid. and Scott make it [στρίλη] represent stilla, which the ῥ is opposed to." But we have not observed any cases, in the commentary, of omitting or slurring difficulties, though Mr. Graves is apt to give us two or more ways of taking a passage without revealing his preference.

Verse Translations from Greek and Latin Poets. By Arthur D. Innes. (Innes.) This little volume of classical translations is at once pleasant and provoking. It is pleasant, as being written with taste and a good deal of metrical skill and poetic diction: it is provoking, as consisting in the main of pieces so short and even fragmentary, that we never seem to get a full notion of the genius of the original writer, nor a sustained exhibition of Mr. Innes' power as a translator. The verses were written, he tells us (Pref., p. 7), "for the most part as 'fair copies' for schoolmasters who wished to help their pupils to realise that poetry may lurk concealed behind difficulties of grammar and vocabulary." For that object they are excellent; but for people reading them under more favourable conditions, they are sparks, not a satisfactory fire. There are thirty-four of them, representing, in all, nine Greek and six Latin poets. Homer is unrepresented, and so is Pindar; Lucretius is absent, and Ovid; but Claudian appears, and Martial no less than six times, to Horace's once and Virgil's twice. This is not, it is clear, adequately representative, nor does Mr. Innes claim that it is: but yet we think that Latin and Greek literature have some claim, if shown by excerpts, that their master-poets shall have a chance. None the less, even out of lesser poets, Mr. Innes makes very pretty poetry. Here, e.g. (p. 19) is a part of Claudian's "Old Man of Verona," under the title of "The Yeoman," translated with great skill into the metre of "In Memoriam":—

"Small skill in things of State has he—
He scarce has seen the town hard by;
In unchecked sweep of air and sky
He finds his simple pleasure free.

"By changing crops the years he tells,
Not by the names the consuls bore:
He marks the autumn by her store,
The spring-tide by her blossom-bells.

"The fields that saw the sunset glow,
They see the morning glory shine,
And measure out the day's decline
By the same arching sky they know."

The same metre is adopted in rendering Propertius' "Poet's Death" (El. iii., 5; pp. 44–9), and shows Mr. Innes at his best, in both cases. In blank verse, he is less evenly good, though always vigorous. Here is a passage from the beacon-race in the "Agamemnon" (p. 59):—

"To far Euripus' streams the beacon light
Shot with its signal to Messapius' guards:
Their answering fire still flashed the tidings on,
Who set the high-piled heather sere ablaze;
The mighty torch, unflagging, leaped the plain
Of far Asopus, like a gleaming moon,
On to Cithaeron's rock, and roused once more
A fresh successor of the news-fraught flare."

This is vigorous, but monotonous: and "news-fraught flare" seems to us unnatural English. One of the happiest efforts in the book is (p. 69) "Counterfeit Coins"—a version of Aristophanes' "Frogs" (Il. 718, κ.τ.λ.). Neat also (p. 95) is the finale of Martial's rap on the schoolmaster's knuckles.

"So let them go, the girls and boys,
O man of endless spouting;
D'you want as fee to hold your noise
What now you're paid for shouting?"

TWO VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Love's Music and other Poems. By Annie Matheson. (Sampson Low.) These are gentle verses, sung with a voice which, if not very strong or highly trained, is always soft and clear. It is evidently a sincere pleasure to Miss Matheson to write verses, in which she can express her deeper feelings and set her sweeter thoughts to music. The first of these poems is called "A Christian Lyric," and the name would not be unfit for the rest of them. It is love, Christian love, which is her favourite theme: the love which makes the world beautiful and joyful in spite of storms and pain, and will make the afterworld perfect. In some verses, called "Pastor Ignatus, his Plea for Cremation," the faith in this love finds perhaps its strongest expression. With a boldness which is scarcely the characteristic of her muse, she cries:

"Then burn my body to the glory of God,
Nor let it moulder under daisied sod
In hid corruption; Love, who gave it me,
Knows well how satisfied my soul will be
With that of which it is the semblance dim."

This great love, "who seals dead faces with his smile," as she beautifully sings, is, of course, the love whose music gives its name to the book, and also to the lyric of which we give the concluding stanzas:

"Love measured once the gulf 'twixt heaven and hell,
Where clashed confusions of His broken law,
Till unity in sweet diversity thrilled
Order and time and sequence that He willed,
And, through the sacrifice which He foresaw,
The mighty triune chord in music fell.

"In music fell? In music, deepening, rose.
Through all the unmeasured, boundless universe,
The law of love, in its relentless might,
Biuding in one remotest depth and height,
Awakened, even in man's most bitter curse,
Blessing and hope and joy's more joyful close.

This is a fair specimen of Miss Matheson's more serious verse; but it is all serious and, what is more wonderful in these days, joyful at the same time.

Idylls and Lyrics of the Nile. By H. D. Rawnslay. (David Nutt.) The tourist on a Nile steamer may perhaps find some pleasure in the perusal of Mr. Rawnslay's quaintly got up little volume; but we fear that it will scarcely appeal to the Egyptologist, while the ordinary reader will be repelled by the names of gods and kings with which the pages are plentifully besprinkled. And it must be confessed that dynastic lists and titles, even Egyptian ones, however interesting from a scientific point of view, do not lend themselves readily to poetical treatment, and Mr. Rawnslay's treatment is not always poetical. With the Dancing Dervishes he deals, no doubt unintentionally, somewhat in the style of Alice in Wonderland:

"Each brother of the holy band
Spun in and out with lifted hand,
A teetotum no longer man."

And such an ordinary event as the ascent of the Great Pyramid is described in a poem opening as follows:—

"I climbed great Chufu's giant stair,
I felt the anguish of the stones,
Loud lamentation filled the air
And cries of vengeance against thrones."

Other tourists besides Mr. Rawnslay have felt the "anguish of the stones" before they reached the top of the Great Pyramid; but, in justice to Cheops, it must be allowed that a giant stair for weary nineteenth century legs formed no part of his original design. Mr. Rawnslay is at his best in his sonnets, three of which have already appeared in the pages of the ACADEMY; and a really high level of thought and expression is reached in that entitled "The Afterglow," which has a faint echo of Philip Bourke Marston. There are occasionally felicitous images in the poems, such as: "Land of life, where death is but a deep, warm slumber, a communicable dream," and the poem on "Nile Boats" is a graceful piece of word-painting.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON'S new volume, which will shortly be published by Mr. John Lane, is to be entitled Odes and Other Poems. The verse printed within the last few months in the Spectator, the Daily Chronicle, and the Yellow Book will be included in the volume. The same publisher is preparing Mr. Arthur Christopher Benson's new volume of poems, which, like his book of last year, is largely nature poetry.

MR. GOSSE'S new volume of poems, entitled In Russet and Silver, will be published by Mr. William Heinemann on October 20. The volume is dedicated to Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, under a name by which he is known to the Samoa natives—Tusitala, which is "The Story-Teller."

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON have in the press what may be called an "édition définitif" of The Ingoldsby Legends, of which their firm were the original publishers. It has been prepared by Mrs. Edward W. Bond, the daughter of the author, who contributes a brief memoir, a bibliography, and occasional notes. It will contain the illustrations on steel of Cruikshank and Leech, and those on wood of Tenniel, De Maurier, Doyle, and others, together with a reproduction of a water-colour by Cruikshank hitherto unpublished, and a portrait of the author. It will form three volumes, demy octavo.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce an "édition de luxe" of Oliver Twist, illustrated with reproductions of twenty-six water-colour drawings by Cruikshank.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish very shortly Tales of the Punjab told by the People, by Mrs. Steele, with illustrations by Mr. J. Lockwood Kipling and notes by Major R. C. Temple.

MESSRS. MOLESWORTH'S Christmas book for the coming season is called The New Home. The illustrator, as for three or four years past, is Mr. Leslie Brooke.

MR. RIDER HAGGARD'S new novel, The People of the Mist, will be published by Messrs. Longmans before the end of the present month. It will be in a single volume, with sixteen full-page illustrations by Mr. Arthur Layard.

THE series of articles, entitled "Thirty Years of Shikar," which Sir Edward Braddon, formerly of the Oudh Commission, has been contributing to Blackwood's Magazine, will shortly be published in volume form, with the addition of numerous illustrations.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co. will publish this month The Sherman Letters, being the correspondence that passed between the two brothers, General Sherman and Senator Sherman, during the period from 1837 to 1891, edited by Mrs. Sherman Thorndike, and illustrated with portraits.

MR. HENRY FROWDE, of the Oxford University Press, announces for Advent a handsome royal quarto volume, entitled The Church Lessons Bible for the Reading Desk. It will be a complete Bible with Apocrypha, printed in large-faced new type, and the Proper and Daily Lessons will be marked by boldly indenting large capital letters and dates into the text.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have had in preparation during the past two years a very complete work on cookery, which has been prepared under the direction of Miss Heritage. It will contain a preface by Léonard Grunfelder, chef at the Grand Hotel, formerly of the Reform Club, and will be illustrated with coloured plates and wood engravings.

MR. J. A. STEUART'S romance, In the Day of Battle, the appearance of which has been postponed to permit of simultaneous issue in America, will be published by Messrs. Sampson Low on October 20.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co. announce for early publication Birds of the Wave and Woodland, by Phil Robinson, with fifty full-page and other illustrations by Charles Whympster.

MR. NUTT'S announcements for the present season include a book of verse, Poems: Old and New, by Mr. George Cotterell. Among the newer contents of the volume are verses which have appeared in the ACADEMY and in the Spectator. Mr. Cotterell was the author of The Banquet (Blackwood), an anonymous satire in verse published several years ago, which passed through two editions.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co. are about to add the novels of Miss Ferrier, in six volumes, to their series of reprints. They will be edited by Mr. Brimley Johnson, who has obtained some new biographical material from Miss Ferrier's family, and made a selection of eighteen unpublished letters from her correspondence for the Introduction. The books will be illustrated by Miss Nelly Erichsen, and will contain two portraits, never before reproduced. The same firm announce a collection of "Popular British Ballads: Ancient and Modern," in four volumes, chosen by Mr. Brimley Johnson, and illustrated with over a hundred drawings by Mr. Cubitt Cooke. Vols. I. and II. will contain the best Traditional Ballads of England and Scotland, with a small group of Peasant Ballads still sung in country districts. Vols. III. and IV. will contain selected modern experiments in the art of ballad-writing by English, Scotch and Welsh poets (including living writers), and a mixed group of Irish Ballads. The spelling of the old ballads has been modernised, and they are arranged in groups according to the collection in which they were first included.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY expect to have the illustrated edition of the Hon. Roden Noel's Livingstone in Africa ready by the middle of November. Miss E. H. Hickey, who has written the preface, will lecture on "The Poetry of the Hon. Roden Noel" at Toynbee Hall, on Saturday, November 3, and at Newnham College, Cambridge, towards the end of November.

UNDER the title of The New Florent: a Letter to an Eton Boy, Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., will publish immediately a little volume on Christian Socialism, by the Rev. the Hon. J. G. Adderley. It is especially addressed to the future landholders and lawgivers of England.

MISS E. NESBIT and Mr. Oswald Barron have written a volume of stories, entitled A Butler in Bohemia, which Mr. Drane will publish in a few days in his "Canvas Library." The book is dedicated to Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

THE Midland Educational Company announce a third volume in their series of "Historic Counties," dealing with Staffordshire. It is written by Mr. Robert K. Dent and Mr. Joseph Hill, and will be abundantly illustrated with reproductions of views, buildings, portraits, maps, and historic documents.

MR. JOSEPH HATTON'S new novel, "The Exile's Daughter," written for the Tillotson Syndicate, begins to-day in The Bristol Times and Mirror, and other journals in England, America, and the colonies. It will be issued in volume form in the spring of next year by Messrs. Hutchinson in London, and Messrs. Lippincott in America.

THE first edition of Miss Banks's Campaigns of Curiosity has already been exhausted, and a second edition is now in active preparation.

THE London Ethical Society will resume its meetings at Essex Hall, Strand, on Sunday next, October 14, at 7.30 p.m., when Mr. Bernard Bosanquet will give a lecture on "Socialism and Natural Selection." The new president, Mr. R. B. Haldane, has chosen "Hegel" for the subject of his address. Among the other arrangements are: "Tolstoi's Kingdom of God," by Miss M. S. Gilliland; "Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution," by Mr. J. A. Hobson; "The Real Issue before the School Board Electors," by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie; and "Lessing," by Mr. F. H. Peters.

MR. RICHARD GARNETT delivered an address in the Leek Town Hall, as president of the Nicholson Institute, on Monday last, on "The Association of Literature with Art and Science."

At the annual meeting of the North Midland Library Association, held in Nottingham on October 4, Messrs. Herne, Radford, and Dent were elected president, vice-president, and treasurer, and Mr. Potter Briscoe, public librarian of Nottingham, was elected honorary secretary.

THE current number of the Author prints a comparative table of the novels published during the twelve months from September to August in each of the last three years. While the total number of novels has increased from 403 to 603, it appears that this increase is almost entirely confined to single volumes, which have multiplied by just 50 per cent.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN a Convocation held at Oxford on Tuesday, the Rev. Dr. J. R. Magrath, Provost of Queen's, was admitted Vice-chancellor, on the nomination of Lord Salisbury, the Chancellor of the University. The usual Latin speech, reviewing the academical history of the past twelve months, was delivered by Dr. Boyd, Principal of Hertford, who has held the office for the past four years. We may add that the next head of a house in order of seniority, is Dr. Inge, Provost of Worcester.

At Cambridge, it is the custom for the retiring Vice-chancellor to deliver an address in English, which is duly printed in the University Reporter.

MR. CHARLES WOOD, professor of harmony at the Royal College of Music, has been elected to a fellowship at Caius, Cambridge, of which college he was formerly organist-scholar.

PROF. WESTLAKE'S lectures at Cambridge during this term will be on "Neutrality, with special reference to the Leading Cases."

PROF. EDWARD DOWDEN, of Dublin, proposes to deliver a course of six lectures at Cambridge during the present term, beginning on October 23, as Clark lecturer in English literature at Trinity College. The subjects of the several lectures will be: (1) "Writers on Education in the Sixteenth Century"; (2) "Elizabethan Romance"; (3) "The English Pastoral"; (4) "Ben Jonson, the Principles of his Literary Art"; (5) "Ben Jonson, as a Critic of Life and Study"; (6) "The Masque."

MR. ISRAEL GOLLANZ is delivering two courses of lectures this term at Cambridge, to candidates for the Indian Civil Service—on "English Dramatic Literature, 1558-1603," and on "Authors of the Sixteenth Century."

MR. FOSTER WATSON has been appointed lecturer on education at the University College, Aberystwith.

At the recent examination for the Indian Civil Service, six natives of India were successful, being the largest number on record. Two of them are Muhammadans (one from Karachi), and one a Parsi; the others are Hindus, of whom one came from the Punjab, and the other two from Calcutta. Southern India seems to be altogether unrepresented. In this connexion, we may mention that the new Mir of Khairpur has lately given Rs. 60,000, in memory of his father, to found scholarships at the University of Bombay, tenable by Muhammadans from Sind.

WE have received a prospectus of the Graduate School of Harvard University, consisting of a pamphlet of thirty-six pages, which we commend to the attention of those who are framing schemes for research degrees at both Oxford and Cambridge. It appears that the Graduate School at Harvard is open not only to graduates of other universities, but also to others "by special vote." The degrees conferred are—B.A., after a full year of residence and approved study; M.A., after the same, "passed with high credit"; Ph.D., after two years of residence and advanced study; and S.D. (sic), after three years of scientific study, of which two must also be years of residence. In the two last cases the degree is given

"not for the mere reason of faithful study for a prescribed time or in fulfilment of a determinate programme, and never for miscellaneous studies, but on the ground of long study and high attainment in a special branch of learning, manifested not only by examinations, but by a thesis, which must be presented and accepted before the candidate is admitted to examination, and must show an original treatment of a fitting subject, or give evidence of independent research."

During last year sixteen persons received the degree of Ph.D.—some cum laude, magna cum laude, and summa cum laude. Among the theses presented were: "Hegelianism and Man," "The Authorship of the Anglo-Saxon Poem, The Phoenix," and "The Relation of Carlyle to the German Thinkers, especially Fichte." Finally, we may mention that there are a considerable number of fellowships and scholarships open to graduates, at least seven of which are of the annual value of 700 dollars (£140).

THE Rectorial Address which Prof. C. P. Tiele delivered on the occasion of the three-hundred-and-eighteenth anniversary of Leyden University has been translated by Elizabeth J. Taylor (Luzac). Its title is "Western Asia according to the most Recent Discoveries," and it deals with the significance of the Tel el-Amarna Tablets. At the close Prof. Tiele, whose own chair is that of comparative philology, pleads eloquently that Assyriology should have its own special representative at Leyden, "as in the chief foreign universities." So far as we know, there is only one professor of Assyriology in all the universities of the United Kingdom, and he is endowed with £100 a year.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE CHEVIOTS SEEN FROM THE NORTH.

O LAND of the south, rising up
Like wine to the brim of a cup!—
Have I loved my land enough?

I who loathe her shams and shows,
I who love so well her foe,
As soon as the Cheviots rose

And I felt beyond that gray
Reef of hills—oh, I cannot say,
But even the clouds that lay

Over bits of English plain
Seemed the veritable main,
Rich clouds of the harvest rain.

And the light beyond! O land,
I begin to understand
Th' insensate love of the banned.

MICHAEL FIELD.

OBITUARY.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

NOTWITHSTANDING his eighty-five years, the death of Dr. Holmes is something of a surprise. His cheery, forward look proved that, at heart, he was still young; and it seemed well within the range of possibility that he might live to record what old age is like at ninety years, as he had already recorded it at seventy and eighty.

Dr. Holmes's contributions to literature consist of verses, novels, and works of humour. He wrote medical books also, of some renown in their day, but medical fashions change so quickly that I suppose that day is past. For over twenty years he was a practising physician in Boston, achieving in his profession fair, if not brilliant, success. He is often described as a poet; but, strictly speaking, he was a facile verse writer rather than a poet—the laureate of religious festivals and convivial gatherings. Only a few of his pieces can be fairly ranked as poetry, or are likely to live by any permanent merit of their own. This, of course, does not necessarily condemn them. Written for occasions, their very excellence as occasional poems would militate against their permanence. His three novels—Elsie Venner, The Guardian Angel, and A Mortal Antipathy—are studies in the relation of mind and morals to heredity and early impressions. They are the work of the physician rather than of a poet; for they deal with those abnormal occurrences which, to the poet, are inharmonious, but which the physician terms the beautiful cases. The interest of Elsie Venner centres in an unhappy girl whose blood and moral nature had both been contaminated before she was born, because her mother had been bitten by a rattlesnake. In The Guardian Angel a taint less gross, derived from an admixture of Indian blood, distinguishes the heroine. The story is less gruesome and, at the same time, less impressive than Elsie Venner. In the third novel there is a new departure; for the victim of the "mortal antipathy" derives his trouble, not from heredity, but from an impression given in his childhood. All these books are exercises of the scientific imagination rather than true literature.

For the work upon which Dr. Holmes's fame is most likely to rest we must turn to the "Breakfast-Table" Series and that later book of the same class called Over the Teacups. The first two papers of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table" were printed so long ago as 1831-32, in the New England Magazine. Then followed an interval of twenty-five years—Dr. Holmes's medical period—which is referred to when the series was resumed in the Atlantic Monthly, in the opening words: "I was just going to say, when I was interrupted—." The tone of the "Professor" is more serious than that of the "Autocrat," while in the "Poet" the foibles which the "Autocrat" had severely lashed are treated more tolerantly. Over the Teacups gives us the Autocrat, or, rather, the Poet, in his genial old age.

Mark Twain, who ought to be a good judge of humour, has described Dr. Holmes as "easily the first of our [that is, of American] more literary humorists." This, probably, is no more than the truth. He was the last representative of what may be termed the old school of American humour. The still earlier humour of Washington Irving is more graceful and delicate—more British, may we say?—than his. Certainly, it approximates more nearly to that of Charles Lamb and Leigh Hunt than to anything which can be regarded as distinctly American. As a matter of fact, Washington Irving was an American by birth alone, his parentage on both sides being British. On the other hand, the later type of American humour has a decided flavour of "the Wild West" about it. It is broad and vigorous, rather coarse, always free and breezy. The humour of Dr. Holmes comes between the two. Without the pure and delicate grace of Irving, it has a "literary" flavour which is wanting in the succeeding type.

An attempt—not particularly happy—has been made to "place" Dr. Holmes by linking his genius with that of Charles Lamb. The resemblance between them, if any, is quite superficial, but their difference is marked. As Mr. George William Curtis said of Dr. Holmes's early poems, so we might say of Lamb's most characteristic work: "The high spirits of a frolicsome fancy effervesce and sparkle"; but, while Lamb was essentially whimsical and often capricious, Dr. Holmes, even in his most daring moods, was wary. He was exceedingly sensitive on the subject of his good breeding, and felt he could not afford to forget his manners. If bold, he was not too bold; judicious always, without being false. He was much bound by social usage—a Boston man, having the fear of eminently respectable Boston always before his eyes—and it would have horrified him to have been responsible for those little outrages on the conventionalities in which Lamb took an exquisite delight. Moreover, Lamb's taste was more literary than that of Dr. Holmes, and not in the least scientific; and his touch, like Irving's, was more delicate. It is, in truth, difficult to classify Dr. Holmes at all. He was somewhat of a man apart. He followed no model, and has had no successful imitators.

In public affairs Dr. Holmes took little interest. In these days of strain and stress after "doing something," this may be counted as a fault. I am not sure, however, that it was not really a merit, that he could thus quietly engage himself in occupations essentially his own and leave the guidance of national events to whom it might concern. His function was social. Swift professed that his aim and desire was to vex the world, and not to entertain it. He did both. Dr. Holmes might, with truth, have said precisely the opposite. He was a clever and acute observer of the foibles of mankind, a censor of those "minor morals" called manners. In his discourses there may have been occasional breaches of good taste, and, in common with other men, he had his aversions. But he had no malice and no ill-temper. Even the unfortunate deacon who said "haow" could not have borne him a grudge, so pleasantly did he laugh at him. His ideals were not high. He does not picture for us any transcendent greatness. His attempt to depict Emerson, in his biography, was unsuccessful. But he was a voracious man, possessing "the virtues of fidelity, industry, and good sense," and pretending to nothing beyond his capacity. If he was not an instructor in morals, neither did he profess to be. Excepting scientifically, he scarcely touched upon them in his writings. His appeal was to the intellect. "Beginning in the 'Autocrat,'" says Mr. R. F. Green in his excellent monograph, "there runs, through all, this one idea, this one great determination—men must be brought, on this and all other subjects, to think for themselves. . . . A man's own reason must answer for him." His best books, even while they amuse, provoke thought; and when they are put away, the ideas, more than the laughter, have made an impression.

WALTER LEWIN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for October opens with a well-written exposition by Prof. Lindsay of the theory of the Bible put forward by Prof. Robertson Smith at the time of his trial, as contrasted with the "common Broad Church view" on the one hand and the "doctrine of the Princeton School" on the other. We must leave it to critical theologians on this side the Tweed to say whether it differs either by excess or defect from their own. Dr. Stalker, at any rate, shows that it is not as yet universally prevalent either in Scotland or in Germany. He gives us a sympathetic sketch of a work by Frank of Erlangen, whom (forgetting Lipsius) he describes as the man who may best be styled the rival of Ritschl. The work is a history and criticism of the newer theology since Schleiermacher, and it includes a thorough criticism of Ritschl from some kind of orthodox point of view. Prof. Beet enters deep waters when he discusses the "Johannine" teaching on the Second Coming, putting side by side the Fourth Gospel and the Apocalypse. There is more thought in Prof. Bruce on St. Paul's doctrine of the Last Things. Mr. Watson discourses eloquently on Judgment according to Type, and Mr. W. C. Allen places us on solid ground when he discusses the meaning of προσθαυρον in the Septuagint.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CLARKE, L. Feuilles de route aux Etats-Unis. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
 DÜRRIGER, J. Der Grabpalast des Patumenap in der thebanischen Nekropolis. 3. Abth. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 50 M.
 FAULMANN, K. Geschichte u. Litteratur der Stenographie. Wien: Hermann. 6 M.
 GILLES, Ph. La Bataille littéraire. Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
 LAFENESTRE, G. et Euz. RICHTEMBERGER. La Peinture en Europe. Florence: Paris: May & Mouton. 10 fr.
 LAUBHARDT, W. Mark, Rubel u. Rupie. Erfahrungen zur Währungsfrage u. Erörterungen üb. das Wesen des Geldes. Berlin: Ernst. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 MÜLLER, E. W. Peru. 12 M. Das Küstenland v. Peru. Berlin: Oppenheim. 12 M.
 RABRISON, H. Monsieur Coton. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 RECLUS, E. Le Primitif de l'Australie. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
 SERNICOLI, E. L'Anarchia e gli Anarchisti. Torino: Rosenberg. 6 L. 50 c.
 VETTER, Th. Wallenstein in der dramatischen Dichtung des Jahrzehnts seines Todes: Miraculus—Glasphorne—Fulvio Testi. Frauenfeld: Huber. 2 M.
 WASSER, O. Skylla u. Charybdis in der Literatur u. Kunst der Griechen u. Römer. Zürich: Schulthess. 2 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- MERHLHORN, P. Aus den Quellen der Kirchengeschichte. 1. Hft. Bis Konstantin. Bala: Rörner. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 SCHULTHEISS, F. Probe e. syrischen Version der Vita St. Antonii. Zürich: Schulthess. 2 M.
 STAUB, M. Das Verhältnis der menschlichen Willensfreiheit zur Gotteslehre bei Martin Luther u. Huldreich Zwingli. Zürich: Biedel. 3 M.
 WEILHAUSEN, J. Israelitische u. jüdische Geschichte. Berlin: Reimer. 7 M.
 WOLFF, M. Maimonides' Commentar zum Tractat Chulin. Arabischer Urtext. Frankfurt a.-M.: Kauffmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY.

- L'HISTOIRE générale. T. IV. Renaissance et Réforme; les nouveaux mondes (1432-1559). Paris: Colin. 12 fr.
 LORENTZEN, Th. Die schwedische Armee im 30jährigen Kriege u. ihre Abdankung. Leipzig: Veit. 6 M.
 MAAS, A. Geschichte der Schweizertruppen in französischen Diensten vom Rückzug aus Russland bis zum 2. Pariser Frieden 1913-1915. 1. Lfg. Biel: Kuhn. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 QUELLEN zur Schweizer Geschichte. 14. Bd. Basel: Geering. 10 M.
 WEBER, A. Der Centenar nach den Karolingischen Kapitularien. Leipzig: Veit. 1 M. 80 Pf.
 WYSS, G. V. Geschichte der Historiographie in der Schweiz. 1 Lfg. Zürich: Füssli. 1 M. 60 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- BENDER, A. u. H. ERDMANN. Chemische Präparatenkunde. 2. Bd. Stuttgart: Enke. 14 M.
 DENNER, E. Vergleichende Pflanzenmorphologie. Leipzig: Weber. 5 M.
 KRÄPPELIN, K. Revision der Scorpione. II. Scorpionidae u. Buthiridae. Hamburg: Gröbe. 8 M.
 LARK, W. Sammlung v. Formeln der reinen u. angewandten Mathematik. 3. Lfg. 2. Abth. Braunschweig: Vieweg. 7 M. 50 Pf.
 LOHSE, H. Planetographie. Leipzig: Weber. 3 M. 50 Pf.
 MÜLLER, J. Ueb. Ursprung u. Aitand des Urmeaschen. Stuttgart: Enke. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 ROTHERT, W. Ueb. Heliotropismus. Breslau: Kern. 9 M.
 SEIGNER, J. Formes quadratiques et multiplication compléxe. Berlin: Jarnes. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- COMMENTARIA in Aristotelem graeca. Vol. VII. Simplicii in Aristotelis de caelo commentaria. Ed. J. L. Heiberg. Berlin: Reimer. 30 M.

REINHARDT, C. Ein arabischer Dialekt, gesprochen in 'Oman u. Zanzibar. Berlin: Spemann, 40 M.
URKUNDEN, ägyptische, aus d'n königl. Museen zu Berln. Griechische Urkunden. 2. Bd. 1. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
VERZEICHNIS der ägyptischen Alterthümer, Gipsabgüsse u. Papyrus. Hrg. v. der Generalverwaltung d-r königl. Museen zu Berlin. Berlin: Spemann. 2 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NEWLY DISCOVERED RECENSION OF THE GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY.

The Hermitage, Callow, Worcester: October 9, 1894.

In the long vacation of 1886 the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, added one more to the many obligations under which they had already laid me, by allowing me to transcribe a Missal which has been in their library since the days of Archbishop Parker. I copied it page for page and line for line, and in the following summer began to make a minute examination of its text, having as the sole confidant of my labours the Rev. S. S. Lewis, Fellow and Librarian of the College. My efforts languished for some little time after his death, in 1891, but were resumed two years ago.

If there be a Missal in the world with a prima facie claim to embody a pure text of the Gregorian Sacramentary, it surely must be the Missal of St. Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury; and that the Corpus MS. was written for the use of that monastery is a fact too evident for serious question. Written in or about the year 1099, it inevitably comprises some few Masses of post-Gregorian compilation; and even into the Gregorian Masses prefaces have, by a caprice or a blunder of the scribe's, been introduced which had no business there. These, however, have all been carefully marked for deletion by the Sautaugustinian monks themselves—a condemnation followed in most instances by actual erasure.

By discounting the condemned prefaces, whether erased or not, and by segregating the post-Gregorian Masses, we work our way back to a hypothetical prototype which bears the strain of every test that I have been able to apply to it.

By carefully following the slightest of clues, I have ascertained beyond doubt the stichometrical features of the parent document of the Corpus MS.—the number of columns in a page, and of lines in a column, and the average number of letters in a line. One consequence of this discovery is the moral certainty that it was written in uncial script and was intolerant of contractions, except in six of the Divine names and in the word "omnipotens." This fact, to say the least, puts it in touch with the Missal seen by Egbert, Archbishop of York, early in the eighth century, and declared by him to have been the very book which St. Augustine of Canterbury brought from Rome two centuries and a half previously. I believe the Missal seen by Egbert and the immediate parent of the Corpus MS. to have been one and the same book.

This is not the only claim of the Corpus MS. on our notice. It represents a redaction later than that given to us in the editions of Da Rocca and Ménard, later than that made known by Pamelius and Muratori, later than that made known by D'Azevedo, later even than the basis of the authorised Pio-Clementine text now in general use. Of this there cannot be a doubt.

But, more important still, it embodies a textual recension the value of which it is impossible to over-rate. The archaisms, the solecisms, the inaccuracies of the mediaeval Missals were rarely, if ever, the fault of the scribes; they were the original sin of the Gregorian Sacramentary itself, copies of which—whether from inadvertence on the part of Gregory the Great or not, it is needless at this moment to speculate—had been multiplied beyond possibility of suppression before the great editor found time to bestow upon it the wearisome labour of the file. A rectification of all these things is found in the Corpus MS.; and, besides a distinct improvement in the Latinity which is in marvellous conformity with that of St. Gregory himself in the Moralia and other unquestioned products of his pen. I may add that, as distinguished from the text of Muratori and Pamelius, there are upwards of eighty readings peculiar to the "Proprium de Tempore" alone in the Corpus MS., all of which, in greater or less degree, betray the sedulous care of a hand engaged in giving the finishing touches to its work.

The illustrious Maurist Benedictine, Dom Hugues Ménard, pointed to England as the country which must at one time have possessed copies of the Gregorian Missal referable to a prototype of Gregorian antiquity, the liturgies of Gaul and Germany having been Romanised at a much later date. What he longed for I have found. The prototype of the Corpus MS. must have left Rome before the institution of the present Feast of St. Michael, in the first quarter of the seventh century. I doubt if there be another Gregorian Missal in existence which, like ours, gives the day kept in St. Gregory's time—the 30th, not the 29th of September—and gives it with its pre-Gregorian and Gregorian title of "Veneratio Sancti Michaelis." This is but one proof out of many serving to identify the prototype of the Corpus MS. with the auto-Gregorian original inspected by Archbishop Egbert.

I have made a careful study of the stichometry of the prototype as revealed to us in the Corpus MS.; and I am convinced that, after it had been written, no fewer than three leaves were excised from the "Proprium Sanctorum," in consequence of the suppression of three festi which would seem to have been observed continuously until the year 595.

The thirteenth centenary of the year 595 is not far off; and then will follow the thirteenth centenary of St. Augustine's mission to England, when, if resources be forthcoming, I should wish to publish. My object in appealing through the ACADEMY to its readers is to learn whether, and, if so, when, I shall be justified in going to press with my "text and study." I shall be only too happy to answer any inquiries as to terms of subscriptions with which I may be favoured.

MARTIN RULE.

THE SEPTUAGINT.

Cambridge: Oct. 8, 1894.

Every student of the Old Testament will be grateful to Sir H. H. Howorth for the labour which he is bestowing on problems arising out of the relation of the Septuagint to the Masoretic Hebrew. His zeal for the Septuagint is refreshing; but in his last letter it has carried him to lengths which reflection will possibly lead him to regret.

He is scandalised because the divinity professors of the English Universities are not prepared at once to reinstate the Alexandrian version as the Bible of the Christian Church. He suggests that the professors shirk inquiry, and are "as comfortable in their faith as is the ostrich who thinks he baffles pursuit by hiding his head in the sand." Perhaps in this case the ostrich has other reasons for his inactivity. The professors are probably aware of the great value of the Septuagint for the criticism of the existing Hebrew text. But they are also aware of the intricate nature of the problem, and of the difficulties which beset an immediate judgment upon it as a whole. Even if the text of the Septuagint could be restored to the condition in which it reached Origen, or to an earlier and purer state, great caution would be necessary in the use of the evidence supplied by a version of such unequal merit. But it is well known that we are still far from an approximately pure text. It is therefore to the preliminary work of recovering the text of the LXX. that the Universities are turning their attention at present. In this work it cannot be fairly said that they are inactive. The Oxford Press, which at the beginning of the century produced the monumental apparatus criticus of Holmes and Parsons, is now at its end issuing a no less monumental Concordance of the Greek Old Testament. The Cambridge Press has just completed a manual edition of the LXX., which places in the hands of students the text of the Vatican MS., thus presenting the LXX. "in its relatively oldest form," together with an apparatus sufficient for ordinary use; and it is now about to embark upon a larger work designed to provide scholars with materials for forming a judgment upon questions connected with the text. Every year adds to our store of exact knowledge in the field; within the last few days two important contributions have been made to it—Dr. E. Klostermann's Analecta zur Septuaginta and Mr. Burkitt's Rules of Tyconius. Such labours bring us within measurable distance of a critical edition of the Septuagint, and thus prepare for a thorough and secure examination of the claims of the great Alexandrian version.

How much may be done, meanwhile, by the scholarly investigation of particular books and passages is evident to readers of Wellhausen and Driver on Samuel, and of Cornill on Ezekiel. But the time has scarcely come for generalisation, except in the guarded way in which the case of the Septuagint is stated by, e.g., the late Prof. Robertson Smith in his Old Testament in the Jewish Church.

H. B. SWETE.

AN AUTOGRAPH MS. OF DEFOE'S IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Groningen, Holland: Oct. 2, 1894.

On June 20, 1885, the British Museum bought an autograph MS. of Defoe's, now numbered Additional MSS., No. 32,555. Walter Wilson, in his Memoirs of the Life and Times of Daniel Defoe (vol. iii., p. 599 sq.) John Forster, in his Biographical Essays (footnote on p. 155), and William Lee, in his Life and Recently Discovered Writings of Daniel Defoe (vol. i., p. 451 sq.), have one and all described this as containing only one work, viz., "The Compleat English Gentleman"; and the same statement has been consequently entered in the Catalogue of the British Museum. But the MS. really consists of two independent works, both by Defoe and in his own handwriting.

At present the MS. is exhibited in one of the show cases of the Manuscript Department. Here it attracted my attention one day, and I caused Mr. David Nutt to have it transcribed for publication; for till then it had never been printed. The larger portion of the MS. made up by "The Compleat English Gentleman," was published in 1890; and the other work, which bears the title "Of Royall Education," will be ready soon.

It does not appear from Wilson's words whether he himself inspected the MS., which was then still in the possession of the Rev. De Foe Baker, a descendant of Defoe's son-in-law, Henry Baker, or whether he relied on information sent to him by its owner. At all events neither of them was aware that the MS. contained two distinct works. At present the shorter treatise is inserted in the middle of the larger one, and therefore only a close examination of the contents of the volume reveals the fact. It is, however, curious to note that the analysis of the MS. which Wilson published, by transcribing the headings of the chapters, greatly deviates from their present sequence, the two principal differences being—(1) that in Wilson's list the chapters constituting the work on "Royall Educacion" come in immediately after the very first chapter of "The Compleat English Gentleman," and (2) that the second, third, and fourth chapters of Part I. of "The Compleat English Gentleman" follow chap. i. of Part II., thus concluding the work. Now, Mr. Francis B. Bickley, of the British Museum, tells me that we may rely on the MS. having received its present binding while it belonged to Dawson Turner, who, in 1831, bought it from Mr. Baker; for a very large number of Dawson Turner's MSS. now in the British Museum are bound in exactly the same style—red paper covers, &c. Consequently, as Wilson's knowledge regarding Defoe's work dates from an earlier time, it would seem that the MS. when it was bound, received also a different arrangement in or after the year 1831, the former having been that of Wilson's list; and scrupulous critics might think that the older was, perhaps, the original one of Defoe's and ought, therefore, to be adopted in a modern edition. But this assumption is not borne out by the facts. For besides being incomplete, Wilson's list can also be proved to be otherwise wrong. The headings of the chapters are, indeed, arranged without due regard to the text.

The second chapter of Part II. in Wilson's arrangement begins in the middle of a page, the upper half of which contains the end of the first chapter of Part I. It has, therefore, to follow immediately after this chapter, as it actually does in the MS., lf. 22, as well as in my edition of "The Compleat English Gentleman" (p. 59). It is true that Wilson does not, in this case, give the heading of the chapter misplaced by him, as, in fact, it had been struck out by Defoe. But there can be no doubt which of the only two chapters numbered two in the MS. he means here, as he prints the heading of the other one in full. Moreover, the chapter also ends in the middle of a page (fol. 34 of the MS. and p. 91 of my edition), and chap. iii., treating "Of the General Ignorance of the English Gentry" begins immediately afterwards on the same page. In a similar way the fourth chapter is closely connected with the third, and thus we come to the conclusion that all those three chapters belong to Part I. of "The Compleat English Gentleman." On the other hand, chapters ii.—iv. of Part I. (in Wilson's list) have to be entirely removed, to form part of a separate work, as will appear presently.

In view of these facts, it is strange to find that William Lee, who examined the MS. in 1859, when it was purchased by James Crossley, and, according to Mr. Bickley, must already have had its present binding, commits the same mistakes as Wilson in his account of the MS. He says that he had "an opportunity of examining the work and taking an abstract of its contents" (Life, vol. i., p. 452); but his list of the headings of the chapters is exactly the same as Wilson's, except that the word "and" has been erroneously left out in the second line.

In order to prove beyond doubt that the treatise "Of Royall Educacion" is not the fourth chapter of "The Compleat English Gentleman," as Wilson and Lee represent, but an independent work, a minute description of certain parts of the MS. is indispensable. It begins with a title-page written by Defoe and reproduced on p. i. of my edition of "The Compleat English Gentleman." As this work alone is mentioned in the title, and as there is no second title-page in the MS., Wilson's—or Baker's—oversight is easily accounted for. In my edition I have printed the numbers of the leaves in the margin according to the modern pagination of the MS., which was added with a pencil after the volume had been acquired for the British Museum. But the MS. has also an older and original pagination entered by Defoe himself. He counted the sheets of paper, each of which as a rule consists of two leaves, or four pages. In the present arrangement of the MS. three introductions follow after the title-leaf, filling fol. 2–7. Then there is a gap, as one sheet containing the beginning of the first chapter of "The Compleat English Gentleman" has been lost. The next sheet (i.e., fol. 8 and 9) accordingly shows the figure 2 written by Defoe; the third sheet of the text (i.e. fol. 10 and 11) is numbered 3, and so on, until with Defoe's number 30, the sheet made up by fol. 65 and 66, according to the Museum pagination, is reached. The back of leaf 66 has no text, but the note "The Gentleman," in Defoe's handwriting, indicating that an instalment of that work ends here; other back pages usually contain additions to the next page. Fol. 67 and 68 form one sheet of paper, fol. 69 and 70 another, which is numbered 2; the sheet making up fol. 71 and 72 bears the number 3, and the next sheet consisting of fol. 73 and 74 is numbered 4. With this fresh numbering another fresh numbering coincides, namely, that of the chapters, the last four sheets containing what in the MS. is counted as Chapter i.: it is in fact the first chapter of the other work. The next sheet, made up by fol. 75 and 76, begins with Chapter ii. Fol. 77, together with fol. 78, is numbered 2, which means that these two leaves form sheet 2 of the second chapter. In the same way sheets 3–7 follow. On fol. 89, forming one sheet with fol. 90, the third chapter begins, and accordingly here the next six leaves, or three sheets (fol. 91–96), have the numbers 2, 3 and 4. Fol. 96 has the note Chap. iii. on its back, which means that this instalment contains the third chapter. The fourth chapter begins with fol. 97. The back page of fol. 98 bears the note "Royal Educacion." The sheet formed by fol. 99 and 100 has the heading "Of Royall Educacion" at its beginning. These two notes furnish us with the title of the second work. But Wilson (or Baker) wrongly took the latter for the heading of a chapter, and introduced it as such into his list of contents. On the empty back page of fol. 100 is the usual note Chap. IV. The next sheet, consisting of fol. 101 and 102, is numbered 31, thus evidently continuing the numbering of fol. 65 and 66 (i.e., sheet 30) and the preceding sheets, and indubitably proving that all the intermediate sheets (i.e., leaves 67–100) are an interpolation. With fol. 103 and 104, and 105 and 106, a fresh numbering of the sheets begins (1, 2, &c.).

That the leaves from 67 to 100 are really wrongly inserted into the body of the volume, is also proved by looking at the text of fol. 66 on the one hand and of fol. 101, 102, and 103 on the other. Several times it skips from one leaf to another, deleted passages being replaced by new matter, or numerous additions being made on a different leaf. These irregularities, which are only to a small extent visible in my reproduction of the text (on pp. 179 to 188), distinctly show that all the leaves between 66 and 101 have to be removed, in order to unite again what those thirty-four leaves separate in the MS. at present.

A third point strengthening my argument—if corroboration is needed—is the change in the handwriting which takes place on fol. 67, where a larger and wider and therefore much more distinct style than that employed so far begins, while on fol. 101 sq., the former style is continued.

There remains, therefore, not the slightest doubt that the thirty-four inserted leaves destroy the continuity of the text, and that the correct sequence is re-established by simply omitting them. The further question, however, may arise, whether they should not be transferred to another place in the book, where they might fit better. But first of all, there seems to be no gap in "The Compleat English Gentleman" which could be filled up by the four chapters contained in the thirty-four leaves. Secondly, the long title on the first page of the MS., in which Defoe sums up the contents of "The Compleat English Gentleman," nowhere mentions the important subject discussed in the four inserted chapters. And lastly, they are, as I have already stated, marked twice with a different title as treating of "Royal Educacion," a similar, though not the same, subject.

To the long list of Defoe's works as drawn up in several modern biographies, we have therefore to add a hitherto unprinted treatise on "Royal Educacion." In the introduction to my forthcoming edition of it, I shall try to determine when it was composed.

KARL D. BÜLBING.

"IKENILD STREET."

London: Oct. 3, 1894.

The name of this ancient road, so far as pre-Conquest documents go, is authenticated only for the line (or two lines) of road in Berkshire, called in modern maps "the Ickleton Way." The matter has been somewhat confused by a mistaken identification in Mr. Birch's Cartularium Saxonicum, where a charter of 855, referring to a place called Wenbeorh, has been taken to relate to Hinton Ampner, in Hampshire, on the ground that in a later endorsement on the charter it is stated that Wenbeorh "is now called Hynrytone." In fact Wenbeorh is Wanborough in Wiltshire, on the borders of Berkshire; an adjacent place is still called "Little Hinton."

The name, in O.E. Icenhilde strūt or weg, was explained by Dr. Guest as "the Icenian war-street"; but the interpretation cannot well be correct. No doubt hilde-weg, hilde-strūt, are possible O.E. compounds in the sense of "war-road"; but hild and its compounds are strictly confined to the poetical vocabulary. Besides, it is difficult to suppose that there was any knowledge of the Icenii in Berkshire. The natural supposition would be that the road was called from a woman named Icenhild. There is, however, no known mention of any person so named, either historical or mythological. The element Icen-, also, has not (I believe) been found in personal names; one charter is attested by "Icoenwald monachus," but this is probably a misreading for Koenwald. Still, the name Icenhild may have existed, and it would be in accordance with analogy to conjecture that its first part may be derived from the ethnic name of the Icenii: compare the names beginning with Peoht- and Wealh-.

After the Conquest the "Ikenild" or "Hikenild" Street is mentioned very early (in Henry of Huntingdon and the so-called "Laws of Edward the Confessor") as a road crossing the island from east to west; and there is evidence that the name must at a somewhat early date have become popularly known as the designation of a road extending into the eastern counties. But so far as the evidence is known to me, there is nothing absolutely to contradict the supposition that the name was first applied to the Berkshire portion of the road, and that its more extended use may be due to the anti-quarianism of the twelfth century. Since the name Ikenild Street as the appellation of one of the four great roads received a sort of legal stamp from its association with "the king's peace," it may conceivably have taken root very quickly in popular language, even though in the application it may date only from the twelfth century.

* See Dr. Guest's essay, reprinted in his posthumous Origines Celtice.

Some of the evidence adduced from local names to show the course of the road appears to me delusive. Ickleton (Domesday Ichelintone), in Cambridgeshire, and Icklingham in Suffolk (Domesday Eclingham), seem to be from the Ielingas, the family to which Saint Guthlac belonged. Ickleford in Hertfordshire is not, so far as I know, mentioned in any early document; it may possibly be really derived from Ikenild.

The name of Rykenild Street, applied to a Roman road running across the country from south-west to north-east, is so curiously similar to Ikenild Street that it is hard to think that the two names are wholly unconnected. In the present state of knowledge it seems legitimate to suggest that Rykenild may have arisen from an early misreading of Hikenild, and that its application to the road running north-east may have originated in the notion that this important road was one of the four great highways on which "the king's peace" was to be observed. It is true that the popular currency of the name is attested by several place-names along the course of the road, and some of them are known to be many centuries old. But if the name was adopted as the official designation of the road, it would soon find its way down into ordinary use.

I offer these conjectures as a suggestion for further inquiry, and not by any means as affording a final solution of the very difficult questions to which they relate. I shall be equally satisfied if they can be either established or refuted by convincing proofs.

HENRY BRADLEY.

THE BAGINBUN STONE.

Kinnaird Castle, Brechin, N.B.: Oct. 10, 1894.

Not having seen the original, I neither hold nor wish to indicate any positive opinion regarding the Baginbun inscription (ACADEMY, September 22), more especially as some learned writers are disposed to believe in it; but I am very much inclined to accept Mr. Macalister's alternative suggestion, that this singular legend is "the result of an innocent (but vacant) person amusing himself with no ulterior motive beyond that of passing the time—like the handiwork of Bill Stumps or Edmund Conic." The letters present just that mixture of Greek and Irish characters that in such a case might be expected from a youth acquainted with both alphabets, and the rude phonetic spelling matches the rest. The rather obvious occurrence of the name Fethard, in the third line, is enough to rouse suspicion.

Dealing with a legend so apparently trivial, I will not waste time in defending, step by step, the tentative transliteration to be presently submitted; but, allowance granted for a few strokes thrown in for purposes of disguise, I believe that all the forms may be found in examples, or will explain themselves—some, of course, more doubtfully than others. The following is the reading I would suggest for consideration:

Luri O'Phaill*
-leuc Phen
Phethaird

* Or perhaps O'Phail; but the third character seems to represent ai. If the two final letters are id, the stroke above i must have been added for disguise. The last letter in the inscription is perhaps intentionally confused, a Greek or Irish d making the word too obvious.

That is to say, "Larry O'Phail.—Luke Fenn, of Fethard." Being little acquainted with modern Irish surnames, I am uncertain whether the above are patronymics belonging to the Fethard district, or even to Ireland. McPhail is a common Argyllshire name, and Phen (? Fenn. Phenè, Finnie), appears to be a word of Gaelic origin.

SOUTHERSK.

London: Oct. 6, 1894.

I venture with great diffidence to offer a few remarks upon the Baginbun Stone.

Unfortunately for the reader, the printer has placed the inscription upside down. In the correct position the majority of the letters seem to be intelligible. A help to their determination is afforded by the alphabet on the Kilmalkedar Stone (Christian Inscriptions in the Irish Language, vol. ii., pl. v., fig. 9, and pp. 8. and 135), and Westwood's Lapidarium Walliae is also useful.

The first letter of the inscription seems a compound made up of ORA. The two following read DI. The fourth and sixth, which are seemingly the same, have their nearest representative in an A, as we find it in Irish inscriptions, turned on its side. The dotted y between them falls in with some of the forms of U occurring in the same examples, while the following o with a horizontal dash in it occurs for o in Westwood's Myrthyr Mawr inscription. The last letter of the line is the B of the Kilmalkedar Stone. The first line would read thus: ORA DI AUAOB, which approximates to the familiar OR DI (for DO, DU, see Zeuss G. Celt., p. 639), AUIB.*

The second line begins with the L of the Kilmalkedar Stone, and the previously noted o and B succeed. The next letter is difficult to determine. It may be a contraction for OCUS = and. The letter following it is almost exactly like *r*² given as a South Wales variant in Plate liv., vol. ii., Christian Inscriptions in the Irish Language; or are the next two letters; and the whole line thus reads:—

LOB [] FOR.

The letter beginning the next line looks like a combination of a reversed o with the U of Plate liii of vol. ii., Christ. Inscriptions in the Irish Language; and the succeeding letter is the s of Plate vii. 12, vol. ii. of the same work, with probably an i inserted. The next letter is the B previously noted, followed by what seems OI, and immediately succeeded by a combination of c and u, such as that given on Plate xlv. 113 of vol. ii. of the work cited, the final letter being seemingly a compound of i and L. The third line would thus read

OCUS (or CUIS) BOICHIIL

The last word looks like the genitive singular of an early form of BUCHAILL (cf. BUGEL gloss Pastor).

Reading OR DI AUIB LOB [] FORCUIB BOICHIIL the meaning seems easy, if we could determine the name LOB [?] LOBAR, or the LIOBA of the Martyrology of Donegal; but I venture to hope that Dr. Whitley Stokes or Prof. Rhys will give the inscription a thorough examination, and make their opinion of it public. It certainly has no aspect of a forgery; and the agreement of many of its letters with those on the Kilmalkedar Stone, conjectured to be of the sixth or seventh century, makes it an object of great interest. A portion of an Ogam stone was found at Hook Point, but

* A friend has suggested that the first A in the first line might be an M and the second a c. This would give supposing the horizontal dash in the o to represent i (see Westwood's Lapidarium Inscription at Gnell), MUOCIB, an intelligible reading. The dash in the o may also be i in the o of LOB, giving LIOB.

the size of the stone seen by Mr. Macalister disposes of the question of these two having formed one.

EDMUND MCCLURE.

M. ERNEST LAVISSE.

Paris: Oct. 8, 1894.

Referring to a review in the ACADEMY of October 6, I beg to state that M. Ernest Lavisse never had anything to do with the Ecole des Chartes. He was a pupil of the Ecole Normale, and afterwards became a teacher at that institution, which has a quite different character from the Ecole des Chartes, being devoted less to dry erudition and more to philosophy. I believe the character of M. Lavisse's writings bears out that judgment.

SALOMON REINACH.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 14, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Socialism and Natural Selection," by Mr. B. Bosanquet.
MONDAY, Oct. 15, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Upper Extremity," I. by Prof. W. Anderson.
WEDNESDAY, Oct. 17, 8 p.m. Microscopical: "The Foraminifera of the Gault of Folkestone," by Mr. F. Chapman; "The Genus Corethron," by Dr. H. Stollerfoth.
THURSDAY, Oct. 18, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Upper Extremity," II., by Prof. W. Anderson.

SCIENCE.

THE ORIGIN OF CULTIVATED PLANTS AND DOMESTICATED ANIMALS.

Kulturpflanzen und Haustiere in ihrem Uebergang aus Asien nach Griechenland und Italien. By Victor Hehn. New edition by O. Schrader & A. Engler. (Berlin: Borntraeger; London: Williams & Norgate.)

THE appearance in 1870 of Hehn's work on the migration of cultivated plants and domesticated animals into Europe was what the Germans would call epoch-making. For the first time the author sought to combine the results of comparative philology with the facts furnished by the botanist and zoologist, and in this way to trace the history of that portion of the flora and fauna of Europe which is specially associated with man. It was in some measure a continuation of the work begun by Pictet: as he had endeavoured to restore the picture of primitive Aryan culture by the help of language, so Hehn endeavoured to restore the history of those plants and animals which, as he believed, the nations of Europe had received from Asia. The philologist, the botanist, and the zoologist were all called in to assist and verify one another.

Science has moved on rapidly since the first edition of the book was published. On the one hand geology has shown that plants and animals, formerly supposed to have been importations into Europe, already existed there in pre-glacial times. On the other hand linguistic palaeontology has emended its methods, and corrected its first hasty conclusions. It is now recognised that the want of a particular word in one of the Indo-European languages does not imply that the object denoted by the word was not originally known to the speakers of it, and that the existence of a borrowed word does not necessarily mean that the thing represented by it was borrowed as well as the name. Then, again, phonetic laws are better understood and more stringently applied than was the case twenty years ago: the discovery that the vowels are as much subject to the action of invariable law as the consonants has opened up a new world to the etymologist, and etymologies which were accepted when Hehn wrote are now known to be impossible. Archaeology, lastly, with its multitudinous and startling disclosures, has come to the help of the student. It seems strange to us now to find a scholar like Hehn welcoming in 1880 the attempt of Stephani to prove that the treasures found by Schliemann at Mykénæ were the hoard of Gothic barbarians from the Black Sea, and belonged to the year 267 A.D. Stephani's "demonstration," he says, "is striking, and has rolled a stone away from my heart; but Schliemann and the Greeks, and Gladstone and the English, will be nicely irritated and vexed." We have travelled a long way since then, and Hehn's words now excite in us only a feeling of distrust as to his qualifications for judging of archaeological evidence.

But his book contained so much well-ordered material, and was in other respects such a masterpiece of solid work, that it would have been a loss to science had it been consigned to the lumber room of dead authors. It is, therefore, a matter of congratulation that it has been brought up to date by two such competent scholars as Prof. Otto Schrader and Prof. Engler. Prof. Engler has contributed the botanical corrections, while the rest of the work has fallen to the share of Prof. Schrader. The latter scholar is well known by his works on Indo-European culture, which are distinguished alike by wide erudition, a thorough acquaintance with the latest results of linguistic science, and a remarkable sobriety of judgment. A good deal of what Hehn wrote has necessarily been suppressed; but wherever it was possible the original text has been retained, the corrections and additions to it by the two editors being printed in smaller type or otherwise marked off.

The changes and modifications which the newer knowledge obliges us to make in Hehn's conclusions are almost numberless. Time after time we find that a plant or animal which, upon the evidence before him, he had pronounced to be of eastern origin, was after all indigenous in Europe. Here, again, what M. Salomon Reinach has called "the mirage of the Orient" has faded away, and the results which the French scholar has arrived at in the province of art and archaeology receive a curious illustration from the animal and vegetable world. Thus, the vine can no longer be brought westward from the highlands of Armenia: it has been found in the quaternary tufa of France and the travertine of Italy, and it still grows wild in southern Russia and the Balkan Peninsula. Where, however, the juice of its grapes was first made into wine is another question, which we have no materials for answering. The wine of Babylonia was originally made from the date, not from the grape; and as Prof. Hommel has pointed out, the words which in Hebrew signify "vineyard," "vine," and "grapes," have in Assyrian the general meanings of "garden," "stake," and "fruit." The Hebrew ya'in—"wine" cannot be referred to any known Semitic root; and the Assyrian inu, which is found in a lexical tablet, is merely borrowed from the Canaanitish word. I have always believed in a connexion between the Hebrew (or Canaanite) ya'in and the Greek oivos, though the correct representative of the latter would have been wain, as in Ethiopic. The question is complicated by the existence of the Armenian gini and Georgian g'wino: the last, however, may be a loan-word from Armenian, while gini itself goes back to vini. The word belongs to the European division of Indo-European speech: it is not found in the Eastern branch.

While the European invention of grape-wine seems thus to be vindicated—though it must not be forgotten that grape-wine was known to the Egyptians as far back as the age of the Old Empire—there are other cases in which Asia can still claim the priority. The ass, for example, is certainly not native to Europe. Whether or not it was first tamed in the mountains of Abyssinia, it had been so long an inhabitant of Babylonia as to be termed by the Sumerians "the animal" simply. In opposition to the horse, which was called "the animal of the eastern highlands," it was, however, sometimes denoted by ideographs which read "the animal of the West." Like Prof. Otto Schrader, I regard Benfey's derivation of the Greek ōvos (originally ōvos) from the Semitic āhōn as impossible. The Greek word would rather claim connexion with the Sumerian ansu, which, like several other Sumerian words, has been preserved in the Armenian ēs. That the Latin acinus is not borrowed from the Greek ōvos is clear from its form; but it is equally clear that the two words come from the same original. Why this should be sought in the north of the Balkan Peninsula, as Prof. Schrader thinks, I do not see.

The volume has been so carefully edited that the critic is deprived of all occupation. One error of Hehn's, however, seems to have escaped Prof. Schrader's observation. It is the statement derived from Movers that the word Rimmon in the name of the Sun-god, Hadad-Rimmon, denotes the pomegranate. The cuneiform inscriptions have taught us that this is a mistake. The correct reading of the god's name is Ramman, perhaps "the thunderer," and the form Rimmon is due to an erroneous etymology of the Masoretic punctuators. The pomegranate was doubtless a sacred tree in the East, but it had nothing to do, so far as we know, with the worship of the Sun-god.

A. H. SAYCE.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

WE have received the sixth part (Diastullos-Galata) of Dr. Alfred Holder's Alt-Celtischer Sprachschatz (Leipzig: Teubner). The last article is unfinished; but the portion of it included in this number contains fourteen columns of passages from Greek and Roman writers, in which the names Galatae and Galatia occur. It is unnecessary to repeat what we have already said as to the value of this laborious work, which will be absolutely indispensable to all students of ancient Celtic nomenclature, language, and history. We think it desirable to point out, however, that the articles relating to British place-names have, from the beginning of the book, been often unsatisfactory, the identification of the localities being in some cases demonstrably wrong, and in other cases very doubtful. Unfortunately, Dr. Holder seldom or never cites any authority for the identifications, and we find it impossible to guess from what source some of them can have been obtained. In the part before us, it is stated that the Durnovaria of Antoninus is perhaps Rochester. Apparently this is something more than a misprint or slip of the pen for Dorchester, since in the article Durotriges Dorset and Dorchester are said to be derived from this tribal name. The truth is, of course, that Dorchester (in old English Dornwara-ceaster) is Durnovaria, and that Dorset (Dornsæte) is derived from the name of the town, so that neither of these names has any etymological connexion with Durotriges. The author does not suggest any etymology for Durnovaria: it seems possible that it may be derived from a personal name *Durnovaros (from durno- fist, hand, vāros = Welsh gwawr champion), though such a name has not been found recorded. For the Bovio of the Itinerary Dr. Holder gives "Boverton," without any indication of the situation of the place; wherever Boverton may be, the identification seems to be founded merely on the resemblance in the spelling of the names, though they cannot possibly have anything in common. The Welsh form of Bovium seems to be preserved in the Domesday Baistan, now Beeston Castle. In the preceding Parts of the work, though not, so far as we have observed, in this last, the modern names of places in Britain are often confusingly misprinted. In the article "Dumnonii" the quotations relating to the Dumnonii of Cornwall and Devon are not separated from those which refer to the people of the same name in Scotland. Dr. Holder would do well, if possible, to submit his proof-sheets to some Englishman conversant with Roman-British geography. Another point in which the book is open to criticism is the occasional inclusion of names that are, unquestionably, not Celtic at all, such as Baeda's "Ad Barve, id est Ad Nemus," which is simply Old English. It is, no doubt, helpful that names that have been wrongly supposed by good scholars to be Celtic should be mentioned, with a note that they belong to other languages. In the instance quoted, however, and in several others, there is no intimation of the kind. We do not make these remarks in any censorious spirit, but because we are anxious that this important work should be as nearly perfect as it can be made.

M. VICTOR HENRY'S Précis de Grammaire Comparée de l'Anglais et de l'Allemand, which has already been favourably noticed in the ACADEMY, has been translated by the author into English, and published under the title of A Short Comparative Grammar of English and German (Sonnenschein). In the Preface M. Henry refers with much satisfaction to the praise which we bestowed on his work, and states that he has adopted most of the corrections which we suggested. We naturally regret that he has not seen fit to adopt all of them, and there are several other matters of detail which we consider open to objection; but these faults do not detract very seriously from the value of the book, which has, in fact, no rival in English. We are glad to observe that the original work has been cordially welcomed by Prof. Streitberg in the Indogermanische Forschungen. The translation is highly creditable to M. Victor Henry's practical mastery of the English language: an ordinary English reader would hardly suspect, from internal evidence, that it was the work of a foreigner.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. FRANK McCLEAN has expressed his desire to present a large equatorially mounted telescope, equipped for photographic and spectroscopic work, to the Royal Observatory at the Cape of Good Hope. With this object he has arranged with Sir Howard Grubb, for the construction of a photographic refracting telescope of 24 inches aperture, and for an object glass prism to work with it, having a refracting angle of $7\frac{1}{2}$ degrees and the same aperture as the object-glass. The glass for the object-glass and prism have already been secured, and the definitive order for the instrument was given to Sir Howard Grubb on May 4 last. Coupled with the photographic telescope, there is to be a visual refracting telescope of 18 inches aperture. The mounting is to be sufficiently elevated to allow a slit spectroscope, for the determination of stellar motions in the line of sight, to be attached to the photographic telescope; and the gift will include such a spectroscope, as well as an observatory of light construction.

MR. WILLIAM LUNT, of Kew, has been appointed assistant superintendent of the Royal Botanic Gardens at Trinidad.

THE Royal Microscopical Society will hold its first meeting of the new session, at 20, Hanover-square, on Wednesday next, October 17, at 8 p.m., when Mr. F. Chapman will read a paper on "The Foraminifera of the Gault of Folkestone."

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces A Manual of Exotic Ferns and Selaginella, by Mr. E. Sandford. The book will contain descriptions of one thousand species and varieties, and some six hundred synonyms, as well as notes on their culture.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

A NEW part of Prof. Ascoli's Glossarium Palaeo-Hibernicum has just been published. It contains the end of R, the whole of S, and the beginning of T.

AN article by Mr. F. Legge on the recent works of Prof. Hommel, Terrien de Lacouperie, Sayce, and others, tracing the civilisations of antiquity back to Babylonia, will appear in the October number of the Scottish Review.

THE Religious Tract Society has aided the American Board of Foreign Missions by a grant for a Catechism, and a simple Primer (based on the Syllabaire-Regimbean), in the Fang language (spoken on the Gaboon river), through their missionary, the Rev. A. W. Marling. He has also asked for aid in publishing a volume of Old and New Testament Stories, and the committee are helping in its illustration. For the Mang'anja dialect (spoken in the South of Lake Nyassa) the Religious Tract Society is helping in the publication of The Peep of Day, the request coming through Miss S. B. Bell, a missionary of the Church of Scotland, at Blantyre.

FINE ART.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF CIMA.

Ricerche intorno alla Vita e alle Opere di Giambattista Cima. By Don V. Botteon and Doctor A. Aliprandi. (Conegliano.)

THE Italians of to-day, like their Roman ancestors, may be described as a race with a passion for monuments. Having filled their cities, towns, and villages with statues of Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi, those communities which happened to have a painter of renown among the number of their citizens are taking every opportunity to remind themselves and the universe of this fact. A year ago Borgo San Sepolcro unveiled a monument to Pier dei Franceschi; Bassano is erecting one to Jacopo da Ponte, and Conegliano, not to be left behind, has recently put up a neat tablet in the arcade of its town-hall to the memory of Cima, and, what is more to the purpose, has published a monograph containing a great deal of fresh information about this strenuous painter. All praise is due to the compilers of this work for the diligence with which they have searched through their own archives, and for their abstention from the dithyrambic language too frequently indulged in by Italian municipal critics.

The fresh documents prove conclusively that Giovanni Battista Cima was born and brought up at Conegliano, and not, as Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle supposed, at Udine. It was doubtless this ill-founded supposition that led these critics to see Friulan crudities in work of such classic Venetian merit as the Madonna and Saints of Vicenza, or the St. John of Santa Maria dell'Orto of Venice. The date of Cima's birth can now be put no later than January or February, 1460; for his signature is found in a document of 1474, and, according to Venetian law, a male attained his majority at the age of fourteen. Cima, it appears, was the family name of the painter, and not, as Boschini imagined, a fatuous pun on his own conceit, nor, as Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle fancied, a reference to Cima's putting mountain peaks—cime—in his backgrounds. The painter seems, however, to have been the first to use this form of the name, shortened from Cimatore—"cloth-shearer," a name derived from the trade pursued by his ancestors for at least two generations.

Cima did not leave Conegliano definitely until 1489, although the picture at Vicenza of that date proves that he must have had his training and formed his style at Venice—doubtless in the school of Alvise Vivarini. From that date until 1516 we find him living in Venice, twice married, having two sons by his first wife and three sons and three daughters by the second. In 1516 he returned to Conegliano, settling down comfortably in the house left him by his father, a house still existing. But he did not long enjoy the peace of his native hills; for he died intestate not later certainly than September 1, 1518, and probably a year earlier. He did not, therefore, die young, as Vasari says, although he seems to have been just at the height of his power as a painter. In no other work, surely, do his qualities appear more attractive than in his last, the one in the Brera representing St. Peter enthroned. This picture is even more porcelain-like in the coolness of its tones, is even more transparent in the shadows, and firmer in drawing, than the other works of this uniformly excellent master. What he would have done had he lived longer, whether he would, like Catena, have felt the kindling glow of Giorgione: are questions one cannot help asking.

The catalogue of Cima's works contained in this monograph is by far the most complete in existence. Unfortunately, however, it is of no great value, as it has not been compiled by carefully trained connoisseurs, and the authors have not so much as seen many of the pictures described. But to compensate for this, we have detailed accounts of the history and vicissitudes of the more important works. Particularly interesting are the documents relating to the "Incredulity of Thomas," and its history down to the date of its acquisition by the National Gallery. Until 1818 the picture remained on the altar in the church of San Francesco at Portogruaro, for which it was painted; but in that year it was sent to Venice to be restored. There it remained until 1833, having had in the meantime a narrow escape from destruction by flood, when it fell and lay in salt water for some hours. Scarcely returned to Portogruaro, the altar-piece began to show signs of peeling off, and in 1852 it was again sent to be restored. This proved useless, as it immediately began to peel off again. In 1861 Sir Charles Eastlake saw it, and offered forty thousand francs for it; but the question of proprietorship prevented its sale. It was finally bought for the National Gallery—of course, not for the British Museum, as the authors say—by Mr. Boxall for £1,800; and "in the British Museum they now show visitors what English gold could do to rob Italy of so precious an art treasure."

A few obvious mistakes may be indicated here. The "Nativity" at Motta di Livenza is not by Cima. Morelli ascribed it to Pordenone, and it is at any rate of his school. The "Madonna," belonging to Signor Piccinelli, of Bergamo, is not by Cima, but a signed work of his imitator, Giovanni Maria da Carpi. The "St. Jerome," in the Giovanelli collection, is by Basaiti. Among the genuine works not mentioned in the catalogue are a fine "Madonna" at Richmond Hill, belonging to Sir Francis Cooke, and a "Coronation of the Virgin" in San Giovanni e Paolo at Venice.

This monograph cannot be regarded as a final word upon Cima. It makes no attempt to re-create his artistic personality, nor does it try to connect him with the art movement of his time. And it is in this connexion that Cima is particularly interesting. Why Sebastiano del Piombo signed himself as a "pupil of Giovanni Bellini" on a picture which betrays no influence but Cima's, is a problem that still remains to be solved. Morelli's supposition that Cima must have been for some time the foreman of Bellini's workshop seems a likely one, but it needs corroboration. Cima's influence on such a fascinating artist at Catena and on one so sympathetic as Lotto was certainly considerable; and if all such points were carefully worked out, we should probably find that Cima was more than a mere painter of severe Madonnas and ascetic saints. But the monograph of Don Vincenzo Botteon and Doctor Aliprandi has at least the merit of making an elaborate study of Cima much more fruitful than it could have been hitherto.

BERNHARD BERENSON.

THE LIMES IN GERMANY.

THREE years ago the representations of Mommsen and other scholars induced the German Imperial Government to establish and subsidise a Commission for the full examination of the Pfahlgraben and Teufelsmauer, the earthwork and stone wall which mark to this day the Limes of the Roman Empire between Rhine and Danube. Five years were allotted to the task: a distinguished soldier, Gen. von Sarwey, and a distinguished scholar, Dr. F. Hettner, were appointed military and archaeological directors, while the indispensable supervision of the separate excavations was entrusted to various "Streckenkommissare"—university teachers, schoolmasters, experienced local antiquaries, who give their unpaid services in districts near their homes. The results of the whole undertaking will be presently published in elaborate form. Meanwhile, the Limesblatt, edited by Dr. Hettner (Trier: F. Lintz) contains interim reports from "Streckenkommissare," while annual summaries by the same scholar appear in the Anzeiger of the Archaeological Institute. By the kindness of Gen. von Sarwey and his colleagues, I have been able to visit some of the more notable excavations; and the following paragraphs, based on what I have read and seen, are meant to sum up the results hitherto attained by the Commission in its two spheres of work, the survey of the Limes and the examination of the forts which defended it.

The survey of the Limes was, in the first instance, intended to determine the course and character of the actual boundary works; and this intention is being well fulfilled. We know now better than ever that the frontiers of Upper Germany and Raetia were differently built. Along the German Limes was placed an earthwork and ditch, with frequent towers close behind, and forts at no great distance. The Raetic Limes had neither earthwork nor ditch, but a stone wall four feet thick, no match for our English Murus, but constructed respectably enough: there are buttresses, as it seems, every ten or fifteen yards, turrets are built into it at suitable spots, while detached forts lie three or four or five miles southwards. The two Limites appear to meet in the Röthenbachthal, not very far from Hohenstaufen, where the stone wall comes to a nicely finished end, and the earthwork takes its place. It is an odd position, halfway up a steep hill side, and there is a chance that it may be an accident; for occasional bits of masonry occur two or three times on the German Limes in the midst of the prevailing earthwork. But it is in the district where we have other reasons for locating the boundary of Germany and Raetia, and it may well be the exact spot.

The survey of the Limes has also resulted in two striking finds, the "gromatic" ditch and the "palisades." The Roman gromatic writers prescribe, for the security of boundaries, that a ditch be dug, set thick with unmistakable signs, and then covered in; and there is reason in the device. In ancient and modern times alike it has been recognised that buried landmarks are safe against the malice of floods or of neighbours, but it is surprising to find the plan adopted on the frontiers of the Empire. Yet one skilful excavator, M. Jacobi, has discovered on the Taunus a small ditch running just outside the main fosse: it had been planted with rows of stones or bits of Roman pottery, wood, iron, and other unexpected trifles, and had obviously been intentionally covered in. This ditch appears to occur in a variety of forms along the whole Limes, and presumably marks the legal frontier: it also appears elsewhere. It is found in front of the line of forts, the so-called "Mümling-Jinie," which runs (roughly) from the Main to the Neckar at some distance behind the Pfahlgraben. The conclusion seems cogent that this line, which has neither earthwork, nor wall, nor fosse, was an earlier frontier marked only by the gromatic ditch. Yet more, this ditch occurs in or near a couple of camps: M. Jacobi has found that in one case it marks the Decumanus and Cardo, in another it may provide a kind of surveying basis. The gromatic writers, it appears, were not so inaccurate as was thought, and Latin scholars will have to pay fresh attention to them.

Another striking discovery has been made by M. W. Kohl in Bavaria. In front of the Raetic wall he has come upon a ditch which was obviously filled with made earth: at the bottom were great blocks of decayed firwood, the remnants of tree-trunks sawn in half and set in rows. Hadrian, as is well known, stipitibus magnis in modum muralis sepiis funditus iactis . . . barbaros separavit. It looks very much as if Hadrian planted what Mr. Kohl has found; and then, when his palisades were broken or decayed, some successor, Pius or Marcus Aurelius, set up the more lasting wall. There are, however, noxious elements of uncertainty in this theory, which can be expelled only by further digging.

Meanwhile the examination of the forts behind the Limes has proceeded rapidly. These forts are nearly eighty in number, and some are so badly preserved as to test the utmost skill of excavators, but per contra the remains are rarely far below the surface, and the internal buildings seem fewer than is usual in our northern camps. The smaller finds are rather disappointing, and the epigraphists are hopelessly despondent; but valuable work has been done in fixing, planning, and recording. Evidence is slowly accumulating as to the stages by which the Romans reached their ultimate Limes, and it is encouraging to find that this new evidence on the whole confirms the little that we knew or suspected before. One may well congratulate the Commission, its Directors, and its "Streckenkommissare" on three years of successful activity, and on two most striking discoveries. It is pleasant to think that these two discoveries were made by men who are not scholars by profession but archaeologists by choice. They will, beyond doubt, be vigorously followed up, and, together with Dr. Hettner's forthcoming descriptions of the forts, will form a substantial addition to our knowledge and a substantial encouragement for the future.

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE third annual issue of European Pictures of the Year will be published next week, containing works by artists of France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Austria, Russia, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, exhibited in the various Salons during 1894. It will give a thorough representation of the various Schools on the Continent, among which the Munich "Secession" School, which has been creating so much interest in artistic circles, will be fully dealt with.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & Son announce The Lives of James Holmes and John Varley, written by Mr. Alfred Thomas Story, the biographer of Linnell.

AMONG the exhibitions to open next week are—a collection of drawings of birds, fish, and flowers of Japan, by the native artist, Watanabe Seitei, at the Japanese Gallery; and a collection of Finnish handiwork and curios, at the Society of Artists—both in New Bond-street.

THE first general meeting of the Hellenic Society for the current session will take place at 22, Albemarle-street, on Monday, November 19, at 5 p.m., not on October 15 as previously arranged. Mr. Arthur Evans will read a paper on his discoveries in Crete, and Mr. A. G. Bather a paper on the mythology of the "Bacchae."

THE eighth ordinary general meeting of the Egypt Exploration Fund will be held in the hall of the Zoological Society, Hanover-square, on Friday, October 26, at 4 p.m., under the presidency of Sir William Fowler. M. Naville and Mr. Hogarth will both deliver addresses upon their work at Deir el Bahari.

MISS BRODRICK will deliver a course of six lectures on "Ancient Egypt" at 4, Vanbrugh-terrace, Blackheath, on Wednesdays at 3 p.m., beginning on October 17. Some of the lectures will be illustrated with lime-light views.

THE widow of Mr. Edwin Long has presented his large picture of "The Raising of Jairus's Daughter" to the municipality of Bath, which was his native city.

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.

THURSDAY morning was devoted to the "Messiah," given under the direction of Mr. Stockley. In the evening there was a miscellaneous programme. Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture was finely played, though a little hurrying at times robbed it of some of its dignity. This was followed by Mr. Henschel's "Stabat Mater" for soli, chorus, and orchestra, written expressly for Birmingham. Among settings of the old Latin hymn the one by Rossini is very celebrated; another by Dvorák is one of the loftiest and most impressive sacred works of modern times. Mr. Henschel has been influenced by both these composers, especially the latter; yet there is nothing in his music approaching to plagiarism. The opening movement, "Stabat Mater Dolorosa" shows both tenderness and dignity; the "monotone" section, after the original form of the enharmonic modulation, is impressive, but its simplicity is somewhat marred by the chromatic cadence at the end. There are several passages in the work in which the composer is inclined to indulge freely in chromatics. On the other hand, he has shown how strong and effective such colouring is when used in moderation: the "quando corpus morietur" of the last number offers an appropriate illustration. The "Quis est homo" for tenor solo and chorus is a neat, smooth movement. The "Pro Peccatis" is remarkable for the vigour of its opening, and the calm of its closing section. The "Eia Mater" for contralto solo and chorus is one of the most attractive numbers of the score. The opening five-bar phrase, and, indeed, the complete musical sentence, is plaintive, and has the charm of simplicity; the clever scoring, too, adds greatly to the effect of the music. Passing over the "Fae me vere," the freshness of the "Virgo, virginum praeclara" deserves notice; the very soft close acts as an excellent foil to the exciting "Inflamatus" which follows. The opening section—except for the semitone sliding progression at the words "Per te, Virgo, sum defensus"—is powerful, while the middle section is not lacking in grace. The introduction of the old "Dies Irae" cantus firmus at the end is very striking. A footnote in the score makes mention of its long association (from the sixth century) with the Latin hymn. Musicians on hearing it are probably reminded of the last movement of Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique," and the association, unfortunately, is scarcely sacred; for the travesty of the French composer, however, Mr. Henschel is not responsible. The closing movement "Quando corpus" is impressive, and the addition for the first time in the work of harp and organ to the orchestra is of excellent effect. Mr. Henschel in this "Stabat Mater" displays taste, judgment, and skill; but one cannot say that the work shows strong individuality. It is, however, a work of great merit; and, as in the vocal parts the composer has studied the convenience and comfort of singers, it will probably become popular. The performance, under the direction of the composer, was highly satisfactory: the solo quartet consisted of Mrs. Henschel, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. E. Lloyd and Andrew Black. They all sang well, and Miss Wilson was heard to greater advantage than in Dr. Parry's "Saul" on the previous day.

There is nothing new to say about Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony," but the fine performance certainly deserves mention; many times have we heard it under Dr. Richter's direction, but cannot recall a more finished, sympathetic rendering. Miss Marie Brema displayed great dramatic power in Brahms's gloomy but noble Rhapsody (Op. 53). Mr. Lloyd in Gounod's "Lend me your aid," achieved a brilliant success. The concert concluded with a spirited performance of Dvorák's characteristic "Husitska" Overture.

The programme on Friday morning was severe, but interesting. Cherubini's Mass in D minor is a noble but long work. Side by side with pages of the highest order, such as the serene "Et incarnatus est" and solemnly dramatic "Crucifixus," there are others in which the composer's head rather than his heart was engaged. The Mass seems long, not because it contains very many bars, but because they are not all equally inspired. At the opening the singing of the choir was flat—no wonder, after the heavy rehearsals and long performances of previous days—but they recovered. The soloists, Mme. Albani, Marian McKenzie, and Messrs. Lloyd and Henschel, sang well. Wagner's "Good Friday Music," from "Parsifal," arranged for orchestra, was apparently enjoyed; it loses, however, much apart from its surroundings. Palestrina's "Stabat Mater" alla cappella was sung in an expressive manner. The "Wagner" version was used, in which, for the sake of contrast, certain portions have been allotted to soloists, and other portions to a small or half-choir. Whether purists would approve of all Wagner has done, may be doubtful; but it is certain that his version, as performed here under Dr. Richter's direction, is effective. Palestrina's music is old, yet not old-fashioned: it can stand side by side with that of Wagner, and not suffer from comparison; each composer was great in his own way.

The programme concluded with Mozart's Symphony in E flat. The evening concert included two masterpieces—Schumann's "Faust," Part 3, and Beethoven's "Choral Symphony," to which justice was rendered by all concerned in the performances. Thus the Festival came to a successful close. Of the novelties, Dr. Parry's "King Saul" was by far the most important. Our notice last week is but the record of a first impression; when this Oratorio is given in London we shall hope to render it that fuller justice which it deserves. Mr. C. W. Perkins deserves a special word for the ability which he displayed at the organ during the week. Dr. Richter won golden opinions: he is cool-headed, but not cold; firm, but not tyrannical; while in the art of conveying his intentions, it would be difficult to find his superior.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Messrs. Angener:—

J. S. Bach's Organ Works, Vol. X., edited by W. T. Best. This contains four organ concertos, transcribed from the violin concertos of the Italian, Vivaldi. Why Bach, whose power of inventing and developing themes was practically unlimited, had recourse to another composer's work is difficult to understand; probably it was to please the Duke Wilhelm Ernst of Saxe-Weimar. Anyhow, he helped to immortalise works which, in their original form, are well-nigh forgotten. No. 3 has much to interest, especially the fine Adagio Recitativo, but it is somewhat too liberal in cadenza passages; No. 4, consisting of only eighty-one bars, is formal; Nos. 1 and 2 are the best, being full of charm and skill; the two slow movements are remarkable for their simplicity and earnestness.

Cecilia, Books 46 and 47, edited by W. T. Best. The first book opens with a "Fantasia on a Choral," by the able editor. The melody is taken from the old Scotch Psalter of 1615; and its plain, diatonic character forms a striking contrast to some of the modern harmonies of the Fantasia. The writing is skilful, vigorous, and effective. This piece is followed by a graceful Andante, also from Mr. Best's pen. Then comes a Fugue by that worthy musician, Samuel Wesley. The serpentine subject is attractive, the workmanship clever, and the form free. Wesley was an intense admirer of Bach, but no slavish imitator. Book 47 contains four pieces by J. L. Krebs, one of Bach's pupils, of whom he said that "he was the best crab [Krebs] in all the brook [Bach]." With this recommendation, it will be sufficient to state that the pieces consist of three Fugues and a Prelude on a Choral.

Clementi Sonatas, Op. 37 and 38. These opuscula, though well-worn, are not worn out. This edition has phrase marks and fingering by Dr. Hugo Riemann. The former seems to require, here and there, a foot-note by way of explanation; the latter is good and useful, though, at times, a little beyond the compass of small hands.

From Messrs. E. Ascherberg & Co.:—

The Blue-eyed Maiden's Song and The Green Cavalier's Song. Words by the Earl of Beaconsfield, music by Princess Beatrice. Judged from a high standard, these songs may be found lacking in originality; but they both deserve praise for their simplicity and refinement. In the first there are some pleasing points—the Schubert-like transitions from minor to major and the variety of rhythm; the forte chords at the end, however, seem to us a little out of place. The second is fresh and graceful, though not quite so attractive as the first.

From Messrs. Weekes:—

Legend of Oriella. Music by J. Hoffmann. This is a Cantata for female voices, with words by E. Oxenford, based on a legend of the Bernese Oberland. The introduction and the first chorus, "Hark the Bells," are smooth and pleasing; the next chorus is somewhat commonplace. The "storm" recitative has a weak opening and a weak ending, but an effective middle.

Original Organ Compositions. By W. A. Jefferson. This collection of short pieces contains much that is deserving of praise. The opening "Sketch" is attractive, and the following "Interlude" and "Elegy" are graceful. The "March Seraphic," however, scarcely bears out its title. The final number, "Fughetta," has an attractive theme, and some of the work-Berceuse, Russian Cradle-Song. By V. Donagrof, is a quiet, effective little song.

From Messrs. Chappell:—

Album of Ten Album Songs. Composed by A. Goring Thomas. These songs, selected from a considerable number left in MS., will form a pleasing souvenir of our talented English composer, who died ere his musical gifts were fully matured. The MSS. are not dated, but there is evidence to show that some were among his earliest works, and others written in his later years. The melodies are fresh and flowing; and in many places one can see how the composer tried to set them off to advantage by means of clever, piquant harmonisation. The graceful "Good-night," and the light Mazurka entitled "L'Enfance," may be named as instances. There is, of course, reason to regret that Mr. Goring Thomas did not himself prepare these songs for the press, for the fact that he kept them back would seem to show that he had not put the finishing touches to them. But the many admirers of the composer of "Esmeralda" will welcome his last, if incomplete, message.

Abide with Me. By J. Haydn Parry. There is feeling and force in some of the music, but towards the close it is sensational rather than solemn. The well-known hymn demands a chaste setting.

Falling Leaves. Waltz Song. By F. Paolo Tosti. The composer has a style of his own; and though to some tastes it may be a little too simple—a little too sentimental—it has certainly proved successful. This song, with its waltz rhythm, will no doubt maintain Signor Tosti's reputation.

The Hum of Bees and Scotch Johnny. By J. L. Molloy. Two light, thoroughly Molloyesque songs. Of the two we prefer the second.

Come Back, Jeannot. By Tito Mattei. A pleasing love-ballad. It is popular in form, yet not lacking in a certain refinement.

Thistle-down and To Mistress Rose. By Frank L. Moir. Two short, neat little songs. There is a pleasing quaintness about the second, and we only wish the end were as good as the beginning. The words by Mrs. Chandler Moulton form a welcome change from the "golden-sunset," "hand-in-hand" style of poem so common.

Good-night, Pretty Stars. By Noel Johnson. This is a neat, delicate little song. Why did not the composer write D flat instead of C sharp in bar 7 of page 4? Surely it is supertonic harmony over a dominant pedal.

Deuxième Gavotte. By Carlo Albanesi. The music, for the most part modern in character, is clever and effective. The "Musette" trio is very quaint, and contrasts well with the principal section. This is a drawing-room piece likely to be much in demand.

Chimes. Waltz. By Algernon Rose. A light, taking, well-written waltz. The "Hour Bell" coda is quite à la Schumann. But why G sharp and not A flat? It is surely dominant harmony over a tonic pedal.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE first of a short autumnal series of "Richter Concerts" was given at St. James's Hall on Monday evening. There is little to say about it, except that the programme contained no novelties, that the performances were excellent, and that the audience was enthusiastic. Mr. Bispham, however, deserves a word for his fine declamatory singing in two Wagner excerpts. But though there is little for a critic to do at such a concert except enjoy it, he may express his pleasure that the London public appreciates its advantages. There are certain things over which the best conductor has no control; temperature may affect voices or instruments; but, as a rule, a "Richter Concert" means one well contrived and well conducted.

Mr. FRANZ RUMMEL, who has not appeared in London for several years, gave an orchestral concert at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening. It was, perhaps, a somewhat dangerous experiment to play three pianoforte Concertos in one evening; but all three were masterpieces and presented strong contrasts, so that the music did not seem long. We will not say that the pianist revealed all the pathos of Beethoven's Concerto in G, or all the poetry of Schumann's in A minor; but both works were interpreted with marked intelligence, and without any affectation or exaggeration. The third, brilliantly performed, was the one in G minor by Saint-Saëns. Mr. Rummel has a fine technique: he is, indeed, master of the keyboard. The orchestra was under the careful direction of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

| | YEABLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|--|---------|--------------|------------|
| | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station. | 0 13 0 | 0 6 6 | 0 3 3 |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. | 0 15 2 | 0 7 7 | 0 3 10 |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. | 0 17 4 | 0 8 8 | 0 4 4 |

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. "They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons. "As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published. The book is full of helpful thoughts."—Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. "Every sermon glows with uncton, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons. "Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 358, will be published on OCTOBER 17th, 1894.

CONTENTS.

- I. THE STRIKE of a SEX.
- II. LADY DUFFERIN'S POEMS AND VERSES.
- III. THE EARLIEST HISTORY of BABYLONIA.
- IV. REMBRANDT and his ART.
- V. BUCHAN.
- VI. ROUSSEAUISM REVISED.
- VII. LORD WOLSELEY'S "MARLBOROUGH."
- VIII. THE ABUSE of STATISTICS.
- IX. LOPE DE VEGA.
- X. THE TRAGEDY of the CÆSARS.
- XI. NOVELS of ADVENTURE and MANNERS.
- XII. ALEXANDER'S GENERALS.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 6s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL BAILEY, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against
Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer,
Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

CONCERTS.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

SEVEN SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.—Thursday Evening,
18th October, "Creation"; 8th November, "Maccabees, the Christian Martyr," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater"; Christmas Eve, at 7 p.m.,
"Messiah"; 5th February, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci"; 21st February, "Elijah"; 12th March, "Lohengrin" and "Tannhauser"; Good Friday, at 3, "Redemption." Miss Ella Russell, Miss Anna Williams, Mdlle. Nuola, Miss Clara Butt, Mrs. Belle Cole, Miss
Agnes Janson, Miss Grace Damian, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Watkin
Mills, Signor Foli, &c. Organist, Mr. Arthur Fagge. Leader, J. T.
Carrollus. Conductor, William Carter. Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s. Subscription for Seven Concerts—stalls, grand circle, or area, £2 2s.; reserved seats, £1 8s. Subscription for any five dates,
£1 11s. 6d. or £1 1s.—Tickets of the usual Agents, and Mr. Robert Newman, Queen's Hall, Langham Place, Regent Street, W.

MR. C. HAYDEN-COFFIN will give, on OCTOBER 15, the FIRST of a Short Series of VOCAL RECITALS, at STEINWAY HALL, at 3.30 p.m., kindly assisted at this First Recital by Miss Lillian Russell, Miss Suzanne Leonard (vocally), and Miss Mattie J. Leonard (instrumentally). Tickets of Mr. C. Hayden-Coffin, Campden Hill Cottage, W. (by letter only); and of Willcocks & Co. (Limited), 42, Berners Street, Oxford Street, W.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S
ENTERTAINMENT (under the Management of Mr.
ALFRED GERMAN REED and Mr. CORNEY GRAIN), OPEN for the AUTUMN SEASON.—MISSING, by Somerville Gilmey.
Music by King Hall. Mr. Corney Grain's latest Musical Sketch, BOND STREET, 4 p.m., and VALERIE HAVE EARS. Booking Office now open, from 11 to 6.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

BAD SOAPS

Eat into the Skin.

VINOLIA SOAP

Does not. IT'S PURE!!!

Price 4d., 6d., 8d., 10d., and 2s. 6d. per Tablet.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 5s.
free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. or very best Irish Linen, returned any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner
Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table
Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 8d. each,
2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10yd. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard;
and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard;
and Linen Diaper, 7½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 8s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 2s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.
per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow
Cases, from 1s. 11d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS—
Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—
Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

IRISH LINEN

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
Financial Year ends 20th November, 1894.
FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. INVESTED FUNDS, £4,700,000
PAID IN CLAIMS, £9,000,000

All the Profits are divided amongst the Assured; already divided £4,600,000. All persons now assuring will receive an additional share of Profit over later Entrants, at the next Division in 1897.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

JOHN LANE begs to announce his REMOVAL to his NEW OFFICES, which will in future be known as "The BODLEY HEAD," VIGO STREET, where orders for any of the Publications enumerated below should be addressed.

THE YELLOW BOOK. Vol. III. Ready on the 16th of October. Pott 4to upwards of 270 pages, 15 Full-page Illustrations, Title-Page, and Cover Design, 5s. net.

Contributions will appear by the following:—

LITERATURE—WILLIAM WATSON, KENNETH GRAHAME, ARTHUR SYMONS, ELLA D'ARCY, JOSE MARIA de HEREDIA, ELLEN M. CLERKE, HENRY HARLAND, THEO MARZIALS, ERNEST DOWSON, THEODORE WRATISLAW, ARTHUR MOORE, OLIVE CUSTANCE, LIONEL JOHNSON, ANNIE MACDONELL, C. S., NORA HOPPER, S. CORNISH WATKINS, HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE, MORTON FULLERTON, LEILA MACDONALD, C. W. DALMON, MAX BEERBOHM, and JOHN DAVIDSON.

ART—PHILIP BROUGHTON, GEORGE THOMSON, AUBREY BEARDSLEY, ALBERT FOSCHTER, WALTER SICKERT, P. WILSON STEER, WILLIAM HYDE, and MAX BEERBOHM.

Vol. I., Fourth Edition, and Vol. II., Third Edition, are still on Sale.

OSCAR WILDE.—A WOMAN of NO IMPORTANCE: a Comedy in Four Acts.
Small 4to, in a cover designed by C. H. Shannon, 7s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY: his Life and his Work. With a Portrait, and Selections from his Poems by LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

JOAQUIN MILLER.—THE BUILDING of the CITY BEAUTIFUL. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net [Ready.]

LIONEL JOHNSON.—THE ART of THOMAS HARDY. With an Etched Portrait by Wm. Strang, and a Bibliography by JOHN LANE. Crown 8vo, buckram, 5s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

ADAMS (FRANCIS).—ESSAYS in MODERNITY. Crown
8vo, 5s. net. [Shortly.]

ALLEN (GRANT).—THE LOWER SLOPES. Crown 8vo,
5s. net.

DAVIDSON (JOHN).—PLAYS. Small 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

— FLEET STREET ECOLOGUES. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

— A RANDOM ITINERARY. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

— THE NORTH WALL. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

DE TABLEY (LORD).—POEMS DRAMATIC and LYRICAL. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

GALE (NORMAN).—ORCHARD SONGS. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.
net.

GARNETT (RICHARD).—POEMS. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

GOSSE (EDMUND).—THE LETTERS of THOS. LOVELL
BEDDOES. Pott 8vo, 5s. net.

GRAHAME (KENNETH).—PAGAN PAPERS. Fcap. 8vo,
5s. net.

GREENE (G. A.).—ITALIAN LYRISTS of TO-DAY.
Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

HAKE (THOS. GORDON).—SELECTIONS from his POEMS.
By Mrs. MEYNELL. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

JAMES (W. P.).—ROMANTIC PROFESSIONS. Crown
8vo, 5s. net.

KEYNOTES SERIES. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. per volume. net.

KEYNOTES. By GEORGE EGERTON.

THE DANCING FAUN. By FLORENCE FARR.

POOR FOLK. From the Russian of DOSTOIEVSKY. By LENA MILMAN.

A CHILD of the AGE. By FRANCIS ADAMS. [Shortly.]

THE GREAT GOD PAN. By ARTHUR MACHEN. [Shortly.]

LEATHER (R. K.).—VERSES. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. net.

LE GALLIENNE (RICHARD).—PROSE FANCIES. Crown
8vo, 5s. net.

— THE BOOK BILLS of NARCISSUS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
net. [Shortly.]

LE GALLIENNE (RICHARD).—ENGLISH POEMS.
Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

— GEORGE MEREDITH: Some Characteristics. Crown
8vo, 5s. 6d. net.

— THE RELIGION of a LITERARY MAN. Crown 8vo,
3s. 6d. net.

MARZIALS (THEO).—THE GALLERY of PIGEONS.
Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

MEYNELL (Mrs.).—POEMS. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

— THE RHYTHM of LIFE. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MONKHOUSE (ALLAN).—BOOKS and PLAYS. Crown
8vo, 1s. net.

MEREDITH (GEORGE).—W. BISCOMBE GARDNER's Wood
Engraving after the Painting by G. F. Watts. 21s. net.

NETTLESHIP (J. T.).—ROBERT BROWNING: Essays and THOUGHTS. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

OXFORD CHARACTERS. By WILL ROTHENSTEIN. 5s. net per Part.

RICKETTS (C. S.) and SHANNON (C. H.).—MARLOWE and CHAPMAN'S HERO and LEANDER. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, vellum, 35s. net.

STREET (G. S.).—THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a BOY.
Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THOMPSON (FRANCIS).—POEMS. Pott 4to, 5s. net.

TREE (H. BEERBOHM).—THE IMAGINATIVE FACULTY.
Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

WATTS (THEODORE).—POEMS. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

WATSON (WILLIAM).—THE ELOPING ANGELS. Square
16mo, 3s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

— EXCURSIONS in CRITICISM. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

— THE PRINCE'S QUEST. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

WILDE (OSCAR).—SALOME. Illustrations by Aubrey
Beardsley. Small 4to, 15s. net.

— THE SPHINX. Illustrations by C. S. Ricketts. Vellum and gold, 4to, £2 2s. net.

— THE DUCHESS of PADUA. Small 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

— THE HISTORY of Mr. W. H. 10s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head, Vigo Street, London, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1172.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE DAWN of CIVILISATION (Egypt and Chaldæa). By Professor Maspero. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth boards, 24s. [Ready shortly.]

[This, it may be safely said, is the most important work which has appeared in this country on the early history of Egypt and Chaldæa. The results of recent archaeological research in the valleys of the Nile and Euphrates have been marshaled in historical perspective in this magnum opus of one of the greatest authorities of our time. It covers the history of Egypt down to the XIV. Dynasty, and that of Chaldæa during the first Empire; and, although the points of connection with B.B.'s history are not chronological, they are essentially illustrative of the Sacred Narrative. Professor Sayce adds a Preface.]

ART PICTURES from the OLD TESTAMENT. Sunday Readings for the Young. A Series of Ninety Illustrations from Original Drawings by Sir F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A.; Sir E. BURNE-JONES, Bart.; E. J. POYNTER, R.A.; G. F. WATTS, R.A.; E. ARMYTAGE, R.A.; F. MADDOX BROWN; S. SOLOMON; HOLMAN HUNT, &c., &c. With Letterpress Descriptions by ALEX. FOX. Small 4to, cloth boards, 6s.

ATTILA and his CONQUERORS. By Mrs. Rundle Charles, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

ECCE ANCILLA DOMINI. Mary, the Mother of Our Lord. By Mrs. Rundle Charles, Author of "The Schönberg-Cotta Family." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black, cloth boards, 2s.

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. Professor SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, Third Edition, buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

THE CATECHISM of the ORTHODOX EASTERN CHURCH. By Ignatius Moschake. 18mo, limp cloth, 6d. [The original is authorised by the Ecclesiastical and Government Authorities for use in the Kingdom of Greece.]

THE AUTHORSHIP of DEUTERONOMY. By Sir William Muir, K.C.S.I., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 3d.

RELIGION in JAPAN: Shintoism, Buddhism, and CHRISTIANITY. By the Rev. G. A. COBBOLD. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CHINA. By Professor R. K. Douglas. With Map. New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.
"A concise, unbiased, and remarkably readable account of China, compiled for the benefit of readers of every degree."—Saturday Review.

NOBLE WOMANHOOD: a Series of Biographical Sketches. By G. BARNETT SMITH. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

[The lives selected are the following:—PRINCESS ALICE, GAANO DUCHESS OF HESSE; FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE; FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL; HARRIET BEECHER STOWE; SISTER DORA; LOUISA MAY ALCOTT; ELIZABETH FAY; FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS. This is a companion volume to "Eminent Christian Workers."]

EMINENT CHRISTIAN WORKERS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By G. BARNETT SMITH, Author of "Everyday Heroes," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

[The lives selected are the following:—Archbishop TAIT; PATTESON, the Martyr Bishop; the EARL of SHAFTESBURY; Bishop DANIEL WILSON; ARNOLD, of Rugby; Bishop WILBERFORCE; GEORGE MOORE, the Philanthropist; HANNINGTON, the East African Hero; and Bishop SELWYN.]

BUDDHISM. Being a Sketch of the Life and Teachings of Gautama, the Buddha. By T. W. RHYS DAVIDS, M.A., Ph.D. A New and Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black on hand-made paper, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 6s.; levantine, 6s. 6d.; limp German calf, 7s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH in THESE ISLANDS before the COMING of AUGUSTINE. By the Rev. Canon BROWNE, B.D., D.C.L. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

JOAN the MAID: Deliverer of England and France. By Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SONGS, OLD and NEW. By Mrs. Rundle Charles, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Demy 16mo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE OLD CHURCHES of OUR LAND: the Why, How, and When of Them. By FRANCIS BALDWIN, Architect. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHRISTUS COMPROMBATOR; or, the Testimony of Christ to the Old Testament. Seven Addresses by C. J. ELLICOTT, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

EDIBLE and POISONOUS MUSHROOMS: What to Eat, and What to Avoid. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With 18 Coloured Plates illustrating 48 Species. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

ROMANCE of LOW LIFE AMONGST PLANTS: Facts and Phenomena of Cryptogamic Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth boards, 4s.

FREAKS and MARVELS of PLANT LIFE; or, Curiosities of Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

PICTORIAL ARCHITECTURE of FRANCE. By the Rev. H. H. BISHOP, M.A. With numerous Engravings. Oblong 4to, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE of SCIENCE.
TIME. By Professor C. V. Boys, A.R.S.M., F.R.S.

[In preparation.]
OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By Percy Faraday FRANKLAND, Ph.D., B.Sc. (London), F.R.S. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

"It is a book which every clergyman, every magistrate, every guardian of the poor, every governor of a school ought to possess and master."—Guardian.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Second Edition, Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| FREEMAN'S HISTORY OF SICILY, by Canon ISAAC TAYLOR | 295 |
| THE ART OF THOMAS HARDY, by E. K. CHAMBERS | 297 |
| THE LIFE OF SIR HARRY PARKES, by S. McCALMONT HILL | 297 |
| NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY | 299 |
| CURRENT THEOLOGY | 301 |
| TWO FOREIGN TRANSLATIONS OF ENGLISH POETRY | 301 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 302 |
| THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES | 302 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 303 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE POET'S MERE" | 303 |
| OBITUARY: Prof. NICHOL, by J. S. C., &c. | 303 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 303 |
| SLAVICA, by W. R. M. | 303 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 304 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Stone Missal and St. Patrick , by the Rev. F. E. Warren; The Sepulchral versus The Hebrew Text of the Bible , by Sir H. H. Howarth and G. H. Fielding; The Richard Castle and Baginbun Inscriptions , by R. A. S. Macalister and E. W. B. Nicholson; "Wilderness," by Fr. I. Skeat; The Newly Discovered Recension of the Gregorian Sacramentary , by the Rev. F. E. Warren; The Russian Name for a Betrothed Woman , by Prof. C. E. Turner; "The Unemployed," by Geoffrey Drage | 304 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 306 |
| SUMMER'S STUDY OF VALERIUS FLACCUS, by Prof. ELLIS | 306 |
| SOME BOOKS ON ASTRIOLOGY | 307 |
| OBITUARY: PROF. TERRIEN LE LACOURTIERE, by J. S. C. | 308 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Names of the Planets in the "Pistis Sophia," by F. Lege | 309 |
| INDIAN JOTTINGS | 309 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 309 |
| ARCHAEOLOGICAL BOOKS | 309 |
| THE RESCUE OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY, by Prof. PETRIE | 310 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 310 |
| BICHSEPIN'S "VIRAS LA JOIE," by CECIL NICHOLSON | 310 |
| MUSIC NOTES | 311 |

A LADY of high standing in Hallesalle is prepared to RECEIVE into her house one or two LADIES desiring to perfect themselves in the German Language. Lessons may be had from the best Professors in Music, Drawing, Science, &c. First-class Society. Terms Moderate. Highest references given and required.—For further particulars, apply to Mrs. HOLLAENDER, 23, Pembroke Square, W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOECKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

PRIVATE SECRETARYSHIP, or similar appointment, desired by a competent SHORTHAND-WRITER and TYPIST. Student of Oriental Archaeology. Excellent Testimonials and Press Opinions. Personal Reference to F.R.S. Salary moderate.—Alma, 16, Lankar Villas, W.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

CATALOGUE (No. 29) of SECOND-HAND BOOKS. 32 pages. Upwards of 1,000 interesting items, offered at exceedingly moderate prices.—THOMAS THORNE, 40, Blackett Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for selling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

PALL MALL.—Ancient Objects of Japanese Art consigned from Japan, ex Verona and Salazie.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on THURSDAY, the 25th October, at 1 o'clock precisely, CONSIGNMENTS from Osaka, Kyoto, and Tokio, including valuable Lacquers by the Rare Masters, Koyetsu, Korio, Ritsuo, Kajikawa, and others; swords, armours, spear heads, and enamels on iron by Mochin, Umetada, Hirata, and others; coloured engravings and pictures by Utamaro, Torii, Hokusai, Watanabe Seitai, and others; selected specimens of Raku and other porcelains and pottery, and a choice series of Netsukis, punch and sword ornaments. May be viewed Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next. Catalogues will be forwarded on application.—54, Pall Mall, London.

A COURSE OF LECTURES on "MODERN PAINTING," illustrated by Limelight Views, will be delivered by CHARLES HOLLOMD, F.R.S.E., at SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE, FINSBURY. First Lecture OCTOBER 23rd. Free Commence at 8 p.m. Syllabus and Tickets (for Course 5s., single Lecture 1s.) may be obtained of the Hon. Sec., South Place Institute, E.C.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholarly Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BAUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Fisher, Esq., of Norton, Middlesex; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, D.D., &c.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgway, 36, Portchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Disset, R.E., &c.

THE UNDERSIGNED, Lecturer in the University of Marburg, RECEIVES as BOARDERS Gentlemen who wish to attend the University or to study German and other languages. Pupils prepared for Examinations, University, Army, &c.—Address, Schwandallee 4, Marburg i. H., Germany. W. TILLEY.

IMPORTANT—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have especially built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

—SEVEN SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.—8th November "Paquita, the Christian Martyr," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater"; Christmas-day, at 7 p.m., "Messiah"; 15th February, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci"; 21st February, "Elijah"; 12th March, "Lechevrie" and "Faust"; 19th April, "The Redemption"; 26th April, "The Messiah"; 3rd May, "The Messiah"; 10th May, "The Messiah"; 17th May, "The Messiah"; 24th May, "The Messiah"; 31st May, "The Messiah"; 7th June, "The Messiah"; 14th June, "The Messiah"; 21st June, "The Messiah"; 28th June, "The Messiah"; 5th July, "The Messiah"; 12th July, "The Messiah"; 19th July, "The Messiah"; 26th July, "The Messiah"; 2nd August, "The Messiah"; 9th August, "The Messiah"; 16th August, "The Messiah"; 23rd August, "The Messiah"; 30th August, "The Messiah"; 6th September, "The Messiah"; 13th September, "The Messiah"; 20th September, "The Messiah"; 27th September, "The Messiah"; 4th October, "The Messiah"; 11th October, "The Messiah"; 18th October, "The Messiah"; 25th October, "The Messiah"; 1st November, "The Messiah"; 8th November, "The Messiah"; 15th November, "The Messiah"; 22nd November, "The Messiah"; 29th November, "The Messiah"; 6th December, "The Messiah"; 13th December, "The Messiah"; 20th December, "The Messiah"; 27th December, "The Messiah"; 3rd January, "The Messiah"; 10th January, "The Messiah"; 17th January, "The Messiah"; 24th January, "The Messiah"; 31st January, "The Messiah"; 7th February, "The Messiah"; 14th February, "The Messiah"; 21st February, "The Messiah"; 28th February, "The Messiah"; 6th March, "The Messiah"; 13th March, "The Messiah"; 20th March, "The Messiah"; 27th March, "The Messiah"; 3rd April, "The Messiah"; 10th April, "The Messiah"; 17th April, "The Messiah"; 24th April, "The Messiah"; 1st May, "The Messiah"; 8th May, "The Messiah"; 15th May, "The Messiah"; 22nd May, "The Messiah"; 29th May, "The Messiah"; 5th June, "The Messiah"; 12th June, "The Messiah"; 19th June, "The Messiah"; 26th June, "The Messiah"; 3rd July, "The Messiah"; 10th July, "The Messiah"; 17th July, "The Messiah"; 24th July, "The Messiah"; 31st July, "The Messiah"; 7th August, "The Messiah"; 14th August, "The Messiah"; 21st August, "The Messiah"; 28th August, "The Messiah"; 4th September, "The Messiah"; 11th September, "The Messiah"; 18th September, "The Messiah"; 25th September, "The Messiah"; 2nd October, "The Messiah"; 9th October, "The Messiah"; 16th October, "The Messiah"; 23rd October, "The Messiah"; 30th October, "The Messiah"; 6th November, "The Messiah"; 13th November, "The Messiah"; 20th November, "The Messiah"; 27th November, "The Messiah"; 4th December, "The Messiah"; 11th December, "The Messiah"; 18th December, "The Messiah"; 25th December, "The Messiah"; 1st January, "The Messiah"; 8th January, "The Messiah"; 15th January, "The Messiah"; 22nd January, "The Messiah"; 29th January, "The Messiah"; 5th February, "The Messiah"; 12th February, "The Messiah"; 19th February, "The Messiah"; 26th February, "The Messiah"; 5th March, "The Messiah"; 12th March, "The Messiah"; 19th March, "The Messiah"; 26th March, "The Messiah"; 2nd April, "The Messiah"; 9th April, "The Messiah"; 16th April, "The Messiah"; 23rd April, "The Messiah"; 30th April, "The Messiah"; 7th May, "The Messiah"; 14th May, "The Messiah"; 21st May, "The Messiah"; 28th May, "The Messiah"; 4th June, "The Messiah"; 11th June, "The Messiah"; 18th June, "The Messiah"; 25th June, "The Messiah"; 2nd July, "The Messiah"; 9th July, "The Messiah"; 16th July, "The Messiah"; 23rd July, "The Messiah"; 30th July, "The Messiah"; 6th August, "The Messiah"; 13th August, "The Messiah"; 20th August, "The Messiah"; 27th August, "The Messiah"; 3rd September, "The Messiah"; 10th September, "The Messiah"; 17th September, "The Messiah"; 24th September, "The Messiah"; 1st October, "The Messiah"; 8th October, "The Messiah"; 15th October, "The Messiah"; 22nd October, "The Messiah"; 29th October, "The Messiah"; 5th November, "The Messiah"; 12th November, "The Messiah"; 19th November, "The Messiah"; 26th November, "The Messiah"; 3rd December, "The Messiah"; 10th December, "The Messiah"; 17th December, "The Messiah"; 24th December, "The Messiah"; 31st December, "The Messiah"; 7th January, "The Messiah"; 14th January, "The Messiah"; 21st January, "The Messiah"; 28th January, "The Messiah"; 4th February, "The Messiah"; 11th February, "The Messiah"; 18th February, "The Messiah"; 25th February, "The Messiah"; 4th March, "The Messiah"; 11th March, "The Messiah"; 18th March, "The Messiah"; 25th March, "The Messiah"; 1st April, "The Messiah"; 8th April, "The Messiah"; 15th April, "The Messiah"; 22nd April, "The Messiah"; 29th April, "The Messiah"; 6th May, "The Messiah"; 13th May, "The Messiah"; 20th May, "The Messiah"; 27th May, "The Messiah"; 3rd June, "The Messiah"; 10th June, "The Messiah"; 17th June, "The Messiah"; 24th June, "The Messiah"; 1st July, "The Messiah"; 8th July, "The Messiah"; 15th July, "The Messiah"; 22nd July, "The Messiah"; 29th July, "The Messiah"; 5th August, "The Messiah"; 12th August, "The Messiah"; 19th August, "The Messiah"; 26th August, "The Messiah"; 2nd September, "The Messiah"; 9th September, "The Messiah"; 16th September, "The Messiah"; 23rd September, "The Messiah"; 30th September, "The Messiah"; 7th October, "The Messiah"; 14th October, "The Messiah"; 21st October, "The Messiah"; 28th October, "The Messiah"; 4th November, "The Messiah"; 11th November, "The Messiah"; 18th November, "The Messiah"; 25th November, "The Messiah"; 2nd December, "The Messiah"; 9th December, "The Messiah"; 16th December, "The Messiah"; 23rd December, "The Messiah"; 30th December, "The Messiah"; 6th January, "The Messiah"; 13th January, "The Messiah"; 20th January, "The Messiah"; 27th January, "The Messiah"; 3rd February, "The Messiah"; 10th February, "The Messiah"; 17th February, "The Messiah"; 24th February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2nd June, "The Messiah"; 9th June, "The Messiah"; 16th June, "The Messiah"; 23rd June, "The Messiah"; 30th June, "The Messiah"; 7th July, "The Messiah"; 14th July, "The Messiah"; 21st July, "The Messiah"; 28th July, "The Messiah"; 4th August, "The Messiah"; 11th August, "The Messiah"; 18th August, "The Messiah"; 25th August, "The Messiah"; 1st September, "The Messiah"; 8th September, "The Messiah"; 15th September, "The Messiah"; 22nd September, "The Messiah"; 29th September, "The Messiah"; 6th October, "The Messiah"; 13th October, "The Messiah"; 20th October, "The Messiah"; 27th October, "The Messiah"; 3rd November, "The Messiah"; 10th November, "The Messiah"; 17th November, "The Messiah"; 24th November, "The Messiah"; 1st December, "The Messiah"; 8th December, "The Messiah"; 15th December, "The Messiah"; 22nd December, "The Messiah"; 29th December, "The Messiah"; 5th January, "The Messiah"; 12th January, "The Messiah"; 19th January, "The Messiah"; 26th January, "The Messiah"; 2nd February, "The Messiah"; 9th February, "The Messiah"; 16th February, "The Messiah"; 23rd February, "The Messiah"; 3rd March, "The Messiah"; 10th March, "The Messiah"; 17th March, "The Messiah"; 24th March, "The Messiah"; 31st March, "The Messiah"; 7th April, "The Messiah"; 14th April, "The Messiah"; 21st April, "The Messiah"; 28th April, "The Messiah"; 5th May, "The Messiah"; 12th May, "The Messiah"; 19th May, "The Messiah"; 26th May, "The Messiah"; 2

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

FOURTH AND CHEAP EDITION NOW READY.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

FIFTY YEARS of MY LIFE

in the WORLD of SPORT at HOME and ABROAD.
By Sir JOHN DUGDALE ASTLEY, Bart.

"It is not too much to say that in writing these pages which he has, by permission, dedicated to the Prince of Wales, Sir John Astley has not only produced a book which will amuse and in some measure instruct the thousands who will be anxious to read it, but has at once taken his place amongst the best chroniclers of his time."—Times, May 18.

"In conclusion, we never read a book into the treasures and attractions of which it is more impossible to give an insight by a few quotations. It is the work of a thoroughly genial and good fellow, who has seen nearly every vicissitude of life that the open air can afford, and has touched nothing without adorning it."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVELS.

A WOMAN'S LOVE-LESSON. By

EMILY J. DUNHAM. 3 vols.

PENHALA. By Clara Lemoire, Author of "A Harvest of Weeds," "Gwen Dale's Ordeal," &c. 3 vols.

"In the story of 'Penhala,' there is plenty of life and no lack of verisimilitude. It is vigorously told and is not without a vein of humour."—Scotman.

IN a NEW WORLD. By Mrs. Hans

BLACKWOOD.

"Mrs. Blackwood's story is interesting without being sensational, and it is wholly free from the psychological subtlety which is so lavishly introduced into the pages of the problem novels of the day."—Court Journal.

VENTURED in VAIN. By Reginald

E. SALVARY, Author of "The Finger of Scorn," "Wildwater Terrace," &c. 3 vols.

ADAM the GARDENER. By Mrs.

STEPHEN BATSON, Author of "Such a Lord is Love," &c. 3 vols.

"A uniformly sympathetic and surpassingly entertaining story."—Daily Telegraph.

ST. MAUR. By Adeline Sergeant,

Author of "Caspar Brooke's Daughter," "Sir Anthony," &c. 3 vols.
"It would be unjust to deny that 'St. Maur' is an excellent specimen of its class, and will be read with much more delight and avidity than the average three-volume novel."—Glasgow Herald.

SUIT and SERVICE. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," "Britonmart," &c. 2 vols.

A VAGABOND in ARTS. By Algernon

GISSING, Author of "A Moorland Idyl," "A Village Hampden," &c. 3 vols.

"The story is both clever and interesting, and the characters are very natural."—Athenaeum.

"There is much profound thought and brilliant writing in 'A Vagabond in Arts.'"—Daily Telegraph.

Uniform, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL.

DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.

TO RIGHT the WRONG.

WE TWO.

IN the GOLDEN DAYS.

KNIGHT ERRANT.

WON by WAITING.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLE-

MAN.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS

ABOUT WOMEN.

A LIFE for a LIFE.

NOTHING NEW.

MISTRESS and MAID.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.

A NOBLE LIFE.

HANNAH.

THE UNKIND WORD.

A BRAVE LADY.

STUDIES from LIFE.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

NATURE and HUMAN

NATURE.

WISE SAWS and MODERN

INSTANCES.

THE OLD JUDGE; or,

Life in a Colony.

TRAITS of AMERICAN

HUMOUR.

The AMERICANS at HOME

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.

ALEC FORBES.

ROBERT FALCONER.

SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.

LIFE of IRVING.

LAIRD of NORLOW.

A ROSE in JUNE.

AGNES.

PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER and HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

BLACKIE & SON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

WULF the SAXON: a Story of the Norman Conquest. By G. A. HENTY.

With 12 Page Illustrations by Ralph Peacock.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

WHEN LONDON BURNED: a

Story of Restoration Times and the Great Fire.

By G. A. HENTY. With 12 Page Illustrations

by J. Finnemore. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

BANSHEE CASTLE. By Rosa

MULHOLLAND. With 12 Page Illustrations by John H. Bacon. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

IN the HEART of the ROCKIES:

a Story of Adventure in Colorado. By G. A.

HENTY. With 8 Page Illustrations by G. C.

Hindley. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

OLAF the GLORIOUS. By

ROBERT LEIGHTON. With 8 Page Illustrations

by Ralph Peacock, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

TO GREENLAND and the POLE:

a Story of Adventure in the Arctic Regions. By

GORDON STABLES, M.D. With 8 Page Illustrations by G. C. Hindley. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

SOU'WESTER and SWORD: a

Story of Struggle on Sea and Land. By HUGH

ST. LEGER. With 6 Page Illustrations by Hal

Hurst. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s.

A PRISONER of WAR: a Story of the Time of Napoleon Bonaparte. By G.

NORWAY. With 6 Page Illustrations by Robert

Barnes, R.W.S. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant,

3s. 6d.

IN PRESS-GANG DAYS. By

EDGAR PICKERING. With 6 Illustrations by W. S. Stacey. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant,

3s. 6d.

YOUNG TRAVELLERS' TALES

By ASCOTT R. HOPE. With 6 Illustrations

by H. J. Draper. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant,

3s. 6d.

THINGS WILL TAKE a TURN.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN, Author of "Ships that Pass in the Night," "In Varying Moods,"

&c. A New Illustrated Edition, with 46 Pictures from Designs from John H. Bacon. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

THE WHISPERING WINDS, and THE TALES that THEY TOLD. By

MARY H. DEBENHAM. Illustrated with 25

Pictures throughout the Text by Paul Hardy.

Square 8vo, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

ELLIOT STOCK'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

A NEW EDITION, printed in tasteful form, on fine paper, and artistically bound, with numerous illustrations, price 6s.

COINS AND MEDALS.

Their Place in History and Art.

By the STAFF of the BRITISH MUSEUM MEDAL ROOM. Edited by STANLEY LANE-POOLE, Author of the "Catalogue of Oriental and Indian Coins in the British Museum."

In crown 8vo, bound in rough leather, price 5s. 50 LARGE PAPER Copies, in Roxburgh, 12s. 6d. net.

CROMWELL'S SOLDIER'S BIBLE.

Being a Reprint in Facsimile of "The Soldier's Pocket Bible."

Compiled by EDMUND CALAMY, and issued for the use of the Commonwealth Army in 1643. With a Biographical Introduction and a Preface by Field Marshal the Right Hon. Viscount WOLSELEY, K.P., G.C.B.

"A remarkable literary curio-city."—Morning Leader.

In foolscap 8vo, antique cloth, price 2s. 6d.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AS JOHN BUNYAN WROTE IT:

Being a Facsimile Reproduction of the First Edition, published in 1678.

With a New Introduction by Dr. JOHN BROWN, Author of "Bunyan and his Times."

"A very great interest attaches to this first draft of an allegory which has world-wide fame, and is likely never to be forgotten."—Globe.

In crown 8vo, fully illustrated, price 6s.

TALES FROM SCOTT.

By Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart. With an Introduction by EDWARD DOWDEN, LL.D., Professor of English Literature at the University of Dublin.

An attempt to do for Sir Walter Scott what Charles Lamb did for Shakespeare.

In crown 8vo, cloth extra, bevelled boards, price 6s.

AN ARTIST'S FATE.

By CECIL CLARKE, Author of "Ulrica," "Love's Loyalty," "When all was Young," &c., &c.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE HUMOUR AND PATHOS OF ANGLO-INDIAN LIFE.

Extracts from his Brother's Notebook. Made by Dr. TICKLEMORE. Edited by J. E. MAYER, M.D.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.
Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea :—

CURRENT TOPICS—Comments on the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES—Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK—Reports of cases decided during the previous week. During the Long Vacation reports are given of cases before the Vacation Judge.

REVIEWS—New legal works are carefully noticed in this department.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW ORDERS—All new orders and rules are given, sometimes before they can be obtained by the public.

COURTS—Special reports are furnished of Solicitors' Cases in all the Courts. Selected cases in the county courts are also reported.

PENDING LEGISLATION—Summaries of Bills of special interest to the profession.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR—Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the session.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.

LAW SOCIETIES—Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies.

Quarterly short digests of all reported cases are given.

A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers

The First Number of Volume XXXIX. will be published November 3rd, 1894.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS, WHICH MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, £1 6s.; by post, £1 8s.; Foreign, £1 10s. 4d. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

WEEKLY REPORTER, £1 6s.; by Post, £1 8s. Single Number, 6d.

 The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and back numbers of the current volumes can be supplied.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.
"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

BAD SOAPS

Eat in the Skin.

VINOLIA SOAP

Does not. IT'S PURE!!!

Price 4d., 6d., 8d., 10d., and 2s. 6d. per Tablet.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JIJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:
JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homœopathic Chemists, London

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. . . . We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

A STORY OF THE DISRUPTION AND THE FORMATION OF THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND IN 1843.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d., post free.

CRAIGROWAN:

By W. KENNEDY MOORE, D.D.

THE DUNDEE ADVERTISER.—"The story should help to raise the enthusiasm of the present generation of Free Churchmen at this interesting period of their Church's history, and general readers may peruse it with interest for its faithful pictures of Scottish life and character in 1843."

THE BRITISH WEEKLY.—"The characters are so well drawn, and the Disruption incidents so cleverly and naturally interwoven, that the interest never flags. Dr. Kennedy Moore is thoroughly at home in his subject, and has not only the necessary knowledge for treating it well, but also the requisite sympathy. He has a vein of quiet but genuine humour, and a competent acquaintance with Scottish customs."

THE FREEMAN.—"Dr. Moore not only writes with the pen of a ready writer, but his heart is in closest sympathy with his inspiring theme. His book is full of pathetic incident, and is profusely illustrated with striking portraiture."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.
AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MAX O'RELL'S NEW BOOK.

1st Edition, 20,000 Copies, Now ready.

In crown 8vo, 352 pp., cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

JOHN BULL & CO.

The Great Colonial Branches of the Firm:
Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa.

With upwards of Fifty Illustrations by IRVING
MONTAGU, W. W. LLOYD, and from Photographs, many of them taken expressly for the purpose.

LONDON: FREDERICK WARNE & CO.;
AND NEW YORK.

Now ready, NEW EDITION of

REMINISCENCES of YARROW. By the late JAMES RUSSELL, D.D. With Preface by Prof.
CAMPBELL FRASER, LL.D., D.C.L. And Postscript referring to the Editing and Annotation of this Edition, being the last Literary Work of the late Prof. VEITCH. Twenty beautiful Illustrations by Mr. Tom Scott, A.R.S.A., and Portrait of Dr. Russell. Edition de Luxe, crown 4to, 12s. 6d. (limited to 425 copies, of which only 150 are now for sale). Popular Edition, large crown 8vo, 5s.

Selkirk: GEORGE LEWIS & SON.
Edinburgh and Glasgow: JOHN MENZIES & CO.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS
BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

*The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.*

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."
NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR JIANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

MR. GOSSE'S NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.

In Russet and Silver: POEMS.

By EDMUND GOSSE.

Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

Napoleon and the Fair Sex.

"NAPOLEON ET LES FEMMES."

Translated from the French of FREDERIC MASSON.

With 10 Portraits.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s. net.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUENN."

A Battle and a Boy.

By BLANCHE WILLIS HOWARD.

With 39 Illustrations by A. MACNEILL-BARBOUR.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN,
21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

80 to 84, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS

repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum

monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

AT THE LIBRARIES AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

JARROLD & SONS' NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.

COLOUR SERGEANT No. 1 COMPANY.

By Mrs. LEITH ADAMS (Mrs. de Courcy Laffan), Author of "Aunt Hepey's Foundling," "Louis Draycott," "Geoffrey Stirling," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2 vols., 12s. net.

"A masterpiece of human pathos and clever portraiture."
Scotsman.

A RECORD of DISCORDS. By CURTIS YORKE, Author of "Dudley," "Hush!"

"Once," "A Romance of Modern London," &c. Crown
8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The fascinating powers of the story are skillfully developed, and the interest in it never flags."—Christian Age.

THE LONE INN: a Mystery.

By FERDUS HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "The Mystery of Landy Court," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"'The Lone Inn' fully sustains the author's unique reputation."—Cornish Post.

WRECKED at the OUTSET. By

THEO. GIFT, Author of "Pretty Miss Bellew," "Victims," "Lil Lorimer," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 2s. 6d.

"Theo. Gift has done well in this book."—Athenaeum.
"A highly attractive volume that will doubtless find many readers."—Daily Free Press.

THE BLIND ARTIST'S

PICTURES, and Other Stories. By NORA VYNNE,
Author of "The Honey of Aloes," &c. Second Edition.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Miss Vynne should have a great success with this book."
Daily Chronicle.

LONDON: JARROLD & SONS, 10 AND 11, WARWICK
LANE, E.C.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 370.—CONTENTS.

- I.—LORD WOLSELEY'S LIFE OF MARLBOROUGH.
- II.—ENGLISH TOWNS IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY.
- III.—THE LONSDALE PAPERS.
- IV.—THE REPORT OF THE LABOUR COMMISSION.
- V.—THE LETTERS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD.
- VI.—FLINT ON THE PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY.
- VII.—LOCKYER'S DAWN OF ASTRONOMY.
- VIII.—THE SHERRIDANS.
- IX.—PROJECTILES AND EXPLOSIVES IN WAR.
- X.—THE EDUCATIONAL CRISIS.
- XI.—NAVAL WAR IN THE EAST.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D.

No. 36, OCTOBER, 1894. Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles
THE DONATION 'of CONSTANTINE' as APPLIED by the ROMAN CHURCH. By F. ZICKLER, Ph.D.
LAURENCE SAUNDERS, CITIZEN OF COVENTRY. By Miss MARY DOANER HARRIS.
SHAKESPEARE and the JEWS. By Prof. JOHN W. HALES.
THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT and the RELIEF of PRO-TESTANT REFUGEES. By WILLIAM A. SHAW.
WILLIAM ROBERTSON SMITH. By F. C. BRADITT.
2. Notes and Documents.—Rules for Monks and Secular Canons after the Revival under King Edgar, by Miss MARY HAYESON. Wolsey's Ordination as Priest, by H. E. MALKIN. The Royal Navy under Queen Elizabeth, by J. H. ROBIN and M. GOSWELL. An Anonymous Tract on "Liberty of Conscience," by C. H. FRIER.
3. Reviews of Books.—4. Correspondence.—5. List of Historical Books recently published.—6. Contents of Periodical Publications.—
7. Index.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
New York: 15 East 16th Street.

A SERVICE OF ANGELS.

By the Rev. H. LATHAM, M.A., Master of Trinity Hall,
Author of "Pastor Pastorum." Price 3s. 6d. [Ready.]

Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & Co.
London: G. BELL & SONS.

Fourth Edition, pp. 360, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BAILEY, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against
Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer,
Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

LIST OF

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

THROUGH TEN ENGLISH COUNTIES

By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "On the Box Seat." In demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 16s.

A MEMOIR of MRS. AUGUSTUS

Craven (Pauline de la Ferronnays), author of Le Recit d'une Sœur. By MARIA CATHERINE BISHOP. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portrait of Mrs. Craven, 24s.

FORTY YEARS at the POST-OFFICE,

1850-1890: A Personal Narrative. By FREDERICK E. BAINES, C.B. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with diagrams, &c., 21s.

TWO SUMMERS in GUYENNE, 1892-

1893. By EDWARD HARRISON BARKER, Author of "Wayfaring in France," &c. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 16s.

AFRICAN HUNTING and ADVENTURE

FROM NATAL to the ZAMBEZI. By WILLIAM CHARLES BALDWIN, F.R.G.S. With numerous Illustrations. A Third and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

ENGLISH WHIST and ENGLISH

WHIST PLAYERS. By WILLIAM PRIDEAUX COURTNEY. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

LETTERS from CAMP to his RELATIVES at HOME DURING the SIEGE of SEBASTOPOL. By COLIN FREDERICK CAMPBELL. With Introduction by Field-Marshal Lord WOLSELEY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A MEMOIR of MRS. HENRY WOOD.

By CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Through Holland." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

THE HISTORY of ROME. By Theodor

MOMMSEN. Translated by WILLIAM PURDIE DICKSON, D.D., LL.D. New and Cheaper Edition. In 5 vols., crown 8vo, to be issued at monthly intervals. The First Vol. will be ready in November, 1894.

NOLLEKENS and his TIMES. By JOHN THOMAS SMITH, formerly Keeper of the Prints and Drawings in the British Museum. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. In 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Portrait.

THE LIVES of JAMES HOLMES and JOHN VARLEY. By ALFRED THOS. STORY, Author of "The Life of John Linnell." In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

MEMOIRS of an AUTHOR. By Percy

FITZGERALD, M.A., F.S.A., Author of "The Lives of the Sheridans," &c. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

PERSIAN PICTURES.—SAFAR

NAMEH: A Book of Travel in the East. In crown 8vo, 6s.

THE INGOLDSBY LEGENDS; or,

Mirth and Marvels. By THOMAS INGOLDSBY, Esq. A New Edition, edited by Mrs. EDWARD A. BOND. In 3 vols., demy 8vo, 81s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of the FRENCH

REVOLUTION (1789-1800). By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated by FREDERICK SHOEBERT. New Edition. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, to be published monthly. The First Volume will be issued in January, 1895. (Delivered only to purchasers of entire Set.)

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

In the press. To be published in seven or eight volumes. Royal 8vo, price 12s. 6d. each net after publication, or to Subscribers to the Series, 10s. net. Subscriptions may be sent through any Bookseller.

THE JĀTAKA. Translated from the Pali under the Superintendence of Prof. E. B. COWELL. The work will contain a complete Translation of the Pali Jātakas, or "Buddha Birth Stories," which are supposed to be the oldest collection of Folk-Lore Stories in existence. Prospectus on application.

Vol. I. Translated by ROBERT CHALMERS. [Nearly ready.]

Vol. II. Translated by W. H. D. ROUSE. [In preparation.]

Vol. III. Translated by H. D. FRANCIS and R. A. NEIL. [In preparation.]

THE OLD TESTAMENT in GREEK, according to the Septuagint. Edited by H. B. SWETE, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity, and Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. Crown 8vo. Vol. I. Genesis-IV. Kings, 7s. 6d. Vol. II. I. Chronicles-Tobit, 7s. 6d. The Book of Psalms separately, 2s. 6d. Vol. III. (completing the Edition). [Ready about Nov. 1.]

NEW VOLUMES OF PROFESSOR JEBB'S SOPHOCLES.

SOPHOCLES.—THE PLAYS and FRAGMENTS. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose, by R. C. JESB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge.

Part VI. ELECTRA. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Part VII. AJAX. Demy 8vo. [In the press.]

A HISTORY of EPIDEMICS in BRITAIN. Vol. II. From the Extinction of the Plague to the Present Time. By CHARLES CREIGHTON, M.A., M.D. Demy 8vo, 20s.

INTERNATIONAL LAW, CHAPTERS on the PRINCIPLES of. By J. WESTLAKE, M.A., Q.C., Whewell Professor of International Law. Demy 8vo, 10s.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor, G. W. FOSTER, Litt.D., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh.

THE REVOLUTIONARY and NAPOLEONIC ERA, 1789-1815. By J. H. ROSE, M.A., Christ's College. With Maps and Plans, 4s. 6d.

TEXTS AND STUDIES.

CONTRIBUTIONS to BIBLICAL and PATRISTIC LITERATURE. Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity.

Vol. III., No. I., THE RULES of TYCONIUS. Freshly Edited from the MSS., with an Examination of his Witness to the Old Latin Version. By F. C. BURKITT, M.A., Trinity College. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.

Biological Science Series.

General Editor, A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College.

PRACTICAL PHYSIOLOGY of PLANTS. By F. DARWIN, M.A., F.R.S., and E. H. ACTON, M.A. 6s.

PRACTICAL MORBID ANATOMY. By H. D. ROLLESTON, M.D., F.R.C.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Assistant Physician and Lecturer on Pathology, St. George's Hospital, London, and A. A. KANTHACK, M.D., M.R.C.P., Lecturer on Pathology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. 6s. [Nearly ready.]

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

CICERO PRO MILONE. New Edition. With Introduction and Notes by J. S. REID, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

PLAUTUS.—ASINARIA. With Introduction and Notes by J. H. GRAY, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of Queens' College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

TACITUS.—AGRICOLA and GERMANIA. Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College. 3s.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPAE. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Classical Lecturer and Fellow of St. John's College. 3s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. Edited by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s. 6d.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's

NEW BOOKS.

Ready To-day.

AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

IN THE DAY OF BATTLE

A Romance.

By J. A. STEUART,

Author of "Kilgroom: a Story of Ireland," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By

WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Daughter of Heth." 1 vol. post 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Eighteenth Thousand.]

"The story is a delightful one. Indeed, it is long since Mr. Black has given us so much of his best as in these fascinating pages."—Speaker, Oct. 13.

PERLYCROSS: a Tale of the

Western Hills. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. 1 vol. cloth extra, 6s. [Thirteenth Thousand.]

Spectator.—"A noteworthy book.... In essence a study of rural life in south-western England."

To-day.—"When the last page of 'Perlycross' is turned, the reader, if he shares my tastes, will heave a sigh of regret. But he will presently find consolation in reflecting that if 'adieu' to the homely little villages must be said, he leaves it the richer by several delightful friends."

THE MAN from OSHKOSH. By John

HICKS. 1 vol. crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just ready.]

NEW VOLUME OF LOW'S HALF-A-CROWN NOVELS.

THE OLD HOUSE at SANDWICH.

By JOSEPH HATTON, Author of "By Order of the Czar," &c. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author.

WORKS BY THE LATE

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THE LAST LEAF.

Illustrated by George W. Edwards and F. Hopkinson Smith. Being a Reproduction of the large 4to Edition of the same Poem published nine years ago at £2 2s., and now produced in post 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, at 7s. 6d.

This Volume contains a very interesting and characteristic letter (in facsimile) from the Author, dated July 12, 1891.

Uniform with Low's Standard Half-Crown Novels.

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

OVER the TEA CUPS.

OUR HUNDRED DAYS in EUROPE.

MORTAL ANTIPATHY.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.; paper boards, 1s.

BEFORE the CURFEW, &c.

OCCASIONAL POEMS. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE IRON GATE, and Other Poems.

With Steel Portrait. 6s.

POETICAL WORKS.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

DR. HOLMES'S WORKS. Riverside

Edition. PROSE, 10 vols. POETRY, 3 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 84s.

Large Paper Edition, 13 vols., £14 14s. net. Only a few copies remaining.

* * * This beautifully printed uniform edition embraces all the Prose and Poetical Works—each volume having been completely and finally revised by the Author, with a new preface to each volume in 1891.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1894.

No. 1172, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

History of Sicily. By E. A. Freeman. Vol. IV. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE third volume of this great work, though published posthumously, had passed through the press before Mr. Freeman started on the fatal journey which in March 1892 ended so unhappily at Alicante. He left behind several consecutive fragments of MS., which were to have found their place in succeeding volumes of the History. Of these fragments, one, likely to prove of high interest, relates the story of the Norman conquest, another deals with the establishment of the Roman dominion, while a third fragment, which forms part of the present volume, continues the story of the struggle for supremacy between Syracuse and Carthage during an eventful century, from 405 to 300 B.C. Apparently we are not destined to have Mr. Freeman's account of the invasion of Pyrrhus, of the scandals of the administration of Verres, of the Vandal invasion, of the Arab conquest and dominion, or of the Sicilian Vespers.

The period embraced in this volume includes the Punic wars of Dionysius, the enterprises of Dion and Timoleon, and the African campaigns of Agathocles. Mr. Freeman has no such dramatic story to tell as that of the Athenian siege of Syracuse; and even when he narrates, in his most brilliant and effective style, such stirring events as the storming of Motya by Dionysius, or the destruction of the Carthaginian fleet in the Great Harbour of Syracuse—the very spot where the Athenian navy, only sixteen years before, had undergone a similar disaster—we cannot fail to notice the difference, due to his having to trust to a late compiler like Diodorus, instead of being able to rely on the masterly guidance of a great contemporary historian like Thucydides. As in the former volumes, there is no lack of local colour; and Mr. Freeman displays his strength in his vivid topographic descriptions: such, for instance, as the picture of the now desolate site of Motya, or of Taormina, perched in a unique position on its lofty crag, with its noble outlook over some of the chief scenes of the Sicilian drama.

This volume, unfortunately left uncompleted by the author, has had the advantage of falling into the hands of a thoroughly competent editor, Mr. Arthur Evans, who has not only corrected minor errors which Mr. Freeman would probably have noticed in the course of a final revision, but has himself investigated the topography on the spot, and enriched the narrative with useful elucidations of obscure points. The editor has also constructed three excellent maps, and has added a plate of illustrative coins, together with valuable supplements and notes which deal with geographical and topographical difficulties, with the numismatic history of Sicily, the finance of Syracuse, and the debasement of the coinage. He has also ingeniously supplied the lacunae he found in Mr. Freeman's MS., by means of inserted paragraphs from the shorter history of Sicily in the "Story of the Nations" series.

Mr. Evans's notes and appendices are characterised by a graceful, but—considering their quality—a quite superfluous modesty. He has religiously preserved every word from Mr. Freeman's pen, leaving in the text various erroneous or doubtful statements, merely adding, when needful, a corrective note: in this way largely forestalling the work of any captious reviewer who might be desirous of detecting small errors or omissions. For instance, when Mr. Freeman, declaiming against the tyranny of Dionysius, avers that "he is said to have caused Plato to be sold as a slave," Mr. Evans appends a note showing that another version of the story is more probable. Again, when Mr. Freeman, speaking of the grand unfinished temple at Segesta, which stands on its lonely hillside with the massive columns still unfluted, and with the cella unbuilt, rashly asserts that its completion was stopped by an alleged massacre of the citizens of Segesta by Agathocles in 305 B.C., Mr. Evans rightly contends in a note that this view "must certainly be rejected," as the poverty of Segesta is shown by the cessation of its silver coinage more than a century before this time; while the style of the temple, which is fifth century Doric, would have been an impossible anachronism if the building had been in course of erection at the time in question.

But the most valuable service that Mr. Evans has rendered is the wise scepticism which he repeatedly evinces as to the authenticity of many of the events recorded. Thus, he comes to the conclusion that "the whole account of the supposed stratagem [of Agathocles], at least in the shape recorded by Diodorus, must be regarded as a childish invention;" and he speaks, none too strongly, of "the mythical element which undoubtedly exists in the received accounts of the tyrant's career." When we are told of the massacre by Agathocles of one thousand Greek prisoners, of whom half were Syracusans, Mr. Evans judiciously calls attention to the untrustworthiness of the sources from which the account is taken. He might with advantage have carried his scepticism still further, and rejected the accounts of other massacres, which are invariably given in suspiciously round numbers, usually 10,000. Mr. Freeman has very properly rejected the wild story that Agathocles, after gaining a victory over the Leontinians, came into the city, summoned an assembly, and asked the citizens whether they would agree to what he is going to propose. His proposition turns out to be that he should kill them all. So they are killed, to the usual number of 10,000. Yet he apparently accepts another story, no less incredible, that Agathocles, when defeated in Africa, deserted his army, and went to Sicily with a few companions in a small boat; that then, apparently without an army, he marched to Segesta, a friendly and allied city, and in one day succeeded in putting to death the usual number of 10,000 citizens, some of them being tortured by means of elaborate brazen machinery, which he must have either brought with him or found ready on the spot (p. 454). Then we are told that he gave orders for the massacre of "all the kinsfolk, young and old, of the men who had served with him in Africa." "And the thing was done," Mr. Freeman adds (p. 459). Such proceedings naturally made him universally beloved and trusted. Accordingly the next story relates how, when Agathocles with a small body of troops goes out to encounter an army five times as numerous, a considerable part of the hostile force deserts and joins him, and a still larger body surrenders, giving up their arms, when as a matter of course they are all immediately put to death. Towards the close of the volume authentic sources fail, and the narrative ceases to be a critical history, dribbling off into a series of disconnected and mostly incredible anecdotes, such as those just related. We have stratagems and adventures, happening at no particular time or place, as marvellous as those told of Robert Bruce or of Robin Hood, eked out with purposeless horrors and cruelties such as those related by Foxe of the early Christian martyrs, but which, instead of making the tyrant hated, only increase the affection of his subjects. Mr. Freeman, instead of at once rejecting such tales, which he rightly terms "amazing," duly places them on record, seldom adding the needful caution that Diodorus, his chief authority, was not a critical historian nor even a contemporary writer, but a mere compiler who has manifestly copied from some anecdote-monger the sort of stories which were likely to be told of a tyrant. In one place Mr. Evans judiciously observes in a note (p. 481), that Diodorus has impartially repeated two different accounts of the same event without observing their inconsistency.

When Diodorus is copying from a well-informed contemporary writer like Philistus, he is doubtless an authority of value; but even in these parts of the narrative we find events extremely difficult to understand. For instance, if the destruction of the Carthaginian army by Timoleon was so overwhelming as it is said to have been, it seems strange that he should have forthwith returned to Syracuse without following up his victory; and stranger still that Hiketas should have chosen the very moment of the great victory of the Syracusans for declaring war against them, and ravaging their territory. In like manner when Dionysius, at the head of the most powerful army and fleet that had ever obeyed a Greek commander, had destroyed the only great Carthaginian fortress, it is difficult to understand why he should have permitted another fortress still stronger to be built, and why for twenty years he made no attempt to follow up his victory, but abandoned all his conquests, losing forthwith all and more that he has gained. Again, when Himilco's fleet has been destroyed, and his army annihilated, the incredible number of 150,000 corpses being left unburied on the field of battle, we have no rational explanation of the slaughter, or why such a tremendous success was not duly followed up. These are some of the difficulties which beset us, even when the narrative is intrinsically credible, and clearly derived by Diodorus from contemporary sources. The most probable explanation seems to be that Diodorus was destitute of the historic faculty, disjointedly inserting the most dramatic incidents recorded by his authorities, at the same time selecting the most marvellous version he could find.

As in the former volumes, Mr. Freeman, while greedily recording the incredible and purposeless iniquities ascribed to tyrants, is inclined to distrust his authorities when they describe the natural results of democratic government. He observes, for instance, that "in this picture of the action of demagogues, we see, as ever, the signs of that literary and philosophic dislike to all forms of popular government which marks all our later guides" (p. 276). The earlier volumes gave the impression that one reason why Mr. Freeman had selected the History of Sicily as his theme was that he might have an opportunity of showing the inferiority of other forms of government to democracy. In this volume, however, if we read between the lines, we have a striking exhibition of the dangers of democratic government and its essential weakness. Enfeebled by the strife of factions, the cities felt the need of a supreme ruler strong enough to defend them from foreign aggression; and they seem to have welcomed the appearance of each successive "tyrant" who came, when needed, as the saviour of society.

Mr. Freeman's curious blindness to the teaching of history is especially manifested in his eleventh chapter, entitled "The Deliverers," in which he narrates with great fairness, but without seeing the lesson, the instructive stories of Dion and Timoleon, who appear at a time when the history of Sicily resolves itself into little more than the history of Syracuse. When the city had been "delivered" by Dion, "with one voice the rejoicing assembly" of the people appointed him to the office of general; but nine months later the fickle mob "got rid of their deliverer" by depriving him of the office they had just given him, and by refusing to grant their pay to the fellow deliverers who "had jeopardized their lives in the cause of Sicily." When the "deliverer" had retired from the ungrateful city, the mob, in its wisdom, elected five-and-twenty untried generals in his place; and then when the city was attacked and the citizen guardians of the wall were "sleeping their drunken sleep," it was found that the elected generals "were as drunk as the rest." After the city had undergone all the horrors of massacre, sack, and fire, the "deliverer" was recalled, and "the joy of the delivered citizens was boundless," the deliverers being "greeted with shouts of delight."

No sooner did Syracuse again become "free" than the "delivered commonwealth" celebrates its freedom by the brutal murder of its most eminent citizen and statesman—the historian Philistus—who had fought and bled for his native city, and who as an historian was reckoned inferior only to Thucydides. Having the misfortune in his old age to fall into the hands of the Syracusan mob, he was stripped naked and pelted with mud, his body being dragged with every insult through the streets of Syracuse, and finally hurled into the Stone Quarries. When, after venting their rage on the lifeless body of the aged statesman, "the full completion of deliverance" arrived, and it was found that the beloved "deliverer" did not deliver into the hands of the mob the power it had shown itself so utterly unfit to exercise, the deliverer "was looked upon as a tyrant," and was murdered by the delivered, or, as Mr. Freeman euphemistically puts it, he had "before long to undergo the tyrant's fate." Naturally "several years of confusion" followed the murder of the deliverer, and in ten years another was needed, who fortunately arrived in the person of Timoleon, who, as Mr. Freeman tells us, again "gave Greek Sicily a moment of freedom and happiness." The "freedom and happiness" was exhibited by putting to death some unfortunate ladies who had committed the crime of being the wife and daughters of a so-called "tyrant"; and when in another city a "tyrant" was to be publicly killed in the theatre, the occasion was considerably made into a school-treat, messengers being sent round to the schools to fetch the boys to witness the edifying and delightful spectacle. "The moment of freedom and happiness" in Syracuse lasted till Timoleon's death, when in some unexplained way the supreme power was found to be vested in the hands of six hundred oligarchs, who, as a result of the "renewed life and freedom," were forthwith massacred by the mob and their houses sacked. The massacre was not confined to the six hundred, as "every man suspected of oligarchical politics was, of course, slain." Intestine quarrels then begin in the Greek cities; the party which gets the upper hand, when it does not massacre its opponents, condemns them to exile, and "the banished men, as so often happens, took to arms," and "the exiles called in help from the Carthaginians," so that "constant warfare followed," and finally "the Punic general is accepted as mediator in the internal quarrels of Syracuse." Under these circumstances another saviour of society is naturally required, and the assembled mob bestows supreme power on Agathocles, who in spite of the excesses attributed to him, seems to have enjoyed great popularity.

One thing may be further noted, and that is the complete breakdown, under the stern logic of facts, of Mr. Freeman's old theory of the eternal superiority, moral and intellectual, of the "man of Hellas" to the "barbarian," his convenient name for all the races he especially dislikes, notably the "worshippers of Moloch," as he miscalls the Carthaginians. Unfortunately the events he has to narrate in this volume do not square with the convenient theory of the eternal division of the sheep and the goats. The "barbarian" proves, when we come to actual facts, to be more civilised and more humane than the "man of Hellas." As the "Eternal Strife" goes on, the "barbarian" "wins over city after city to his side by strictly observing the laws of justice and good faith," while his Greek antagonist "sets city after city against him by treacherous massacres" (p. 429). Greek cities are so torn by faction that "the barbarian appears as a mediator between city and city, and party and party," and the camp of the "barbarian enemy" is thronged by envoys from a multitude of Greek cities "offering their friendship and hailing the old enemy as a new deliverer." Strange to say, many Greeks "of their own freewill" forsake their native cities to live under the milder "rule of the barbarian," which they find a bondage less intolerable than the ferocious misrule of the tyrant or of the mob at home. At the same time, the ranks of the barbarian armies are filled with Greeks who have taken service with those who, though they do not seem to be aware of it, they ought to have regarded as their natural enemies in the "Eternal Strife."

Mr. Freeman has discovered a convenient method of explaining the discrepancies between his theories and the facts he has to narrate. It seems that, by constant enmity and warfare, the "barbarian" had acquired the sweet reasonableness of the Greek, while the Greek had been contaminated with the savage ferocity of the "worshipper of Moloch." Thus, the ruthless massacre of the inhabitants of Motya and the crucifixion of its gallant defenders are explained by the suggestion that "the Greek had been corrupted by barbarian warfare" (p. 85); nevertheless "we cannot say that in these wars the Greek and the Phœnician change places; for the Phœnician ever remains himself, while the Greek, in great measure, puts on the Phœnician" (p. 79). For example, when Hamilcar is taken prisoner by the Greeks, he is "led in bonds through the city," and handed over to the mob to deal with as they would. "At last his cup was full; his tormentors become weary of their sport. Death relieved him of his sufferings" (p. 429). Mr. Freeman's explanation is, that "by dealing with barbarians the Greek has sunk to the level of the barbarian." Yet this same Hamilcar had treated with the utmost moderation and clemency the Greek cities he had captured as he marched across the island, the barbarian thus giving "lessons to the Greek, perhaps in actual humanity. Nevertheless, 'Canaan is still Canaan, and Hellas is still Hellas, but Canaan is beginning to put on somewhat of the outer garb of Hellas.'" When the Greek sinks to the level of the barbarian, and the barbarian gives lessons in humanity to the Greek, this is much the same as saying they had "changed places," which Mr. Freeman will not allow us to say, as according to the theory they both ever remain themselves.

It would be an easy task to write a History of Sicily with all the parts reversed:

the "Man of Canaan" being represented as an angel of light, and the "Man of Hellas" as the reverse; all the splendour and power of the Greek cities being attributed to the wisdom of the "tyrants," and their misfortunes to the folly of the mob. The mean between the two theories, that there was a good deal of human nature in them all, would probably be the nearest to the truth; but this is a solution of the difficulty which Mr. Freeman does not seem to have thought of.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

The Art of Thomas Hardy. By Lionel Johnson. (Mathews & Lane.)

I have read Mr. Johnson's essay with great and increasing admiration. It is, indeed, an admirable book: admirable in temper, admirable in felicity; revealing to us, one would gladly think, a new master in this most difficult art of criticism, one whose writings may stand on our shelves beside the golden volumes of Arnold and of Pater. The lucidity of Arnold, the luminosity of Pater—how rare they are, and how desirable; how the insight and the scholarship of which they were born put to shame the incomplete equipment of the modern critic. For, indeed, criticism is "in a parlous state, shepherd"; through those who, when they are not running a tilt for the latest formula from France, are most often intent on using the books they profess to interpret as mirrors to convey to us some choice reflections of their own personalities. Certainly the personality of the artist must always be an important element in every form of art: the adventures of a soul moving amongst masterpieces, is an adequate definition of criticism; but here, as elsewhere, the value of an impression depends entirely upon who is impressed; nor may we call the individual likings and dislikings of the man in the street criticism, but only the likings and dislikings of him who is by nature a critic. And the nature of a critic does not consist merely in a pretty turn for epigram, nor in a naive capacity for self-revelation; although many authoritative judgments have been built on such slender foundations, so that you shall hear a man discourse of tragedy, who has never learnt Greek.

Not so did Arnold or Pater approach his art, not so does Mr. Johnson. In his book, as in their books, you snuff at once the "ampler ether and diviner air": the wide and sane judgment, the large sweep and amplitude of outlook, these are notes of his work throughout. It is the manner of the scholar and the thinker, of one who has conversed long and intimately with fair dreams and great civilities: Omne immensum peragravit mente animoque. Nor in all his journeyings has he ever been a mere Dryasdust, an amoralist of barren knowledge, seeking only to "properly base Oun": always his spirit has been finely touched to the central elements of life, to its sad and joyous harmonies; so that his eyes have been purged with euphrasy and rue—euphrasy of insight and rue of experience—and he can see and speak to us of things as they indeed are, sub specie aeternitatis, in their true colours and real proportions. Such, one thinks, is the education of the genuine critic, and to that large fellowship Mr. Johnson has shown himself, by this his first book, to belong.

In a prefatory chapter of exceeding interest, Mr. Johnson lays down some of the principles of his literary faith, declaring there his "loyalty to the broad and high traditions of literature; to those humanities which inform with the breath of life the labours of the servants, and the achievements of the masters of that fine art." By no means a laudator temporis acti, fully in sympathy with all that is vital and fruitful in the literary tendencies of his own day, he would yet lay stress upon what is too often forgotten, that extravagance is no sign-manual of genius, and that reverence for the great traditions of the past, fidelity to its indwelling spirit, are still, as they have always been, indispensable conditions to the highest flights of literary perfection. And in this lies his admiration for Mr. Hardy: that, modern as are the emotional and intellectual problems with which his novels deal, subtle and psychological his interests, original and audacious the methods he applies; none the less, by his sincerity, by his grandeur of conception, by his constant worship of the "fair humanities," he is a worker in the direct line of the great masters. Mr. Hardy writes of Wessex and of Wessex folk, a land and a people left behind in the breathless sweep forwards of civilisation, "a very old, aged" country, with manners and thoughts of an historic, almost primeval, simplicity. Writing of this, he can adhere with minute and loving fidelity to the actual materials before him: he can transcribe this life in all its quaintness, with all its tribal peculiarities; he can show it shot across with countless threads of influence from the greater world outside, influences that complicate its emotions and perplex its philosophies; and doing all this, he can be neither provincial nor eccentric; because of his touch upon the central truths of life, its large outlines and ruling passions, whereby man is sib to man all the world over.

I have left myself but little room to say anything of Mr. Johnson's style: of its dignity, its restraint, its capacities for stately imagery and rhythmical modulation. No one, I think, who has any feeling for style as an art in itself, can resist the fascination of the passage which follows:

"This is my 'vision' of Mr. Hardy's works. A rolling down country, crossed by a Roman road; here, a gray standing stone, of what sacrificial, ritual origin I can but guess; there, a grassy barrow, with its great bones, its red-brown jars, its rude gold ornaments, still safe in earth; a broad sky burning with stars; and a solitary man. It is of no use to turn away, and to think of the village farms and cottages, with their antique ways and looks; of the deep woods, the fall of the woodman's axe, the stir of the wind in the branches; of the rustic feasts and festivals, when the home-brewed drink goes round, to the loosening of tongues and wits; of the hot meadows, fragrant hayfields, cool dairies, and blazing gardens; of shining cart-horses under the chestnut trees, and cows called in at milking-time: they are characteristic scenes, but not the one characteristic scene. That is the great down by night, with its dead in their ancient graves, and its lonely living figure: it brings before my thought a pageant of Scandinavian warriors, Roman soldiers and Stoics, watchers upon Chaldean plains, laborious Saxon peasants, Celtic priests in the moonlight; and vast periods of early time, that chill the pondering mind. And the sentiment of a sacred dignity in pastoral, rural, labours is prominent here. The lonely figure recalls the spirit of Virgil in his 'Georgics,' of Giotto's shepherds with their flocks, of Wordsworth and of Millet, of Arnold's 'Resignation,' of Arnold's 'Scholar Gipsy.' How much experience must the 'clown,' the 'common labourer,' have amassed from the earth, the downs, the fields, with their vasta silentia, their otia dia! Like Claudian's old Veronese, the man has lived close to his mother-earth, not harried hither and thither:

'Erret, et extremos alter scrutetur Iberos:

Plus habet hic vitæ: plus habet ille viæ.' "

To me the great charm of Mr. Johnson's writing lies in the inconceivable magic of his quotations and allusions. His reading has been very wide, and he uses it with a consummate art. His chapters are starred with the great sayings of the poets and sages he loves, each bringing with it a trail of associations, with incommunicable richness of effect. The passage I have already quoted is characteristic enough: this perhaps no less so, this meditation of a scholar among the fields, with its sonorous Latin:

"Indeed, I have a fellow-feeling with Triptolenus Yellowby, whose taste was all for the rustical parts of Latin literature. The lust of labour, glad and sad together, of labour for our daily bread, seems glorified by an ancient sanction, in the case of agriculture; whatever be its conditions now, once upon a time the tilling and preparing of the ground was the most natural, simple, and imperious necessity of men. Akin to it are the pastoral arts and sciences, all dealings with the earth and the earth's tribes, all Virgil's themes of husbandry. Such pictures of the early world as that in Lucretius, charm us by the romance inseparable from simple and dignified things. The old poets did wisely, in their ignorance, to fill the early world with innocent tribes of men: to discover them at peace. So, one loves to think, it should have been. That laborious burden of daily work lies more gently upon our shoulders when we consider the golden days of Arcadia and the Hesperides, those lands and blessed fields of Kennaquhair. Demeter and Persephone, Dionysus and the Mighty Mother, were divinities not hard to love, for they were very good to men: and other gods also:

'O montana Pales! O pastoralis Apollo, Et nemorum Silvane potens!'"

I close Mr. Johnson's book with a feeling of profound gratitude to him, with a sense that he has given me a new work of art for my contemplation and consolation.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

The Life of Sir Harry Parkes. Vol. I. Consul in China, by Stanley Lane-Poole. Vol. II. Minister Plenipotentiary to Japan, by F. V. Dickins. (Macmillans.)

At a time when all eyes are turned to the Far East, and events are taking place in China and Japan the results of which it is impossible to forecast, the publication of the Life of Sir Harry Parkes comes at an opportune moment. From 1842, when as a boy he was present at the signing of the Treaty of Nanking by Sir Henry Pottinger, —the Treaty by which, for the first time, China consented to deal directly with England as power with power, and the ports of Canton, Amoy, Foo Chow Foo, Ningpo, and Shanghai were opened to British merchants, and the island of Hong Kong ceded to Great Britain—up to the year 1881, when, as Minister at Peking, his arduous and devoted life came to an end, he concentrated in himself all there was of action and progress in British diplomacy in the East. The history of his life records the opening of China, and the making of modern Japan; and to his untiring energy and indomitable will we owe the position which Great Britain holds in the Far East at the present time. By his example and training the school of highly accomplished and industrious diplomatists and consuls grew up to follow in his footsteps, who, by their studies of the language and literature of the countries to which they were accredited, have done much to enlighten us as to their past history. When we recall the fact that Mr. Satow, Mr. Aston, and Mr. Freeman Mitford were inspired to a great extent by the influence of Sir Harry, and were his hard-worked subordinates, we can all recognise the debt we owe him for the encouragement and impetus he gave to Oriental learning.

Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, who is responsible for the first volume, and also for that portion of the second which deals with the ministry at Peking, has suffered from no lack of materials, and has produced a most interesting and scholarly work. The letters so regularly sent by Harry Parkes to his sister and her husband, Mr. Lockhart, and those afterwards to his wife and daughters, keep us in touch with all he did and felt. In those days letters were letters: not mere statements of facts or wants, but long and full and interesting. For the earlier period to 1865 the official correspondence with his chiefs was also procurable; but from his arrival in Japan in 1865, and during the eighteen years of his ministry, with some trifling exceptions his despatches are not yet published, and the family letters were crowded out by the press of business and are short, and written under stress of time, and just to catch the mail. Mr. Dickens has nevertheless done for that portion of Sir Harry's career (one, if less adventurous, not less free from danger) all that could be done, and has contributed a most valuable volume to the history of New Japan. One wonders how much more lies hidden in the archives of the Foreign Office, and what vast untouched material awaits the historian of Japan.

It was in June, 1841, that Harry Parkes, then a boy of fourteen, was sent out to Macao to join his sisters there. He had been left an orphan at a very early age, and had been brought up by his uncle, a retired naval officer, who lived at Birmingham. One sister had married Mr. Gutzlaff, a Chinese linguist, who at the time of his arrival was secretary to the Chief Superintendent of Trade in China. The other, who now survives her distinguished brother, had married Mr. Lockhart, the founder of the hospitals in connexion with the London Missionary Society. The boy thus early found a career marked out for him. Mr. T. R. Morrison, secretary to the plenipotentiary and a brilliant Chinese linguist, took the bright lad off with him to Hong Kong, and under his auspices the entry into official life was made. Sir Henry Pottinger, the plenipotentiary, at this time had given orders that an expedition should sail up the Yangtze to Nanking; and the boy, who had already won golden opinions, accompanied it on board the Queen, and from day to day took part in the boat attacks and the capture of the enemy's junks, and with fearless courage landed close after the marines and soldiers. On board he was employed in copying despatches and carrying "chops." The outcome of the expedition was the signing of the Treaty of Nanking on board the Cornwallis, and Harry, who had made himself agreeable to the envoys, was present at the solemn ceremony. From this time forward his advance was continuous, and his industry in Chinese studies so great that at sixteen years of age, impatient for responsible work, he was appointed interpreter at Amoy. The good fortune which early attended Parkes did not forsake him; for the consul under whom he served was Mr. (afterwards Sir Rutherford) Alcock, whose discipline and influence were of great advantage, for he kept his subordinate steadily at the grindstone at the multifarious work of the consulate. From Amoy he accompanied Mr. Alcock to Foochow, and afterwards as acting interpreter to Shanghai. The consul and his interpreter took the lead in the development of that settlement by the making of roads, the plans for the foreshore, and the creation of a municipal council. Gratefully should the foreign settlement remember the name of Harry Parkes; and that they are not unmindful, the statue to his memory on the Bund is now witness. It was at Shanghai, by his firmness and tact in dealing with the Taotai when the murders of innocent foreigners remained unpunished, and by his knowledge of Chinese language and Chinese diplomacy, that he won the day. His chief thus records his appreciation of the young man's services:

"It is easy to speak well of the exertions of an officer in a general way, but it is not easy to express the particular opinion you may entertain of the way in which these services are rendered, and above all of the tact and good sense brought to bear on the occasion. I beg therefore you will take my simple assertion that if our communications with the Viceroy at Nanking have been effected in a manner worthy of our position in China, to Mr. Parkes chiefly is due the success attending our endeavours on that point."

His conduct was acknowledged by Lord Palmerston to have been "very able and judicious." At twenty he had made his mark both with the authorities at Hong Kong and also at the Foreign Office. His firmness had been put to the test, and had proved triumphant in combatting the double-dealing and obduracy of the Chinese. On his first furlough at home he had interviews with Lord Palmerston, and made a great impression on Lord Hammond, then Edmund Hammond, of the Foreign Office, who afterwards, from 1854 to 1873, embodied the traditional foreign policy of England. On his return to China he was appointed interpreter at Canton, and afterwards full consul at Amoy. In 1855 the Plenipotentiary and Chief Superintendent of Trade at Hong Kong was also representative of Her Majesty at Siam; but as Siam refused to have anything to do with foreigners, the office was a sinecure. However, the new king, Phra Mongkut, was a man of culture: he had studied Latin under the French Catholic Propaganda, and learned English from the American Mission; he read scientific books and the novels of Sir Walter Scott, and had corresponded with that somewhat pedantic economist Sir John Bowring, whom he regarded as "the learned man of Europe." Sir John combined the two characters of Doctor of the University of Groningen and Her Majesty's representative; and the outcome of the official visit was a treaty, the delicate preliminaries and pourparlers of which were arranged by his secretary, Harry Parkes. To him also the treaty was entrusted to take home for ratification, and the delivery of the king's letters and presents. With characteristic impetuosity the consul in due time returned to Bangkok with the Queen's letter and the treaty, and also with a wife. In six weeks he wooed and married Miss Plumer, who proved a true helpmeet to him till her death in 1879; and even at this lapse of time her memory is held in affectionate remembrance by those who knew her in China and Japan. The young bride became a great favourite of the king's, who sent her before her departure a delicious letter in English.

Affairs of more serious import awaited Parkes on his return to Canton. The question of free admission to the cities, especially to Canton, and the personal intercourse between the officials of the two countries had never been settled, and had been deferred and postponed times without number. The seizing of the lorch Arrow by Commissioner Yeh brought the matter to a crisis, and had the result of upsetting a ministry, and perhaps, by the diversion of the expedition of Lord Elgin at the first alarm of the Mutiny, of eaving of the Indian Empire. The attack upon Canton was successful, and Yeh was taken prisoner by Parkes with his own hands. The treaty of Tientsin, with which Parkes had little to do, for he was practically governor of Canton, and far removed from the operations in the North, gave him great cause for despondency, for Lord Elgin had gone away to Japan without entering Peking or having an audience with the Emperor. How just were the grounds of his suspicions the drift into war affirmed, and all the work of 1858 had to be done over again. This time Lord Elgin summoned him to his side, and he became, in the plenipotentiary's own words, the man of the expedition. The landing of the English and French troops, the assault and capture of the forts on the Peiho, is described graphically in Parkes' letters to his wife. Everywhere he was to the front, interpreting, bearing flags of truce after the surrender, and securing success. After a night in a fort he writes,

"next morning I got across the river, but had to walk for three and a half hours before I could join General Grant. Our horses, like everybody else, had bolted during the evening, and we had to trudge on foot through mud. Hardly had I got home when I had to start off again to the Viceroy to notify acceptance of his terms and to take him to the forts to make delivery to the generals. Employed on this service till past eight p.m. Home again, and at ten Lord Elgin came in and said that the admiral was anxious to see if he could not push up to Tientsin, and wanted me to go with him. Ready at daylight for this duty, and at seven heard from admiral that he was ready."

Such was his work from day to day.

But more exciting adventures were to be encountered. Negotiations had been in progress during the advance of the troops and Parkes had returned to Tung-chow to complete arrangements for a meeting between the allied ambassadors and the Imperial commissioners, and the marking out the ground for the camp. When he arrived there he found it occupied by Chinese troops, and fearing a collision between them and the allies' advanced column, he sent Mr. Loch off to tell General Grant, and beg him to halt his column until he could get some explanation. None could be obtained; and in riding back with a flag of truce he and Mr. Loch were taken prisoners, thrust into a cart and driven off to Peking, where they were heavily ironed round neck and hands and feet, and cast into the common prison. After days of dreadful suffering and anxiety, during which they were cross-examined, the mandarins, believing that Parkes could of his own responsibility arrange terms and stop hostilities, endeavoured to extract pledges from him, but without avail. How narrow was their escape from death appears from the statement of Hang-ki to Parkes afterwards, that fifteen minutes after he had despatched Mr. Loch and Parkes and three other prisoners outside the city, there arrived an order from the Emperor that they were to be executed forthwith. Again, the consul had the satisfaction of personally arranging the terms of the surrender of the gate of Peking, and saw the embassy installed in the palace of the Prince of I, the very man who had plotted and carried out his seizure.

In 1861 he had to superintend the evacuation of Canton, which had been occupied for nearly four years by the allied forces. The firm government of the allied commissioners had done much to improve the friendly disposition of the governable people towards foreigners. At thirty-four years of age, but after twenty years' hard service, he received the honour of a K.C.B., and it was universally felt that he had fairly won the distinction. The last rung but one of the ladder was reached when in 1865 he was appointed Envoy and Minister to Japan. Sir Harry anticipated that he might spend four years in Japan and then take the rest at home he so richly deserved; but the four years expanded into eighteen, and during that time he saw the rise of New Japan, and in no small measure influenced its destiny. The ratification of the treaties by the Mikado was the first step which led to the abolition of the Shogunate, and the resumption of the government according to the constitution of the mythical emperor Jimmu Jenno. It was on the occasion of the reception of the British minister by the Mikado at Kioto that one of the numerous attempted assassinations took place, which was frustrated by the bravery of the Japanese officers and the courage of Mr. Freeman Mitford. Fortunately no European lives were lost, but the affair was a great shock to the court and government. During these years, in which Japan passed through the throes of domestic embroilments, Sir Harry held a unique position. He watched over her unification, and with Sir Thomas Wade, the minister at Peking, brought about an amicable settlement of the Formosa and Loochoo expedition with China; and though he did not live to see the revision of the treaties, now, in 1894, effected so far as regards Great Britain, he laid down the proposition that as Japan removes one by one the causes which produced extra-territoriality, so should the foreign powers withdraw their consular jurisdictions. The question was not solved until nine years after his death; but whatever success attends the recent treaty must, in a great measure, be attributed to the work of Sir Harry in 1882. It was only for two years that he held the post that was his by right, the post of minister at Peking; but the prospect did not afford him any delight, for the burden was heavier, the responsibilities greater and the disagreeables of life more numerous. Besides, his devotion to duty and his unflagging energy were wearing out his physical strength, and the end was soon to come. The Tongking question and the treaty with Korea had deeply engaged him, and political affairs caused him anxiety; he was suffering, too, from an attack of Peking fever. On the day before his death

"he signed fifty despatches on a little table at the foot of his bed," writes Mr. O'Connor, the Secretary of Legation, "he then went back to bed, and, observing the sunlight streaming in, I proposed to let down the blinds, whereupon he said, 'Oh, no, leave them so, please. You see, I have not bothered about work, and try to dismiss it from my mind, but the moment I shut my eyes and attempt to sleep the brain begins to work with terrific rapidity—all the scenes of my life in Japan, all the hair-breadth escapes come back with appalling vividness, and when I awake again and see the trees and the sparrows I return to myself more quickly.'"

That night the tired spirit passed away as he slept. Forty years of unremitting toil and anxiety and of ceaseless devotion to his country's service had done their work. None will deny him the first place amongst those who have, either as consul or minister, represented England in the Far East; and to no one is more largely due the confidence which England has inspired in her justice and humanity.

S. McCALMONT HILL.

NEW NOVELS.

Perlycross. By R. D. Blackmore. (Sampson Low.)

A House in Bloomsbury. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 2 vols. (Hutchinson.)

A Victim of Good Luck. By W. E. Norris. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

The Justification of Andrew Lebrun. By Frank Barrett. (Heinemann.)

The Flaming Sword. By Dr. Percival. (Digby, Long & Co.)

The Wings of Icarus. By L. Alma Tadema. (Heinemann.)

The Kindness of the Celestial. By Barry Pain. (Henry.)

Lost! One Hundred Pounds Reward. By M. Young. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Fils de Chouan. Par Roger Lambelin. (Paris: Plon.)

It is hardly possible to exaggerate the sense of "most exceeding peace" that comes upon the reviewer when he opens in these days a novel of Mr. Blackmore's. We know that not only will he be able to share the poet's boast—

"We asked no social questions, we pumped no hidden shame,
We never talked obstetrics when the Little Stranger came;
We left the Lord in Heaven, we left the fiends in Hell"—

u.s.w., but that these immense negative merits will be accompanied by positive ones hardly less satisfactory. A style racy and quaint, without excessive affectation; a good old-fashioned scholarship; a perpetual fount of humour; a store of English patriotism, sense, and sanity—these are some of the good things which Mr. Blackmore always gives us, but which he seems (we do not know whether it is by contrast or not) to give us in Perlycross to an extent surpassing most of his later gifts. To the central incident—the disappearance of the coffin of Sir Thomas Waldron, and the consequent imputations of body-snatching or other foul play on the parish doctor, on Lady Waldron, and others—it might be possible, if it were worth while, to make some unimportant demurs. It may seem a little odd that such an intelligent as well as excellent person as Mr. Penniloe, the curate, bound by special ties to the Waldron family, and anxious for the doctor's well-being, should not have made stricter search to see whether the mortal remains of the good Sir Thomas had actually disappeared; but no one can say that his failure to do so is wholly improbable. A certain complication too, an in-and-outness of sub-plots and minor interests, which is not uncommon with Mr. Blackmore, may offend those who like either a very simple and straightforward story or else one the ravelments of which are unravelled in a strictly mathematical and orderly fashion. But these are mere technical objections; the merits of the book for reading are as indisputable as ever—more so indeed, as we have hinted, than those of some of its immediate predecessors. The author's gift, not merely of creating a character or two, but of filling a whole village and almost a whole district with live people, has seldom been better shown. Sometimes his personages are oddities and almost "humours": but they are always live oddities, humours that move and breathe. And it is a proof of Mr. Blackmore's strength that one has some difficulty in deciding whether his most elaborate or his slightest sketches are the best. For instance, the Rev. Philip Penniloe, the resident curate of Perlycross (for 'tis sixty years since) is the central figure of most of the scenes in the book; and the Rev. John Chevithorne, his rector, non-resident, but by no means bloated or tyrannical, though a little unspiritual, appears at most in one or two. Yet it may be doubted whether the Rev. Philip or the Rev. John is the neater and completer presentation of an entire person. And this cardinal faculty of vivification—the chiefest and by far the rarest faculty of the novelist—is very nearly all-pervading. You may not be extraordinarily enamoured of any one. Christie Fox, the doctor's sister; Lady Waldron herself (whose Spanish-English is a real addition to the few and difficult successes in such a kind), and the "pupil" Pike are perhaps the most engaging; but they are all real people. And how many of our clever novelists nowadays can make real people at any time; how many can make them all the time? The story of Perlyeross is too complicated and the characters too numerous for it to be possible to do anything like justice in such a notice as this. But what we have said of it is equivalent to saying that the intending reader need fear no mistake in it, seeing that he is in the hands of a master.

It is almost sufficient to say that A House in Bloomsbury contains one of Mrs. Oliphant's studies of elderly Scotch womankind (indeed two, mistress and maid), in order to convey to the reader that in this book also there is something masterly; perhaps it is unnecessary to add more than that the book is Mrs. Oliphant's, in order to suggest that it is not on the whole a masterpiece. In this respect it is but as all its fellows of late, and indeed is perhaps better than some of them. We do not love to see blocks cut with a razor, nor to see the effect on the razor of block-cutting. Yet no doubt if they must be cut they are better so cut than with a flint-axe; and it is impossible to refuse admiration to the razor which so stoutly persists in the task of cutting them.

No "back-thoughts" of this kind disturb the pleasure of reading Mr. Norris's A Victim of Good Luck. That agreeable talent of his, which it would be offensive to call garrulous, but for which English provides no adjective at once properly descriptive and properly complimentary, has not often been better employed than here. The "victim" is simply the heroine of a very old and by no means tragical story of the Lady Clara Vere de Vere kind, with proper variations. Being left heiress to a property expected by somebody else (fortunately of the opposite sex—how dreadful it would be if this were not so!) she is inclined to give her inheritance away; and of course (one never doubts this for a moment) ends by giving herself with it. The intervening complications are very pleasant; and the chief minor actors, the villain, Veronica's cousin Joe Dimsdale, and her friend, Dolly Craddock, a lively young woman, are very agreeable, Joe especially. It is a book that one ends at peace with the author and oneself.

Mr. Frank Barrett is always readable and generally interesting; nor have we had any difficulty in perusing The Justification of Andrew Lebrun. But perhaps Mr. Barrett has to some extent incurred the old curses pronounced on those who "mix kinds" and make "confusion." His initial and, in a way, central incident, the revivification of a person who has been entranced for a century, if it is not an attempt at the supernatural (for the means are ex hypothesi natural merely), strikes a note which can only be supported in a peculiar key. The rest of the story, even with the second and unsuccessful experiment in pickling the human body, is of an entirely different kind, dealing with the ordinary misconduct of a worthless husband, the disappearance of his ill-treated wife, and the vengeance of her father. We shall not say positively that the two could not have been combined, but we do not think that they have been combined here. And the plan of telling the story by a half-outsider, though a favourite one just now, has always struck us as the most dangerous and doubtful of the half-dozen or so of methods open to the novelist. Still, these are critic's objections. The book is much less open to objections from the point of view of the mere reader.

Mr. Rider Haggard ought to take The Flaming Sword as no mean compliment. The African romance of adventure with a touch of the supernatural may not, indeed, be his copyhold; but such close following as that of Dr. Percival is, indeed, a tribute. We think, indeed, that "Bumwegum" is not so pretty a name as "Umalopogaas"; but that may be a matter of taste. For the rest, The Flaming Sword, putting its imitativeness aside, is an odd mixture of liveliness and the reverse of liveliness. As the sample above given will show, the author has relapsed into the mere gibberish names which from the Amadis romances to those of the end of the last century used to satisfy writers and readers: he does not write at all well; and as for the discovery at the end of the book, it is certain that if the travellers did not recognise the Garden of Eden when they saw it, and if only one of them even after some time hit upon the resemblance, the present agitation about religious teaching is fully justified. On the whole, however, we should suppose the writer to be a very prentice hand; he has some fancy, and he may do better. There is an excellent fight with a mammoth in his book, and an electric rod; but how Dr. Percival kept that rod charged the present writer knoweth not.

Miss Alma Tadema's story is a melancholy one, with many "live" touches here and there, but with a certain lack of reality as a whole. Emilia Fletcher is a rich and rather emancipated young lady who has a friend and a lover. The friend is a maumariée, to use the pretty French word for an ugly thing of no particular time or language; the lover is a conventional poet. The rest, who needs to be told so far as the mere incidents go! In the telling, however, as distinguished from the mere story, Miss Alma Tadema shows considerable merits. Some things which we do not wholly like were probably "meant dramatic"; and though we see too little of the friend, Constance Norris, to have the unfortunate fascination which she exercises on the lover made clear to us, it is not in nature that when a man's betrothed adores another young woman and tells him so, he should not adore the other young woman when he has an opportunity. Emilia is a female prig, like many male prigs who are heroes of books now, in her "advancement," and her melancholy, and her meditations. An early application of the slipper and an education in sound religion and useful learning would have been the making of her; but she is pathetic for all that.

The stories in Mr. Barry Pain's volume are of rather unequal interest: not individually—that is unavoidable—but in batches. The first three are all devoted to Mr. Pain's favourite subject of school; and, with some of the drawbacks of their kind, are in that kind good. The title legend is not quite so good as "Una at Desford" (a very happily hit-off study of calf love in various forms); but both are a trifle better than "Detected Culprits," which comes between them. The other and larger division shows Mr. Pain attempting widely different subjects, and not, we think, succeeding in them so well. "Me and Arthur" is an attempt in the grimmer but also the more sordid irony which wants handling stronger than Mr. Pain has yet shown himself able to give; and "The Redemption of Gerald Rosecourt" is an experiment in fantastic tragedy which is even farther from his province, while "The Seven Delights" is too ambitious and overleaps itself into caricature. The best of these later stories are "Alicia" and the "Portrait Painters," in which Mr. Pain attempts less and achieves more.

Miss Young's novel is so exceedingly inoffensive, and at the same time so overpoweringly youthful, that it is very difficult to say anything about it. The author has thrown together most of the usual ingredients of romance—an elopement, a robbery, a lost child, a scandal, a fire, and so forth—has strung them together in artless dialogue, and has written the whole in not very bad English. If her book had been stronger our review had been longer.

M. Roger Lambelin has two accidental recommendations—the identity of his name (or nom de guerre) with that of the most "characterful" of Restif de la Bretonne's numerous loves, and an unusual familiarity with Great Britain: indeed, besides the title story, his book contains a minor one, called "Le Bass Rock." "Fils de Chouan" itself is devoted to the history of a fatal marriage between a preux chevalier of antique type, though modern years, and a merely fashionable girl. The adventure is common enough, and the pity of it perhaps requires rather more idiosyncrasy as well as tragedy of touch than M. Lambelin has imparted; but still it has attractions.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Second Book of Kings. By F. W. Farrar. (Hodder & Stoughton.) The Second Book of Kings, starting with the work of Elisha, includes the prophetic activity of Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and finally Jeremiah, and is, of course, crammed with exciting incident from end to end. Dr. Farrar has done full justice to his subject, and ably concluded his first volume on the First Book of Kings. There is no commentator who joins so many virtues as Dr. Farrar. In the volume before us the treatment of the Prophets shows an intense appreciation of the spiritual energy of their work, an appreciation which would usually stamp its possessor as a master in the province of religious and ethical theory; and yet when we turn to the Archdeacon's treatment of such dramatic incidents as Jehu's revolt, we feel at once that his special strength is in his popular sympathies, his vigour, his movement, his delight in everything human. We have said nothing as yet of the research and learning displayed in the exposition. If Dr. Farrar were a dull writer his reputation for learning would be enormous. As it is, he is the only thoroughly popular divine whose opinion as a scholar must be reckoned with, and whose work is consistently and continually first hand. Dr. Farrar apologises in his epilogue for "what some may regard as the too favourable attitude towards what is called the Higher Criticism adopted in this book," but this attitude gives the book a special value. Even more unreservedly than in his first volume Dr. Farrar is disposed to accept the main conclusions of the Higher Criticism, and to state them in clear and popular style. As is usual with Dr. Farrar, his workmanship is very even. He is never careless, never tired, never ignorant; but he rarely rises to the highest excellence of style or scholarship. There is not, however, any sign of flagging energy in this book. It is, on the contrary, more finished, more distinguished in style than the previous volume.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Books of Chronicles. By W. H. Bennett. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Mr. Bennett proves in this volume that what an expositor who has to deal with the least inspired, and therefore dulllest, books of the Old Testament needs chiefly is candour to make his exposition interesting as well as valuable. In his first chapter Mr. Bennett turns to English fiction for "a rough illustration of the position and history of our Chronicler," and finds that "the name which at once suggests itself is that of Mr. Harding, the precentor in Barchester Towers." A great many pages of criticism are condensed in this admirable suggestion, and the accurate judgment which makes it is obvious throughout the volume in the selection and treatment of the topics specially dealt with. Mr. Bennett carefully avoids matters which are more properly treated of in the exposition of other books of the Old Testament—such as 1 and 2 Samuel, Kings, Ezra, and Nehemiah; and by this self-denying ordinance contrives to give to his own commentary unexpected freshness and originality. One of his objects has been to "show the fresh force and clearness with which modern methods of Biblical study have emphasised the spiritual teaching of Chronicles." After four chapters of introduction upon the date, authorship, and historical character of Chronicles, the exposition is divided into three books entitled, Genealogies, Messianic and other Types, and the Interpretation of History. Of these it is Genealogies which attracts the reader most, perhaps because he is astonished to find how interesting scholarship and research have made an apparently dry subject. The chapters on "Names,"

"Statistics," and "Family Traditions" are models of popular exposition of the results of study. They are more than explanatory: they initiate the careful reader into the method of his master and fire him with some of his master's enthusiasm. The third book deals with the Chronicler's accounts of David and Solomon. Having premised that the Chronicler's position can be realised by supposing a monk in a Norman monastery undertaking to rewrite Bede's Ecclesiastical History—he would work "under similar but less serious disadvantages"—Mr. Bennett is able to pursue an inquiry full of suggestiveness into the mind of the Chronicler as it is revealed by his omissions, his mistakes, and his misunderstandings. Book IV. continues the same subject. Such matters as the importance of ritual, the doctrine of non-resistance, and the religious value of music, naturally present themselves for treatment, and bring Mr. Bennett's exposition fully into touch with modern times and modern problems. Mr. Bennett's style is not so remarkable as his matter and his method, but it in no way falls below the general level of good workmanship which distinguishes his book.

"PRESENT DAY PRIMERS."—Early Church History. By J. Vernon Bartlett. (Religious Tract Society.) Sketches of history which condense four centuries into 160 pages are as a rule useful only to students who are cramming for an examination, and are too lazy to make their own abstracts. This is because the writers of Primers do not often realise what their task is. They forget that they are to pick out and make evident to the ordinary reader the plain canvas upon which the elaborate pictures and ornaments of the larger histories are wrought. Their work must be logically related to the larger books: their analysis must detect the reasons why their period developed as it did, and ought to make the student's effort to recall his period, when he has mastered his primer, an effort of thought rather than of memory. And, secondly, every word of the Primer must be weighted with meaning; the words of it must continually condense paragraphs, and the paragraphs chapters. If this is done with literary skill as well as intellectual ability, the Primer is to the wise student almost as good as a living master. Mr. Bartlett's sketch of the Church History of the first four centuries fulfils admirably our first condition. It shows a grasp on the part of its author of his whole period in all its bearings. He detects the logic of events with unusual insight and ability. The book for this reason is full of interest and suggestion to the thoughtful reader. His views will not always please either Anglicans or Presbyterians, but are not less likely to be true on that account. As regards the second excellence which should distinguish a Primer—pregnancy of phrase and aptness of expression—Mr. Bartlett's sketch is not so noticeable. Perhaps the two virtues of thoughtful analysis and perfection of phrase, cannot be easily harmonised. Of the two the first is the rarer and the more valuable.

"PRESENT DAY PRIMERS."—The Printed English Bible, 1525-1885. By Richard Lovett. (Religious Tract Society.) Mr. Lovett has a more manageable subject for his Primer than the Church History of the first four centuries. He has room for a certain amount of detail; and since he is mainly concerned with matters of fact, accuracy and carefulness are the qualities which are demanded from him. These he exhibits in a high degree. His account of the growth of the English translation is a scholarly piece of work, carefully put together. Mr. Lovett works at first hand, and includes in his summary a critical estimate of the labour of his predecessors. He complains at the end that he has been able to sketch only the merest outline. This is the view of the enthusiast, and is only true of the latter half of his work. His account of Tindale and the earlier translators is full and sufficient, but the end of the volume is meagre. The Revised Version especially demands more elaborate treatment, although what Mr. Lovett has found room for is excellently chosen.

The Psalms at work. By Charles L. Marson. (Elliot Stock.) This consists of an edition of the English Church Psalter, "with a few short notes on the use of the Psalms." The object of the notes is to help the reader to understand "how enormously this one little book of poems has affected the life of mankind." The notes, therefore, are not in the ordinary sense devotional: they do not attempt the hopeless and useless task of giving greater point or depth to the most piercing and profound expression of the religious spirit which literature contains. Their object is to collect together from all and every source instances where particular Psalms have been found a source of consolation and strength. Mr. Marson has collected an astonishing number of such instances out of the history of nations and the biographies of individuals, and he is successful in avoiding a mere list by the vivacity and grace of his style. The book is well printed, with an ample margin which invites the reader to increase his author's wealth of historical illustration. Mr. Marson's comment is frequently marked by a spiritual insight, which we value all the more because it is severely restrained and subordinated to the mere illustration of the text itself. No one who cares for the Psalms can fail to be both surprised and delighted by the thorough way in which Mr. Marson has worked out an original and interesting scheme.

The Divine Liturgies of our Fathers among the Saints John Chrysostom and Basil the Great, with that of the Presanctified, preceded by the Hesperinos and the Orthros. Edited, with the Greek text, by J. N. W. B. Robertson. (David Nutt.) In 1886 Mr. Robertson published, for the use of the Greek congregations in London, Liverpool, and Manchester, the Greek text of the Liturgies of St. Chrysostom and St. Basil, with an English translation. The present volume is a revised edition, greatly enlarged. Beside the additions indicated on the title-page, we have now given us the Apolytikia of the feasts of our Lord and the Blessed Virgin, and those of the Resurrection, with their Theotokia, together with many Kontakia and Eisodika, Dismissals, and occasional prayers and benedictions. The volume has increased in size to more than twice the number of pages in the first edition. The printing, with rubrics in red, is very neatly executed at the press of Drugin, of Leipzig. The Greek and English texts face one another; and the volume will prove very convenient for any person desirous of gaining a correct notion of the more important services of the devotional system of the Greek Church.

TWO FOREIGN TRANSLATIONS OF ENGLISH POETRY.

Ausgewählte Gedichte von Robert Browning. Uebersetzt von Edmund Ruete (Bremen: Heinsius). Herr Ruete, who has already published a German translation of Burns, attracts our sympathies at once by the excellent selection he has made from the shorter poems of Browning. We could hardly attempt to improve upon it except (perhaps) by the addition of "Waring," "Hervé Riel," and "The Pied Piper." Otherwise, we find here all the most characteristic things—including even the Cavalier Songs, which go admirably into German ballad measure—with the addition of two longer pieces: "On a Balcony" and the Ottima section of "Pippa passes." So far as we are competent to judge, the translation is both accurate and spirited. As a sample, take the very first page:—

"HEIMATOEDANKEN AUF DER SEE.

Königlich schwand hin im Westen, königlich
Kap Sankt Vincent;
Scheidend glüht in Purgulorie noch die Sonn'
am Firmament;
Bläulich ragt' aus feuerfarbner Flut Trafalgar
stolz hervor;
Gross und grau in Nebelferne stieg Gibraltars
Fels empor:
Wie nur dien' ich dir, mein England? Hier auch war dein Ruhm mir nah!
Herz und Hand zu Gott erhebe, wer dies schaut,
was ich heut sah,
Während Jupiter dort ausstei csthgweigend über Afrika."

We have also received a copy of Le Ultime Poesi di Alfredo Tennyson (Milan: Cogliati), translated into Italian verse by Paolo Bellezza, who dates from London. We quote his version of "Silent Voices":—

"VOCI FUNEREE.

"Quando nell' ora tacita ed oscura
Vengono i sogni ad aleggiarmi intorno,
Voci fioche di voi che foste un giorno,
Non chiamatemi a un sol che non è più
Alla deserta e livida pianura
Non mi chiamate, o voci, ma lassù,
Per la stellata via che in alto brilla,
Alle regioni scintillanti d'or,
All' ampio ciel che sovra me sfavilla . . .
Deh, chiamatemi in alto, in alto ognor!"

NOTES AND NEWS.

LORD EDMOND FITZMAURICE, who published some years ago the Correspondence of the first Marquis of Lansdowne, has now nearly ready for issue the biography of a more remote ancestor, Sir William Petty, one of the founders of the Royal Society, now best remembered for his survey of Ireland in the middle of the seventeenth century. The book, which—like the former one—is largely based upon documents still in the possession of the family, will be published by Mr. John Murray.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce for early publication Mr. Lowell in England: a Series of Familiar Letters, edited, with introduction, by Mr. George W. Smalley.

THE "Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs," which Mrs. Ritchie (Miss Thackeray) has been contributing to Macmillan's Magazine, will shortly be published in volume form.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK have for some time been making arrangements for the production of a new "Survey of London." The editor and the principal writer of the work is Mr. Walter Besant, who has made a study of London, not only in books but in exploration of the streets, the occupation of his leisure hours for more than twenty-five years. The work will not be a reproduction brought up to date of Stowe and Strype, but an entirely new work on a different plan. It will, however, include a Perambulation, such as is found in the former work, but of the whole "County" instead of the City alone. This Perambulation will take account of every important building, institution, and company; every church, chapel, college, school, hospital, orphanage, almshouse, museum, library, &c., in the whole of Greater London. It will include things past as well as things present; it will contain a history of London—its liberties, charters, trade, political power, religion, manners, and customs; and it will present a picture of the great city as it is from every point of view. It is at present designed to complete the work in eight quarto volumes; and the first will, if possible, be published in the autumn of 1895, to be followed at short and regular intervals by successive volumes. It is needless to add that the work will be fully illustrated with maps and engravings.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish immediately A Short Account of Sir Philip Sidney, by Anna M. Stoddart, with a new portrait and other illustrations by Margaret L. Huggins.

THE new volume of the "Camden Library," which Mr. Elliot Stock announces for immediate publication, will be Early London Theatres, by Mr. T. F. Ordish. It treats mainly of the early Garden Theatres in Southwark, furnishing some fresh information on this interesting subject. It will be fully illustrated with maps and plans.

MR. QUARITCH will be the publisher of a collection of Georgian stories, under the title of The Book of Wisdom and Lies, which have been translated by Mr. Oliver Wardrop from the original of Sulkhan-Saba Orbeliani. The book is being printed at the Kelnscott Press, in an edition limited to 250 copies.

LADY LINDSAY'S third volume of poems will be published in a few days by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. The title chosen is The King's Last Vigil. Lady Lindsay's Lyrics, published four years ago, found much favour, and her little book for children entitled, A String of Beads, which Messrs. Black issued in 1892, also proved a great success.

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S new novel, In an Iron Grip, will be published immediately by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. The story deals principally with life behind the scenes of a theatrical company, and also introduces some vivid pictures of what goes on in a convict prison for women.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. have in the press the following novels:—A Life for a Love, by L. T. Meade; The Beautiful Soul, by Florence Marryat; and Some Men are Such Gentlemen, by Arabella Kenealy.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, will publish next week a new volume of lectures by Dr. Alexander Whyte, entitled, Samuel Rutherford, and some of his Correspondents, and also a reprint of Dr. Andrew Bonar's edition of The Letters of Samuel Rutherford.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces, for immediate publication, Talks with Bunyan, being discourses on the "Pilgrim's Progress," by the Rev. Douglas Thompson, with a preface by the Rev. Archibald G. Brown.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of Hull, are about to publish three additions to Burns literature, by Mr. John D. Ross, entitled Bonnie Jean, Clarinda, and Tam O' Shanter. The first consists of wreaths of poetry and prose in honour of the wife of Robert Burns; the second contains papers concerning his renowned correspondent; and the third will deal with Tam O' Shanter and his memorable ride, including essays on Alloway Kirk, Souter Johnny, Captain Grose, &c. Each of the volumes will be illustrated.

THE Clarendon Press will publish early in November editions of Scott's poetical works, in crown octavo and in miniature, edited by Mr. J. Logie Robertson.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have sent to press second editions of Mr. Frankfort Moore's One Fair Daughter, "Iota's" Children of Circumstance, and "Alien's" A Daughter of the King, of each of which the first large editions were exhausted immediately after publication.

THE first series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday next, October 21, in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 p.m., when Sir Benjamin W.

Richardson will lecture on "Muscle and Athletic Skill." Lectures will be subsequently given by Mr. Arthur Quekett, Prince Kropotkin, Dr. Andrew Wilson, Mr. Clinton T. Dent, Mrs. Frederika Macdonald, and Mr. R. W. Frazer.

A REPRINT of Pierre de Marca's Histoire du Béarn, in two volumes folio, has been commenced at Pau. Vol. I. has lately appeared. The Abbé V. Dubarat has prefixed an excellent "notice biographique, avec pièces justificatives," of three hundred and five pages. Besides its local interest, the Archbishop's life is of importance for the history of Gallicanism. The body of the work is a reprint of the original edition without note or comment.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. CROCKETT'S new story, the "Men of the Moss-Hags," will begin in Good Words for January and run throughout the year. It is concerned with that most interesting period of Scottish history called "The Killing Time," and is based upon manuscript and traditional materials collected by himself. The story deals with the adventures of the young William Gordon of Earlstoun. He rides at Cameron's back at the last charge at Aird's Moss; he holds up the Banner of Blue at the Sanquhar Declaration; he lies in hiding among the wild hills, and being wounded is succoured by his sweetheart. Much of the book is dominated by the personality of a Covenanter, the father of the heroine, the tragedy of whose death makes a lurid scene. Graham of Claverhouse, Grier of Lag, Johnstone of Westerhall, are the leading characters among the persecutors; but a Galloway laird, who stays at home and tries to do the best for both parties, is also introduced. The story will be illustrated by Mr. Charles E. Brock.

THE new volume of Good Words for 1894 will also contain a novel by Mr. Clark Russell, entitled, "A Heart of Oak"; and a series of twelve Biblical Studies by the Rev. Dr. James Stalker.

LORD WOLSELEY, who recently visited the Crimea in Sir John Pender's yacht, will contribute to the November number of the United Service Magazine, a paper of personal reminiscences of the Crimean War, when he was employed during the great siege as acting engineer officer. Admiral of the Fleet Sir Geoffrey Hornby has also written for the same number a study of the battle of the Yalu.

THE new volume of Atalanta will contain Mr. R. D. Blackmore's new novel, "Mount Arafa"; and a series of illustrated papers on authors' counties. For example, the Rev. S. Baring Gould will describe the Devonshire of Mr. Blackmore; Dr. A. H. Japp, the Yorkshire of Charlotte Brontë; and Mr. J. Ashcroft Noble, the Cumberland and Isle of Man of Mr. Hall Caine.

THE November number of the Pall Mall Magazine will contain a French poem by M. Paul Verlaine, entitled "Conquistador," which was written during his visit to London last year; and an historical article on Christ's Hospital, illustrated from old prints.

THE new volume of the Boy's Own Paper (with which Boys is now incorporated) commences with the November number. The announcements include no less than four illustrated serials: "Amid Siberian Forests," a story of the Russian conquest of Asia, by David Ker; "In the Land of the Lion and Ostrich," a story of present day life and adventure in Africa, by Dr. Gordon Stables; "The Wallaby Man," by the Rev. A. N. Malan; and "Hard Up," a boy's story of Exmoor, by Ascott R. Hope.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE new Vice-Chancellor of Oxford has lost no time in performing one of those duties which are left solely to his personal discretion, and in which the whole public feel an interest. He has nominated Mr. Holman Hunt to be Romanes Lecturer for 1895. We believe that the lecture is not usually delivered before the summer term.

SIR THOMAS ADAM's chair of Arabic at Cambridge, which has been vacant since the death of Prof. Robertson Smith, has been filled by the appointment of Dr. Charles Rieu, late keeper of Oriental MSS. at the British Museum, who may be called the doyen of Semitic scholars in this country.

DR. WILLIAM PETERSON, of University College, Dundee, has been appointed to the Principalship of McGill University, Montreal, which is vacant by the resignation of Sir William Dawson.

PROF. SAYCE, who delivered a public lecture at Oxford on Tuesday of this week upon "The Second Assyrian Empire," has since left to spend the winter in Egypt, where Dr. Boyd, the late vice-chancellor, will join him at Christmas-time on a voyage up the Nile.

A STATUTE will be promulgated at Oxford next week, which makes a not inconsiderable change in the examination for Responsions. As an alternative for the set books, it proposes to allow unseen translations in Greek and Latin.

THE Rev. F. J. Chavasse, of Corpus, has been appointed to act as deputy for the Margaret Professor of Divinity at Oxford during the present term.

MR. F. T. PALGRAVE, as Professor of Poetry at Oxford, announces the following subject for a public lecture next month: "Certain Recent English Poets, Deceased, who have failed to obtain due Honour."

PROF. ROBINSON ELLIS is lecturing at Oxford this term on "The Silvae of Statius."

MR. YULE OLDHAM, university lecturer in geography at Cambridge, will deliver a public lecture next Wednesday, on "A New Discovery of America," upon which subject—it will be remembered—he read a paper at the recent meeting of the British Association. During the present term Mr. Oldham proposes to give a course of lectures on "The History of Geographical Discovery."

ON Tuesday next, Mr. W. G. Markheim will give a public lecture at the Taylorian Institution, at Oxford, on "Molière considered as an Author of Tragedy," with special reference to Don Juan, Act. v.

THE session at Manchester College, Oxford, was opened on Tuesday with an address by the Rev. W. E. Addis, on "Theological Study as a Preparation for the Ministry."

THE current number of the Oxford Magazine contains a notice of Walter Pater, by F. W. B., extracted from a sermon preached in the chapel of Brasenose College. To those who knew Pater only from his reputation, or even from his books, this estimate of him "as an affectionate friend, a loyal and interested college teacher, a devout Christian," will be specially interesting.

A WEEK or two ago, we went too far in stating that it had already been decided to hand over the old buildings of the Ashmolean for the use of the Bodleian Library. We are informed that a detailed scheme to this effect is still under consideration by the Hebdomadal Council.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE POET'S MEED.

"Who fainteth here in the mart, forlorn,
While men stand chaffering by?
Go ask his trade." "A poet born,
With a song in his flashing eye."
"What hath he to sell—coal, cotton, or corn?"
"Fair thoughts." "Then let him die."

GRANT ALLEN.

OBITUARY.

PROF. NICHOL.

THOUGH Prof. Nichol had only reached the age of sixty-one, and had in his prime been a man of exceptional vigour, his death was not unexpected. For some time past he had suffered from a severe illness, which incapacitated him from work; and the loss of his wife last year was a severe blow to him. He died on October 11, at Campden Hill, Kensington, where he had settled after leaving Glasgow.

John Nichol was born in 1833 at Montrose, Forfarshire, being the only son of John Pringle Nichol, professor of astronomy at Glasgow, whose name will survive in literature as having suggested to De Quincey his prose dream of the Nebula in Orion. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, and afterwards proceeded, at a somewhat late age, to Balliol College, Oxford. It was there that he formed a lifelong friendship with a contemporary undergraduate, Mr. A. C. Swinburne. He was placed in the first-class of the final classical school in 1859, when Balliol gained five firsts out of ten. Among the others were the late Prof. Green, the present headmaster of Eton, and G. R. Luke, whose brilliant promise was frustrated by an early death. Nichol quickly established his reputation as a most successful coach in philosophy, and he continued to take Oxford pupils long after he had removed to Scotland. In 1861 he was appointed by the Crown to the chair of English literature at Glasgow, which he occupied with much distinction for twenty-eight years. His personal influence on his pupils was very great, not only by reason of his wide learning and teaching power, but also because of the enthusiasm for work with which he inspired them. The present writer will always remember with gratitude that he derived his first knowledge of English literature as a whole from a course of lectures which Prof. Nichol delivered (circa 1868) in the hall of New College, Oxford, on the invitation of Jowett.

Prof. Nichol was also a voluminous writer, though it was one of the disappointments of his life that he never received due recognition as an author. As early as 1854, while still a student at Glasgow, he printed a little volume of verse, entitled Leaves. In 1860, the year after he graduated at Oxford, he brought out a collection of essays, Fragments of Criticism. His most ambitious work was the historical drama of Hannibal (1872), which has received the highest praise from the best judges. To the "English Men of Letters" series he contributed Byron (1880) and Carlyle (1892), the latter being the final work of his own life, and also (we believe) the concluding volume of the series. His "Historical Review of American Literature," reprinted from the Encyclopaedia Britannica (1882), failed to win approval in America. Finally, we must not forget to mention the pious care with which he edited the remains, both prose and poetry, of Sydney Dobell.

In his early days, Nichol was an ardent Radical, being conspicuous in advocating the cause of the North during the American Civil War. Some reminiscences of that time may be found in an article on "Kossuth in England," which he contributed this year to Macmillan's Magazine. One of his latest appearances in public was on the occasion of the Shelley centenary at Horsham, when his vigorous plain speaking was in marked contrast to some of the other addresses. Yet more recently—in February of the present year—he delivered an admirable lecture before the Royal Institution on "Bacon's Key to Nature," which summarises his own views on the philosophy of logic. He leaves behind him a son—who has already precluded in literature with a book on Victor Hugo—and two daughters.

J. S. C.

WE have also to record the death of Mr. George Bullen, C.B., for more than fifty years connected with the British Museum, from 1875 to 1890 as keeper of the department of printed books. He died in Kensington, on October 10, having almost completed the seventy-eighth year of his age. Apart from his work in the Museum, he was the compiler of the catalogue of the Caxtons exhibited at South Kensington in 1877.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the October number of the Antiquary M. Roach le Schœnig gives an account of the museums at Farnham and King John's House, Tollard Royal. We are the more pleased with it, as we happen to know that there are not a few zealous antiquaries to whom these important collections are unknown. We call them important for two reasons: first, because they contain objects of great value; and, secondly, because the system of arrangement and care bestowed leaves hardly anything to be desired. General Pitt Rivers is not only an enthusiastic worker in the field of early history, but he knows (what so very few of us do) how to arrange his collections so as to be an object-lesson to all inquiring minds. Mr. Bell's paper on "The Palaeolithic Remains at Wolvercote, near Oxford," is worthy of attention. The discoveries made there are by no means of first-class importance, but they help as links in a chain to bind together the information we are gathering from so many widely separated places. Miss Mabel Peacock's "Notes on the Folk-lore of Bells" are very interesting. She has brought together many scattered notices. The old bells which remain are perhaps the only relics that have come down to us from mediaeval times just in the same condition as they left the hands of their maker; yet the wantonness of those who are their custodians is lessening their number yearly. Miss Peacock does not profess her short paper to be in any sense an exhaustive catalogue of the picturesque dreams of our forefathers regarding bells. It will, we trust, some day or other form the nucleus of a volume. It is worth noticing that, when Bishop Grosstête died, bells are said to have rung of their own accord to welcome him to Paradise. It is also related of Peter Morrone, who was so unwisely elected as Pope under the title of Celestine V., that, in his hermit days, a bell in the heavens was wont to summon him to his devotions.

SLAVICA.

Sbornik za narodni umotvorenja, nauka i knizhnina. Kniga X. "Miscellany of Popular Traditions, Art, and Literature. Vol. X." This work has just been issued at Sofia, under the auspices of the Bulgarian Minister of Public Education. It is full of interesting and valuable matter. We may especially call attention to Prof. Dragomanov's article on the legends of the dualistic creation of the world, which he thinks may have come into Bulgaria through the Armenian Paulicians. In this learned article the legends are illustrated by parallels among many other peoples. Dr. Bobchev writes on the characteristics of Bulgarian popular epic poetry. Somewhat similar is Dr. Matov's treatise on the traditional literature of the country. Mr. K. Shapkarev, who has done so much good work by his edition of the Bulgarian ballads, here gives us a paper on folk-medicine in Macedonia. Of singular interest are the extracts from the autobiography of the Polish writer, Czajkowski, who died in 1886. Czajkowski became a renowned Turkish general under the name of Sadyk Pasha; but although in the service of the Turks, he has left some scathing remarks on the brutalities which he witnessed inflicted by them upon the Bulgarians. It is a pity that these memoirs are not translated into some Western language, to help to dispel some of the pleasing myths we hear. The extracts are communicated by Mme. Suchodolska, his daughter. The "Travels in the Valleys of the Struma, Mesta, and Bregalnitsa" are important, as showing us the present condition of Macedonia. Besides other articles which cannot be enumerated here, we have valuable collections of songs and legendary ballads, which are still being gathered throughout the country; tales, travels, &c., and collections of words for a new Bulgarian dictionary. Let us hope that this much-desired work will make its appearance before long. There has been some talk of one by Slaveikov; but as yet there are no signs of it, and that of Bogorov, the only one of any significance in the field, is sadly deficient.

W. R. M.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BARLON, A. Guizot. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
 BRUNETIERE, Ferd. L'Évolution de la poésie lyrique en France au XIX^e siècle. T. 2. Paris: Hachette. 8 fr. 50 c.
 DUQUET, A. Paris: Thiers, le plan Trochu et L'Hay. Paris: Charpentier. 8 fr. 50 c.
 EISENBERG, L. Johann Strauss. Ein Lebensbild. Leipzig: Breitkopf. 4 M.
 HAYARD, H. La France artistique et monumentale. T. V. Paris: Lib. illustrée. 25 fr.
 POIRIER, Jules. Campagne du Dahomey 1892—1894. Paris: Charles-Lavauzelle. 7 fr. 50 c.
 RIDDER, A. de. Catalogue des bronzes de la société archéologique d'Athènes. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
 ROCHER, Jules. La politique économique de la France. Discours parlementaires. Paris: Flammarion. 4 fr.
 ROMAN, J. Inventaires et documents relatifs aux joyaux et tapisseries des princes d'Orléans-Valois (1889—1481). Paris: Leroux. 7 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- JELSKI, I. Die innere Einrichtung d. grossen Synedrions zu Jerusalem u. ihre Fortsetzung im späteren palästinensischen Lehrhause bis zur Zeit des R. Jehuda ha-Nesi. Breslau: Koebner. 2 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- DAHN, P. Erinnerungen. 4. Buch. Würzburg—Sedan—Königsberg. 1. Abth. (1893—1870.) Leipzig: Breitkopf. 10 M.
 DREXLER, K. Das Stift Klosterneuburg. Wien: "St. Norbertus." 8 M. 40 Pf.
 HEID, K. Das Kreuzkantorat zu Dresden. Leipzig: Breitkopf. 3 M.
 JUBAINVILLE, H. d'Arbois de. Etudes sur le droit celtique. T. 1. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
 NUNTIATURBERICHTE aus Deutschland. S. Ath. 1572—1585. 2. Bd. Berlin: Bath. 25 M.
 RÜOMER, D. P. Leontius v. Byzanz, e. Polamiker a dem Zeitalter Justinians. Würzburg: Gubel. 2 M.
 SPANNOCCHI, H. Relazione delle cose di Polonia intorno alla religione (1698). Ed. I. Korzeniowski. Krakau. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 STIEDA, W. Hansisch-venetianische Handelsbeziehungen im 15. Jahrh. Rostock: Stiller. 5 M.
 WAAL, A. de. Die Apostelgruft ad Catacumbas an der Via Appia. Freiburg-i.-B.: Herder. 6 M.
 ZACHORKE, H. Geschichte des Metropolitan-Capitels zum hl. Stephan in Wien (nach Archivalien). Wien: Konegen. 9 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- KITTE, E. Die Gastropoden der Schichten v. St. Cassian der süd-alpinen Trias. 3. Teil. Wien: Holder. 14 M.
 STÜDER, Th., u. E. BANNWARTH. Cranio helvetica antiqua. Leipzig: Barth. 80 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ADAMEK, E. Die Räthsel unserer deutschen Schülernamen. Wien: Konegen. 4 M.
 DESENBURG, Joseph. Œuvres complètes de Saadia le Fayyomite. T. VI. Les Proverbes. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
 GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 9 Bd. 2. Lfg. Bearb. unter Leitg. v. M. Heyne. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STOWE MISSAL AND ST. PATRICK.

Bardwell Rectory, Bury St. Edmunds: Sept. 24, 1894.

1. After a lapse of thirteen years I have again handled and examined the Stowe Missal, this time at leisure, in the rooms of the Royal Irish Academy at Dublin.

In my edition of it (Oxford, 1881) I assigned the earlier handwriting therein to the ninth century. Since then it has been edited in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy (vol. xxx., part i., pp. 145, 146) by Dr. MacCarthy, who claims a far earlier date for it, supporting Dr. Todd's views, attributing the earlier handwriting to the seventh century, and assigning the later handwriting, that of Moel Caich, to circa 750.

The following is a complete list of the compendia scribendi used in the older handwriting of the Stowe MS., which I have now been able to compile for the first time. I omit the well-known ancient abbreviations for per, pro, m, um, christus, deus, dominus, ihesus, omnipotens, sanctus, spiritus, and also abbreviations used only in titles, refrains, or the concluding formulae of prayers, where a whole sentence is often indicated by a single word:—

| | | |
|-----------------|---|-------------------------|
| apos | = | apostoli or apostolorum |
| b | = | bene |
| c | = | con |
| confes | = | confessorum |
| c | = | cum |
| e | = | ergo |
| ee | = | esse |
| H | = | enim |
| ÷ | = | est |
| o | = | ejus |
| h | = | hoc |
| hc | = | hunc |
| h' | = | autem |
| h | = | haec |
| ig | = | igitur |
| l | = | vel |
| mart | = | martyrum |
| nc | = | nunc |
| nr | = | noster |
| omupo ompo } | = | omnipotens |
| q | = | qui |
| q | = | quam |
| q | = | quod |
| qm | = | quoniam |
| qsu | = | quiescimus |
| s | = | secundum |
| s | = | sicut |
| s | = | sed |
| sr | = | super |
| t | = | tibi |
| tc | = | tunc |
| uirg | = | uirginum |
| uirt | = | uirtutum |
| or : or 3 | = | ue or us. |

* These abbreviations are not facsimiles, but the best representations of them that can be made in ordinary type.—ED. ACADEMY.

Even the words of eucharistic institution—"Hoc est enim corpus meum"—are written in this abbreviated fashion: h ÷ H corp : mm.

Now I venture to assert, from personal knowledge, that it is impossible that such a list of contractions, &c., could be found in a sixth- or seventh-century Irish MS. Bishop Reeves has described an Irish MS. that certainly dates from the eighth century; and having myself studied more than one Irish MS., assigned with certainty or probability to the ninth century, I add that it is not without hesitation that one can assign a MS. so full of abbreviations even to the ninth century. To the ninth century, however, the older text of the Stowe Missal may belong, and Moel Caich's handwriting must be placed about a century later.

The dates printed on p. 2 of my edition of the Corpus Missal (London, 1879) must be cancelled. They rested on a very slight acquaintance with the MS., and on an undue deference for the opinion of Dr. Todd.

With regard to textual accuracy, in the "Ordo Missae," in addition to the points where Dr. MacCarthy has corrected me, the following should be noted where he has followed instead of correcting me:

P. 238. MacCarthy, p. 193, "sancte Brendini ora pro nobis" is repeated, the first invocation being probably of the Abbot of Clonfert (ob. 577), and the second of the Abbot of Birr (ob. 573).

P. 244, l. 18, MacCarthy, p. 225. For "hoc" read "autem," though the scribe has employed an ambiguous form of abbreviation.

In the "Ordo Baptismi," apart from unimportant misreadings, which I hope to correct some day in a second edition, but which are not of sufficient importance to tabulate in your columns:

P. 217, l. 15. Omit the second "accepto."

P. 218, l. 18, for "utrius" read "alterius."

It is unnecessary to remind readers of this letter that the date of a MS. has no reference, at least backwards, to the date of the composition of its contents. Some parts of the Stowe Missal are very ancient, some are medieval. It is not easy entirely to disentangle the two.

2. In recently turning over the Trinity College copy of the Irish MS. Liber Hymnorum, I came across the following hymn in honour of St. Patrick, which has not, to my knowledge, been published before, and which escaped even Mr. Whitley Stokes's keen eye when collecting every scrap of information about St. Patrick for vol. ii. of his edition of the Tripartite Life (London, 1887). It records simply that St. Patrick's native country was Britain, and that God sent him to Ireland, where he was eminently successful in converting the Irish to Christianity. Contractions have been expanded, and punctuation has been modernised. In the MS. it is written in long lines of sixteen syllables each:

[Fol. 32v.] Incipit ymnus sancti patricii.

"Ecce fulget clarissima patrici sollempnitas in qua, carne deposita
 felix transcendit sidera,
 Qui mox a pueritia
 diuina plenius gratia
 uitam cepit diligere
 dignitatis angelice.
 Hic felici prosapia
 natus est in britannia, perceptoque baptisate
 studet ad alta tendere.
 Sed futurorum prescius clemens et rector dominus hunc direxit apostolum
 hibernie ad populum.
 Erat namque hec insula
 bonis terrae fructifera
 sed cultore idolatra mergebatur ad infima.

Ad hanc doctor egregius adueniens patricius predicabat gentilibus quod tenebat operibus.
 Confluebat gentilitas
 ad eius sancta merita, et respuens diabulum
 colebat regem omnium;
 Gaudebatque ee liberum
 remeare ad patriam
 qua serpentis astutia
 ollim expulsa fuerat.
 Quapropter, dilectissimi,
 huius in laude presulis
 psallamus christo cordibus
 alternantes et uocibus,
 Ut illius suffragio
 liberati a uitio perfruamur in gloria uisione angelica
 Laus patri sit, et filio, cum spiritu paracrito qui sue dono gratie
 misertus est hibernie."

The metre, with its rough rhyme, is that of some of the oldest Irish hymns. The absence of any allusion to the miraculous, and the silence as to the Roman mission of St. Patrick, are also signs of great antiquity.

F. E. WARREN.

THE SEPTUAGINT VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

Athenæum Club: Oct. 15, 1894.

You will allow me a little space in which to reply to Prof. Swete's letter, the courtesy of which is what might have been expected from him. He, at all events, cannot be brought under the category of those who have neglected the Septuagint; and the admissions that he makes in regard to it are the best support to what I have been trying to urge in these letters to the ACADEMY.

That the true Septuagint has suffered from Origen's eclectic method of exegesis is precisely what I have said over and over again. Notwithstanding, however, all that it has suffered, my contention is, and remains the same as that of some of the most learned men who have discussed the issue from Capelli downwards, and notably of our own forgotten and neglected Whiston: namely, that the Septuagint is incomparably inferior to the Masoretic text.

In the first place, so far as we know, it was a perfectly honest translation; in the second place, it has an unrivalled authority in having been used and quoted by Christ and His Apostles, by Josephus and Philo, and by all the ante-Hieronymian Fathers, and of having been accepted by both the Eastern and Western Churches for 1500 years. On the other hand, the Masoretic text must be acknowledged to be most corrupt, unless every canon of criticism is to give way to the kind of dogmatic assertion which pervades the Hebraist apologists from Buxtorf to Keil. It is not only corrupt, but it is ultimately dependent on a single copy; and that copy was, it would seem, edited in the second century A.D. with a distinct anti-Christian purpose, and was wilfully altered and sophisticated in every way. It is in proof of this that I have covered some very wide reading and written many letters. If it be true, I cannot understand or explain Prof. Swete's position and attitude. If it be not true, I should welcome some kind of reply from him, because I can assure him that some very good scholars indeed profess to agree with me.

If the view I have maintained be right, there is serious ground of complaint against the authorities, who have continually pressed upon us the paramount authority of the Masoretic text, and who forced it upon the Translation Committee. Fortunately they were not able to force the translation itself upon either Church or Chapel, and it remains a monument of learning vitiated by an incurable fault: namely, that it is taken from an anti-Christian, a sophisticated and garbled text.

No doubt it is much simpler to take a text ultimately based on a single MS., which has few variants, and which requires very little editing, to make a fetish of it, and to lean upon it for support, as Jerome leaned upon his Jewish teachers, and as the Reformation leaders leaned upon theirs; but that is not the modern method, nor is it satisfactory. If the Masoretic text be a garbled one, it has no business to be made the Rule of Faith of the Christian world. That seems to me to be plain. Our only alternative is to turn to the Septuagint; and it appears to me that, when we look at what has been done to secure an adequate edition of the Septuagint both at Oxford and Cambridge during the last sixty years, we cannot admit that it has been commensurate with the great endowments possessed by the Divinity chairs at both universities. Mr. Swete goes back to 1826 to Holmes and Parsons for his justification. Many years have passed by since then, and Germany can show Ewald and Dillman and Wellhausen and many others. Of course the work is difficult and laborious, not because the apparatus criticus is scanty, but because it is so largely inaccessible. I need not, in replying to a practised Biblical scholar like Prof. Swete, mention some of the materials; but other people not so practised ought to know. Let me quote some of them. Josephus, Philo, the Samaritan Version, the Book of Jubilees are each independent texts. Then the Versions anterior to Origen's Hexaplar text: the Coptic, the Ethiopic, the Itala, and the Peshito. Lastly, the quotations in the pre-Origenian Fathers. Of none of these, as everybody knows, has there been in England a critical edition or collection; and, why not? Largely because those who could have done the work have in some cases been left in obscurity, and in others have been neglected in favour of what has been deemed the supreme qualification of a Divinity professor: namely, that of knowing Hebrew, and being tied to the Hebrew tradition.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. It would be preposterous to disparage a knowledge of Hebrew in a Biblical critic; but what I venture to say is, that for the settlement of the text the Septuagint ought to be the standard authority, and the Hebrew ought to be used only in elucidation; and that in order to settle the Septuagint text a knowledge of Coptic or Aethiopic or Syriac is as important as a knowledge of Hebrew.

What I am anxious to see, and what I hope Prof. Swete is also anxious to see, is an adequate and a critical edition of the Septuagint, worthy of so important a book as the Bible, and worthy of nineteenth-century scholarship. When we have obtained this, we shall be in a position to prepare a new translation of the Old Testament. This means a great deal more, however, than the collation of the Greek codices and the synopsis of their readings which is now in progress, and which, to speak plainly, seems largely a wasted work. What we need is not a text justified by the largest number of readings, but a text cleared of interpolations and changes. In such a work it is no use correcting, say, the Vatican Codex by the Alexandrinus and the Sinaiticus. That would be like passing water through a dirty filter in order to purify it. We must go to independent sources.

Meanwhile, I may be wrong; but I prefer to learn what the Bible really says from the Codex Vaticanus, which has apparently preserved the original Septuagint readings better than any other MS., than from the text which the Masorets inherited from the sinister hands of Rabbi Akiba and his men; and I hope to continue the parable I have been preaching so as to apply it to those Books of the Bible not yet dealt with. I wish this work had been done by more competent hands; and I heartily hope that Prof. Swete may use his influence to secure, what I am sure would be the wish of every Biblical scholar who has not some preconceived theory to support: namely, an adequate edition of the Septuagint at the earliest possible date.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

In Sir Henry Howorth's last letter on the Septuagint (No. VIII.) he endorses Mr. Espin's belief that a certain passage in the Book of Joshua was suppressed by the Jews for reasons of their own. This passage is omitted in the Hebrew, but found in the Septuagint between verses 59 and 60 of chap. xv. There seems, however, no good reason for imputing to the Masoretes intentional suppression.

In the Student's Commentary it is pointed out that this passage dropped out of the Hebrew Bible, "probably because some transcriber passed unawares from the word 'villages' at the end of verse 59 to the same word at the end of the missing passage."

May I take this opportunity of expressing a hope that Sir Henry Howorth's interesting and valuable letters on the Septuagint, in the ACADEMY, may be collected and published separately, when completed?

GEORGE HANBURY FIELDING.

THE FETHARD CASTLE AND BAGINBUN INSCRIPTIONS.

Dublin: October 13, 1894.

Being in Ireland for a short time I decided to revisit Fethard, in order to make inquiries on the spot concerning the authenticity of these inscriptions. I must confess that I was somewhat prejudiced against their antiquity: the similarity of the Carew and the Castle legends, however it might be explained, could not but appear a very extraordinary circumstance; and the statement of the Rev. James Graves, than whom no one knew the topography of Hook Point better, could not, I felt, be summarily laid aside.

I am glad to be able to say that the result of my inquiries has been to satisfy me of the genuineness of both inscriptions. As this is an important matter, I give here the evidence on both sides which I have obtained, leaving it to those interested in the matter to weigh it for themselves.

I have already given Mr. Graves's statement in the ACADEMY of September 29, and now give the only other statement I have heard in support of the forgerly side of the question. The Parish Priest of Fethard (the Rev. W. Synnott) writes:—

"There is a tradition that a young gentleman, on a visit with the Protestant minister of Fethard, spent half of a day in cutting the inscription on the [Baginbun] stone, and that he was seen by the people working on the land. It afterwards became covered with earth. About twenty years ago the owner of the field removed the earth, and it is exposed ever since."

The evidence which I have obtained in favour of the authenticity of the stones is derived from three independent witnesses whom I interviewed. I ought to premise that, remembering the amiable but unsatisfactory Hibernian trait of answering a question in a manner calculated rather to please the inquirer than to impart accurate information, I thought it better to elicit the facts required by encouraging the persons interviewed to talk freely rather than by carrying on a systematic cross-examination. The following is a summary of the information thus obtained, sifted from a mass of absurdly irrelevant matter relating to Cromwell, Dunbrody Abbey, &c.

that they are quoted to be condemned: but would it not have been better, especially in a treatise of only seventy-six pages, to have passed them over in silence? It seems invidious, when two such editions as Thilo's and Schenkl's exist, to force upon the reader's notice, and far oftener than either of them, a third which is inferior to both. In contrast with this is Mr. Summers' careful avoidance of mentioning the names of the "three English scholars who in modern times have given their attention to the text of Valerius." Where are we to find their contributions, if the one English writer who has thought it worth his while to give much time and trouble to this somewhat neglected poet, considers it no part of his duty to mention them by name? Was Jortin among them? If he was, what a loss not to be told it, with book and page for easy reference.

Another point on which I could have wished for more information is the question of the MSS. Mr. Summers has here contented himself with the very meagre statement that Vatican 3277 is practically our sole guide for Valerius' text. Are we to infer then that the MS. of I., II., III., IV. to 317, which Poggio rediscovered in 1417, always agrees with Vatican 3277? or that when it differs it is wrong? Scholars, nowadays, are not contented to take these matters on trust. They expect a more detailed statement; such, for instance, as Plessis has given in his étude sur Properce. Besides, every year makes some difference in our attitude to this question. For instance, the new readings in the Madrid codex of Manilius, which I have recently published in the Classical Review, materially alter the position in which the Gemblacensis stands to the other MSS. And, if Plessis were to republish his Study on Propertius, he would have to take account of the Holkham MS., only lately discovered, and exhibited in facsimile, by Mr. Postgate, in vol. iv. of the Transactions of the Cambridge Philological Society.

Having uttered thus much of, I hope, not carping or unfair criticism, I wish to express my gratitude to Mr. Summers for a treatise which, on the whole, is the best introduction known to me for the study of the poem. Very few points are neglected, and some of them are treated with quite as much fulness as is required in a work not meant to be exhaustive. Chap. i. discusses the name and country of the poet: Schenkl's view that Setinus (the fourth of his five names) points to the Spanish Setia, not the Italian, is thought doubtful. Then follows a discussion on the point whether the poem was ever completed. Our MSS. stop short at viii. 467. Heinsius (whom Bährens follows) thought that Valerius left a complete epic; Thilo and Schenkl held that it was left incomplete. Mr. Summers sides with these, and swells the list of contradictions in the matter of the poem and cases of unconnectedness in the text itself by two pages of new instances. He finds another argument in the fact that Statius, who seems to have studied and imitated Valerius, has no allusions to the adventures of the heroes on their return voyage. Then comes a discussion on what was the intended length of the poem. Mr. Summers has no doubt that it was meant to reach the normal length of twelve books, and ingeniously suggests that the missing four last books were occupied with legends that brought the Argonauts into connexion with Italy and Rome. Chap. ii. is taken up with tracing parallels in Statius, Silius, and the Orphic Argonautica. Blass thought it possible that Valerius imitated Statius, not Statius Valerius. This view, in itself not very probable, is rejected by Summers on reasonable grounds: particularly from the fact that in many, or most of them, the language of the later poet (Statius) seems to be a refinement or expansion of the language of the earlier. As to Silius, I cannot but agree with Mr. Summers that it is very doubtful whether he was influenced by the Argonautica at all; yet, among the instances which his industry has accumulated on p. 12, there are some resemblances which look hardly accidental—e.g., uisa cremari, gemmis accensus. But on this point I would refer to Ganzenmüller's admirable monograph on the Pseudo-Vergilian Ciris, which quite places this whole question in a new and enlarged light. The influence of Valerius on the so-called Orphic Argonautica has, so far as I know, not been touched before; it has an interest of its own, and is a satisfactory voucher for the diligent care with which our author's Study has been prepared. In chap. iii. the question is raised: what is Valerius' indebtedness to his predecessors? Mr. Summers here starts some points which are interesting, but can hardly be settled—e.g., he thinks that Valerius read not only Apollonius' Argonautica, but the same Scholia upon them which we still possess—a view surely open to criticism. He also believes that Varro Atacinus' earlier Argonautica, a poem in four books, which seems to have been a paraphrase of Apollonius, was furnished with a learned commentary. This certainly does not follow from the words of Probus on Georg. ii. 126; but there may be other grounds for so believing. Nor can Mr. Summers here claim to have gone very deeply into the matter. Indeed, such hunting of Quellen is specially German, and he was perhaps wise, in presenting Valerius to English readers, to dwell on this point more superficially than in the rest of his book. The examination of Valerius' dependence on Apollonius is more careful, and highly instructive. Three main heads are drawn (1) direct translations, (2) similes, (3) episodes which are mainly, if not entirely, due to Apollonius' poem. Then comes a comparison of the two poets in their treatment of the same theme. Valerius, he thinks, has the advantage in arrangement and verisimilitude, in the superiority of his characters, and in the absence of those digressions which in all probability gave Apollonius' epic more than half its popularity in Greece and wherever the Greek language was known. But I cannot agree with Mr. Summers in his apparent preference for Valerius in his treatment of Love: he finds this superiority in the gradual and artistic development of Medea's passion. But the natural frigidity (which he admits) of the Roman always makes itself felt, nor can it be said that his genius led him instinctively to the exhibition of female passion. Whereas, from the moment when Apollonius' Medea appears upon the scene, it is perceptible that the poet has reached the point of real interest, the vital centre of his art. Till then he is the mere narrator; thenceforward he is identified with his heroine, and steps, so to speak, on the stage in his own person. Thus, for most readers, the third book of Apollonius ranks with the very few masterpieces of ancient art in which the feminine passion is delineated—with the Medea of Euripides, the Ariadne of Catullus, the Dido of Vergil. It would not have occurred to me, I confess, to compare this pathetic and unsurpassed figure with the fine, but comparatively cold, drawing of Valerius. And the same criticism holds, though in a less degree, of the two poems as wholes. Valerius is pleasing, no doubt, but he is not often great. Apollonius, in spite of his tiresome antiquarianism and frequent digressions, leaves an impression of something not only unique in manner and tone, but inimitable in its peculiarities of diction and rhythm.

Of the remaining five chapters, the fourth and fifth are occupied with a comparison of Valerius with Vergil, with Homer, Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius (in which last poet Summers traces a particular resemblance to the Argonautica, which I fail to see), Horace, Ovid, Lucan, and Seneca. Some of these resemblances are probably accidental, and I should think it certain that Valerius borrowed nothing whatever from Ennius or any early poet of the Republic. Chap. vi. gives some account of the grammar and syntax; chap. vii. of the metrical peculiarities (by the way, why is the Rheinisches Museum styled the "Rhenische Museum"?). Chap. viii. deals with the literary merits of the poem; and chap. ix. proposes a number of conjectural emendations. ROBINSON ELLIS.

SOME BOOKS ON ASSYRIOLOGY.

Die altpersischen Keilschriften. Part I. By F. H. Weissbach and W. Bang. (Leipzig: Hinrichs.) This is another of the useful volumes which have appeared in the "Assyriologische Bibliothek" of Delitzsch and Haupt. Dr. Weissbach is already favourably known to Assyriologists by his edition of the Neo-Susian or "Medio" inscriptions, and Dr. Bang is a Zendic scholar of repute. The volume which they have just brought out together begins with a short introduction, which is followed by a compact account of the various monuments of Old Persian cuneiform hitherto known, together with a list of the works in which they have been published; then comes the main part of the book, consisting of a transliteration of the texts into Latin characters, and a translation of them into German. The work has been carried out with great care, and the student has before him in a short and handy form everything that he wants to know about the inscriptions of Darius Hystaspis and his successors. At the end of the book is the cuneiform text of the great inscription of Behistun.

The Flora of the Assyrian Monuments and its Outcomes. By E. Bonavia. (Westminster: Archibald Constable.) Dr. Bonavia has produced a very interesting book. The subject is one which he has made peculiarly his own, as is well known to readers of the Babylonian and Oriental Record, as well as to those who attended the Ninth Oriental Congress. But it is only the earlier part of the volume that is devoted to Assyrian botany. A considerable part of it relates to what the title calls "its outcomes"—that is to say, the superstitions and artistic devices connected with the trees of Babylonia and Assyria. The book appeals quite as much to the folk-lore and the historian of ornament as it does to the student of the monumental flora. What gives the work a special value is the profusion of illustration with which the letterpress is accompanied. The careful drawings made from the monuments enable the reader to follow Dr. Bonavia's arguments and criticise the conclusions at which he arrives. As for his identifications of the fruit-trees figured in the Assyrian sculptures, they are obviously right in the majority of instances. And even where we may be disposed to put a query, the fault is not Dr. Bonavia's, but that of the unskilful workmanship of the Assyrian artists. It is only when we come to his theories about the sacred tree and the horns which he believes to have been attached to it, that it becomes more difficult to agree with him. That there was more than one sacred tree in Assyrian—or rather Babylonian—religion and art is indisputable, and it is also indisputable that foremost among these trees was the date-palm. But whether Dr. Bonavia's explanation of the so-called "sacred cone-fruit" is correct, is open to doubt; at all events it seems to us that Dr. Tylor's theory is preferable, which sees in it the male inflorescence of the date-palm. Until, however, the Assyrian ritual texts have been fully translated, the question can never be settled satisfactorily. The horns which Dr. Bonavia discovers in the representations of the sacred tree and elsewhere, and which he considers were used as a protection from the evil eye, are still more questionable. There is no mention made of such horns either in the religious texts or in the lexical tablets, a fact which would be inexplicable if they occupied the place in Assyrian thought which Dr. Bonavia assigns to them. Moreover, he is altogether in error when he argues, against Count d'Alviella, that a certain object often figured upon the seals represented the horns of an animal rather than a thunderbolt. We have epigraphic authority that the god who carries it is Ramman, the god of the air, whose weapon was the thunderbolt; and a double trident is borne by Bel-Merodach in the bas-relief, now in the British Museum, which depicts him in the act of overthrowing the dragon Tiamat. That this trident represented the "lightning" we know from the inscriptions. The fact is that Dr. Bonavia has been as much led astray by his theory of the use of prophylactic horns as Mr. Goodyear has been by his theory of the lotus—a theory which is admirably criticised in one of the chapters of Dr. Bonavia's book. We must not forget to say that the book is beautifully printed, and that we have found in it only one misstatement of fact. This is where he states that "Assyriologists, and among them Prof. Hommel, say that Assyria became the teacher of Egypt." What Prof. Hommel does say is, that the primitive culture of Egypt was derived from Sumerian Babylonia, centuries before Assyria had any existence.

Susa: eine Studie zur alten Geschichte Westasiens. By A. Billerbeck. (Leipzig: Hinrichs.) In a short preface Prof. Delitzsch draws attention to the fact that this book has been written by an officer in the army, and that consequently the description it contains of the campaigns of Assyrian and Elamite kings, as well as of the military capabilities of the country in which they were carried on, acquires a particular value. Col. Billerbeck has in fact produced a volume of great interest and value both for the Assyriologist and for the historian. He has occupied a new field of study, the ancient kingdom of Susiana having never before been the subject of a monograph; and though he does not profess to be an Assyriologist himself, he has gone to the latest and best sources of information, and has made use of them with tact and judgment. Considering the important position held by Elam in the ancient East, and the influence which it exercised on the fortunes of Babylonia and Assyria, it is strange that the work has never been undertaken before. But it could not have fallen into better hands. The geography of the country, the topography of Susa itself, and the history of the Elamites, so far as it has been recovered from the cuneiform monuments, are all treated in detail. The last struggle of Elam for independence, and its final conquest by Assyria, are graphically described. The volume is accompanied by an excellent map.

The Populations of the Fatherland of Abraham. By G. Bertin. (Goldridge.) The publication of this little book makes us realise once more what a loss Assyriology has sustained in Mr. Bertin's untimely death. It is a short and popular account of the various populations which inhabited Babylonia or were brought into contact with it in the age of Abraham. Akkadians and Sumerians, Kassites and Elamites, Vannites and Phoenicians are all passed under review, and chapters are added on the Parthians, Greeks, and Hittites. Most of the information has been obtained from the decipherment of the cuneiform inscriptions with which Mr. Bertin was so well acquainted. The general public, for whom the book is intended, cannot be better advised than to read and study it.

OBITUARY.

PROF. TERRIEN DE LACOUPERIE.

It is with extreme sorrow that we record the death of Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie, which took place at Fulham, on October 11. For some time past his naturally robust constitution had been impaired—through overwork, disappointed hopes, and other troubles. He succumbed, at the last, to a severe attack of typhoid fever. Within a month he would have completed his fiftieth year.

Albert Terrien de Lacouperie was born in Brittany in 1844. He used to say that his ancestors migrated from Cornwall some time in the seventeenth century; and the name looks like the corruption of a Cornish one. The latter portion of it is, of course, a territorial appellation. While quite a child he was taken out to Hong-kong by his father, who was a silk merchant; and it was there that he learned to speak Chinese as fluently as his mother tongue. There, also, he became acquainted with the English language and with English life, for which he always entertained a sincere admiration. When a complete reverse of fortune compelled him to return to Europe, and the establishment of the Republic made residence in his native country distasteful to one of his Legitimist traditions, he determined to settle in England, and ultimately became a naturalised British subject.

It was, we believe, about 1874 that he was first introduced to Dr. S. Birch, at the British Museum, where he ever found staunch friends in Prof. R. S. Poole and Prof. R. K. Douglas. He likewise obtained valuable support at the India Office from the late Sir Henry Yule (who was peculiarly fitted to appreciate the varied character of his erudition), and from Sir George Birdwood. Another friend of old standing was E. Colborne Baber, of the Chinese Consular service, whose premature death he greatly mourned. At one time he was professor of Indo-Chinese philology at University College, and delivered an inaugural lecture there to a distinguished audience. But no emolument was attached to this chair. From one or two foreign Universities he received honorary degrees, from the Musée Guimet a temporary grant, and from the Académie des Inscriptions one of its pecuniary prizes. Only last year an ineffectual effort was made to obtain for him a pension on the Civil List. Now that he is gone, it is pitiful to remember the domestic anxieties which so often interfered with his literary labours. His whole life may be described as a silent protest in favour of the organised endowment of research in this country. Let us hope that some means may yet be found to honour his memory by providing his widow with a modest sustenance.

The main task to which Terrien de Lacouperie devoted himself was the application of scientific methods to the mythological history of China. Hitherto the old books of the Literati have been either accepted as history, or despised as fable. His aim was to discriminate between the true and the false, by the touchstone of comparative criticism; and to rescue the origins of Chinese civilisation from absolute darkness, by bringing it into contact with the oldest civilisations of Western Asia. For such a task Terrien de Lacouperie possessed some exceptional qualifications. With an unrivalled knowledge of the literature both ancient and modern, he combined a sufficient acquaintance with the general principles of philology, archaeology, and ethnology. It would be difficult indeed to find anything, that could throw light upon his special subject, of which he was ignorant. In addition, he had a positive genius for discerning and tracing remote resemblances. One faculty, however, was unfortunately absent: and that was the art of lucid exposition, which is so rarely lacking in a Frenchman. While many inferior men are able to make their theories appear much more certain and simple than they really are, Terrien de Lacouperie never succeeded in convincing the public that his researches had any value at all. Even those few who were competent to follow his arguments confessed themselves deterred by the strangeness of his assumptions and the obscurity of his style.

We must be content here to mention some only of Terrien de Lacouperie's works, of which the general character will appear from their titles. In 1880, he published Early History of Chinese Civilisation, to which Prof. Douglas contributed a preface, and which contained the first announcement of his discovery of a prehistoric contact between China and Western Asia. Then followed The Languages of China before the Chinese (1887), giving an enormous amount of linguistic and ethnical information about the tribes of the Far East. In 1892, he redeemed a promise made in his earliest volume, by interpreting the mysterious Yih-King, or, "Book of Changes," as embodying a key to the derivation of Chinese writing from that of Babylonia—a conclusion which the Rev. C. J. Ball has been able to support from the point of view of Akkadian palaeography. Only this very year there has appeared Western Origin of Early Chinese Civilisation (Asher), which includes not only his numerous papers on the subject in the Babylonian and Oriental Record, but also five new chapters giving a summary of his results, and a chronological table of the several foreign influences brought to bear upon China between 2283 B.C. and 220 A.D. Almost contemporaneously, Mr. Nutt brought out a book of his on the beginnings of writing in Central and Eastern Asia, in which he distinguishes no less than 450 different kinds of script. Meanwhile, he had completed his Catalogue of Chinese Coins in the British Museum, and had been for just eight years editor and chief support of the Babylonian and Oriental Record. How much he has left in manuscript, and how far he had advanced with his undertaking of a History of Early China for Messrs. Macmillan & Co., we know not. At the present moment, we can only think with inexpressible regret of the stores of erudition and the single-minded devotion to learning that have gone with him to the grave. It is certain that his task can be taken up, where he dropped it, by no successor.

J. S. C.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NAMES OF THE PLANETS IN THE "PISTIS SOPHIA."

London: Oct. 6, 1894.

It may interest some of your Assyriologist readers to know that, in the fragmentary "Texts of the Saviour" which appear in the Coptic MS. known as the Pistis Sophia, the names of the seven planets are given in what seems to be very corrupt Sumerian.

The passage I refer to (p. 362 Copt. of Schwartz) runs thus:—"Hearken yet again! I will tell you their incorruptible (ἀφθαρτος) names, which are these. Orimuth is the name of Kronos, Munichuaphôr of Arès, Tarpetanuph of Hermes, Chôsi of Aphrodite, Chônbal of Zeus." For Orimuth, I would read Amar-ud "circle-of-day"; for Tarpetanuph, Ni-bat-anu "death-in-heaven"; and for Chôsi, Kusu, the wolf- or dog-star Sirius, sacred to Istar (Jensen, Kosm. der Babyl., p. 151), Aphrodite's prototype, or perhaps Khusin, the "star of the chariot," which Prof. Sayce (Astron. and Astrol. of the Babyl.) has already identified with a planet. As for Munichuaphôr, I can make nothing of it, save that the first three syllables seem to correspond with Munacha, which Mr. Brown (Euphratean Stellar Researches) identifies with Capricorn; nor do I know of any Sumerian word that in any way corresponds to Chônbal, the last syllable of which seems to be the Semitic Bel.

The work in question, of which I gave a short account in the Scottish Review for July, 1893, is almost purely magical; and I am afraid its authority will go but a very little way towards settling the vexed question of the names of the Babylonian planets. But it is curious to notice how the tradition of Sumerian as the magical language par excellence lingered on into at least the third century A.D., even though it proved less "incorruptible" than our author supposed it to be.
F. LEGGE.

INDIAN JOTTINGS.

THE following have been elected honorary members of the Asiatic Society of Bengal: Sir William Henry Flower, Dr. Edward Frankland, M. Louis Pasteur, Sir George Gabriel Stokes, Mahamahopadhyaya Chandrakanta Tarkalankar, (in recognition of his eminent services to Sanskrit learning), Prof. Theodor Noeldeke, and Dr. Reinhold Rost.

SIR ALFRED CROFT, director of public instruction in Bengal, has been elected president of the Buddhist Text Society, in succession to Sri Narendra Nath Sen; and Mr. G. A. Grierson has been elected one of the vice-presidents.

DR. M. A. STEIN, Principal of the Oriental College, Lahore, has completed his catalogue of the Sanskrit MSS. of the Mahârâja of Kashmir, preserved in the Raghunâtha Temple at Jammu. The Raghunâtha Temple Library contains nearly 4,500 MSS. in all departments of Sanskrit literature, collected chiefly under the rule of the late Mahârâja in Kashmir, Benares, &c. The catalogue fills about 420 pages quarto. It contains an English introduction, giving an account of the history of the collection and brief notices of the most important new texts which have been discovered, a classified list of the MSS. (in Sanskrit) filling 240 pages, and extracts from over 200 MSS. of special interest. Full indices of authors and works are added. Messrs. Luzac & Co. are agents for the sale of the publication in England.

GURMUKH SINGH, Alexandra reader at the Oriental College, Lahore, proposes to publish a new edition of the Granth, or scripture of the Sikhs, together with an English translation and etymological notes. His own version of one of the hymns thus compares with that of Dr. Trumpp:

GARMUKH SINGH.

"The sky is for my plate, the sun and moon are made for lamps, and rows of stars are as it were for pearls.

The air of sandalwood serves for incense, the wind is for my fanning fly-brush, and all the rows of blooming forests for flowers."

DR. TRUMPP (p. 19).

"The dish is made of the sky, the sun and moon are made the lamps, the orbs of stars are, so to say, the pearls.

The wind is incense-grinding, the wind swings the fly-brush, the whole blooming wood is like the flames of the lamps."

The metaphors throughout refer to the Hindu ceremony of arti, which consists in waving a dish, with lamps, pearls, incense, &c., before images of the gods by night.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPERE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Oct. 6).

MISS LOUISA MARY DAVIES in her presidential address dealt with "Domestic Relationship as portrayed by Shakspeare." The Indian summers of Shakspeare's life was spent at home; and it is pleasant to think that in his untiring work in London, his careful adding of house to house and field to field, and even his trivial law suits with less thrifty neighbours, he had ever in his mind the hope of settling down for the afternoon and evening of his life among the old scenes of his boyhood, and in the enjoyment of the tranquil pleasures that are found at their brightest under a man's own vine and fig-tree. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh; and it would be an interesting task to analyse carefully all the pictures of domestic relationships which Shakspeare has drawn for us, but the limits of a presidential address do not admit of this. Prospero, Shylock, and Polonius are sufficient to show that Shakspeare depicts his fathers with remarkable minuteness. The tragically splendid figure of Lear must be left on one side as too magnificent a study in itself to make a sectional part of any other. In each of the other three there is devotion to a daughter, though such tender love may have been obscured by a selfish absorption in study, an over-mastering love of money, or a cut-and-dried worldly ambition. Prospero's character was reflected with softened brilliance in Miranda's; traces of the subtle training by example are found in Jessica's after-doings. Polonius seems to have been truly loved, and even revered, by his children; so we must conclude that his faults were condoned at home, or overshadowed by the kindness of his nature. Shakspeare's mother-pictures are fewer and more sketchily drawn, and inferences unfavourable to the mother of his children have been more than hinted at by some writers. We are shown, it is true, the agony of Constance, the tigerish mother-love of Queen Margaret, the humiliation of Gertrude, the heroism of the Roman Volumnia, the weakness of Lady Capulet, and the serious steadfastness of Hermione; but they are not drawn with such a finely-pointed pencil as Prospero, Polonius, and others. Indeed, in some cases it is hard to avoid the suspicion that the poet was glad to have the mothers well out of the way before he took the sons and daughters in hand. In King John, Hamlet, Henry VI., and Coriolanus they are demanded by the exigencies of the plot or the facts of history; but they do not get his best or, at any rate, his most sustained effort. If his son Hamnet had lived, the world might possibly have lost the tragedy of Constance; but we might, in its place, have gained such a living, breathing picture of frank young English manhood as would have made us richer in ideals than we even now are. Cloten and his mother, without a redeeming spot of goodness between them, must be mentioned, if only for the reason that they are among the most hideous of Shakspeare's undoubted creations. Time failed to deal with the other domestic relationships. Horatio and Antonio should not be absent from the friends' corner at the fireside; while Adam and Charnian in their respective places should have words of appreciation for the unswerving loyalty and truth with which they sustain their part in what, from the home point of view, is one of the most important of domestic relationships.—Mr. S. L. Gwynn was elected president for this (the twentieth) session, when the following plays are to be considered:—"Romeo and Juliet," "Edward III.," "John," "The Taming of the Shrew," "Every Man in his Humour," "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado about Nothing," "Thomas, Lord Cromwell." The hon. sec. (9, Gordon-road, Clifton, Bristol) will gratefully acknowledge the receipt of anything for the Society's library, which now consists of 589 volumes.

FINE ART.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Scarabs. By Isaac Myer. (David Nutt.) This is a pleasantly-written and well-printed little book which contains no new information, but puts together in a readable and useful form what has been said by others about scarabs and their uses. Prof. Flinders Petrie and Mr. Loftie have more especially been laid under contribution. Egyptian scarabs naturally occupy the foremost place in the book; but there are also chapters on Phœnician and Etruscan scarabs, as well as upon the forged scarabs in the manufacture of which the modern native of Upper Egypt so much excels. Those who want to know what the scarab signified, and why it was buried with the mummy, how it was made and of what materials it is composed, how its age is to be detected and its historical value determined, cannot do better than consult the pages of Mr. Myer's work.

Ethnographische Analogieen. By Sofie von Torma. (Jena: Costenoble.) In 1875 Miss von Torma began a series of important archaeological excavations at Tordosh, near Szászváros, in Hungary, which yielded results of the highest interest. Ill-health has hitherto prevented her from publishing a detailed account of them; the little book which lies before us, however, is a sort of introduction to it, containing a statement of her views as to the origin and relationship of the culture, the relics of which she has brought to light. Briefly stated, Miss von Torma believes that this culture goes back to pre-Semitic Babylonia, that cuneiform characters can be detected on the objects she has discovered, and that the early Dacians to whom she would attribute them practised a worship of the Sun-god analogous to that of the Chaldeans. These conclusions are supported with great erudition—even folk-lore is cited as a witness for them; and the reader will notice many interesting facts and shrewd remarks. But he is not likely to be converted to the main hypothesis of the book. It is a far cry from Hungary to Babylonia, and the analogies quoted by Miss von Torma are not sufficient to bridge over the distance either of space or of time. It is difficult to believe that the marks on the Hungarian potsherds referred to by the authoress really go back to cuneiform signs, and it is a mistake to suppose that the so-called swastika was ever known to Babylonia or Assyria. It is a characteristic of early Aegean art, and its presence on the Hungarian antiquities indicates a relationship between them and the pre-historic art of the Eastern Mediterranean. The curious parallels between some of the vases discovered by Miss von Torma and the so-called "owl-headed" vases of Hissarlik point in the same direction, as does also the resemblance of certain figures she has excavated to the Trojan "idols" of Dr. Schliemann. Whatever view, however, we may take of her theories, Miss von Torma has done good service to archaeological science by her researches, and the volume she has just published will stimulate a further examination of them. We hope it will not be long before the long-promised magnum opus makes its appearance.

THE RESCUE OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY.

University College, Gower-street.

THE destruction of the monuments and historical record of Egypt, which is going on year by year, threatens soon to leave no history to be further recorded. Every season sees buildings ruthlessly destroyed for the sake of materials, and a host of objects plundered by natives from towns and cemeteries in order that they may be scattered without name or record among the tourist flock. Even those objects which pass into museums have lost most of their importance and of their value in losing all record of their original place and circumstances. The laws of Egypt may be excellent in theory, but in practice it is perfectly well known that hundreds of persons join in this destruction—yet no man is punished for it.

There is then the most urgent need of saving all that is possible by complete and careful excavation, in which the history and meaning of every object shall be traced and recorded as it is found. To any person not acquainted with the practical work of excavation it might seem that, so long as things are not actually destroyed, it does not matter whether it be an Arab or a trained observer that may find them. But there is generally more history involved in the position and details of a discovery than in the object found. Fossils are worth but little if their strata are unknown. More scientific material has been destroyed than preserved in many, or most, excavations, even by Europeans and Egyptologists.

To avoid this prevalent system of mere plundering, trained hands and heads are needed to observe and to record. Such is the scarcity of suitable workers at present, that even the Egyptian Government is obliged to leave most of its excavation in the hands of natives, from whom no record is ever obtained or expected. Before we begin the salvage of the wreck, which is breaking up fast before our eyes, we need men who can put information in a permanent form as they discover it. In short, scientific training is indispensable.

But, at present, there is no means of acquiring such training. The Egyptian Government is concerned to keep its antiquities safe, and to find objects for its museum. The French school—liberally maintained by the French Government—is concerned with the desirable work of copying, reading, and publishing inscriptions. The Egypt Exploration Fund is concerned with excavating temples and finding big monuments, and it has never supported any students.* There are no regular and independent workers of any nationality, except one or two English. No public body does anything for the great subject of the civil life, archaeology, and anthropology, of the country; and there is no place where any student can get training in the very elements of archaeological research.

There is no lack of men willing to do such work: several have applied to me since Egyptology has been at last publicly established at this college. My earnest wish is to be able to encourage such workers, and to see a sound British school of scientific archaeology established in Egypt. The first and most essential step is to be able to help men who come forward, and to cover their expenses and costs of work. The historical results and the objects procured by excavation in any reasonably good site are an ample justification of the cost incurred. I have never had cause to repent of a single year's work out of the twelve years that I have spent: not one year would I have back again at the price of losing its results.

The aim of the Egyptian Research Account, which is now established, is not to undertake great clearances or exploits in the country; but to fit men for work of the highest class archaeologically, and at the same time to benefit our knowledge and our museums as far as may be, by means of their excavations. The organisation of such a scheme should grow up spontaneously to fit the requirements and opportunities that arise; and no cut and dried rules could be suitable to begin with. Until the need for other regulation may arise, the present position is that Mr. Hilton Price, the director of the Society of Antiquaries, attends to the financial side of the receipt and custody of all subscriptions. A cordial response has been made in many quarters, and over £200 has been received or promised in the last three months; but certainly far more than that is needed, and could be spent with full advantage in the coming winter. Audited accounts will be annually rendered, and a publication of the work done will be given to each subscriber. As to the actual work, I hope to superintend two or three able and suitable men, whose expenses may be thus partly provided for, and who will work in the neighbourhood of my own private excavations year by year. A very good ground for such work has been applied for this year, and without any cost whatever to the Research Account. I shall be on the spot, carrying on my own work, and be able to help and guide the new enterprise. Whatever antiquities may be found in this work for the Research Account will be divided amongst public museums, with due regard to the localities of subscribers; but no money will be used in carrying great blocks which might as well remain in Egypt.

The public should bear in mind that the English Government—true to its traditions—does nothing whatever for work in Egypt. The Prussian, French, and Italian Governments have each executed grand and invaluable work by scientific expeditions and publications. The only action of the English Government has been to place English students at a great disadvantage in Egypt, by giving up all common international rights of theirs to compete for any public appointments connected with antiquities. The credit of English work, must therefore, in face of these serious disabilities, rest entirely on the public spirit of individuals, according to the usual English system. I hope to see arise in the next few years an active and capable school of English workers, who will worthily develop the study of the life and civilisation of Egypt which was so ably begun by Wilkinson; but such a school must depend upon the support of the intelligent public, which will, I trust, be freely given to such an enterprise.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS will publish, before the end of the present month, Albert Moore: his Life and Works, by A. Lys Baldry, with ten photogravures and seventy other illustrations. There will also be a large paper edition.

THE fourth annual exhibition of the Society of Portrait Painters opened this week at the New Gallery. The only full-length portrait ever painted by the late Bastien Lepage is included, together with contributions from Bonnat, Cormon, Besnard, von Lenbach, &c.

THE Institute of Painters in Oil Colours will, as usual, have two private views—on Thursday and Friday next—of their exhibition which opens to the public in the following week.

THE exhibition of artistic posters at the Royal Aquarium, of which we have already made mention, will be opened on Wednesday next, October 24. The committee have succeeded beyond their hopes in obtaining a representative series of French examples; for it appears that there already exist collectors of posters.

DURING Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week, there will be on view at the Mansion House the twenty-fifth annual exhibition of turning in wood and stone, submitted in competition for the prizes offered by the Turners' Company. The prizes will be distributed by the Lord Mayor on Friday, at 3 p.m.

UNDER the auspices of the Egypt Exploration Fund, M. Edouard Naville will deliver a public lecture on "Deir el Bahari," on Friday next, October 26, at 8 p.m., in the rooms of the Zoological Society, 3, Hanover-square.

THE well-known French archaeologist, M. le Capitaine Émile Espérandieu, has reprinted in separate form (Paris: Leroux), his "Recueil des Cachets d'oculistes romains," which appeared in various recent numbers of the Revue Archéologique. After a very brief introduction, the author gives the texts, with all proper explanations, of the oculists' stamps hitherto discovered, to the number of more than two hundred; and he greatly increases the value of his work by full and careful indices. We miss only a classified list of places, showing geographical distribution. A rough survey suggests that the stamps have been found most commonly in Gaul, and not seldom in Britain; while in Illyricum, Italy, and the south and east of the Empire, they hardly appear at all—a result which might suggest some interesting reflections. In general, M. Espérandieu has produced a very valuable little pamphlet.

THE STAGE.

RICHEPIN'S "VERS LA JOIE."

Paris: Oct. 15, 1894.

"VERS LA JOIE," five acts in verse, by M. Richepin, was produced the night before last at the Théâtre Français. The author calls his play a conte bleu; and, in the words of the prologue,

"La scène est au pays des chansons populaires
Au temps des légendes enfin!
Mais, pour les sentiments et les vocabulaires,
La scène est en France, aujourd'hui."

To describe this curious mixture of phantasy and reality I must begin as of old. Once upon a time there lived a young orphan Prince (M. Le Bargy), whose life was full of ennui. The court beauties found no favour in his eyes, and his physicians-in-ordinary could discover no remedy for the strange malady with which he seemed to be afflicted. A large reward and honours were freely promised to whoever should cure the Prince, and from far and wide came doctors, soothsayers, and wise men. Among them was an old shepherd, Bibus by name (M. Got), who said that he would cure the Prince if the latter would only follow him. "But where will you lead me to?" asked the Prince. "Vers la joie!" exclaims Bibus, as the curtain falls on the first act.

In the next scene we find the Prince and his two faithful councillors—Truguelin (M. Coque-lin cadet) and Agenor (M. Leloir)—attired as shepherds. Bibus tells them that joy consists in a life of freedom and work under the blue sky, far from court life and luxury, and that pure love is the crowning joy of all. So they take service on the farm of the goodman Nanet (M. Langier), who, with his buxom wife Thérèse (Mme. Pierson) and pretty daughter, Jouvénette (Mme. Baretta), live as happy as the day is long. The Prince's melancholia soon vanishes: he finds his new life full of interest, and, need I add, falls desperately in love with Jouvénette, which leads to a charming idyl in the third act. But the course of true love is interrupted by the sudden appearance of a rival in the person of Bruin (M. Paul Mounet), a brutal peasant; and the conte bleu is on the point of becoming a conte rouge, when the Prince's incognito is discovered. In the meanwhile war has broken out with a neighbouring power, and the regenerated Prince leads his troops to victory, and returns to marry Jouvénette, who, under the royal mantle of velvet and ermine, still wears the same rustic garments as when the Prince Charmant wooed her. The Prince on ascending the throne announces to his assembled subjects, that the old order of things is to be changed: equality and justice shall reign supreme, and happiness everywhere. Then the curtain falls as Bibus concludes philosophically:

* Is this statement precisely true? Unless we are mistaken, the Egypt Exploration Fund supported at one time two students, one from English, the other from American, subscriptions.—ED. ACADEMY.

"Que les vieilles chansons ne sont pas mensongères Tout va droit, quand les rois épousent les bergères."

It would be difficult to say whether M. Richepin's fairy tale will please the public, and also whether it will not seem a little too prolix: three acts would have sufficed for so simple a story. The audience of the première was favourable; but nothing is more deceptive than such a judgment. At all events, to many, and particularly to those who are tired of psychological dramas and symbolical plays, this new version of an old story, told in pretty rhymes and sonorous verses, may prove a thing of joy.

Actors, scene-painters, and costumiers have done their utmost to assist the poet in his trip to fairyland; and the ensemble is worthy of the high reputation of the Comédie Française. The part of the worldly-wise old shepherd Bibus, played to perfection by M. Got, is the last creation of this gifted artist before his final retirement from the stage on which he made his début fifty years ago. M. Got will retire honoured, regretted, and respected by all, not only in France, but also in London, where he has ever been a welcome guest.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

MUSIC.

THE programme of the second Richter Concert included three pieces of an exceedingly light character: Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," orchestrated by Berlioz, Smetana's "Lustspiel" Overture, and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite. The Berlioz transcription is clever, but there are many works far more deserving of a place in a "Richter" programme. The French composer scored Weber's pianoforte piece merely because a ballet was indispensable for the performance of "Der Freischütz" at the Paris Opéra in 1842, and he preferred to have music by Weber rather than the ball-scene from his own Symphonie Fantastique, as was suggested.

The Smetana Overture is bright, and the Grieg music very fresh and pleasing. But after Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, "most musical, most melancholy," these light strains jarred somewhat upon one's feelings. The Schubert was magnificently rendered, and also Beethoven's No. 4 in B flat. Wagner was only represented by his "Flying Dutchman" Overture, with which the concert commenced.

MR. FRANZ RUMMEL gave the first of two pianoforte recitals on Wednesday afternoon at St. James's Hall. The programme opened with Bach's "Italian" Concerto. The playing was excessively neat, especially in the first two movements; in the Finale the lights and shades were not altogether satisfactory. In Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 81a) the pianist showed excellent touch and technique, and yet the reading was not free from a certain coldness. In Schubert's great Fantaisie (Op. 15), Mr. Rummel did not seem at his ease: the difficulties are enormous, but if the music is to be thoroughly enjoyed, they should not be felt by the listener. A selection of short pieces by modern composers offered to the pianist many opportunities of displaying his dexterity and intelligence: he was at his best in the music of Bilow, Raff, and Liszt.

THE eleventh season of the Hampstead Popular Concerts of Chamber Music will commence on Friday, November 9. There will be in all six concerts, at the last of which (February 22, 1895) Dr. Joachim will be the leading violinist; at the others, Messrs. Gompertz and Ludwig will lead alternately, as in previous years. On December 7, Dvůřák's new Quintet for strings will be given.

A SELECTION FROM MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOKS.

FOUR SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.

IN DEMAND AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON beg to announce that the large First Edition of CHILDREN OF CIRCUMSTANCE,

in 3 vols., being exhausted within a week of publication, a SECOND EDITION is in the press.

The SECOND EDITION is nearly exhausted of Mrs. OLIPHANT'S New Novel.

A HOUSE IN BLOOMSBURY,

in 2 vols.

A SECOND EDITION next week.

"The latest book of which people are talking."—THE WORLD.

A NEW NOTE. In 2 vols.

"The writer's uncommunicativeness respecting his or her name will excite a good deal of public curiosity, for the book is a really remarkable one."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The large First Edition of FRANKFORT MOORE'S New Novel,

ONE FAIR DAUGHTER,

in 3 vols., being exhausted, a SECOND EDITION is ready this day.

The ATHENÆUM says: "Readers who wish to keep themselves well posted in the ways of the world and enterprise should not fail to read 'One Fair Daughter.'"

"It is a brilliant and most amusing book, and may be enjoyed unreservedly."

ATHENÆUM.

THIRD AND CHEAP EDITION OF

THE GREEN BAY TREE: A Tale of To-day.

By W. H. WILKINS and HERBERT VIVIAN. In cloth gilt, 6s.

[This week.

 This novel has been very successful in three-volume form.

With 186 Full-page and other Illustrations by the Author.

THE LAND OF THE SPHINX. By G. Montbard,

Author of "Among the Moors." In royal 8vo, richly gilt cloth and gilt top, 16s.

[This day.

New Volume of the Poets and the Poetry of the Century.

HUMOUR, SOCIETY, PARODY, AND OCCA-

SIONAL VERSE. Edited by ALFRED H. MILES. With Biographical and Critical Notices by leading Critics. In fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s.; in buckram gilt (Limited Edition) 6s.; and in parchment in complete sets of 10 vols. (Edition limited to 100 copies), £3 15s. net.

A NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

THE CRIMSON SIGN: A Narrative of the Adventures of Mr. GERVASE ORME, sometimes Lieutenant in Moutjoy's Regiment of Foot. By Dr. S. R. KEIGHTLEY. In cloth gilt, with frontispiece, 6s.

"The author is to be congratulated on the success which he has achieved. It is powerfully told, and holds the interest of the reader from first to last. The descriptions are extremely graphic, narrated with great, though unstrained force; his portrayal of Macpherson is little short of a creation."

GLASGOW HERALD (First Review).

MRS. J. KENT SPENDER'S NEW NOVEL.

A MODERN QUIXOTE. In 3 vols. [This day.

"It is full of good writing, and a glowing imagination is everywhere present. The character of the hero is a noble one, and the episodes are all of them interesting."

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

MRS. ALFRED MARKS' NEW NOVEL.

DAVID PANNELL. A Study of Conscience.

In cloth gilt, 6s.

"David Pannell is a study of very considerable ability. The analysis of his character is very near being masterly. Written with considerable distinction of style."—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

HUTCHINSON & CO. PATERNOSTER ROW.

Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co.'s Announcements.

NEW NOVELS.

TWENTIETH THOUSAND.

MY LADY ROTH. A Romance of the Thirty Years' War. By STANLEY WEYMAN, Author of "A Gentleman of France." With Eight Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The author holds us spellbound. A book more full of adventure and excitement it would be hard to find. For my part I grudged the summons to meals that kept me even for a bad quarter of an hour from these stirring pages."—The London Illustrated News, Oct. 13, 1894.

"We should be inclined to say that 'My Lady Roth' comes very near to being the best thing that Mr. Weyman has yet done, in which case it also comes very near to being the best modern historical romance. A novel which everybody must read and enjoy."—Speaker, Oct. 13, 1894.

"Equals if it does not surpass in charm, picturesqueness, and brilliancy its predecessors, 'A Gentleman of France' and 'Under the Red Robe.' The impression left on the mind is so vivid that it seems as if we had not read but lived through the scenes it presents."—Daily News, Oct. 15, 1894.

6,000 TONS of GOLD. A Romance of Hard Cash. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Is a wild romance of the discovery of gold. Bimetallists should find this portion of the exciting story of peculiar interest."—Saturday Review, Sept. 29, 1894.

"The extremely clever author has worked out the disabilities of a millionaire even more artistically. He has beaten Godwin wholly out of the field in the skill with which he has devised the plot."—Spectator, Oct. 6, 1894.

HALF A HERO. By Anthony Hope, Author of "The Prisoner of Zenda." New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Hope's best story in point of construction and grasp of subject; and his dialogue, free from the tricks of certain tours de force in which he has sacrificed everything else to dialogue, is virile and brisk."—Athenaeum, Sept. 29, 1894.

The Third Edition being almost exhausted, a Fourth is now in the press.

LOT 13. By Dorothea Gerard. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

BROOMIEBURN. Border Sketches. By J. Cunningham. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

SEETHING DAYS: a Romance of Tudor Times. By CAROLINE HOLROYD. Illustrated by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Uniform with "My Lady Roth." [Ready immediately.]

VERSE TRANSLATIONS from GREEK and LATIN POETS. By ARTHUR D. INNER, M.A., sometime Scholar of Oriel College, Oxford. Large post 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 7s. net.

"A really impressive translation of the famous hymn of Cleanthes... an extremely attractive rendering of an epigram of Claudian. There is much beside in the book that we should like to notice; but we must content ourselves with commending it to the wider public whom the author now addresses."—Spectator, Sept. 22nd, 1894.

SOCIETY in CHINA. Second Edition. An Account of the Everyday Life of the Chinese People—Social, Political, and Religious. By ROBERT K. DOUGLAS, Keeper of the Oriental Books and Manuscripts in the British Museum, Professor of Chinese at King's College. Demy 8vo, Mandarin cloth extra, with 22 Illustrations, price 16s. The Illustrations are in Colotype from Original Drawings by Chinese Artists, and from Photographs.

"Not only does Mr. Douglas's book supply a complete conspectus of the polity, institutions, manners, and sentiments of this petrified race, but it reviews clearly the history of foreign relations with China, and points a moral which British diplomatists would do well to lay to heart in future difficulties with China."—Times.

NEW STORY BOOKS.

THE SATELLITE. By the Hon. Eva Knatchbull-HUGHESSEN. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece, 7s. 6d.

CATHERINE. By F. M. Peard. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, with Frontispiece, 3s. 6d. [TIP-CAT SERIES.]

HOLYBERRY JANET. By Maggie Symington ("AUNT MAGGIE"). Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, with Frontispiece, 3s. 6d. [TIP-CAT SERIES.]

HAPPY GO LUCKY. By Ismay Thorn. Illustrated by A. Bauerle. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [ROSELEAF LIBRARY.]

THE REAL PRINCESS. By Blanche Atkinson. Illustrated by Violet and E. Holden. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [ROSELEAF LIBRARY.]

MOONBEAMS and BROWNIES. By Roma White. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Dainty 4to, gilt top, 2s. 6d. [DAINTY BOOKS.]

TOBY. By Ascott R. Hope. Illustrated by Edith Ellison. Dainty 4to, gilt top, 2s. 6d. [DAINTY BOOKS.]

MESSIRE. By Frances E. Crompton. Illustrated by J. Johnson. Dainty 4to, gilt top, 2s. 6d. [DAINTY BOOKS.]

LONDON: A. D. INNES & CO., 31 AND 32, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

"R. T. S." NEW BOOKS.

WALKS in PALESTINE. By Henry A. Harper, Author of "Illustrated Letters to My Children from the Holy Land." Illustrated by 16 Photographs taken by Cecil V. Shadbolt. New Edition. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d., cloth boards, gilt edges.

PICTURES from BOHEMIA. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By JAMES BAKER, Author of "A Forgotten Great Englishman," "Mark Tiltott," &c. With a Map and Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, 8s., cloth boards, gilt edges; 30s., morocco elegant.

A FORGOTTEN GREAT ENGLISHMAN: The Life and Work of Peter Payne, the Wycliffite. By JAMES BAKER, F.R.G.S., Author of "Pictures from Bohemia," &c. Illustrated. 5s., cloth boards.

FROM DARKNESS to LIGHT in POLYNESIA. With Illustrative Chan Songs. By the Rev. WYATT GILL, LL.D., Author of "Jottings from the Pacific," &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s., art linen boards.

THE MEETING-PLACE of GEOLOGY and HISTORY. By Sir J. W. DAWSON, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., Author of "The Chain of Life in Geological Times." With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s., art linen boards.

THE DAISIES of NAZARETH. By Hugh Macmillan, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., Author of "Bible Teachings in Nature," "The Oute Beautiful," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth boards.

AMONG the TIBETANS. By Isabella Bird Bishop, F.R.G.S., Author of "Unbeaten Tracts in Japan," &c. With Illustrations by Edvard Whymper. "Leisure Hour Library, New Series, No. 8." Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

PONDS and ROCK POOLS. With Hints on Collecting for, and the Management of, the Micro-Aquarium. By HENRY SCHERREN. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., art linen boards.

THE SANITARY CODE of the PENTATEUCH. By Rev. C. G. K. GILLESPIE. "By-Paths of Bible Knowledge, No. 21." Crown 8vo, 2s., cloth boards.

PRESENT DAY PRIMERS.

1. EARLY CHURCH HISTORY: a Sketch of the First Four Centuries. By J. VERNON BARTLET, M.A. 1s.

2. THE PRINTED ENGLISH BIBLE, 1525-1885. By the Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. 1s.

3. HOW to STUDY the ENGLISH BIBLE. By Canon GIRDLESTONE. 1s.

4. A BRIEF INTRODUCTION to NEW TESTAMENT GREEK. By Rev. SAMUEL G. GREEN, D.D., Author of "Handbook to the Grammar of the Greek Testament," &c. 1s.

5. A PRIMER of ASSYRIOLOGY. By A. H. Sayce, LL.D., Professor of Assyriology, Oxford, Author of "Assyria: its Princes, Priests, and People," "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," &c. 1s.

NEW ANNUAL GIFT BOOKS.

THE LEISURE HOUR ANNUAL.

Contains 812 pages, with Contributions from—S. R. Crockett, John Habberton, Author of "Helen's Babies," &c., Dr. Schofield, Miss I. F. Mayo, John Dennis, W. J. Gordon, Elsa d'Esterra Keeling, Lady C. Milnes Gaskell, Dr. Macaulay, Linda Villari, Frederick Langbridge, Myles Birket Foster, Helen Zimmern, W. J. Hardy, P. C. Stanning, J. M. Scott-Moncrieff, Richard Heath, J. Maclean Cobban, Dr. S. G. Green, Dr. Tristram, Helen Smetnam, Edward Whymper, T. S. Millington, Lewis Wright, James Ashcroft Noble, John Cordy Jefferies, Charles Dixon, Anne Fellowes, Sybil Maxwell, F. G. Aflalo, M. Betham Edwards, Agnes Crane, Hon. Roden Noel, John Munro, E. Nesbit, E. Thorneycroft Fowler, and many other popular writers. Price 7s. 6d. in cloth; or for Lending Libraries in two vols., 3s. 9d. each.

THE SUNDAY AT HOME ANNUAL.

Contains 628 pages of SUNDAY READING and Pictures. Something for every member of the household. STORIES by E. Everett Green, E. Bayd Bayly, Lily Walton, Leslie Keith, and others. Interesting Sunday Reading by Rev. A. R. Buckland, M.A., Archdeacon Sinclair, Richard Heath, Sister Ella, Mrs. Mayo, Dr. Hugh Macmillan, Dr. Dale, Dr. Maclean, Dr. Munro Gibson, Dr. Wm. Wright, W. J. Gordon, R. S. Ashton, B.A., Rev. G. Consins, Margaret S. Comrie, Rev. F. Hastings, Dr. Macaulay, Traversa Burton, Dr. A. Thompson, Mrs. Watson, Dora L. Woolnar, H. B. M. Buchanan, B.A., Rev. J. R. Vernon, M.A., Rev. F. Langbridge, M.A., Dr. S. G. Green, Dr. R. Glover, Dr. Edkins, John Telford, Richard Lovett, M.A., D. Carnegie, and many other well-known writers. This Volume is illustrated with Twelve Coloured or Tinted Plates, and some hundreds of other Pictures. Price 7s. in cloth; or for Lending Libraries in two volumes, 3s. 9d. each.

THE BOY'S OWN ANNUAL.

Contains 832 pages of interesting reading, illustrated by 12 Coloured or Tinted Plates and upwards of 500 other pictures. It contains LEADING STORIES by Paul Blaks, Jules Verne, George B. Perry, David Ker, A. N. Malan, G. Demage. SHORT STORIES by Ascott R. Hope, H. M. Panil, A. G. Munro, Dr. Reginald Horsley, Major J. S. Talbot, J. Macdonald Oxley, C. N. Creswell, and others. And many interesting Articles by Dr. Stradling, Dr. W. T. Greene, H. Clement Howden, Dr. Gordon Stables, Rev. R. D'O. Martin, W. J. Gordon, W. Watson, Surgeon-General R. F. Hutchinson, Edgar A. Smith, Somerville Gibney, C. Somerville Watson, Rev. William Cowan, and many other boys' favourites. 8s. handsome cloth; or for Lending Libraries, in two vols., 4s. each.

THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL.

Contains 832 pages of interesting and useful reading, profusely illustrated. It contains LEADING STORIES by Sarah Doudney, Sarah Tryter, Sister Joan, Anne Beale, SHORT STORIES by Ida Lemon, J. A. Owen, Ruth Lamb, Mary Hullah, Alice King, Mary Rowles Jarvis, Lily Watson, Louisa Menzies, and others. NEW MUSIC by Rev. C. P. Banks, M.A., Dr. J. Bradford, Hamish McCunn, Dr. W. H. Hunt, Myles B. Foster, and Natalie Jonathan; and a host of interesting Papers by the Countess of Meath, Sir Benjamin W. Richardson, M.D., "Medicus," Esther Palliser, Dora de Bleguère, Gertrude Haraden, Emma Brewer, H. B. M. Buchanan, Rev. C. H. Grundy, Sophia F. A. Catfield, Blanche C. Seward, James and Nanette Mason, "The Lady Dressmaker," Mrs. Brightwen, and many other writers. 8s., handsome cloth; or for Lending Libraries, in two vols., 4s. each.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY,
LONDON: 56, PATERNOSTER ROW, and all Booksellers.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1173.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN THE DAY OF BATTLE: a Romance. By J. A. Steuart, Author of "Kilgroom: a Story of Ireland," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

"A story of picturesque adventure, of moving accidents by flood and field. There is not a dull page in the three volumes. Narrative and descriptive power of a high order is shown in all; and the tale as a whole will be voted striking and absorbing in the extreme. The account of the hand-to-hand conflict with the treacherous Abram ben Aden stirs the soul like a trumpet."—Globe.

"A story of hairbreadth escapes by sea and land. . . . Amazing adventures detailed with picturesqueness and power."—Scotsman.

BY THE LATE PROFESSOR FROUDE.

THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD. By James A. Froude, D.C.L., &c.

Being the First Volume in the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. With Photogravure Portrait. Seventh Edition, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"No more interesting figure has appeared on the political stage in our days than Lord Beaconsfield, and there is no more eminent master of English style among us than Mr. Froude. The memoir of Lord Beaconsfield by Mr. Froude is assured, therefore, of favourable consideration from the public. There is something in Mr. Froude's account even of these years which will be new to Lord Beaconsfield's admirers as well as to his critics, and will contribute to the final estimate of his place in the annals of our generation."—Times (Leader), Nov. 1890.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL. Being the Ninth Volume of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. By STUART J. REID. With Photogravure Portrait, specially reproduced for the work from a crayon by G. F. Watts, R.A. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[In December.]

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF J. GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

1807—1892. By S. T. PICKARD. With Steel-plate Engravings. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

[Ready Nov. 10.]

An entirely new and authoritative biography based on the Quaker Poet's own letters and papers.

THREE NAPOLEONIC NOVELS by ALEXANDER DUMAS.

Never before translated. Each in 2 vols. uniform crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per volume.

THE COMPANY OF JEHU. | THE VENDEÂNS. | THE FIRST REPUBLIC; or, the Whites and the Blues.

LOW'S SERIES OF ORIGINAL NOVELS.

EACH IN ONE VOLUME AT 6s.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By William Black, Author of "A Daughter of Heth."

[Eighth Thousand.]

"The story is a delightful one. Indeed, it is long since Mr. Black has given us so much of his best as in these fascinating pages."—Speaker.

PERLYCROSS: A Tale of the Western Hills. By R. D.

Blackmore, Author of "Lorna Doone," &c.

[Thirteenth Thousand.]

"A noteworthy book. . . . In essence a study of rural life in south-western England."—Spectator.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A VIRGINIAN, IN THE

MEXICAN, INDIAN, AND CIVIL WARS. By General DABNEY H. MAURY. With Portrait. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

GENERAL GRANT, PERSONAL MEMOIRS

OF. New and Cheaper Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HEALTH AND CONDITION IN THE ACTIVE

AND THE SEDENTARY. By N. E. YORKE-DAVIES, Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London, M.R.C.S., Author of "Foods for the Fat," "The Dietetics of Obesity," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL. A Thousand Miles towards the Sun. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," &c. NOR-MANDY, BRITANY, PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. With 130 Illustrations. Cheaper Edition, demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

CLAUDIUS BOMBARNAC. By Jules Verne.

Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THERMODYNAMICS. Treated with Elementary Mathematics, and containing applications to Animal and Vegetable Life, Tidal Friction, and Electricity. By J. PARKER, M.A., Author of "Elementary Thermodynamics." With numerous Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A TEXT-BOOK OF MECHANICS AND HYDROstatics. By HERBERT HANCOCK, M.A., F.R.A.S. Mathematical Master in Bancroft's School, Woodford, London. With over 400 Diagrams. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

WORKS BY THE LATE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THE LAST LEAF. Illustrated by George W.

Edwards and F. Hopkinson Smith. Being a reproduction of the large Quarto Edition of the same Poem published nine years ago at £2 2s., and now produced in post 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, at 7s. 6d.

This volume contains a very interesting and characteristic letter (in facsimile) from the Author, dated July 12, 1891.

Uniform with Low's Standard Half-a-Crown Novels. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL.

OUR HUNDRED DAYS IN EUROPE.

OVER THE TEA CUPS.

A MORTAL ANTIPATHY. Fcap. 8vo, cloth,

2s.; paper boards, 1s.

BEFORE THE CURFEW, &c.: Occasional Poems.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE IRON GATE, and other Poems. With Steel

Portrait. 6s.

POETICAL WORKS. 2 vols., cr. 8vo, cl., 10s. 6d.

DR. HOLMES'S WORKS. Riverside Edition.

PROSE, 10 vols. POETRY, 3 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 31s. the set. Large-Paper Edition, 13 vols., £14 14s. net. Only a few copies remaining.

* * * This beautifully printed uniform edition embraces all the Prose and Poetical Works—each volume having been completely and finally Revised by the Author, with a New Preface to each volume, in 1891.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, ST. DUNSTON'S HOUSE, FETTER LANE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

| | |
|---|-----|
| MISS COBBE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY, by WALTER LEWIN | 321 |
| KUENSEN'S COLLECTED ESSAYS, by Prof. DRIVER | 322 |
| CANON ATKINSON'S MEMORIALS OF OLD WHITBY, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON | 323 |
| BAKER'S PICTURES FROM BOHEMIA, by W. R. MORFILL | 324 |
| EDWARD GARNETT'S POEMS IN PROSE, by ERNEST REYS | 325 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE | 325 |
| THREE CONCORDANCES | 326 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 327 |
| THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES | 328 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 328 |
| MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES | 328 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "IN ROSAE HONOREM," by ROBERT BROWN, jun. | 329 |
| OBITUARY: JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE | 329 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 329 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— The Septuagint, by Profs. Swete and Cheyne, and Sir H. H. Howorth; Ogham Inscriptions in Scotland, by C. H. Monro; The Newly Discovered Recension of the Gregorian Sacramentary, by Martin Rile; The Russian Name for a Betrothed Woman, by H. Krebs | 329 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 331 |
| MISS SIMON'S PRIMITIVE CIVILISATIONS, by Sir H. H. HOWORTH | 331 |
| OBITUARY: JAMES DARMESTETER, by J. S. C. | 333 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 333 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 333 |
| THE COLLECTED ESSAYS OF ERNEST CURTIUS, by F. T. R. | 333 |
| RECENT ARCHAEOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT, by Capt. H. G. LYONS | 334 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— Legionary Tiles at Carlisle, by F. Haverfield | 331 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 334 |
| RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SNEZLOCK | 335 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STODOL, 15, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

PRIVATE SECRETARYSHIP, or similar appointment, desired by a competent SHORTHAND-WRITER and TYPIST. Student of Oriental Archaeology. Excellent Testimonials and Press Opinions. Personal Reference to P.R.S. Salary moderate.—ALPHA, 15, Lanark Villas, W.

THE PROBLEM OF THE PYRAMIDS

SOLVED AT LAST.—Any Lady or Gentleman who has ever written about the Pyramids, and who has not already received a copy of "THE HIDDEN PYRAMID; or, the Mystery of the Great Pyramid Explained," will have a copy sent on sending name and address to J. J. WATKINS, 235, Kirkstall Road, Leeds.—In reply to inquiries about the above advertisement, Non-Writers, Sixpence, postage included.

EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.—The

ANNUAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL REPORT, edited by F. L. GRIFITH, B.A., F.S.A., and containing the Account of Egyptian Discovery and Research during the year 1893-94, with Maps and Illustrations, is now ready, price 2s. 6d.—Sold at the Offices of the EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND, 37, Great Russell Street, and by Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Bernard Quaritch, and Asner & Co., London.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY, 22, Albermarle Street, W.—The SIXTEENTH SESSION will OPEN on MONDAY, November 5th, at 8 p.m. The President, Mr. BERNARD BOWEN, will deliver the INAUGURAL ADDRESS on the subject, "AN ESSENTIAL DISTINCTION IN THEORIES OF EXPERIENCE."—H. WILSON CLARK, Hon. Secretary.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—

Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 49, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List.—115, Fleet Street, London.

IMPORTANT TO AUTHORS.

AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS PRINTED AND PUBLISHED on liberal terms.—Address ALPHA, care of 163, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET

(Opposite the British Museum),

Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

Catalogues on application.

CATALOGUE (No. 29) of SECOND-

HAND BOOKS. 32 pages. Upwards of 1,000 interesting items, offered at exceedingly moderate prices.—THOMAS THORNE, 40, Blackett Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 21 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

THE BRISTOL BOOK MART.

JAMES FAWN & SON, Queen's Road,

BRISTOL.—CATALOGUE (New Series, No. 15, gratis and post free, embracing Alpine—American—Archæology—Architecture—Armed Society—Blair's Grave by Blake—Bristol—British Association—Browning's Stratford—Camden Society—Chertsey Worthies Library—Cotman's Normandy—Derby Facsimile Society—Drama—Etchings—Fuller's Worthies Library—Fairford Windows—Gloucestershire Archaeological Society—Grady's Plato—Johns Society—Ireland—Jewell's Psephologies—Lecky—Leigh Hunt—Nature—Nineteenth Century—Notes and Queries—Norway—Paleontographical Society—David Scott—Somerset Archaeological Society—Stephens's Italic Monuments—Strutt's Sylva Britannica—Thronheim Cathedral—Welsh Literature—Westminster Review, &c.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments connected.

Telephone 579. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

BOROUGH of WEST BROMWICH.

The Corporation of West Bromwich require the services of a PRINCIPAL to undertake the general control of the Day and Evening Teaching in their Science School. The salary has been fixed at £300 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st April next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Municipal Technical Instruction Committee.

Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 1st December next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter.

T. GILBERT GRIFFITHS, Secretary.

The Institute, West Bromwich.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turin, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN, 30, HANOVER STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLE-

MEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Usher, Esq., of Norton, Middlesex; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgway, 34, Forchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

THE TONGUE of the BELLS. By

G. H. LONGRIGG, Author of "Sermons in Timber and Stone." With Illustrations by the Author. Fancy cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. net. "Charmingly quaint."—Chester Courant.

Chester: PHILLIPS & GOLDS. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW LIST.

ARROWSMITH'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL, 1s.

THE INDISCRETION of the DUCHESS.

By ANTHONY HOPE, Author of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

By ARCHIBALD FORBES, the FAMOUS WAR CORRESPONDENT.

CZAR and SULTAN. The Adventures of a British Lad in the Russo-Turkish War. By ARCHIBALD FORBES. Demy 8vo, 423 pp., cloth, 10s. 6d., 13 Illustrations. "To say that it is the work of Mr. Archibald Forbes is to say that it is thoroughly readable, and that its narrative is at once authentic and picturesque."—The Times. "An ideal book."—The Globe.

ARROWSMITH'S 8s. 6d. SERIES. Crown 8vo. Vol. XVIII.

Fifth Edition. Twelfth Thousand.

THE PRISONER of ZENDA. By

ANTHONY HOPE. "No tale of adventure in far-off mysterious countries surpasses in strange excitement this story."—The Times. "A book that will bring joy to all true lovers of Dumas," Athenæum. "Nothing short of a noble book."—Black and White. "The dash and galloping excitement of this rattling story."—Punch.

TWO NEW VOLUMES—ARROWSMITH'S BRISTOL LIBRARY.

Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

"Arrowsmith's Bristol Library is as popular as it is extensive." Belfast News Letter.

Vol. LX.

CONSCIENCE MAKES the MARTYR.

By S. M. CRAWLEY-BOVEY. "The story is well and powerfully told."—Liverpool Mercury. "As good a shillingworth of fiction as you can get anywhere."—The Gentlewoman.

Vol. LXI.

AN UNFINISHED MARTYRDOM.

By A. ST. JOHN ADDOCK. "It is a capital book for a railway journey or a winter's night."—The Scotsman.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., Ltd. And Railway Bookstalls.

THE BEST and CHEAPEST GERMAN GRAMMAR FOR SCHOOLS and COLLEGES.

NEW EDITION READY IN A FEW DAYS.

MEISSNER (MATTHIAS).—A NEW PRACTICAL and EASY METHOD of LEARNING the GERMAN LANGUAGE.

Twenty-third Edition, Entirely Revised, price 2s. 6d.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"How to learn languages? The solution of this problem can be nowhere better found than in the new and improved system of learning languages by M. Meissner."

British Journal of Commerce.

"Is certainly one of the best books on the subject in our language."—Gentleman's Journal.

NOTE.—Bona fide teachers who wish to examine this excellent grammar with a view of introducing it into their schools, will receive a free copy on application to

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

GERMAN BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 49, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HAGGARD.

THE PEOPLE OF THE MIST.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD

With 16 Full-page Illustrations by ARTHUR LAYARD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This story will maintain Mr. Haggard's reputation. It is told with a spirit that never flags and bristles with adventure."—Daily Telegraph.
 "A spirited tale of exploits well undertaken, troubles well met, and triumph well enjoyed. . . . Adventure crowds on adventure."—Globe.

NEW VOLUME OF CANON LIDDON'S LIFE OF DR. PUSEY.

LIFE OF EDWARD BOUVERIE PUSEY, D.D. By HENRY PARRY

LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D. Edited and prepared for publication by the Rev. J. O. JOHNSTON, M.A., Vicar of All Saints, Oxford, and the Rev. ROBERT J. WILSON, D.D., Warden of Keble College. (4 vols. 8vo.) With Portraits and Illustrations. Vols. I. and II., Fourth Edition, 36s. Vol. III., Second Edition, 18s.

NEW BOOK BY THE LATE CANON LIDDON.

CLERICAL LIFE AND WORK. A Collection of Sermons, with an Essay on "The Priest in his Inner Life." By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE HISTORY of MARRIAGE, JEWISH and CHRISTIAN, in RELATION to DIVORCE and CERTAIN FORBIDDEN DEGREES. By HERBERT MORTIMER LUCKOCK, D.D., Dean of Lichfield. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE REPOSE of FAITH. By the Rev. ALEXANDER J. HARRISON,

B.D., Lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society; Author of "Problems of Christianity and Scepticism," and "The Church in Relation to Sceptics." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CHIPS from a GERMAN WORKSHOP. By F. MAX MÜLLER, K.M.

New Edition, in 4 volumes. Vol. I., RECENT ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

THE BOOK of CHURCH LAW. Being an Exposition of the Legal Rights and Duties of the Parochial Clergy and the Laity of the Church of England. Revised by Sir WALTER G. F. PHILLIMORE, Bart., D.C.L., and G. EDWARDES JONES, Barrister-at-Law. Seventh Edition. Thoroughly Revised and Corrected. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

FROM EDINBURGH to the ANTARCTIC: an Artist's Notes and

Sketches during the Dundee Antarctic Expedition of 1892-93. By W. G. BURN MURDOCH. With a Chapter by W. S. BRUCE, Naturalist of the Barque "Balena." With 2 Maps. 8vo, 18s.

"Mr. Murdoch's diary is full of vivacity. His account of life and adventure in southern ice-fields is novel and vivid, and his illustrations are often very impressive."—Times.

BIMETALISM. By HENRY DUNNING MACLEOD, M.A., Author of "The Theory and Practice of Banking," &c. Second Edition. 8vo, 5s. net.

"We cannot but welcome a tract which contains in its first ninety pages a clear historical summary of the monetarist opinion of over two centuries, and in its second portion a strong exposition of the case of common sense against its very active antagonists."—Times.

"We have been many times asked to say which was the best book on this modern yet very ancient craze, and have never hitherto been able to give a satisfactory reply. It can now be given. Mr. Macleod has furnished in this small work, which is only a portion of his learned and in many ways admirable treatise on the Theory of Credit, a whole armoury of facts and reasonings with which to slay the monstrosity. . . . Mr. Macleod is beyond cavil the most learned student of Political Economy of our time."—Investors' Review.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. WALFORD.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith,"

"One Good Guest," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"We have here a novel that is the equal of the author's well-known and popular 'Mr. Smith,' which means that it is very well worth reading."—Observer.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HORNUNG.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "A

Bride from the Bush," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The Unbidden Guest" is bold in conception and tender in treatment. . . . The book has an excellent and a most effective moral, and many will be disposed to think it the best story which its author has produced."—Athenaeum.

IN the VELDT: Stories and Sketches of Life in the Diamond Fields and in the Veldt, South Africa. By "HARLEY." Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d., sewed.

"A golden harvest."—National Observer.

POEMS. By Mrs. PIATT, Author of "An Enchanted Castle," &c.

With Portrait. 2 vols., small crown 8vo, 10s.

"Has not her genius been honoured by a hundred pens?"—Athenaeum.

Now ready. Price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE—NOVEMBER.

AN ARRANGED MARRIAGE. By DOROTHEA GERARD, Author of "Lady Baby," &c. Chaps. I.-IV.

"HOW to MAKE the MOST of LIFE." By Sir BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON, M.D., F.R.S.

AFTER a YEAR. By S. CORNISH WATKINS.

A LABOURER and HIS HIRE. By E. CHILTON.

A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN of the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. (From the Verney MSS.) By LADY VERNY.

HE and SHE. By Mrs. FAIR.

OUR CASTLE in SPAIN. By MAY KENDALL.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
 NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

ELLIOT STOCK'S

NEW VOLUMES OF
DRAMA AND VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 5s.

QUEEN ELIZABETH

AND EARL LEICESTER.

A Drama in Five Acts. By WALTER INGLISFIELD.

In tasteful crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE OLD STRADIVARI, and Other Dramatic Sketches.

By HILARION, Author of "The Premier's Secret," &c.
 "A modest, restrained, but captivating collection of stories, sketches, and pieces intended for public reading."
Morning Leader.

In crown 8vo, beautifully illustrated and bound,
 price 4s. 6d.

SEA SPRAY, and Other Poems.

By JEANNIE BEDNALL.

"The roll in her sea verses, the joyous lilt in her 'Spring' ones, and the bravery of 'Mabel,' yield distinct pleasure."—Morning Leader.

In tasteful crown, cloth, price 5s.

TREASURES OF THE DEEP,

and Other Poems.

By ROBINSON ELLIOTT.

"In 'Treasures of the Deep, and Other Poems,' one discovers a new poet of the Lake school. Acquaintance with Wordsworth and Coleridge and Southey gives one no distaste for the simpler yet seemingly quite as heartfelt rhymes of their present-day successor. The writer has evidently a rich store of lake and fell legend and tradition at command."—Liverpool Daily Post.

In fcap 4to, tastefully printed, and appropriately bound in cloth extra, price 5s.

THE FLUTE OF ATHENA,

and Other Poems.

By REUBEN BRADLEY.

"Above the average. The verses contain unmistakable signs of true feeling and thought, very well expressed."
British Weekly.

In tasteful royal 16mo, price 3s. 6d.

SONNETS OF THE

WINGLESS HOURS.

By EUGENE LEE-HAMILTON, Author of "The New Medusa," "Imaginary Sonnets," &c.

"Mr. Lee-Hamilton follows the model of Petrarch. His sonnets show careful finish and no small skill."
Saturday Review.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. In fcap 8vo,
 price 2s. 6d.

THE ISLET O'ER THE SEA,

and Other Poems.

By H. H. With Introductory Note by Rev. J. MURRAY MITCHELL, LL.D.

"The versification is flowing and melodious, and the allegory is perfectly sustained throughout."
Morning Leader.

In crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

A CHRISTMAS TALE,

and Other Poems.

By ELLEN E. GILLET. Collected and Edited by her Sons.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d.

SEVEN LOVE SONGS,

and Other Lyrics.

By ELLIS WALTON (Mrs. F. Percy Cotton).

In tasteful fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

THEMES and VARIATIONS.

By Mrs. JAMES GLENNY WILSON.

In crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

WHISPERS FROM THE THRONE, and Other Verses.

By WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

LONDON:
 ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

will be Enlarged without Increase of Price, with the NEW VOLUME, commencing with the NOVEMBER PART.

NOW READY, Price 1s. 4d.

Which Contains the following Special Plates:—

1. PHOTOGRAPHY. (Frontispiece.) "Wooling," by Professor C. WÜNNENBURG.
2. ETCHING (Extra Plate), "The Vale of Avoca," by F. WALKER, A.R.P.E.
3. WOOD ENGRAVING (Unbacked Page), "Christ the Comforter," by JAMES TISSOT.

Among the CONTENTS of the NOVEMBER PART are—

- JAMES TISSOT and his "LIFE OF CHRIST." By R. H. SHEPARD. With 7 Illustrations.
- "WHEN AUTUMN'S YELLOW LUSTRE GILDS the WORLD": a Retrospect. By J. E. HODGSON, R.A.
- ART in the THEATRE: ART in the BALLET. By C. WILHELM. With 4 Illustrations by the Author.
- SOME NOTED WOMEN-PAINTERS. By HELENE L. POSTLETHWAITE. With 7 Illustrations.
- ARIEL'S SONG to FERDINAND. Illustrated by C. Ricketts.
- A MEMORABLE VISIT to LA VERNÉ. By EDWIN BAILE, R.I. With 7 Illustrations by the Author.
- ENGLISH "ARTS and CRAFTS" from a Frenchman's Point of View. By VICTOR CHAMPIEZ. With 5 Illustrations.
- THE CHRONICLE of ART. With 14 Illustrations.

 The Enlargement will consist of the issue during the course of the volume of ADDITIONAL PLATES of high artistic excellence.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

NOVEMBER.

- THE CRIMEA in 1854 and 1854. Part II. By General Sir Evelyn Wood, G.C.B., V.C., &c.
- CHINA, JAPAN, and COREA. By R. S. GUNDY.
- JAPANESE CUSTOMS. By A. HENRY SAVAGE-LANDOR.
- HERMANN von HELMHOLTZ. By ARTHUR W. RUCKER, F.R.S.
- WOMEN'S NEWSPAPERS. By Miss EVELYN MARCH-PHILLIPS.
- RAMBLERS in NORSK FINMARKEN. By GEORGE LINDSAY.
- A NOTE on WORDSWORTH. By THOMAS HUTCHINSON.
- SYMMETRY and INCIDENT. By Mrs. MEYNELL.
- VENETIAN MISSALS. By HERBERT P. HORNE.
- LIFE in OTHER PLANETS. By Sir ROBERT BALL, F.R.S.
- THE HEART of LIFE. Chaps. 1-3. By W. H. MALLOCK.
- AN ADDENDUM. By OUIDA.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., London.

NOW READY.

Price 9d.; by the Year, 2s. 6d.

The OCTOBER NUMBER of

THE BRIAR ROSE.

A Quarterly Pseudonym Journal by Members of the Rose Club.

Watford: H. L. BARRETT, St. Andrews.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.

For particulars of the Rose Club, Address Miss Woods, Watford, Herts.

NOW READY.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of CONSTANCE NADEEN. With an Explanatory Fore-Word by ROBERT LEWIS, M.D., Surgeon-Lieut.-Colonel (Retired). With Portrait. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

DICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester Square, W.C.1

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Documental Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

"NATURE."

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED JOURNAL OF SCIENCE.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

"NATURE" of Thursday next, November 1st, will begin Volume 51, and will contain an INTRODUCTORY ARTICLE by the Right
Hon. T. H. HUXLEY, entitled "PAST and PRESENT."

NATURE contains Original Articles on all subjects coming within the domain of Science, contributed by the most eminent Scientific Writers of the day. It also contains Reviews of all recent scientific works; Correspondence Columns, which form a medium of scientific discussion and of intercommunication among Men of Science; Accounts of the leading Scientific Serials; Abstracts of the more valuable papers which appear in foreign Journals; Reports of the Proceedings of the Principal Scientific Societies and Academies of the World; and Notes on all matters of current Scientific Interest.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 949.—NOVEMBER, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—SOME FRENCH NOVELISTS.—A RIDE IN HAKKALANO, by E. A. IRVING.—ROGER BACON, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—WHO WAS LOST AND IS FOUND (Conclusion).—BRITISH FORESTRY.—HANNA, MY ABYSSINIAN SERVANT, by Francis Scudsmore.—A NOOK OF NORTH WALES, by Rusticus Urbanus.—SOME THOUGHTS ON THE WOMAN QUESTION, by the Author of "Mona Maclean."
—AN ETON MASTER.—DENNY'S DAUGHTER, by Meira
O'Neill.—CLUB-HOMES FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKING MEN, by
W. Moffatt.—CHINA'S REPUTATION-BUBBLE, by H. Knollys,
Col. (h.p.), R.A.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE NEW REVIEW.

CONTENTS—NOVEMBER—Price One Shilling.

THE SCHOOL BOARD ELECTION. By the Hon. E. LUTHER STANLEY.

THE LIVING PICTURES: A Symposium.
By GEORGE EDWARDS—CHARLES MORGAN—A. W. PINERO—MARCEUS
STONE, R.A.—THE SECRETARY OF THE NATIONAL VIGILANCE
ASSOCIATION—ARTHUR SYMONS—THE REV. H. C. SHUTTLE-WORTH, and the Editor of the "YOUNG MAN."

GOVERNMENT SWEATING IN THE CLOTHING CONTRACTS. By JAMES MACDONALD (Amalgamated Society of Tailors).

POETRY—
1. THE POETRY OF EDMUND GOSSE. By ARTHUR C.
BESSON.

2. POEMS BY LADY LINDSAY. By ARTHUR WAUGH.

DUPPLICATE WHIST. By GEORGE FLETCHER, M.D.

MUNICIPALITIES AT WORK: II.—MANCHESTER. By FREDK.
DOLMAN.

THE FIGHTING FORCE OF CHINA. By LIEUT.-COL. W. E.
GOWAN.

SECRETS from the COURT of SPAIN. (VII.)
THE GREAT UNDERCLOTHING QUESTION. By S. WILLIAM ARCHER.

INTERIOR. By MATRICK MATERNBERG. Translated by WILLIAM
ARCHER.

CHESS (with Problems). By I. GUNBERG.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL-COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

NATIONAL

Financial Year ends 20th November, 1894.

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENT

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,700,000
PAID IN CLAIMS, £9,000,000

INSTITUTION.

All the Profits are divided amongst the Assured; already divided £4,600,000. All persons now assuring will receive an additional share of Profit over later Entrants,
at the next Division in 1897.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume,
is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 63 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP

CAUSES

NO BLOTCHES UNDER THE CHIN!!!

STICKS (Premier) 6d., (Toilet) 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., (Vestal) 2s.
FLAT CAKES (Premier) 1s., (Toilet) 2s., (Vestal) 3s.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S NEW LIST.

WHAT is the CHURCH? The Answer of the New Testament. By the Rev. R. E. SANDERSON, D.D., Vicar of Holy Trinity, Hastings. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

HELPFUL HALF-HOURS. A Book of Sunday Reading for Busy People. By Mrs. C. D. FRANCIS, Author of "A Story of the Church of England," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The general idea of the series is excellent."—Guardian.
"The scheme excites our interest."—Saturday Review.

THE NATIONAL CHURCHES.

THE SEVENTH VOLUME NOW READY.
Each Volume is complete in itself.

FRANCE.

By the Rev. R. TRAVERS SMITH, D.D., Canon of St. Patrick's, Dublin. With Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

"We cordially recommend this history to students of a fascinating and too much neglected subject, which may any day become one of practical import."—Church Times.

THE NEW BOOKLET BY THE AUTHOR OF
"STEPHEN REMARK."

THE NEW FLOREAT: a Letter to an Eton Boy on the Social Question. By the Rev. the Hon. JAMES G. ADDERLEY, M.A., Author of "Stephen Remark," &c. Stiff paper covers, from a design by G. W. Rhead, in red and black, 1s.

THE DAUGHTERS WHO HAVE NOT REVOLTED. By CHRISTABEL R. COLERIDGE. In embossed cover, designed by G. W. Rhead, price 1s.

These six little essays deal with various aspects of those years in the life of unmarried women which succeed to early girlhood, the difficulties of which are often passed over in writings dealing with the more obvious aspects of the "Woman Question."

"No tall-talk, no cant.....kindly, sensible, and sympathetic."—World.

ON the ART of WRITING FICTION.

A Collection of Papers by some of the leading Novelists of the day, giving much helpful information and many practical hints and suggestions with regard to their craft. Papers dealing with different branches of the subject are contributed by the following Authors:—

W. E. NORRIS.
S. BARING-GOULD.
L. B. WALFORD.
Mrs. PARR.
MAXWELL GREY.
Mrs. MACQUOID.

The AUTHOR of "MADE-MOISELLE IXE."
Mrs. MOLESWORTH.
Prof. CHURCH.
Prof. DOUGLAS, and
L. T. MEADE.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

A YOUNG WIFE'S ORDEAL. By JOHANNA VAN WOUDE. Large crown 8vo, extra cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

A New Work by a popular Dutch Writer, the editor of one of the leading magazines for women in Holland. This story, which has already achieved a great success in Holland, is a realistic picture of Dutch home-life, sketched with much finish and fidelity.

AN ORIGINAL STORY BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE KING DAVIE."

WHERE the BROOK and RIVER MEET. By NELLIE HELLIS. Illustrated Title and Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, extra cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

The heroine has been brought up by an aunt, but at the age of eighteen, just when she has become engaged to be married, she is suddenly called home to undertake the management of her father's household and a large family of children.

LONDON: 3, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, AND 44, VICTORIA STREET.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW BOOKS.

IAN MACLAREN.
IAN MACLAREN.

2nd EDITION
On MONDAY.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH.
BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH.
By IAN MACLAREN.

Bound in Art Linen, gilt top, price 6s.

* * The First Edition of 4,000 having been exhausted, a NEW EDITION, completing 7,000, has been printed, and will be ready on Monday.

"If any man can make his way through portions of 'Domsie,' 'The Transformation of Lachlan Campbell,' and 'A Doctor of the Old School' with the tranquil breath and unmoved countenance of one who reads his morning paper in the train, he is certainly one of two things—a monster of insensibility or a miracle of self-repression.....One thing is certain, that Ian MacLaren has made his mark."—Daily Chronicle.

"The author has a genuine gift of pathos; and, though this is scarcely so characteristic of him, a genuine gift of humour. He handles what may be called the domestic emotious with a power rare in modern fiction.....The book will not only please for its own sake every one who reads it, but will make those who specially interest themselves in literature keep a hopeful eye upon anything else that may appear with this author's name attached to it."—Scotsman.

JANE
BARLOW'S
NEW STORY.

Now ready, crown 8vo, bound in Art Linen, gilt top, 6s.
KERRIGAN'S QUALITY.
By JANE BARLOW.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

1. IRISH IDYLLS. 4th Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
2. BOGLAND STUDIES. 3rd Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SOMERSET IDYLLS.
BY
WALTER RAYMOND.

Now ready, crown 8vo, bound in Art Linen, gilt top, 6s.
LOVE and QUIET LIFE.
SOMERSET IDYLLS.
By WALTER RAYMOND,
Author of "Gentleman Upcott's Daughter," &c.

THE "CONTEMPORARY WRITERS" SERIES."
EDITED BY
W. ROBERTSON NICOLL,
LL.D.

Now ready, with Portrait, 16mo, 3s. 6d.
THOMAS HARDY.
By ANNIE MACDONELL.

Containing a Map of Mr. Hardy's Wessex.

MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

Now ready, cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d.
RUYSBROECK and the MYSTICS. With SELECTIONS from RUYSBROECK.
By MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

Authorised Translation by JANE T. STODDART. A New Volume of "The Devotional Library."

DR. MILLER'S "SILENT TIMES SERIES."

AUTHOR'S EDITIONS.

Now ready, elegantly bound, cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d.
SECRETS of a BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

By J. R. MILLER, D.D.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, uniform in style and price.

1. MAKING the MOST of LIFE. Eighth Thousand.
2. SILENT TIMES. Sixth Thousand.
3. The EVERY-DAY of LIFE. Seventh Thousand.
4. WEEK-DAY RELIGION. Fourth Thousand.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

Just ready, demy 8vo, cloth, price 25s.

THE GREAT ICE AGE,
And its Relation to the Antiquity of Man.By JAMES GEIKIE, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., Murchison Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh.

Third Edition, largely Rewritten and much Enlarged.

With Two New Chapters on the "Glacial Phenomena of North America," by Prof. T. C. CHAMBERLIN.
Also 18 Maps and 78 Illustrations.

A NEW FAMILY ATLAS.

STANFORD'S
FAMILY ATLAS OF
GENERAL GEOGRAPHY.Exhibiting the various Physical and Political Divisions of the Chief Countries of the World.

Fifty Maps, and a List of Latitudes and Longitudes.

Imperial folio, half-morocco, price Five Guineas.

Size, when shut, 16 inches by 21 inches.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

STANFORD'S
LONDON ATLAS OF
UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY.QUARTO EDITION. Containing 48 Coloured Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Steel and Copper Plates, and an Alphabetical List of about 30,000 Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, cloth sides, gilt edges, price 30s. Size, when shut, 12 inches by 15 inches."We have used it constantly for years and we have never found it surpassed for the combined merits of handiness, cheapness, accuracy, and clearness."—Saturday Review.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED.

STANFORD'S
OCTAVO ATLAS OF
MODERN GEOGRAPHY.Containing 38 Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Copper Plates; also an Alphabetical List of over 30,000 Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Handsomely bound in morocco, gilt edges, price 21s. Size, when shut, 7½ inches by 12 inches.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

UPPINGHAM SCHOOL ROLL,
1824-1894.Contents:—Present Trustees. List of Head Masters. Ushers and Assistant Masters. The Roll. Appendices—A. Winners of Entrance Scholarships. B. Captains of the School. C.
Winners of Exhibitions to the Universities. D. Uppingham
Games—(1) Cricket Eleveens; (2) Football Fifteens; (3)
Champions in Athletic Sports; (4) Holder of House Cups;
(5) Shooting Eights. Index of Names, 1824-1894.

Recently published, Fourth Edition, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE NEXT NAVAL WAR.

By Capt. S. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.N.

With Frontispiece by Chevalier E. Martino.

Demy 8vo, illustrated wrapper.

"A terse and vigorous declaration of facts."—Globe
"Written with considerable ingenuity."—Scotsman.
"An interesting forecast."—Broad Arrow.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

STANFORD'S
MAP OF EASTERN CHINA,
JAPAN, AND KOREA,the Seat of War in 1894, showing the Treaty Ports, Railways, and Submarine Cables. New Edition, Revised to Date, and with an Enlarged Inset Map of Korea. One sheet, size 22 inches by 30 inches. Scale 110 miles to an inch. Prices, coloured sheet, 3s.; per post, packed on roller, 3s. 6d.;
mounted to fold in case, 5s.; per post, 5s. 3d.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,

26 and 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHALKING CROSS, S.W.

Geographer to Her Majesty the Queen.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH PROSE. Selections, with Critical Introductions by various writers, and General
Introductions to each Period. Edited by HENRY
CRAIK. In 5 vols. Vol. III., THE SEVENTEENTH
CENTURY. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each vol.

Already published.

Vol. I. THE FOURTEENTH to the SIXTEENTH
CENTURY.Vol. II. THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY to the RESTORA-TION.LIFE of SWIFT. By Henry Craik,
C.B. 2 vols. With Portraits. New Edition. Globe 8vo,
10s. [EVERSLEY SERIES.]TIMES.—"This scholarly and authoritative biography."
DAILY NEWS.—"At once the most complete and authoritative biography of that essentially creative genius."PEN DRAWING and PEN*DRAUGHTSMEN. Their Work and their Methods.
A Study of the Art To-Day, with Technical Suggestions.
By JOSEPH PENNELL. A New and Enlarged Edition, with 386 Illustrations. Demy 4to, 42s. net.DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Joseph Pennell has brought out a second and greatly enlarged edition of his excellent treatise, 'Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen'..... A splendid album of illustrations, which have an interest in themselves. They may open it where they will, and they will find something in figure, landscape, architecture, character, or scenic illustration to give them exquisite pleasure..... It is a veritable encyclopædia of its subject, and its value will increase with age."A SHAKESPEARE CONCORDANCE.A New and Complete Concordance, or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare, with a Supplementary Concordance to the Poems. By JOHN HARTLETT, A.M., Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. Demy 4to, cloth, £2 2s. net; half-morocco, £2 5s. net.TIMES.—"Deserves cordial recognition from all who love Shakespeare."LITERARY WORLD (Boston, U.S.A.).—"No words of praise are too high for the zeal and discrimination which have produced this superb book of reference."PERSONALITY, HUMAN and DIVINEBeing the Hampton Lectures for 1894. By Rev. J. R.
ILLINGWORTH. 8vo, 8s. 6d.TIMES.—"Will take high rank among the rare theological masterpieces produced by that celebrated foundation."THE WORD and the WAY; or, theLight of the Ages on the Path of To-Day. By the Rev.
W. LEIGHTON GRANE, M.A., Rector of Bexhill,
Sussex. Crown 8vo, 6s.THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE.Edited by WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT. Edition de Luxe. 40 vols., super-royal 8vo, 6s. net per vol.

Vol. XXVII. THE TRAGEDY of TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Vol. XXVIII. THE TRAGEDY of ROMEO and JULIET.

A CORNER of CATHAY: Studiesfrom Life Among the Chinese. By ADELM M. FIEDEL.
With Illustrations and Coloured Plates. Fcap. 4to, 8s. 6d. net.TIMES.—"Graphic and intimate sketches of Chinese life and manners by an American lady well acquainted with the country, its people, and their language, very attractively illustrated in colours from original sketches by artists of the celebrated school of Go Leng, at Swatow."MAURICE; or, the Red Jar. A Taleof Magic and Adventure for Boys and Girls. By the Countess of JERSEY. With Illustrations by ROSIE M. M. PITMAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.MY NEW HOME. By Mrs. Moles-WORTH. Illustrated by Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo,
4s. 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A gracefully told tale for girls."

SIBYLLA. By Sir H. S. Cunningham,K.C.I.E., Author of "Wheat and Tares," &c. 2 vols., Globe 8vo, 12s.MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.A MODERN BUCCANEER. By RolfBOLDREWOOD, Author of "Robbery Under Arms."
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.THE FLOWER of FORGIVENESS.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of GREECE from its
COMMENCEMENT to the CLOSE of the INDE-PENDENCE of the GREEK NATION. By ADOLF
HOLM. Translated from the German. In 4 vols. Vol.
I., To the End of the Sixth Century, n.c. 8vo, 6s. net.TIMES.—"A short history, well founded in scholarly study."SCOTSMAN.—"A book so learned and so cautious in its learning ought to find many students here; and the English translation deserves a hearty welcome from all who are interested in the subject of the work."A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISHPEOPLE. By J. E. GREEN. Illustrated Edition.
Edited by Mrs. J. E. GREEN and Miss KATE
NORRIS. Part XXXVIII. Super-royal 8vo, 1s. net (Vols. I., II., and III. Super-royal 8vo, 12s. each net).A CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY ofthe HOUSE of LORDS. By LUKE OWEN PIKE, of the Public Record Office. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.DAILY NEWS.—"It is a book full of facts, to be read once for entertainment by those to whom such facts are attractive, and to be kept for reference always by all who at any time may need to hunt up information upon the existential position and history of the Lords."TIMES.—"His work is manifestly one of sound learning and original research, and as such it will be valuable alike to students and to politicians."MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Mr. Pike writes as a scholar and not as a partisan..... The sobriety of his judgments in matters of later history predisposes us in favour of his conclusions in the more obscure parts of the subjects."A DIGEST of the CRIMINAL LAW.(CRIMES and PUNISHMENTS.) By Sir J. F.
STEPHEN. Edited by HARRY L. STEPHEN,
Barrister-at-Law. Fifth Edition, Revised. 8vo, 16s.ESSAYS on QUESTIONS of the DAY:Political and Social. By OLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L., Author of "The United States: an Outline of Political History," and "Canada and the Canadian Question."
Second Edition, Revised. Extra crown 8vo, 9s.GEOMETRICAL CONICS. By CharlesSMITH, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.MANUAL of PHYSICO-CHEMICALMEASUREMENTS. By Professor WILHELM
OSTWALD. Translated by JAMES WALKER, D.Sc.,
Ph.D., Professor of Chemistry in University College,
Dundee. Illustrated. 8vo, 7s. net.THE RISE and DEVELOPMENT ofORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By the late G. SCHOR-LEMMER, F.R.S. Revised Edition. Edited by ARTHUR SMITHIES, Professor of Chemistry in the Yorkshire College, Leeds. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.AMPHIOXUS and the ANCESTRYof the VERTEBRATES. By ARTHUR WILLEY,
B.Sc., Tutor in Biology, Columbia College. With a Preface by H. F. OSBORN. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 421. NOVEMBER. Price 1s.

Contents.

1. THE HERONS. Chapters I-III.
2. THE JAPANESE INVASION of COREA in 1932. By Dr. ISLAND.
3. GIBBON as a SOLDIER. By Major HOLDEN, F.S.A.
4. AN OLD-WORLD PARSON.
5. TRACED HOMEWARDS.
6. PLUNKET'S WIDOW.
7. THE YEAR'S GOLF.
8. OUR NEW TREATY with JAPAN. By M. J. FARRELLY.
9. THE REBELLION in the WEST INDIES. By the Hon. J. W. FORBES-SMITH. II. JAMICA.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW, No. 358.

CONTENTS.

- I.—THE STRIKE of a SEX.
 II.—LADY DUFFERIN'S POEMS and VERSES.
 III.—THE EARLIEST HISTORY of BABYLONIA.
 IV.—REMBRANDT and his ART.
 V.—BUCHAN.
 VI.—ROUSSEAUISM REVISED.

- VII.—LORD WOLSELEY'S "MARLBOROUGH."
 VIII.—THE ABUSE of STATISTICS.
 IX.—LOPE DE VEGA.
 X.—THE TRAGEDY of the CÆSARS.
 XI.—NOVELS of ADVENTURE and MANNERS.
 XII.—ALEXANDER'S GENERALS.

With Portraits and Illustrations, crown 8vo, 12s.

THE LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF

WILLIAM BUCKLAND, D.D., F.R.S.,

SOMETIME DEAN OF WESTMINSTER, TWICE PRESIDENT OF THE GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY, AND PRESIDENT OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT OXFORD IN 1832.

By his Daughter, Mrs. GORDON.

[Now ready.]

With Portrait, 8vo, 16s.

SIR WILLIAM GREGORY, K.C.M.G.,

FORMERLY M.P., AND SOMETIME GOVERNOR OF CEYLON.

An Autobiography.

Edited by Lady GREGORY.

[Now ready.]

With Portrait and Illustrations, crown 8vo, 12s.

SIR VICTOR BROOKE, Bart., Sportsman and Naturalist.

HIS DIARIES AND CORRESPONDENCE.

With a Chapter on his Researches in Natural History by Sir WILLIAM H. FOWLER, K.C.B., Director of the Natural History Branch of the British Museum.

Edited, with a Memoir of his Life, by O. LESLIE STEPHEN.

[Next week.]

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

AN UNRECORDED CHAPTER OF THE INDIAN MUTINY.

Being the Personal Reminiscences of REGINALD G. WILBERFORCE, late 52nd Light Infantry.

Compiled from a Diary and Letters written on the spot.

[Next week.]

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH NOVEL.

FROM ITS ORIGIN TO THE PUBLICATION OF "WAVERLEY."

By Professor RALEIGH, University College, Liverpool.

This Work is bound in two forms, either as a library book, or as one of the Series of "University Extension Manuals."

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A SELECTION FROM

THE WRITINGS OF DEAN STANLEY.

Edited by the Venerable A. S. AGLEN, Archdeacon of St. Andrews.

A NEW SERIES, 8vo, 14s.

DR. DÖLLINGER'S ADDRESSES ON

HISTORICAL AND LITERARY SUBJECTS.

Translated, in accordance with the wish of the late Author,

By MARGARET WARRE.

CONTENTS.—Universities, Past and Present—Founders of Religions—The Empire of Charles the Great and his Successors—Anagni—The Destruction of the Order of Knights Templars—The History of Religious Freedom—Various Estimates of the French Revolution—The Literature of the United States of America.

NEARLY READY.

THE ODES of HORACE and the CARMEN SÆCULARE. Translated into English Verse by the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. Large crown 8vo.

JOSIAH WEDGWOOD, F.R.S.: his Personal History. By Samuel Smiles, LL.D., Author of "The Lives of the Engineers," of "Self-Help," "Character," &c. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE and CORRESPONDENCE of SIR BARTLE FRERE, Bart.
Derived from hitherto Unpublished Documents. By JOHN MARTINEAU. Portraits and Maps. 2 vols., 8vo.

ROMAN GOSSIP. By Mrs. Minto Elliot, Author of "An Idle Woman in Scilly," "Old Court Life in France," &c. Crown 8vo.

THE LIFE of PROFESSOR OWEN. Based on his Correspondence, his Diaries, and those of his Wife. By his Grandson, the Rev. RICHARD OWEN. With a Chapter by the Right
Hon. T. H. HUXLEY. With Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

BERNARD QUARITCH

15, PICCADILLY, LONDON,

Offers for Sale at the Cash Prices affixed:—

Biruni. Atharu 'L-Bakya: the Chronology of Ancient Nations, an English Version of the Arabic Text, with Notes by Dr. C. EDWARD SACHAU. Imp. 8vo, xvi. and 464 (pub. at £2 2s.), cloth, 6s. [1879.]

Brown.—The Venetian Printing Press: an Historical Study based upon documents for the most part hitherto unpublished. 4to, xxii. and 464 pp., with 22 facsimiles of Early Printing (pub. at £2 2s.),
cloth, 21s. [1891.]

Anglo-Saxon and Old English

Vocabularies, by THOMAS WRIGHT. Second Edition,
Edited and Collated by R. P. WULCKER. 2 vols., 8vo
(pub. at 28s.), cloth, 9s. [1884.]

Vol. I., Vocabularies; Vol. II., Indexes. A necessary book for every English philologist.

See also: Cartularium, Kemble, Thorpe.

Arabic.—Badger's (G. P.) English-

Arabic Lexicon, in which the equivalents for English words and sentences are rendered into Literary and Colloquial Arabic. Impl. 4to, xii. and 1248 pp., double columns (pub. at £9 9s.), cloth, 32s. [1881.]

Arabic-English Vocabulary, for the use of English Students of Modern Egyptian Arabic, by D. A. CAMERON, one of the English Judges of the Native Egyptian Court of Appeal, and one of H.M.

Consuls in Egypt and Tripoli. 8vo, xv. and 322 pp., cloth, 7s. 6d. [1892.]

English-Arabic Vocabulary, for the use of Students of the Colloquial. STACE (Col.

E. V.) English-Arabic Vocabulary. 1 vol., 8vo, viii. and 218 pp., cloth, 7s. 6d. [1893.]

Arabic Grammar, new edition:

PARIS'S PRACTICAL GRAMMAR of the ARABIC
LANGUAGE, with Interlinear Reading Lessons, Dialogues, and Vocabulary. Fourth Edition Revised from the Second Edition, by the Rev. H. A. WILLIAMS.
12mo, pp. viii. and 234, cloth, 7s. 6d. [1889.]

Arabic: the Koran, with Commentary of the Imam Abou al-Quasim Mahmood bin bin

'Omar al-Zamakhsari, entitled the KASHSHAF 'an Haqiqat al-Tanzil, Arabic, Edited by W. N. LEES, and MAWLAVIS KHADIM HOSAIN and 'ABD AL-
HAYI. 2 vols., royal 4to (pub. £5 16s., unbound), half-morocco, £3 3s. [Calcutta, 1856-61.]

Arabian Travels in the 16th Century: MACARIUS, Patriarch of Antioch. TRAVELS in Anatolia, Moldavia, Rometia, Wallachia, the Cossack Country, Muscovy, and the Black Sea. Written by his Attendant, Archdeacon PAUL of Aleppo, in Arabic, Translated into English by F. C. BELFOUR. 9 Parts in 2 vols., 4to, cloth, £1 4s. [Oriental Translation Fund, 1829-36.]

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in other Religions: being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles, with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity; considering also their Origin and Meaning. Third Edition. 1 vol., 8vo, Fourth Edition,

589 pp., with numerous Illustrations, cloth, 15s. [New York, 1884.]

Chinese-English Dictionary, by

HERBERT A. GILES. Impl. 4to, xvi. and 1416 pp., in treble cols., cloth, £6 16s. 6d. [Shanghai, 1892.]

This great Monumental work supersedes all its predecessors, and is indispensable for great Public Libraries.

Chinese Philosophy: Chuang Tzu, an English Translation of this Chinese classic of the Fourteenth Century, by H. A. GILES, British Charge d'Affaires at Formosa. One stout volume, demy 8vo, ca., 400 pp., cloth, 10s. [1888.]

Cornish Language:

WILLIAMS (R.) Cornish-English Dictionary: Lexicon
Cornu-Britannicum: Dictionary of the Ancient Celtic Language of Cornwall, in which the words are elucidated by copious Examples from Cornish Works, with Translations, and the Synonyms in Welsh, Armorican, Irish, Gaelic, and Manx. 3 Parts in 1 vol., 4to, 460 pp., cloth,
38s. [Llanfocery, 1882-85.]

JAGO (F. W. P.) English-Cornish Dictionary. 4to, front., pp. i-xv. and 211 pp., 4to, cloth, 18s. [Plymouth, 1887.]

A Packet of Catalogues of rare, valuable, and cheap Books, for Six Penny Stamps.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY,
LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER, 1894.

- I. LADY JEAN'S VAGARIES. Chaps. I-IV.
- II. THE GOUVERNANTE OF PARIS.
- III. "PASTORAL."
- IV. THE TREES and FLOWERS of TENNYSON.
- V. HEINRICH HOFFMANN'S HISTORY. Chaps. V-VI.
- VI. BLACK BAT.
- VII. A RECENT LITERARY DISCOVERY.
- VIII. GIBRALTAR.
- IX. INDIAN SUMMER.
- X. A MODERN HERO. (Conclusion.)

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

TWO SUMMERS IN GUY-

ENNE, 1892-3: a Chronicle on the Wayside and Water-side.

By the Upper Dordogne—Across the Moors of the Corrèze—In the Viscounty of Turenne—In Upper Périgord—In the Valleys of the Vézère and Isle—Riberac and Brantôme—The Desert of the Double—A Canoe Voyage on the Dronne—By the Lower Dordogne—On the Banks of the Garonne.

By EDWARD HARRISON BARKER, Author of "Way-faring in France," "Wanderings by Southern Waters," &c. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous illustrations, 16s.

NOW READY.

THROUGH TEN ENGLISH COUNTIES.

[Surrey, Hampshire, Wiltshire, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Warwickshire, Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire.]

THE CHRONICLE OF A DRIVING TOUR.

By JAMES JOHN HISSEY,

Author of "On the Box Seat," "A Holiday on the Road," "Across England in a Dogcart," &c.

Demy 8vo, with 16 Full-Page Illustrations by the Author, Engraved by Pearson, and a Plan of the Route, 16s.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH WHIST AND ENGLISH WHIST-PLAYERS.

Birth and Progress of Whist—Are Cards Legitimate?—Preludes as Whist-Players—Whist at the Universities—Women's Whist—The Devil's Books and the Devil's Own—Warriors at Whist—Gamblers at Whist—Clubs and Cards—Kings and their Subjects at Whist—Combinations and Superstitions at Cards—The Ideal Whist-Player—The Whist of the Poets—Whist and the Novelists—Books on Whist and their Authors.

By WILLIAM PRIDEAUX COURTNEY. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES

POWER COBBE. By HERSELF. Second Edition. In 2 vols., square crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 21s.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

NOW READY.

THE PRINCESS ROYAL.

By KATHARINE WYLDE,
Author of "Mr. Bryant's Mistake."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A very good novel."—World.

"The reader will be always interested."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE OLD OLD STORY.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY,
Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Carey's story is wholesome and sweet, full of refinement of thought, and true to a not impossibly high standard of action. An invincible dignity of purpose, a chastened outlook upon life, impart to the tale a certain spirituality."—Globe.

NOW READY.

THE INTENDED.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

".....The situation thus far is strange enough, but that it is the mere beginning of a plot which has extraordinary wild and sensational developments. The story is conceived with no little ingenuity and much daring, and told in a vigorously athletic style."—Scotsman.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

ON the PROCESSES for the PRODUCTION of EX-LIBRIS (Book Plates).

By JOHN VINYCOMB, M.R.I.A.,
Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland,
Member of Council of the Ex-Libris Society.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, Illustrations in Text, and 50 Ex-Libris Examples, Frontispiece in Heraldic Tinctures, price 3s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

POSTE RESTANTE:

A Novel.

By C. Y. HARGREAVES,

Author of "Paul Romer."

3 vols., crown 8vo, price 31s. 6d.

NOW READY.

JOHN DARKER:

A Novel.

By AUBREY LEE.

3 vols., crown 8vo, price 31s. 6d.

NOW READY.

LONDON UP TO DATE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

Second Thousand.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

THE CURB OF HONOUR.

By M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

Cheaper Edition.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

A TANGLED WEB.

By LADY LINDSAY.

Cheaper Edition.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

THE DIVERS:

A Romance of Oceania.

By HUME NISBET.

Cheaper Edition. Illustrated.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

NOW READY.

DRYBURGH EDITION

OF THE

WAVERLEY NOVELS.

Illustrated by 250 Woodcuts, specially drawn and engraved for this Edition.

Complete in 25 vols. Prices in sets, cloth, £6 5s.

Also in half-calf, plain; half-calf, extra, gilt top, and half-morocco, gilt top.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST

A NEW EDITION of JANE AUSTEN'S

PRIDE and PREJUDICE.

With 100 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson, and an Introduction by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, or edges uncut, 6s.

[Just out.]

The Large-Paper Copies on Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper are all taken up.

LULLABIES OF MANY LANDS.

Collected and Rendered into English by ALMA STRETFELL With 77 Illustrations, and specially designed cover by Emily J. Harding. Fcap 4to, 7s. 6d.

[Nearly ready.]

THE DISAGREEABLE DUKE.

A Christmas Whimsicality for Holiday Boys and Girls. By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS, Author of "Robin's Ride," "Comrades True," &c. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by Emily Harding. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[Nearly ready.]

SPENSER'S

"FAERIE QUEENE."

Edited by THOS. J. WISE, Compiler of the "Ruskin Bibliography." With about 85 Full-page Illustrations, besides 80 Canto Headings, Initials, and 60 Tailpieces by Walter Crane.

An entirely New Edition (limited), hand-printed on a specially prepared quality of Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper, large post 4to. To be completed in Nineteen Parts, published monthly, 10s. 6d. net per Part. No odd Parts will be supplied.

Also 25 copies (printed in red and black) on Japanese vellum, 25s. net per Part.

The First Part (in specially designed cover) will contain 4 Full-page Illustrations, 5 Half-page Canto Headings, 5 Tailpieces, and 50 pages of Text. Each Part will include, on an average, the same number of Illustrations. The Text has been collated from Four Editions, including that of 1590.

Prospectus will be sent on application.

[PART I. ready about November 15th]

RUSKIN ON EDUCATION.

By WILLIAM JOLLY (one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools). Being a Series of Articles reviewing Mr. Ruskin's Opinions on Education, with some Extracts from his Writings. Fcap. 8vo, 180 pp., cloth, 2s. net.

[Now ready.]

THE HARBOURS OF ENGLAND.

By JOHN RUSKIN. With the 12 Illustrations made expressly for the Work by the late J. W. M. Turner, R.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The Plates used in this Edition have been reproduced in Photogravure from specially-selected impressions of the Engravings in the first issue.

There will be 250 Large-Paper Copies on Hand-made Paper, with India Proofs of the Plates, large post 8vo, 15s.

The Work, which has been out of print since 1877, will contain an Introduction by T. J. Wise.

[In November.]

LETTERS TO A COLLEGE FRIEND, 1840 to 1845.

By JOHN RUSKIN. Including an Essay on "Death before Adam Fell." Crown 8vo, 210 pp., cloth, 4s.

Ruskin House, 156, Charing Cross Road, London.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1894.

No. 1173, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Life of Frances Power Cobbe. By Herself. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

THE value of this book is twofold. It is a record of social life in Ireland and England during the past half century, and it is the story of a woman's life spent in disinterested and effectual efforts to do good. Anyone acquainted with Miss Cobbe's earlier works does not need to be told that it is interesting. The glimpses of eminent persons, the frequent anecdotes, the wit and abundant humour, all go to make it pleasant reading. Miss Cobbe lived at her father's house, Newbridge, co. Dublin, until she was thirty-five years old, and, as the daughter of an Irish landlord who did his duty as well as claimed his rights, she had opportunities of observing the peasant character in some curious aspects. When her father died she went into the world with an income of £200 a year, and began a career destined to be full of experiences, which are here set down. Without being a critic, she is a woman of clear judgment, with an abundant gift of humour, and always quick to recognise excellence of any kind.

Already, Miss Cobbe had thought and read herself out of evangelical Protestantism into Theism, and had become tolerably well established in the religious position which she says for fifty years has been her staff of life. She does not think "anyone not being a fanatic can regret having been brought up as an evangelical Christian." Possibly not, but surely it is even better to have been, so to speak, born free. For these start where others arrive only after painful effort; and it may be questioned whether the narrowness of the early training does not, in a measure, warp the mature judgment, or leave somewhere a touch of intolerance. Miss Cobbe is fair-minded to a degree, yet even her accustomed good-humour wavers a little when she refers to priests or scientific atheists. The essays called Broken Lights (1864) and Dawning Lights (1868) are Miss Cobbe's best contributions to the subject of religion. Others, struggling as she had done out of traditional into free religion, must have found in Broken Lights much needful guidance and comfort; while its more constructive successor appealed to a still larger circle with hope and aspiration. If at forty or fifty it does not exert the same force that it did twenty-five years before, this is not because its vivifying power has passed away, but because, on the contrary, it has become transmuted into life. The books which have influenced us in the past, so that we still love them the best of all, are not always, perhaps not usually, the books we take oftenest from the shelves.

In the chapter on "Practical Theism" in Broken Lights, Miss Cobbe says: "If we climb up to God, we must bear our brethren along with us"; and again, "Not only must a true religion teach us to feel that there is no human being below the level of our sympathies, it must make us feel especially for all degraded and disgraced children of God." Having settled her religious problem and thus realised its practical aspect, Miss Cobbe proceeded forthwith to give it effect. To her—practical woman that she was—religion meant service; and without going out of her way to seek opportunities, or taking upon herself the rôle of the professional philanthropist, she has always found some fitting work ready to be done, and, having found it, has done it.

First of all there were the Ragged Schools at Bristol, where she worked with Mary Carpenter, followed by workhouse ministrations in the same city. Then came a period of journalism in London, which gave place to active work for the political and social emancipation of women. Finally, another emancipation movement of animals from the vivisectors claimed her efforts, until in 1884 she withdrew from public life and settled in her present home in Wales.

Moved by pity and a strong sense of justice, certain causes seemed naturally to claim her services, and on these, in turn, she has concentrated her attention with a resolute determination to right the wrong. Still, she has never become the victim of a "fixed idea." Her strenuous endeavour has never degenerated into fanaticism. There is, indeed, none of that "indifference" which, Coleridge says, "makes toleration so easy a virtue with us"; but, on the other hand, her persistence is free from bigotry. For her philanthropy is natural, not conventional: drawn from character, not from theories or doctrines. Thus she has escaped the peril which besets well-meaning persons of coming to believe there is a specific—food or drinks or franchises or what not—for every social disorder. When she saw children barred at their very birth from becoming happy and useful men and women, or women degraded by law and custom, or animals ruthlessly sacrificed for a medical fad, then in her pre-eminently practical way she tried to establish a better state of things. And she has also avoided that other danger of the philanthropists—of exaggerating and misstating for the sake of effect. Sensationalism is one of the chief evils of our day in religious and philanthropic circles, but it has never been allowed to mar Miss Cobbe's work.

A method so sane as hers could not but be effectual. She can look back on her life without any sense of failure. While her achievements have been considerable, the impetus she has given to several movements is more important still. To her in great part it is due that paupers are better cared for than formerly. Excepting John Stuart Mill, she has done more than anyone to give the dignity of principle to the woman's movement, which might otherwise have become a mere struggle for perquisites. If in trying to secure to animals the right to their own lives the success in the direction of law is not complete, there is a greater and farther reaching success in the fact that now, when false priests of science resort to torture, they do so in the teeth of a public sentiment which thirty years ago was scarcely felt.

Miss Cobbe may be described as an essentially human woman. She loves the world and the things thereof with reasonable love. Her life, she says, "has been an interesting one to live"; and, to herself, so well worth living that "though I entirely believe in a higher existence hereafter. . . . I would gladly accept the permission to run my earthly race once more from beginning to end, taking sunshine and shade just as they have flickered over the long vista of my seventy years. Even the retrospect of my life in these volumes has been a pleasure; a chewing of the cud of memories—mostly sweet, none very bitter—while I lie still a little in the sunshine, ere the soon-closing night" (Preface, p. v.).

Nevertheless, when she attempts to compare the present with the past, there is a regretful, backward glance at the "good old times," which is not in perfect harmony with her accustomed optimism. She thinks there was more simplicity and more innocent joy. The young used to laugh more joyously; harmless pranks and jests were more in vogue; life, as a whole, was brighter. Miss Cobbe dates the change from the Crimean War, "which brought a great seriousness into all our lives." She was thirty-two years old when that war broke out, and it is conceivable that the change she notes was subjective. I recollect when I was about the same age expressing the opinion that stamp-collecting had gone out of fashion among boys, and being assured that the change was simply that I had gone out of boyhood. So we may doubt whether, if Miss Cobbe was privileged to live her earthly life over again, she would discover even in this age, or during the next thirty years or so, the "mental and moral anaemia" which she suspects is due to the ebb "of religious hope and faith, and the reaction from the extreme and too hasty optimism which culminated in 1851."

Miss Cobbe's own book shows that the tendency of the times has not been wholly downward. The position of animals, of children, of women to-day, bears witness to some awakening of the sense of justice—a reluctant awakening perhaps, but still real. In 1840—

"It was the universal opinion that no gentlewoman could possibly earn money without derogating altogether from her rank (unless indeed by card-playing, as my grandmother did regularly!); and that housekeeping and needlework (of the most unartistic kind) were her only fitting pursuits. The one natural ambition of her life was supposed to be a 'suitable' marriage, the phrase always referring to settlements rather than sentiments. Study of any serious kind was disapproved, and 'accomplishments' only were cultivated." (Vol. i. pp. 170-171.)

Her father paid largely for her lessons in music, an art for which she had no taste, but forbade her to learn Latin. At the school she was sent to at Brighton she says everything was taught "in the inverse ratio of its true importance," morals and religion being at the bottom of the scale, and music and dancing at the top. Her thoughts, she tells us, when she left school were,

"What a delightful thing it is to have done with study! Now I may really enjoy myself! I know as much as any girl in our school, and since it is the best school in England, I must know all that it can ever be necessary for a lady to know. I will not trouble my head ever again with learning anything; but read novels and amuse myself for the rest of my life." (Vol. i. p. 69.)

Soon, however, wiser thoughts prevailed, and Miss Cobbe laboriously taught herself what "the best school in England" for girls could not give. Surely, in this respect at least, the movement to Girton and Newnham, and innumerable high schools where girls are really educated, is upward, not downward.

If there has been advance in the education of women, still more has there been advance in the recognition of their rights, since the days when "a husband who had beaten and wronged his wife in every possible way, could yet force her by law to live with him, and become the mother of his children," and when "a married woman's inheritance, and even her own earnings . . . were legally robbed from her by her husband, and given, if he pleased, to his mistress." Perhaps the world does not progress, or progresses only in a circle; but Mr. Carlyle, Mr. Ruskin, Mr. Froude, and Miss Cobbe all fail to convince me that "the olden time" was ever really better than to-day.

In general, however, Miss Cobbe looks at the bright side of things, and of men and women also. At one time or another she has known a great number of noted persons, as private friends or as co-operators with her in her work. Among them were Mary Somerville, the Brownings, John Stuart Mill, Tennyson, Cardinal Manning, and Lord Shaftesbury. Of the disinterestedness, clearness of judgment, and broad-mindedness of the last-named, she speaks in terms of highest praise. She met Mr. Ayrton, at one time a much-abused Commissioner of Works, and found him "rather saturnine, but an incorruptible, unbending sort of man, for whom I felt respect." Samuel Warren, the author of Ten Thousand a Year, was "a little ugly fellow, but full of fire and fun." In the closing pages of the book she pays a graceful and deserved tribute to the memory of her friend, Mrs. R. V. Yates, of Liverpool, a woman whose far-reaching goodness was too unassuming ever to be fully known.

In the way of minor criticism, I may be permitted to point out that the list of "Errata" is very incomplete, and that such a book ought to have an index. It is surely a mistake to suggest that writers like Zola create ugliness, when in fact they only reveal it, and thereby, perhaps, do a more beneficent work than Miss Cobbe seems to recognise. Speaking of the use of dead birds as ornaments, Miss Cobbe says "These things are a disgrace to women, for which I have often felt they deserve to be despised and swept aside by men as soulless creatures unworthy of freedom"; and in another place she freely admits "that angling scarcely comes under the head of cruelty at all, and is perfectly right and justifiable when the fish are wanted for food, and are killed quickly." Does she really mean that it is more vicious to enjoy wearing birds as ornaments, than to slaughter fish for pleasure? It may be necessary to kill creatures for food, but to make a pastime of killing them seems to me different in degree only and not in kind from the offence of vivisection. Finally, it seems strange for this good friend of animals to call them "dumb"—when the truth is we are too stupid to understand their language, although they can partly understand ours.

In her integrity, her keen sense of right, her readiness and courage in doing it, Miss Cobbe has long seemed to me one of those rare persons of whom Emerson says, "They make the earth wholesome."

WALTER LEWIN.

KUENEN'S COLLECTED ESSAYS.

Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur Biblischen Wissenschaft von Dr. Abraham Kuenen.
Aus dem Holländischen übersetzt von K. Budde. (Freiburg i. B. und Leipzig.)

ALL students of the Old Testament will welcome this volume. It consists of a well chosen selection of some of the most characteristic and untechnical of the master's essays, which, while they possess a high intrinsic value of their own, and are an important supplement to Kuenen's larger works, at the same time afford admirable examples of the exactitude and thoroughness with which critical investigations should be conducted.

The volume owes its origin to a remark of the translator in a notice of Kuenen's life and work in the Theologische Literaturzeitung for July 22, 1893, in which, while emphasising the importance of Kuenen's essays, as examples of method, for young students of the Old Testament, Prof. Budde regretted that none were accessible in the language of his own countrymen. Within a few days an offer came from Herr Siebeck to publish a selection of translations in German, and the result is the present book.

The interest of the volume will be best understood by a summary of its contents. It opens appropriately with an essay on "Critical Method," an exposition of some of the fundamental principles of historical investigation, which appeared originally in an English periodical (the Modern Review, 1880, p. 461 sqq., 685 sqq.). There follow six essays, contributed between 1866 and 1890, to the Transactions of the Amsterdam Academy of Sciences, on "The Composition of the Sanhedrin," "The Pedigree of the Massoretic Text of the Old Testament," "The Men of the Great Synagogue," "Hugo Grotius as an Expositor of the Old Testament," "The 'Melechet of Heaven' in Jer. vii. and xlv.," and "The Chronology of the Persian Age of Jewish History." The other eight essays which the volume contains are taken, with one exception, from the Theologisch Tijdschrift (1880-1890). The first two are critical studies on portions of the Hexateuch (Gen. xxxiv., Ex. xvi.), being specimens of the many elaborate discussions on similar subjects, contributed during a series of years to the same periodical. Next follow "The Criticism of the Hexateuch and the Religious History of Israel" (1885)—principally a criticism of König's Offenbarungsbegriff des alten Testaments, and of the same writer's Hauptprobleme der Altisraelitischen Religionsgeschichte; "Verisimilia?"—a painstaking refutation of the curious reconstruction of the Pauline Epistles, propounded in a treatise called Verisimilia by two eminent classical scholars of Holland; "The Work of Ezra"; "The Latest Phases of the Criticism of the Hexateuch" (1888)—principally a review of Dillmann's theory of the composition of the Hexateuch, as developed in the appendix at the end of his Commentary, but including also a criticism of M. Verne's extravagant hypotheses respecting Israelitish literature; and lastly two articles containing critical reviews (1888, 1890)—of Renan's Histoire du Peuple d'Israël (Tome i.), Kittel's Geschichte der Hebräer, Baethgen's Beiträge zur semitischen Religionsgeschichte, and Baudissin's Geschichte des Alttestamentlichen Priestertums. The volume closes with a list (pp. 501-511) of Kuenen's literary publications, the number and variety of which are convincing evidence of the author's industry and power.

Where all is excellent, it is difficult to draw distinctions; but perhaps the Essays on the Sanhedrin and the Men of the Great Synagogue display Kuenen's powers at their best, illustrating, as they do, both the exhaustiveness with which every scrap and tittle of evidence is collected and judiciously sifted, and the calm impartiality with which conflicting statements are balanced against each other. The Essay on the Massoretic Text of the Old Testament is also wonderfully comprehensive and acute; but its subject-matter is less generally interesting: it is not a positive contribution to the discovery of the sources of the Massoretic Text, but an examination, based upon a survey of all available remains of early Jewish and Christian literatures, of a theory of Legarde's—that the basis of this text was a copy of the Hebrew Bible which, according to a late Arabic author, the Jews had taken with them under Hadrian to Babylonia, altering in it at the same time, from polemical motives, the patriarchal chronology in Genesis. The essay on the "Great Synagogue," though hitherto buried in the inaccessible pages of the Proceedings of a Dutch society, has long been highly valued by those who knew it; and by most students of the subject its argument is regarded as conclusive. That in the "Melechet of Heaven" is directed against Stade's interpretation of this expression of Jeremiah's: its conclusion is to confirm the generally accepted explanation, "Queen of Heaven." The essay on the Persian age is a powerful defence of the traditional view against the opinion, advocated by several recent writers, which places Ezra and Nehemiah, not under Darius Hystaspis and Artaxerxes I., but a century later, under Darius Nothus and Artaxerxes II. The second group of essays deal more directly with the religion or history of the Old Testament, and estimate the most important works written upon them during recent years. Kuenen, like other advocates, may have over-stated his theory, and under-estimated what were real factors in the religious development of Israel; nevertheless, these essays, by their lucid statement of the issues raised, and the evident cogency of many of their arguments, form an invaluable guide to recent criticism of the Old Testament, and will render material help to those who desire to reach just conclusions on the subject.

Of Kuenen's personal life and characteristics, an interesting sketch has been published in England by Mr. P. H. Wicksteed in the Jewish Quarterly Review for July, 1892. In the Preface to the present volume Prof. Budde prints a considerable extract from the striking and eloquent tribute to his powers, which appeared in the article in the Theologische Literaturzeitung, already referred to. In it he points, with just admiration, not only to his high intellectual qualities, but also to his moral greatness. "He stood upon his watch-tower, as it were the conscience of Old Testament science." Any one who recalls the long series of "Literary Surveys" and other notices which appeared at intervals during many years in the Theologisch Tijdschrift, with their uniform fairness of representation, good temper, and patience, will recognise the force of the comparison. Kuenen was characterised "not merely by fine scholarship, critical insight, historical sense, and a religious nature, but also by an incorruptible conscientiousness, and a majestic devotion to the quest of truth." His materials were always collected and examined with scrupulous completeness and care; his judgment was circumspect and impartial; and he never failed to measure accurately the limits of a conclusion and the degree of probability which attached to it. "Kuenen's essays will remain for all time examples of critical method, as Lessing's have stood till to-day." And there are many, we are sure, in both Germany and England, who will be grateful to Prof. Budde for having brought this representative selection of them so readily within their reach.

S. R. DRIVER.

Memorials of Old Whitby. By the Rev. J. C. Atkinson. (Macmillans.)

THOSE who love Whitby—and with most who see the place it is love at first sight—will be glad to learn its past history from so competent an authority as Canon Atkinson. The old town, straggling up the steep hillside in picturesque fashion; the port alive with fishing smacks and foreign craft; and, above all, the noble fragment of the Abbey Church, which crowns the southern cliff—combine to make up a scene of unusual interest and beauty. Mr. Alfred Hunt has found in it an inexhaustible supply of subjects for his pencil, and Canon Atkinson is by no means the first to deal with its historical associations. But his predecessors shared the fault of the age in which they lived, and the annals compiled by Messrs. Charlton and Young a century and a half ago are wonderful examples of laborious and often ludicrous error.

Canon Atkinson modestly disclaims the title of historian. What he offers in the present volume are gleanings from ancient records and corrections of current mistakes—the result of years of patient thought by a mind adapted by nature and training to historical research. There can be but one opinion of their value, and of the services which the author has rendered to early English history. His mode of treatment, of course, involves some lack of continuity, and thus the book is rather a collection of independent essays than a consecutive narrative. There is also—as a result of such treatment—a tendency to discuss minor details at undue length. But, it must be borne in mind, the author is writing especially for the student and antiquary, and is distinctly happy in his way of making every old word and local name deliver up its meaning, and of eliciting by careful inquiry and deduction a reasonable conclusion. Now and then even he is at fault: notably so in connexion with the puzzle presented by the earlier name of Whitby, which is variously written Streoneshale and Streaneshalh. It is not very difficult to suggest a plausible derivation for the name (which is Anglian in form) that would suit the local features. Streones might be taken as the genitive of a personal name, and the termination might be a variant of haugh, and mean "a glen with overhanging braes or sides"—descriptive enough of what Whitby must have been in early days. But, unfortunately, Bede translates the name into Latin as "Sinus Fari"; and, though one may accommodate the former word to some of the meanings of hath, to extract a watch-tower out of the remainder is an etymological problem as yet unsolved.

"I see," says Canon Atkinson, "no legitimate way out of the difficulty. I could see my way to the Roman look-out fort, and from that to the Celtic dun; and from that, again, by a not unusual transition, to the hill-promontory on which it was planted; and from this it was not difficult to arrive at the Celtic prefix stron, stran, strran, stroon, all from Gaelic Srón, a promontory, a hill-end, which we have at Whitby in its full sense in what was, beyond dispute, the site of the Anglo-Saxon monastery. But there the facilities ended, and the difficulties commenced in serious earnest. For one thing the introduction—preferably the intrusion—of Srón, Anglicised as it is in pronunciation into Stron or Stroon, necessitated the stress to be laid on the final element, which we have no reason to suppose was or could be the case; and, in the second place, there is the intermediate s to be accounted for; for it could not possibly belong to Srón, and it was equally difficult to see how it could be lawfully introduced by the aill or allt; and, with the recognition of this difficulty, the hope of reconciling the idea of a lost or obsolete tongue with Bæda's phrase, 'quod interpretatur sinus fari,' disappeared from view."

In the forefront of the annals of Whitby—to adopt the place's later name—two names stand out conspicuously: Cædmon, the poet, and Hilda, the abbess. The latter—whom Canon Atkinson prefers to call Hild (although he allows Bede's name to be Latinised)—deserves to be described as a "great and energetic woman." She was the foundress of the Abbey as far back as the year 656; but in what way she became possessed of the land on which her monastery was built and by which it was in part sustained, does not positively appear. Probably it was granted by King Oswin, whose daughter Aelfleda succeeded Hilda as abbess in 680:

"The character, the dimensions, the precise site of this earliest Whitby church are alike utterly concealed in impenetrable obscurity. There can be little doubt, however, that it was not so much a plain as a rude structure: most likely framed of split trunks of trees adjusted side by side so as to give a partially smooth wall within, with thatch of rushes or reeds, and side-lights only partially secured by light lattices of wood."

But, however humble the building, it is connected with at least one important event—the Synod of Streoneshale, which was summoned in 663 or 664 for the purpose of settling certain disputes which agitated the early northern Church; and it gave shelter to the herdsman "from whose lips during the reign of Oswin flowed the first great English song." Upon Cædmon's social condition and upon the etymology of his name Canon Atkinson has far more to say than upon the subject of his poem. Cædmon, he thinks, might have been something higher in rank than an oxherd—he might have been a gebür—but, whatever he was, it is in evidence of some sort that he was entrusted with the charge of the lord's herd during the night, that while in charge he fell asleep, that then a vision came to him and so powerfully affected his imagination that it found expression in rhythmic words. Others had sung of feats of arms and conflicts with monsters in the seen and unseen worlds; Cædmon's subject was the world's Creation and the world's Redemption. It agrees well with this romantic story that the poet should be Celtic, or rather Cymric, in race. His name favours the supposition, for—we are told—it probably represents Catumanus: in modern Welsh, Cadfan. But it should not be forgotten that Cadman is still a name by no means uncommon in England, and there is a widespread family bearing it in Norfolk. The race which inhabited Northumbria in pre-Norman times was undoubtedly very mixed; and, while one cannot suppose that there was any dominant Celtic element there is certainly nothing to forbid its presence.

The fortunes of the earlier monastery, so bright at the outset, suffered a rapid reverse. After the death of Aelfleda in 713 a complete blank in its history occurs. It is hardly possible to believe that, if there had been anything to chronicle, there would not have found among its inmates or among those who had been trained within its walls some annalist to record it. Nothing, however, has come down to us, except the fact that about 867 or 870 the place was laid waste by Danish invaders, and remained desolate and desecrated for two hundred years. But though the religious house had fallen into ruins, the town by degrees attained, through its vigorous occupants, a large measure of prosperity, and in the latter half of the eleventh century the monastery was refounded.

Canon Atkinson traces very carefully the several stages in this important work, and the part taken in it by various members of the Percy family. Much additional light is thrown upon the history of the Percys, and especially of the Kildale line, by our author; but it is to his minute and interesting account of the successive abbey-churches which have occupied the site of the present ruins, that most readers will turn. They will find there stores of valuable information laid open, and will be enabled, by means of the excellent illustrations, to see how the work of one age was modified or supplemented by that of the next, and in what way the result was reached which even now—in spite (or, ought we to say? by reason) of its decay—commands our admiration.

Within the compass of some three hundred pages Canon Atkinson has amassed an amount of historical and antiquarian lore of which our limits permit us to give but scanty samples. But they are, it is hoped, enough to testify to the author's ability and learning, as well as to the thoroughness of his research.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

Pictures from Bohemia. Drawn with Pen and Pencil by James Baker. (Religious Tract Society.)

We heartily hope that the publication of this very readable and well-illustrated volume will do something to make the Bohemians, or Chekhs—as they are more correctly called—better known in England.

Mr. Baker is evidently an intelligent traveller; little escapes his notice, be it a picturesque building or the quaint costume of a peasant. He is also familiar with his Palacky, and has plenty to say about Jan Hus, Zizka, Peter Payne, and the men of the fifteenth century. Thus, when he comes to Aussig, he rightly recalls the Hussite victory over the Germans, when the flails and the "morning stars," as the spiked balls were called, were freely plied by the Bohemians upon their retreating foes. This battle forms the subject of a contemporary ballad, printed in the second volume of the Vybor, or Selection from Old Bohemian Writings (Prague, 1868). Mr. Baker has a real sympathy with the people among whom he has spent such a pleasant time, and thoroughly understands their national struggles. Perhaps our countrymen may learn from his book that the Bohemians are neither Germans nor gypsies, nor people of irregular habits, which the foolish use of the word "Bohemian" among us, borrowed from the French, causes some people to think.

Unfortunately, owing to his ignorance of the national language, Mr. Baker gives us most of the local names in a travestied form, German corruptions being substituted for the genuine Chekh names. We must confess that we have a dislike to Jungbunzlau for Mlada Boleslav, and such inappropriate expressions as Gros (sic) and Klein Skal. So, also, in spite of his apposite citations from Palacky (obviously through a German translation) our author tells us nothing of the interesting remains of Old Bohemian literature. Ample testimony was borne to its existence by the many splendid illuminated volumes to be seen at the Prague Exhibition of 1891, which showed that the Bohemian language in former times was used in the highest circles, even if we did not have the Golden Bull of the Emperor Charles IV. to justify such an opinion. Mr. Baker also does not tell us of the wonderful resurrection of the Bohemian language and literature in the present century. The Chekhs have now awaked from the intellectual torpor of two centuries to which their rulers had condemned them. The names of their authors have been heard far beyond the bounds of their native country: such as Schafarik, Palacky, and Kollar, and in our own times Tomck and Vrchlicky.

One of the pleasing features of Mr. Baker's book is that he always has something to tell us about the Bohemian museums: we see how rich they are in historical curiosities pointing to that glorious past, which they had been insidiously taught to forget, but which in reality they have ever remembered. Prague is naturally the theme of his warmest praises, and no one who has seen that picturesque city will fail to endorse the glowing eulogy of our author at the conclusion of his sixth chapter. When treating of Prague he is eloquent about the fine museum there, now housed in a more capacious building than heretofore; nor does he omit the rich private collection of Mr. Vojta Naprstek, the patriot, whose name, however, is unfortunately mis-spelled. The museum at Pilsen also attracts his attention, containing very early printed Bohemian books; and he finds much that is curious at Klattau. Jicin leads him to think of Comenius (whose name is also mis-spelled), and of Wenceslaus Hollar. The tercentenary of the birth of the former was celebrated two years ago in many parts of Europe. As a master in the art of teaching, his reputation is world-wide. Hollar, who ended his life in England after strange vicissitudes, is also well known by his engravings.

We have been especially pleased with the constant allusions which Mr. Baker makes to Peter Payne, whom he calls "the great forgotten Englishman." It was Payne who carried over to Bohemia the doctrines of Wickliffe, and thus lit the torch that set the whole country in a blaze. If we try to trace the career of Payne in England, we are always baffled. He is Petrus Paganus and Peter the Clerk: he is known to have been the Principal of St. Edmund Hall, at Oxford. But no documents have come down concerning him, and unfortunately the Oxford registers, as now preserved, date only from 1449. Gascoigne, in his Theological Dictionary, has plenty of abuse of him, but we really learn nothing about him from that work. Cochlaeus, at a later period a bitter opponent of the Hussites, speaks of him as a persistent heretic. While describing Saaz (Zatec), Mr. Baker has some eloquent remarks upon the career of this indefatigable man, who is indeed a "suppressed figure" in religious history.

Our author thoroughly appreciates the vast issues of the labours of Hus, of whom Milman truly said that he died as an assertor of the principle of private judgment in theological matters. He was not only important as a religious reformer, but has left his mark upon his native language. He even improved the orthography of Chekh by introducing the diacritical marks (see Tieftrunk, Historie Literatury Ceske, p. 36). An engraving is given of the house in which Hus was born at Husinec. We may here remark that, for a good account of what Hus did (based upon original authorities), no better work can be recommended than that by the late Mr. Wratislaw (1882).

During the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries the annals of this little country are full of interest. The evil hour came when, by marriage, it was annexed to the house of Austria. With Ferdinand I. begins the long series of encroachments on Bohemian liberties. In 1547 several citizens were put to death for defending their ancient privileges. The attempts to preserve the national religion and national language and institutions, by the election of the incapable Frederick, resulted in the Battle of the White Mountain in 1620. Bohemia for two centuries was blotted from the roll of nations. It is strange that when Joseph II., by his Edict of Toleration, allowed the Protestants to raise their heads in Bohemia, several thousand families avowed that their ancestors had remained Protestant, although outwardly conforming to the Roman Catholic religion in order to escape persecution. Among these were the parents of the historian Palacky. After the Thirty Years' War the country sank into absolute insignificance. The wonder is that it was not completely Germanised. But we may truly say of Bohemia, "Mereses profundo pulchrior evenit"; and never was there a firmer and truer national self-consciousness among the Bohemians than at the present time.

Mr. Baker is struck by the picturesqueness of the Bohemian costume, and his pages contain some interesting pictures illustrative of it. We only regret that he cannot read the Český Lid, the valuable Bohemian journal of folk-lore, which appears under the editorship of MM. Zibrt and Niederle. Here he would find excellent articles on Bohemian rustic life, with pictures of dresses and views of quaint houses in the old towns and villages. The important work of Dr. Zibrt, entitled "The History of Bohemian Dress" (Dějiny Kroje v zemích českých), is a veritable mine of information. Of course Mr. Baker has much to tell us of the career of the mysterious Wallenstein—or Waldstein, as his name is more correctly written. He is reminded of this great historical figure in many places, and in none more than at Eger (Cheb), the scene of his assassination.

We have read Mr. Baker's book with much pleasure. Here and there, as previously noticed, we have come upon some mis-spellings. Perhaps there is a little naïveté in saying that the handwriting of Ceni, Wallenstein's astrologer, is curiously like "Charles Pebody's, the late editor of the Yorkshire Post." These, however, are trifles. We hope that Mr. Baker may pay the country another visit, and that he will go prepared to penetrate to the hearts of the people by means of some acquaintance with their ancient and interesting language.

W. R. MORFILL.

An Imaged World: Poems in Prose. By Edward Garnett. (Dent.)

THIS book, designed in every detail with curious ingenuity, and illustrated by Mr. William Hyde with five drawings of remarkable power and effect, is one of those puzzling experiments on which it is very hard to pronounce. "Poems in prose"—its very genre is the most difficult in all the literary categories. The laws of prose we know, and the laws of poetry we know, or think we know; but who shall decide on the elusive limits and qualities of the prose-poem, and deduce from the Bible and Ossian, Mr. Henley and M. Mallarmé, Walt Whitman and Tourguenief, its first conditions?

Mr. Edward Garnett, we should say, has felt all the influences which these names suggest; but his work in this volume is not like that of any predecessors, and is certainly not wrought at all on traditional lines. He has not even, so far as can be gathered, imitated himself and his own previous writings. He seems to have conceived the idea of writing a series of love-poems in dithyrambic paragraphs; using nature and man, town and country, in these, with an intense subjectivity. He does not add much, because of this very subjectivity, to our knowledge of things as they really are; but he makes it clear enough, if sometimes by rather round-about ways, what Night—the "lawless old Night"—and Day, the Thorn-Blossom and the Storm-wind, signify to his own rather extravagant fancy.

Perhaps it will be fairer, and certainly it will make his method clearer, if we quote at once a characteristic passage, instead of trying, inadequately, to analyse and define what is Mr. Garnett's conception of a prose-poem. Take this from a page headed "Earth Seeks to Console him,"—i.e., to console the lover:

"At sunset I wandered to the hillside, the Sun died in purple lustrous, and the young cowslip Moon rose high in the heavens. In the pale blue of the evening sky she stood, in a pure white arch of clouds, clouds wreathed and slight. And, as the sun's light died, there failed too the sweet song of the forest birds, slowly their sweet notes died, and all the dark wood hushed as gentle Night came wandering over the plains of the world. Oh, happiness awaits the souls of men when they shall turn towards beauty. Oh happy then, thrice happy to be born of earth."

As passage after passage of this order follows, we begin at last to understand a little what Mr. Garnett's method is, and what manner of sound-effect he gives us in the place of the regular lyric forms of the love-poet. Some of his imaginative flights have a finely sonorous effect; some develop the emotional rhythm until they attain to something very like what in the case of Welsh preachers is expressively termed the "hwyl"—an oratorical expedient that is convincing or not, according to the taste of the hearer. This, for example:

"The Darkness enfolds us, the enchanted Darkness hath snatched us, lo! the Darkness hath woven love's web of abandonment for us. The night wind strong and triumphant is chaunting its strange indomitable song, of freedom imperious interpenetrating, of what all Creation hath willed for us, of what is willed by us, of whatever surges, surges of love out-flowing. Lo, hear the thunder-breaking seas, lo, hear the wind riding on the hissing foam-crests. Ah! 'tis the mingling song of two rushing rivers, their waters nearing! nearing! striking! mingling! Hearst thou the violent surf loud shattering on the shore? What impels? what withholds? only the starlight beholds, only the night wind flinging its lawless great voice over the mad sea, chaunts of God's triumph."

Mr. Garnett's use of adjectives here and elsewhere reminds one strongly, at times, of some of the Celtic romancers, by whom, perhaps, he may have been affected. If so, we are inclined to complain that he is too content to choose those adjectival terms that describe generic, instead of specific, qualities. He rarely supplies us with the incisive, luminous, intimate words that bring the conviction of his having really observed the night-wind, the sea, and the fields, with the born observer's and the born poet's faculty. His vigorous rhetorical equivalents for these vital words pall after a time.

From what has been said, it will not be inferred, I hope, that Mr. Garnett's new book does not maintain that sense of faculty, of a certain potentiality, which his two earlier works led one to form. An Imaged World, whatever the measure of its actual accomplishment, whatever its ineffectiveness as poetry, or prose, or as both, impresses one as above all things potential. It leaves one with the conviction that its writer is fairly to be reckoned one of the small group of his younger contemporaries who count, who will probably achieve notably yet. It does not make one feel, however, that he has in its sounding pages quite attained. As for Mr. Hyde's drawings, they deserve a better appreciation than we have room to express here. They show imagination and a subtlety and distinction of treatment that should surely win the artist wider opportunities; they show once again how uncertain is "word-painting" in comparison with the genuine thing.

ERNEST RHYS.

NEW NOVELS.

A Rising Star. By D. Christie Murray. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Adam the Gardener. By Mrs. Stephen Batson. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Unbidden Guest. By E. W. Hornung. (Longmans.)

The Adventurers. By Mrs. Edwardes. (Bentley.)

A Desert Bride. By Hume Nisbet. (White.)

The Story of John Coles. By M. E. Kenyon. (Digby, Long & Co.)

The Mark o' the Devil. By Howard Pease. (Fisher Unwin.)

A Common Story. By Ivan Gontcharoff. (Heinemann.)

At least one fact may be recorded in favour of Mr. Christie Murray's latest novel—it is interesting, and it is as easy to read as the most careless person could desire. Moreover, it is well spiced with the piquancy of personal allusions—more than allusions, it may be said. The Duke of Belisle and the Marquis of Limesborough will be recognised at once, though in the flesh the duke and the marquis who stood for these portraits are not—were not, perhaps, should be said, for the duke lives, and the marquis is dead—closely related. In the novel the duke is the marquis's father. Lord Limesborough is a very likely son for such a sire. The story turns on the career of a young woman named Esther Reddy, who, as Miss Evelyn Delacour, goes on the stage, and, aided by a beautiful person, no little natural ability, and, above all, a heart as hard as stone, which enables her to keep her eyes fixed unswervingly on everything which will subserve her own interest, rises in the profession, and, ultimately, after battenning on the senile fondness of a ducal admirer, succeeds in securing the reversion of this nobleman's worldly goods and honours by allying herself with his graceless heir. Esther, too, is suspiciously like an actual person. As for the corrupt dramatic critic, Mayhill, let us hope that he is not to be confounded with any living person, though one cannot help suspecting the author intended that he should be. The novel shows an intimate knowledge of theatrical life behind the scenes; but now and again Mr. Murray commits singular errors. A dramatic critic is not supposed either to applaud or to demonstrate disapproval at the first night of a play; and the device whereby the manager checks a malignant journalist's effort to "guy" a piece is altogether too thin: a corrupt man bent on mischief would not be turned aside from his design by a flimsy trick of the kind.

We like Mrs. Batson's novel exceedingly, though we are by no means blind to its faults. Naturalistic studies, as faithful as they are picturesque, are lightened with incidents, which, though effective, savour too much of melodrama. In incident and characterisation this novel has points of similarity with Mr. Rider Haggard's Dawn. This is doubtless accidental; but certainly in Mrs. Skinner we see Mildred Carr, and in the supplanting of Adam Romaine by his cousin Giles, and the undoing of Sir Adam at a critical moment, we are again reminded of Mr. Haggard's earliest novel. The idea of the story is as ingenious as it is seasonable. Adam Romaine, heir to an ancient baronetcy, is bitten with socialistic ideas, and he determines to put his theories to the test of practical experience. He goes to a county not too remote from his own, and essays to lead the life of an agricultural labourer. He is zealous in his investigations, and even goes the length of "keeping company" with a village maiden, in order that he may possess himself of the inner characteristics of the women belonging to the labouring class. The result may be guessed. The girl falls in love with him; and Adam, who in his fatuous zeal has never counted on such a possibility, tries to make a wrong right by committing the folly of marrying the girl. Of course, this makes things ten times worse. His father is so incensed that, even before he knows of this fatal mésalliance, he calls a remote relative, and a sorry "boulder" to boot, to his side, and makes him his heir. The main idea of the book was skilfully used by Mr. Algernon Gissing, in his penultimate novel; but, for all that, Mrs. Batson's work is a true study of Wessex life and Wessex habits of thought, though it lacks the touch of genius which gives vitality to Mr. Thomas Hardy's labours in similar fields. What the rustic craves for is more largesse from his social superiors: therein lies his socialism, not in supporting any mere radical scheme. A long acquaintance with the type, for there is much similarity between the peoples of Sussex and of Wessex, convinces us that Mrs. Batson is right in this theory.

Never commit the fault, as general as it is stupid, of judging a novel by its opening chapters. Sometimes an author exhausts himself early. Sometimes he elects to dally with his theme, and does not properly goad himself to his work until he has leisurely prepared the ground. This last method always proves to be the most artistic. A novel should be written on the crescendo principle. As a rule, the fish best worth catching take the longest to land. Nevertheless, one is sorely tried in reading Mr. Hornung's story. His style, never actually felicitous, is by no means seductive in the early part of the book. But as one goes on the reward is plentifully vouchsafed. We are introduced to a farming family living on the outskirts of Melbourne, upon whom a firebrand from England suddenly descends. A young girl, the daughter of an old friend of the farmer, who has remained in England and grown rich there, has come to Melbourne on a visit. She, or rather a girl calling herself by her name, presents herself at the homestead. The simple farmer and his family have been expecting a person of ideas; they find such, but not in the sense they had anticipated. The girl wins all their hearts; but she is an impostor—in brief, she is a fifth-rate actress, with a sullied reputation. Mr. Hornung's skill lies in characterisation. This girl is exceedingly cleverly drawn; we end by loving her, despite her faults. We love, too, David Teesdale, the generous-minded head of the family; and, before the close of the book, we are reconciled to his dour and forbidding wife. There are several really dramatic situations in this novel, especially one in which Mrs. Teesdale rises from her bed of sickness to denounce the adventuress who has won her son's heart. Somehow, just at the end, when John William Teesdale ought to attain his highest, he falls short, not in deeds, but in words. In one sense Mr. Hornung is justified; but the excuse that John William would fail to express himself will not suffice artistically, even if it were valid on naturalistic grounds.

Mrs. Edwardes introduces us to an adventuress of another kind: one of those cosmopolitan nobodies, possessing every attraction but that of a secure position, with which every visitor to the Riviera, indeed to all the fashionable continental haunts, is familiar. But, worldly as she was, Rose Hathaway was by no means worthless. She only wanted to come in contact with real strength to ally herself with it. One rejoices that the plucky parson who laid siege to her ends in confounding the burnt-out sexagenarian who so nearly succeeded in purchasing her. And, after all, dangerous as the Rose Hathaways of society are, they are not nearly so intrinsically worthless as women of the Mrs. Tredennick type: women who having married without love, deliberately attach to themselves chivalrous gallants whom they hold in durance vile, routing any woman who might make for them fitting helpmeets, with a callous selfishness which inspires disgust in the minds of those who watch the game.

Mr. Hume Nisbet's book for boys is full enough of mighty fights and hairbreadth 'scapes to please the most jaded palate. Two young men set off to Persia to discover the "Peacock Throne," a magnificent affair, which the Great Mogul had had made for him, and which was said to have cost six millions sterling. The mother of one of the lads is of the party. They have a fine time of it, climbing mountains, masquerading as jugglers, and eavesdropping while a certain Prince makes love to his brother's wife. However, they come through mutiny and rebellion all right, and at last find the throne in a cave, and, having broken it up, return to enjoy their riches in undisturbed peacefulness.

The Story of John Cotes cannot be taken seriously. Its feebleness is too transparently feeble. John Cotes is a burglar and a murderer. He is also an accomplished seducer. He finds his way into a country rectory and works havoc all round. In the end the bull-dog he had lured from its allegiance to the rectory folk, and to whose ferocity the little son of the house had fallen a victim, becomes the instrument of his own destruction.

It is a relief to turn from the two last books to the volume of Northumbrian tales by Mr. Howard Pease. Their rugged simplicity is not the least of their charms, while their fidelity to life and nature is conspicuous among their attractions. Here we have literature, and of a valuable kind. This is a book to put on one's shelves.

Mr. Edmund Gosse reminds us that M. Michel Zagonlaïeff, in writing of Gontcharoff, said that "the basis of the three novels of this illustrious writer is nothing else than the permanent inward struggle between diametrically opposed sides of his own character." Anyone reading attentively A Common Story will probably admit that M. Zagonlaïeff has in this sentence given a remarkable true and lucid criticism of the work, and of its somewhat perplexing characters. The power and freshness of the book is certain to secure for it respectful consideration at the hands of those to whom the reading of fiction is something more than a lazy way of killing time.

JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.

THREE CONCORDANCES.

A Complete Concordance of the Dramatic Works and Poems of Shakspeare. By John Bartlett. (Macmillans.) It was in 1845 that Mrs. Cowden Clarke—who still survives among us as the last depository of traditions about Charles and Mary Lamb—published her "Complete Concordance to Shakspeare," to which she had devoted sixteen years of an active life. That work passed into a second edition, and has long been recognised as indispensable for all students of the English language. Yet it is impossible to regard any book as final; and those who most honour the name of Mrs. Cowden Clarke will admit that Mr. Bartlett was fully justified in attempting a yet more "complete" Concordance, which differs from hers as the latest edition of Liddell and Scott differs from the earliest. Mr. Bartlett is best known in this country as the author of Familiar Quotations, of which the ninth and final edition appeared in 1891; but it may be as well to state that he is also senior partner in the publishing firm of Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, U.S. The present volume, therefore, comes to us—like the Variorum Shakspeare—as a testimony of the devotion paid to Shakspeare in America; while the circumstances of its authorship recall the labour of love which an English bookseller recently expended upon Shelley. So long ago as 1881, Mr. Bartlett brought out a Shakspeare Phrase-book, which aimed at being an index of phrases rather than of words. The work before us, we are told, was begun yet earlier, in 1876; and has been since gradually completed in the author's leisure hours, "with the ever-ready assistance of his wife." It is, indeed, a monumental work, consisting of nearly two thousand quarto pages, closely printed in double column. Considering the number of books by English authors that have recently been issued with an American imprint, we feel bound to add that this is the product of a British press, and reflects, in both type and paper, the highest credit upon Messrs. R. & R. Clark, of Edinburgh. As compared with the familiar work of Mrs. Cowden Clarke, Mr. Bartlett's Concordance differs in several important respects, quite apart from its superiority in typography. That which will first strike the most incurious eye is that the quotations are given at full length, frequently extending to two lines, and sometimes to three. While this plan adds greatly to the bulk of the work, it has the supreme advantage of transfiguring it from a barren index of dead words into a readable cento of living quotations. In the second place, in addition to the main word are given all the principal combinations in which it is found. For example, after nine columns of "God," there follow three more, containing such phrases as "God Almighty," "God He knows," "God of battles," "God's peace," &c., &c. Thirdly, greater comprehensiveness has been attained by "the inclusion of select examples of the verbs to be, to do, to have, may, and their tenses, and the auxiliary verb to let; of the adjectives much, many, more, most, and many adverbs; and of pronouns, prepositions, and conjunctions." Such an extension of the primary scheme of a Concordance must give rise to differences of opinion, but it affords the best opportunity for discretion on the part of the compiler. Here we feel ourselves safe in Mr. Bartlett's hands. We notice that he records all the ten instances of the occurrence of "its"; and, under "thee" its use as a dativus ethicus, and such phrases as "I would not be thee, nuncle." On one point alone are we disposed to question his judgment, though we believe that he has the weight of authority on his side. He places together under one continuous arrangement not only nouns and verbs which are spelt alike (e.g., "fall"), but also homonyms which have no connexion with one another (e.g., "wind"). This may possibly be the most convenient plan for ready reference; but it irritates the reader, and looks unscholarly. Finally, Mr. Bartlett has done one thing which by itself would make his work both unsurpassed and unsurpassable: he has appended the numbering of the lines from the Globe edition, which thus once more obtains recognition as the standard text of Shakspeare—it is hardly too much to say, for all time.

A Concordance to the Poetical Works of Milton. By John Bradshaw. (Sonnenschein.) Without in the least intending to disparage the late Dr. Bradshaw or his publishers, it must be admitted that the second book on our list is unfortunate in challenging comparison with the first. The one is, in substance, a work of literature; in form, a work of art. The other is an honest job of compilation, worthy alike of the industry of the Anglo-Indian educationalist, who died before he could see it through the press, and of the accuracy of its Dutch printers. It is curious to learn that the only previous Concordance to Milton was one published at Madras, in the year of the Mutiny, by a Civil Servant, whose name, by the way, is absent from the list given in Memorials of Old Haileybury College—"finding one of Stuart's race Unhappy, pass his annals by." Next after Shakspeare, Milton assuredly deserves such an honour, which has recently been accorded to Cowper, Burns, and Shelley. The general richness of his vocabulary, his borrowings from the Bible and the classics, his use of compound epithets, all make the language of Milton an interesting subject of study, which cannot be pursued properly without the help of a Concordance. This help Mr. Bradshaw has given us, once and for all, in a book which satisfies all the conventional demands. The type is clear, and the page not too crowded. As contrasted with Mr. Bartlett's prodigality of quotation, the references are cited in a very abbreviated form, with the main word condensed to its initial; so that the columns cannot be called readable. Nor has Mr. Bradshaw been so careful to include the petty words of perpetual recurrence. We find, however, three mentions of "its." With regard to one point, animadverted upon above, we approve of Mr. Bradshaw's general—we cannot say, universal—practice of distinguishing words of different meaning that happen to be spelt in the same way. Thus, "tear" = lacrima and "tear" = diripere are separated; but "fall" the noun and "fall" the verb are combined. We have been surprised to discover that Milton does not employ the word "burgeon," which Tennyson has restored to the language of poetry.

The Comprehensive Concordance to the Holy Scriptures. By the Rev. J. B. R. Walker. (Nelson.) Whether this is an altogether new work we do not know. The author, it seems, was an American clergyman, who died as long ago as 1885. Possibly, his work has already appeared in the United States. The copy before us is dated 1895, and seems—we do not mention it honoris causa—to be of British manufacture. It opens with an introduction by Dr. William Wright, on "The Growth of the English Bible," which might have been spared: and a so-called "Bibliography of Concordances," by Dr. M. C. Hazard. This last is really a brief historical account of lexicons and alphabetical commentaries, as well as of concordances proper. Regarding Cruden, we are mysteriously told: "The defects of Cruden have been elsewhere referred to." Mention is made of the pocket concordance condensed by Downname from the larger work of Clement Cotton; but is it strictly correct to say that this was "entitled A Concordance to the whole Bible"? This is, it is true, the heading of the first page, in a copy in the possession of the present writer, dated 1659; but the title-page proper begins "A Brief Concordance, &c." From one who undertakes to write a bibliography of concordances, absolute accuracy in such matters is essential. What is not essential is a summary of "the peculiarities and excellences" of the particular concordance to which the bibliography is prefixed. We are told that it contains about 40,000 more references than Cruden, that it omits Cruden's irrelevant quotations and corrects his errors in arrangement, and that it differs from him by including proper names under the common alphabet. Much praise also is bestowed upon the typography. It is true that the printing is legible; but the general effect of the page, of three close columns, is to our eye far from pleasing. It is only fair to give an example of the system adopted. Let us take, therefore, the word "hand." This is followed by "at hand," "by the hand," "deliver out of the hand," "hand with enemies," "hand of God," "his hand," "into the hand," "left hand," "Lord's hand," "mighty hand," "mine hand," "my hand," and so on. This seems to us to be an excess of sub-classification; while the condensation of the references distorts them out of ready recognition. But we admit that the ideal concordance to the Bible, on the same scale as Mr. Bartlett's to Shakspeare, would be too colossal a work for handy use. This volume is at least handy and cheap.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have now nearly ready for issue a book which has been long announced—Memorials of St. James's Palace, by the Rev. Edgar Sheppard, sub-dean of H.M. Chapels Royal. It will be in two volumes, illustrated with no less than 41 full-page plates, some of which are by the process known as photo-intaglio. Besides numerous reproductions of original drawings and rare prints, permission has been given to take photographs of several historical pictures of royal personages and royal marriages in the possession of the Queen.

A History of the Art of Bookbinding, by Mr. W. Salt Brasington, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. It will be a small folio volume, illustrated with about one hundred examples of rare and curious bindings, in ivory, leather, enamel, and precious metals from all countries, from the earliest times, in monochrome and colours. Notice also is taken of the more noteworthy examples of the art in recent days. Fifty copies are to be printed on large paper, for sale in England.

THE fifth edition of the late Sir James Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law will shortly be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., under the editorship of the author's sons, Sir Herbert and Mr. Harry Stephen. Besides the alterations required to bring it up to the level of the most recent legislation and the latest decisions, it will contain an entirely new index, and an alphabetical table of all the indictable offences, showing the appropriate punishment for every one, and how and when it was created.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a book on Primogeniture: a short history of its development in various countries, and its practical effect, by Mr. Evelyn Cecil, of the Inner Temple, who is himself (we believe) a cadet of the house of Exeter.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week a novel, in two volumes, by Mr. W. H. Chesson, entitled Name This Child: a Story of Two. It is a study in temperament, and deals with causes rather than effects. An old but little discussed phase of school life is treated from a new point of view, by means of which the egoism of the principal character is brought into strong relief. The scene is mostly laid on the South Coast.

Peg the Rake is the title of "Rita's" new novel, which will be issued shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., in three volumes. The principal character is a rather reckless Irish woman, who in Ireland would be described as a "rake."

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS announce "The Unknown Authors' Series" of one-volume novels. They have already arranged for six volumes, the first of which, The Burning Mist, by Garrett Leigh, will be published very shortly.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS also announce for early publication Zachary Brough's Venture, by Miss E. Boyd Bayly.

THE title of the character sketch of an Edinburgh Laddie by W. Grant Stevenson, to be issued next week by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, is Puddin'. It will have six full-page illustrations and chapter initials by the author.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co, of Hull, will publish in a few days Bygone Surrey, edited by Mr. George Clinch, of the British Museum, and Mr. S. W. Kershaw. It will include papers written in a popular style on the history, manners, and customs of the county, by local authorities.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERRIER will shortly publish Foreign Missions after a Century, by the Rev. Dr. James S. Dennis, of the American Presbyterian Mission at Beirut, with an introduction by Prof. T. M. Lindsay.

MR. G. H. POWELL, the author of "Play-time with a Pen" and "Rhymes and Reflections," has compiled an anthology of humorous poetry, entitled Musa Jocosca. Among the authors represented are Oliver Wendell Holmes, Thackeray, Calverley, Bret Harte, Lewis Carroll, C. G. Leland, and W. S. Gilbert. The book will be published early next month by Messrs. Bliss, Sands, & Foster.

MR. WALTER BLACKBURN HARTE will publish this autumn, through the Arena Publishing Company, of Boston, a volume of essays called Meditations in Motley: a Bundle of Papers imbued with the Sobriety of Midnight. Mr. Harte is a Londoner by birth, and was educated in the town of Bedford; but he left England as a young man, and has served ten years in American journalism.

IN view of the Parish Councils Elections, a cheap edition of Mr. Thomas Greenwood's standard book on Public Libraries will be issued immediately by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

THE second edition of Mr. Henry Dunning MacLeod's Bimetallism will be published by Messrs. Longmans next week.

DR. STALKER'S Life of Christ has just been issued in a German translation by Mohr, the well-known publisher of the Handbooks of the Theological Sciences.

AMATEURS of historical legends would find a treat in Les Légendes du Saint-Sépulchre, par A. Couret (8, Rue François 1^{er}, Paris). Apart from the attraction of the tales themselves, the little volume is of value from the full references given to the mediæval and other sources whence the legends are derived.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

PROF. W. M. SLOANE has completed a new Life of Napoleon, which will commence in the November number of the Century magazine. The first article deals with Napoleon's school-days, describing how the young Corsican entered, as a foundation scholar, the military academy of Brienne, one of ten then recently instituted as a protest against the luxury of the schools of Paris and La Flèche. Prof. Sloane tells many interesting anecdotes of Napoleon's relations with his fellow-students: how he challenged one of them to a duel, and was rescued from confinement by Marbeuf, who subsequently introduced him to Mme. de Brienne. Among the illustrations will be the reproduction of a crayon-sketch of Napoleon made from life in 1785, which was found recently in the Louvre.

DR. KARL BLIND contributes to the forthcoming number of the National Review an article on Hans Sachs, the Meistersinger, suggested by the four-hundredth anniversary of his birth, which is shortly to be celebrated throughout Germany. The same number will also contain an article by Mr. Diggle on the education question.

THE next number of the Artist, Photographer and Decorator will contain a full-page reproduction of an unpublished drawing by Mr. Ruskin, made between the years 1843 and 1845, when Mr. Ruskin was occupied upon his "Modern Painters." In an early issue will also be commenced a series of reproductions from a Sketch-Book by Michael Angelo, which has been lent for the purpose by a private collector. These sketches have, up to the present, never been reproduced.

THE Bishop of Ripon will contribute a paper, entitled "The Heart of Religion," to the November part of The Quiver, which commences a new volume. The same part will contain contributions by the Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, the Rev. P. B. Power, the Rev. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens, the Rev. G. Everard, and the Rev. B. G. Johns; a paper about "Young Cambridge of To-Day," prepared from an interview with the Rev. H. C. G. Moule; and the opening chapters of two new serial stories: "For Poorer—For Richer," by Annie Q. Carter, and "Angus Vaughan's Widow," by Isabel Bellerby.

A SYMPOSIUM will appear in the forthcoming number of the Humanitarian, in answer to the question, "Should the Same Standard of Morality be required from Men as from Women?" Among the contributors are Lady Burton, Mrs. Josephine Butler, Miss Curtis, the Rev. H. R. Haweis, F. Frankfort Moore, Helen Mathers, Lady Gwendolen Ramsden, Clement Scott, W. H. Wilkins, and Dr. Andrew Wilson.

THE next number of the Senate, now edited by Mr. L. Cranmer Byng and Mr. C. Gordon Winter, will contain the following: "The Humanising of Hester," by Jean de Mezarilles; "A Match-making Ancestor," by Alfred Egerton Hughes; and a poem by "Paganas."

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish on October 31 the first number of a new fashion paper, entitled the Paris Mode, illustrated with coloured plates and wood engravings. Its special feature will be the issue, to subscribers, of patterns cut to their own measurement.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge (the Rev. A. Austen Leigh) will preside at a meeting to be held on Thursday, November 8, in the combination room of King's College, to consider what steps shall be taken to perpetuate the memory of the services rendered to Oriental studies by the late Prof. W. Robertson Smith. As already announced in the ACADEMY, it is proposed to raise a fund to be devoted to the following objects: (1) The continuance and extension of his Oriental library, which has been left to Christ's College; and (2) if possible, the purchase of Oriental MSS. for the University Library.

THE first performance of the "Iphigenia in Tauris" at Cambridge will take place on Friday, November 30, at 8.30 p.m. An acting edition of the play has been prepared, with a prose translation by Dr. Verrall. The incidental music has been written by Mr. Charles Wood, the new fellow of Caius, and will be conducted by him. There will altogether be six performances, including one on the afternoon of Saturday, December 1.

IN connexion with the scheme for providing university instruction for students destined for consular service in the East, Dr. Charles Wells, Oriental translator to the Foreign Office, has been appointed lecturer in Turkish at Oxford for one year.

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday, a decree will be proposed admitting Melbourne to the privileges of a Colonial University.

THE Earl of Cranbrook and Mr. James Bryce have been elected to honorary fellowships at Oriel College, Oxford.

MISS LUCY TOULMIN SMITH—the daughter of the historian of English guilds, and well-known herself for a life devoted to antiquarian research—has been appointed to the new post of librarian at Manchester College, Oxford.

SIR THOMAS WADE, professor of Chinese at Cambridge, announces a public lecture on "China, Corea, and Japan: the Situation in the Far East," to be delivered in the afternoon on Saturday next, in the hall of King's College.

MR. W. R. MOREFILL, reader in Russian at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture at the Taylorian Institution, on Friday of this week, upon "Alexander Herzen."

No candidate appeared for the Davis scholarship in Chinese at Oxford.

FOR the meeting of the Cambridge Philological Society, to be held on Thursday of this week, Prof. Armitage Robinson had promised a paper on "An Apparent Misinterpretation of Pliny's Statement (Ep. xevi., 6, 7), as to Meetings of the Christians."

THE total of matriculations at Oxford this term is 695, which (we believe) shows an increase on last year. There are considerable changes in the numerical position of the several colleges. Non-collegiate students now come first with 66, of whom about 16 (according to the statement of the Oxford Magazine) seem to have come from other universities. Then follow New College (57), Keble (56), Balliol and Christ Church (49), Exeter (47), Trinity (38), Magdalen (37), St. John's (33), Brasenose and University (30). We have noticed the names of nine who are apparently natives of India, most of them Mahomedans.

AT Cambridge, the total of matriculations is 867, practically identical with last year. Trinity still continues easily first (188); St. John's has now regained the second place (82); next come Pembroke (60), Trinity Hall (58), Emmanuel (52), Caius (51), Clare (49), King's (41), Jesus (40), Christ's (39), Corpus (33). Non-collegiate students number only 36, as compared with 48 last year, indicating that the new system has not taken such a firm root as at Oxford.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

WITH the beginning of November most of the numerous societies in London—scientific and literary—resume their meetings for the reading and discussion of papers or the delivery of lectures.

AT the London Institution, it is noticeable that almost all the lectures are now announced as "illustrated." Prof. Hubert Herkomer will lead off with a lecture next Monday at 5 p.m., on "Sight and Seeing, or Art Tuition." But the regular series will not begin until the Monday following, when Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie will deliver an illustrated lecture on "Primitive Egypt." Among the other announcements are: "Climbing in the Himalayas," by Mr. W. Martin Conway; "Twenty Thousand Feet above the Sea," by Mr. Edward Whympers; "The Literary Movement of the Century," by Mr. Edmund Gosse; "Rembrandt and his Works," by Sir F. Seymour Haden; "Theory and Practice of Protective Inoculation," by Dr. E. E. Klein; "Truth and Falsehood as to Electric Currents in the Body," by Prof. Victor Horsley; "Comets," by Sir Robert S. Ball; and "The Beautiful as seen in Minute Nature," by the Rev. Dr. Dallinger. The Christmas course for juveniles will be given by Mr. Arnold Mitchell, on "English Cathedrals"; and there will also be three Travers Lectures.

THE Aristotelian Society will resume its meetings at 22, Albemarle-street, on Monday, November 5, at 8 p.m., when the president, Mr. Bernard Bosanquet, will deliver his inaugural address on "An Essential Distinction in Theories of Experience." Papers are also announced by Mr. Benecke, Miss Constance Jones, Mr. G. F. Stout, and Mr. R. J. Ryle, and a symposium on "The Freedom of the Will," to be opened by Dr. Gide. This will be the sixteenth session of the society.

THE Elizabethan Literary Society began its eleventh session at Toynbee Hall so long ago as October 3, when Mr. Frederick Rogers, the vice-president, delivered an opening address on "The Social Life of Elizabethan England." For November 5, Mrs. J. M. Strachey has promised a paper on "Sir Philip Sidney and the Arcadia"; which is to be followed by one on "Thomas Nash, Satirist," by Mr. Sidney Lee, president of the Society. Besides these papers on Wednesdays, the members also meet on Wednesdays to read Congreve's plays.

THE Irish Literary Society is now settled in its new quarters at 8, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, where a house-warming was to take place this week. On Wednesday next, Dr. Douglas Hyde will deliver an address on "The Last Three Centuries of Gaelic Literature," at a meeting to be held in the rooms of the Society of Arts, with Lord Russell in the chair. Goldsmith's birthday is to be observed on November 10; and the other arrangements include, "The Oldest Irish Conceptions of the Other World," by Mr. Alfred Nutt; "Irish Astronomy," by Sir Robert S. Ball; "Irish Humour," by Mr. R. Ashe King; "The Danes in Ireland," by Dr. Sigerson; and "The Three Sorrows of Irish Story-Telling," by the Rev. Stopford Brooke.

THE Viking Club, founded two years ago as a social and literary society for persons connected with Orkney and Shetland, and also for all interested in the North or its literature and antiquities, holds its meetings in the King's Weigh House Rooms, Thomas-street, on Fridays at 8.30 p.m. At the first meeting, on November 2, Dr. Hyde Clarke will read a paper on "A Norman Queen of Jerusalem." Other papers promised are: "A Visit to a Lapland Settlement near the Arctic Circle," by Mr. Poultney Bigelow; "Scandinavian Influence on English Literature," by Dr. Jon Stefansson; "The Myths of Yggdrasil's Ash and Sleipnir represented in a new light," by Mr. Eirikr Magnusson; and "The History of the Inhabitants of Orkney," by Dr. J. G. Garson. It is hoped that the first Saga-Book, or volume of Proceedings, will be published early in the new year.

At the annual general meeting of the Playgoers' Club, held on October 12, Mr. Cecil Raleigh was elected president for the ensuing year. The treasurer is Mr. Carl Hentschel, and the secretary Mr. Percy House.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

IN ROSAE HONOREM.

It was at Thebes, the wedding-day
Of Kadmos and Harmonia;
And all the Gods were there to grace,
And all the Muses there to sing,
And all the little loves that chase
The hidden sweetness of the Spring,
Hastened o'er earth and air and sea,
To join in praise of Harmony—
Divine, diviner Harmony.

Her lord in golden vestment dight,
Her form the starry splendours deck;
For necklace fair, the gift of Night,
Adorned the beauty of her neck.
I know this tale that men were telling,
Speaks of the world in ordered grace,
As acted song and stately dwelling,
Fit home for an immortal race;
Where all the varied parts that be Inspire a note of harmony—
Divine, diviner Harmony.

But yet, the basis of the whole
Is noble love of soul for soul:
Beyond the away of stormy weather,
Untouched by shock of mortal jars,
Where two clasp hands and stand together,
And conquer darkness like the stars;
Whilst the sweet claims of me and thee
Wake myriad strains of harmony—
Divine, diviner Harmony.

So, Kadmos, take thy Theban bride,
Harmonia, ever fair and young;
But us the Gods have not denied
The sweetness which their poets sung:
For, in our garden Love will stray
To waken from their calm repose
A thousand flowers, that make it gay,
And this fair morning culls a Rose;
Bound in bright chain, yet ever free,
The two a link in harmony—
Divine, divinest Harmony!

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

OBITUARY.

JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

THE death of Mr. Froude, on October 20, removes one of the last representatives of the great period of Victorian letters. Born so long ago as 1818, for full fifty years he had been active with his pen. In 1842, he won the Chancellor's prize at Oxford for the English essay, upon a subject to which (we believe) he never afterwards returned: "The Influence of the Science of Political Economy on the Moral and Social Welfare of the Nation." Only last month Messrs. Longmans published his Oxford lectures on Erasmus, of which we hope to print a considered review next week. It is enough to say now that this latest contribution of his to the history of the sixteenth century shows absolutely no decay in penetrating insight or in lucidity. What a vast and varied amount of work was accomplished during the intervening period! Historian, biographer, essayist, traveller, novelist, and even poet—there was no field that he left un essayed. Starting as almost an acolyte of Newman, he soon broke away violently from Oxford and its traditions, and attached himself to the school of Carlyle—if, indeed, Carlyle can be said to have had any other pupils. Except for the quiet of its close, his entire life was crowded with controversy, though he himself rarely replied to an opponent, however bitter. Charming as he was in all private relations, there must have been some eccentricity in his character which prevented him from realising to his own conscience the primary obligation of a public teacher. In his historical researches—which were not inconsiderable—he seems to have been content to look for just so much evidence as would confirm the opinions he had already formed. So, again, in his biographical work proper, he committed such flagrant errors of discretion as would have damned a lesser man. And yet, when everything is admitted that an advocatus diaboli might urge, the great reputation of Froude with the public will stand but little impaired. For, after all, the object of writing books is that they may be read; and in this respect Froude could afford to ignore the carpings of his critics. While they protested, he went on working: just as he proved his fitness for the Oxford chair by the most effective lectures that have been heard at that University since the time of Matthew Arnold and Ruskin. As it is not the duty of an historian to tell truth in such a way that only a few can be induced to learn it; so a professor may be as well employed in stimulating impressionable youth by his eloquence, as in organising boards of examination. It may be that Froude's History will be known to a later generation only by its purple patches. It is certain that his general conception of the characters of Henry VIII. and Cranmer, the two champions of the Reformation in England, will not be confirmed. Each generation will have the historians that it deserves. Our children will be fortunate if they find another writer with the vigour of mind, and gift of exposition, in which Froude ranks second only to Macaulay.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAAV, R. Ritter v. Zwei Fahrten in das nördliche Eismeer nach Spitzbergen u. Novaja Zemlja. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 9 M.
BIART, Lucien. La Conquête d'une patrie. Le Pensativo. Paris: Hennery. 7 fr.
DESCAYES, Lucien. Les émirés. Paris: Tresse. 3 fr. 50 c.
DICTIONNAIRE des Finances, publié sous la direction de M. Léon Say. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 90 fr.
MALLARMÉ, Stéphane. Oxford, Cambridge: la musique et les lettres. Paris: Didier. 2 fr.
OHLSEN, Th. Durch Süd-Amerika. Hamburg: Bock. 60 M.
RAMSAUD, Joseph. Éléments d'économie politique. Paris: Larose. 10 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- NÜNGBERG, A. Vita S. Bonifatii, auctoris Willibaldo. Aus der Müncbener Handschrift neu hrsg. Breslau: Müller & Seifert. 1 M.
STARCK, W. Das Deuteronomium, sein Inhalt u. seine literar. Form. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 4 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- HAUTEFÈVE, Ernest d'. L'Armée sous la Révolution. Paris: Ollendorf. 7 fr. 50 c.
HITZIG, H. F. Das griechische Pfandrecht. München: Ackermann. 3 M. 60 Pf.
IANERUS, Quaestiones de iuris subtilitatibus. Hrsg. v. H. Fitting. 3 M. Summa codicis, hrsg. v. H. Fitting. 15 M. Berlin: Guttentag.
JONES, Moreau de. Aventures de guerre au temps de la République et du Consulat, 1791–1805. Paris: Guillaumin. 9 fr.
MITROVIC, B. Cipro nella storia medioevale del commercio levantino. Trieste: Schinapl. 3 M. 20 Pf.
MOZEL-FATIO, A. Recueil des instructions données aux ambassadeurs de France. Espagne. T. 1 (1619–1700). Paris: Alcan. 20 fr.
TAUDICUM, F. v. Geschichte des deutschen Privatrechts. Stuttgart: Enke. 11 M.
TREITSCHKE, H. v. Deutsche Geschichte im 19. Jahrh. 5. Thl. Bis zur März-Revolution. Leipzig: Hirzel. 10 M.
YOSHIDA, T. Entwicklung d. Seidenhandels u. der Seidenindustrie vom Alterthum bis zum Ausgang d. Mittelalters. Heidelberg: Hering. 2 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BÜCHER, M. Ueb. die Reihentwickelungen der Potentialtheorie. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M.
LOEW, E. Blütenbiologische Floristik d. mittleren u. nördlichen Europa sowie Grönlands. Stuttgart: Enke. 11 M.
MENDEL, E. Das Atomvolumen in chemischen Verbindungen. Leipzig: Schulz. 4 M.
SCHWARTZ, F. v. Städteth u. Völkerwanderungen. Stuttgart: Enke. 14 M.
WINTER, W. Der Vogelflug. München: Ackermann. 3 M. 60 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ANTHOLOGIA LATINA. Ed. F. Buecheler et A. Riese. Pars I. Fasc. I. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
FRITZ, H. v. Die Hauchopfer bei den Griechen. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M. 50 Pf.
HILDEBRANDT, P. De scholis Ciceronis Bobiensibus. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 60 Pf.
HUTN, G. Die Inschriften v. Teaghen Baisien. Tibetisch-mongol. Text m. e. Uebersetzg. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 3 M.
LIPPERT, J. Studien auf dem Gebiete der griechisch-arabischen Uebersetzungsliteratur. 1. Hft. Quellenforschungen zu den arabischen Aristotelesbiographien. Braunschweig: Sattler. 2 M.
PUNZI SECUNDI, C. librorum dñli sermonis VIII. reliquiae. Collect et illustravit J. W. Beck. Leipzig: Teubner. 1 M. 40 Pf.
RIGOLD, P. Versuch e. Terminologie u. Terminologie der Handwerke in der Misab. 1. Thl. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 60 Pf.
STUDIEN in arabischen Dichtern. 2. Hft. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 60 Pf.
VOGELSTEIN, H. Die Landwirtschaft in Palästina zur Zeit der Misab. 1. Thl. Der Getreidebau. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M. 60 Pf.
WEIGAND, G. Die Aromunen. Ethnographisch-philologisch-histor. Untersuchungen üb. das Volk der sogenannten Makelo-Romanen od. Zinzaren. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Barth. 8 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SEPTUAGINT VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

Cambridge: Oct. 22, 1894.

Permit me to thank Sir H. H. Howorth for the courtesy of his reply, and not less for the explicitness with which he has again stated the chief points of his position. To some of these I ask leave to briefly refer.

From his general estimate of the value of the LXX. it is impossible to dissent. The Alexandrian version not only represents MSS. older by more than a thousand years than any which are known to be now in existence, but it brings us into touch with a text differing sometimes widely from that of the MSS. reflected by the Massoretic Hebrew. In view of these facts, it cannot be doubted that in the oldest Greek version we possess a valuable storehouse of materials for the emendation of the Old Testament. But Sir Henry Howorth is prepared to go further. If I understand him rightly, he would employ the LXX. not simply in the way of emendation, but as a practical substitute, under the circumstances, for the Hebrew Bible. It appears to him to possess, as a whole, superior authority. He seems to doubt whether Jerome was right in making the Massoretic text the basis of his new Latin Bible, and whether the Revisers of the English Bible ought not to have adopted the Septuagint rather than the Hebrew as their standard for the purpose of revision. He suggests that the existing Hebrew text has suffered, not merely from the ordinary causes of textual corruption, but from the bad faith of early Jewish antagonists of Christianity. In these views many of us will be unable to follow him without further evidence. But he may be sure that his arguments will receive respectful attention; and I for one share the hope expressed by another correspondent of the ACADEMY, that his letters on this subject, or the substance of them, may appear in a collected form.

With regard to the larger edition of the Cambridge Septuagint which is in contemplation, there is no reason to doubt that it will offer something much better than a mere "synopsis of the readings of the Greek codices." The evidence of MSS., Versions, and Fathers, will be grouped and presented to the eye, in such a manner as to enable the student to sift for himself the claims of the various readings in each particular case. But the careful collation of many MSS. and texts, and the testing of the materials thus collected, must precede the labour of the editor; and Sir Henry Howorth will learn with pleasure that much valuable work of this kind, due to the willing co-operation of many hands, has been in progress for some years.

H. B. SWETE.

Oxford: Oct. 20, 1894.

Sir Henry Howorth is much mistaken if he thinks that there is any reluctance on the part of English Biblical scholars to share in the work of producing an adequate critical edition of the Septuagint. With regard to the important critical points which he has raised in the ACADEMY (beginning with those relating to I. Esdras), they may very likely differ from him and among themselves. But as regards textual criticism, they certainly have before them the same object as Lagarde, which ought surely to satisfy Sir Henry Howorth. Can this eager volunteer make some really practical suggestions, different from those which have been made already, for organising the forces of scholarship, and for enlightening that larger public which may either help or hinder us? It is not much use to rail at living workers, who exist under unfavourable conditions inherited from the past. The Universities are, no doubt, partly reformed, but very little has been done to encourage competent scholars to take up unremunerative Biblical research. Of the large endowments of Biblical research in the Universities I am myself rather sceptical; certainly the two professors of exegesis in this university are in no danger of being envied for their salaries! That professors of Biblical study here or at Cambridge are "tied to the Hebrew tradition," is equally unknown to me: they may differ among themselves on the relations of the Hebrew text to the Septuagint, but they can hardly be called Christian partisans of what Sir H. Howorth calls the "anti-Christian Massoretic text." It may be worth while for an outsider to speak with freedom on points of such high debate. Responsible to no one, he can venture to attack the most time-honoured prejudices, and to propose the boldest theories. He can also help those who are quietly working at the slow reconstruction of critical scholarship (which, as Prof. Kautzsch remarks, is the object before all really modern theologians), by interesting the public in their work. But it would perhaps be worth while for Sir Henry Howorth to be a little more careful, both in stating the present position of critical questions and in referring to the best critical labours of the present generation of scholars, who cannot well defend themselves, but know perfectly what has to be done.

T. K. CHEYNE.

Athenaeum Club: October 23, 1894.

My bad handwriting has led the printer into an amusing mistake. In my reply to Prof. Swete, I am made to say that I consider the Septuagint much inferior to the Masoretic text. The exact opposite, of course, is what I meant, as the context shows. I don't think anyone could be misled by it.

I thank Mr. Fielding for his note. He will remark that the fact of the omission in question in all the Hebrew copies is one of many proofs that they are derived from a single codex. The animus of any particular omission would not be obvious: it is only when you find a long series pervading all the Books of the Bible that the fact becomes so striking.

Would it not be possible for Prof. Robinson or Mr. Rendell Harris, who have laid us all under so many obligations, to give us an English edition of the Book of Jubilees?

H. H. HOWORTH.

OGHAM INSCRIPTIONS IN SCOTLAND.

Caius College, Cambridge.

I should be glad to be allowed to make some observations on a remarkable series of letters which have appeared in the ACADEMY, on Ogham inscriptions in Scotland, by Mr. Nicholson. The wish was expressed by Mr. Mayhew that some thoroughly good Celtic scholar would review these letters. I share the wish, and I regret that I cannot claim the character; but it seems to me that there are some simple considerations which might usefully be applied to the subject: indeed, I confess I cannot help thinking that the Celtic expert might find his particular learning a little thrown away. I ought to say, at the outset, that I look upon Mr. Nicholson's conjectures and his method with extreme distrust, for several reasons, some of which, with your permission, I should like to set down.

It seems to me that Mr. Nicholson has no scales and measures for probability. Let me first illustrate my meaning as follows. Supposing it to be assumed that in matters etymological A will with a certain degree of probability lead to X, it does not follow with at all the same degree of probability that X alone being given it is derived from A. Mr. Nicholson appears to me to ignore this consideration, of which I will take an example. He is desirous of finding a Gaelic derivation for the name Perth. The inquiry, I believe, involves a veiled controversy: the question being whether this word is of Gaelic origin, or is, as Mr. Whitley Stokes surmises, derived from some language akin to Welsh—in other words, to which of the two main dialects of what is called Celtic the Pictish language belonged. In favour of the Welsh theory is the fact that in Welsh the word perth means "bush," and it is known that places not infrequently derive their names from plants which grow in them. Mr. Nicholson, however, argues in support of the Gaelic etymology as follows. There are, or were, two Gaelic words, bair and ta, meaning respectively "contest" and "place"; hence bair ta, "place of contest," became the name of the town now called Perth. Then B was changed into P, because such is the habit of the Highlanders; and T became TH, because in compound words the initial consonant of the second term is commonly modified by what Gaelic grammarians call aspiration, which consists, on paper at least, in postfixing H. The final A was omitted, because otherwise a certain canon of orthography would be violated, which requires that a consonant or a group of consonants should not have I on one side and A on the other, they being vowels of unlike character. Now to this reasoning there are sundry objections. I will assume that the words bair and ta existed, and that they were not unlikely to give rise to a compound name meaning "place of contest," though I have some doubt of both these propositions; but even then it is very unlikely that the name so formed would ever become Perth, because the change of B into P is not known to show itself on paper, and the "aspirated" form of T, though written TH, is in Gaelic pronounced H simply. I am surprised that Mr. Nicholson should not have anticipated this last argument. All this, however, is beside my present contention, which is this: assuming that a place might be called bair-tha, and (if it were) that it would probably come to be called Perth, which is all that Mr. Nicholson so much as attempts to show, still, when all we know is that a town exists of this name, it is by no means shown to be equally probable that the above is the derivation. It may be that, according to the laws of Gaelic composition, certain syllables are regularly liable to be so mutilated and disguised that they are not easily recognised. Still, mankind can only judge by evidence; and where syllables disappear from view, in however normal a manner, it cannot be denied that there disappears with them a very material part of the evidence that they ever existed. Inattention to this kind of consideration seems to me to vitiate a great deal of the reasoning in these letters; but I will pass to a point of more importance.

Mr. Nicholson's method of interpretation appears in the main to be as follows. Having deciphered the Ogham text to his own satisfaction, he divides it into monosyllabic words. He then looks these out in O'Reilly's Irish Dictionary, and by piecing together meanings given for the nearest approximations to the respective words (or assumed words) which he has before him, he manages to present a translation of the whole which nobody can prove to be incorrect. Now it may be admitted that if, in dealing with a text of unknown meaning, we find that a particular sequence of letters, or even of consonants only, corresponds with that of some word in a dictionary, the meaning of which is not hopelessly inapplicable to the matter in hand, there is then a presumption, great or small, that we have to do with the word in question. But whatever is the value of that presumption, it clearly is smaller as the number of letters taken is smaller, and when we take one syllable only it is very trifling indeed. When we add that in Gaelic there are constant cases of quiescent or semiquiescent consonants, so that we can either retain a letter because it is written (see ACADEMY, April 28, 1894, p. 349, where the assumed word aibh becomes eb), or reject it because it is not pronounced (see the same page, where lath becomes la), it does seem to me that the business of identifying things different is made easy to such an extreme degree that the scientific value of the investigation so carried on vanishes altogether. The word eb mentioned above is held by Mr. Nicholson to "explain" Eblana, and, I suppose, any other place-name beginning with the same syllable; and he gives further derivations of the same kind. Yet pen has nothing to do with "penetration," and sow will not explain "Southampton." The worst—or the best—of this method is that by means of it almost any word can be provided with an etymology in almost any language in which there is a good supply of monosyllables. What is the origin of the name London? Why not loan done, because money is frequently advanced in that city? Paris is a French word meaning bets. Bordeaux has nothing to do with Burdigala; you have only to pronounce the word and it means waterside. Roma comes from two Gaelic words: ro, "very," and maith (pronounced ma), "good." Mr. Nicholson makes much of a word ett, meaning, it may be, "place." Does he know that in Irish rure meant a "lord" and rosc means "eyesight," and does he not see his way to the meaning of Etruria and Etruscan? It may be observed that the method I am discussing is by no means new: it was much in vogue before the rise of scientific philology—see Blackstone on the origin of the word "felon"—but it is truly surprising to see it revived now.

There are one or two things on the surface of these letters which might have warned Mr. Nicholson of the futility of his method. In his first letter (ACADEMY, Nov. 11, 1893, p. 416) he thinks he finds in an inscription the word rosir, which is given by O'Reilly and interpreted "laughter"; and with this Mr. Nicholson appears quite satisfied. But, oddly enough, there is a postscript to a letter of January 27, 1894, in which he tells us he has solved rosir at last, and the word is now to mean "woodmen." No reason is given for preferring the second version to the first, and Mr. Nicholson's confidence in his own penetration is apparently not the least shaken.

Another point on this part of the question is the following. With a subtler appreciation of probability, Mr. Nicholson might well have been uneasy at his own complete success. It is observable that he lays all ages and all dialects of Gaelic under contribution promiscuously: nay, Welsh itself is brought in where the text is a little unmanageable. I will assume, for argument's sake, that this is a perfectly sound procedure; but there is one aspect of it which I think escapes his notice. If the language of these inscriptions departs so far from all known dialects as to combine the characteristic forms of a number of different times and places, we may be sure that that fact was not its only peculiarity: it must have possessed also a peculiar vocabulary, and one a great deal of which is now entirely lost. Yet Mr. Nicholson is hardly ever at a loss for a meaning as long as he can refer to O'Reilly's Irish Dictionary—a work which contains by no means an exhaustive list even of real Irish words, to say nothing of the grave suspicion it lies under of inserting a number of false ones.

It is not worth while to draw attention to the evidence furnished by these letters that the writer's knowledge of Gaelic is very inconsiderable, as he confesses himself, in his letter of September 29, that his ignorance of Irish is all but complete. One may, however, be a little surprised that he should appear to regard this as not, under the circumstances, a very important defect.

C. H. MONRO.

THE NEWLY-DISCOVERED RECENSION OF THE GREGORIAN SACRAMENTARY.

The Hermitage, Calow, Worcester: Oct. 23, 1894.

My reply to Mr. Warren shall be as brief as I can make it.

Some days before his letter was written I had sent to all quarters of England a printed statement, in which I called attention specifically, and with its proper designation, to MS. C.C.C.C. 270. There was neither secret nor secrecy.

Mr. Warren's mention of Mr. Henry Bradshaw prompts me to say that it was Mr. Bradshaw's appreciation of some earlier analytical work of mine, published at his instance in the Transactions of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society for 1886, that was the direct cause of my being allowed—I might almost say, invited—to investigate the Missal which seems now at last to be attracting the attention it deserves. My former study, on MS. C.C.C.C. 452, filled 110 pages; this, on MS. C.C.C.C. 270, will be considerably longer.

I could wish that Mr. Warren, in referring to the birthplace of the Missal, had told us whether he still believes it to have been written for Canterbury Cathedral (Leofric Missal, p. 295). By the strangest of oversights, he has told us nothing in his list of English saints (ib., p. 295) of a Mass which proves to demonstration that it was meant for St. Augustine's. He has, however, transcribed the Mass a few pages later (p. 301), with the curious remark that it throws light on the locality of the MS. I infer, therefore, that at the time of editing the Leofric Missal Mr. Warren supposed Augustine to have been buried in the cathedral church. He surely cannot think so still. I think it right to mention this, for I am sure that Mr. Warren would be the last man in the world to allow my claim to a most important discovery to be discredited by a misapprehension of his own.

Again, I must be allowed to say that no one who looks at the notes to Mr. Warren's text of the Leofric Missal can have the slightest conception of the variants from it exhibited by MS. C.C.C.C. 270. It seems to have been beyond the scope of Mr. Warren's design to record these variants. Indeed, it is only on a few occasions that he tells us where such and such a prayer in the one document is replaced by a different one in the other. On a cursory examination of eight Masses, I have noted no less than half-a-dozen such omissions; while the result yielded by seven consecutive Masses is, that no less than nine verbal variants of the greatest interest and value to theologians and to Latinists have been completely passed over.

The fact of such a recension as I claim to have discovered could only have been ascertained by a very careful collation of the Corpus text with many others. I think myself lucky, however, in having been able to invoke stichometry and other methods as appliances for clenching the proof.

MARTIN RULE.

THE RUSSIAN NAME FOR A BETROTHED WOMAN.

Oxford: Oct. 4, 1894.

I thank Prof. C. E. Turner for his suggestive note on this subject, referring me to an important article on "Slavische Etymologien" by M. Jos. Zubatý, which appeared in the last number of the Archiv für Slav. Philologie. But, on consulting it, I find that the derivation of nevěsta, which Prof. Turner considers to be the most probable—namely, a pseudo-compound, unconnected with the negative ne, and contracted from an earlier form, novo-vesta, (in support of which an analogous term, novo-bran'naya, denoting, likewise, a newly married woman, might have been compared)—is far from being approved by M. Zubatý. Such a descent of our word he regards, upon the Slavonic ground, as utterly untenable. On the other hand, the old supposition—already advanced by Reiff in his Dictionnaire Etymologique (St. Petersburg, 1835), and not altogether rejected by Miklosich, who states, in his Etymolog. Wörterbuch, "Nevěsta kann lautlich als die Unbekannte gedeutet werden . . ."—is regarded as not improbable by M. Zubatý; for he says, after admitting that the primitive form and meaning of nevěsta can hardly be ascertained at present:

"Es ist ganz wohl denkbar, ohne dass man gleich eine Entführung [wife-capture] annehmen muss, dass die Braut ihren Verwandten bis zur Hochzeit unbekannt blieb. Darauf deuten auch Hochzeit-Gebräuche, wonach die Verwandten des Bräutigams die verummumte [disguised] Braut zu erkennen haben" (Slav. Archiv, xvi., p. 406).

H. KREBS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 28, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Place and Street Names of London," by Mr. A. Quckett.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Vindictive Theory of Punishment," by Mr. J. Ellis McGarratt.
MONDAY, Oct. 29, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Sight and Seeing, or Art Tuition," by Prof. H. Herkomer.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Neck," by Prof. W. Anderson.
WEDNESDAY, Oct. 31, 8 p.m. Irish Literary Society: "The Last Three Centuries of Irish Gaelic Literature," by Dr. Douglas Hyde.
THURSDAY, Nov. 1, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Neck," by Prof. W. Anderson.
8 p.m. Linnean: "Contributions to the Knowledge of Monocotyledonous Saprophytes," by Mr. Percy Groom; "An Error in the Descriptions of the Effect of a Centrifugal Force upon Growth," by the Rev G. Henslow; "Mediterranean and New Zealand Retepora, and a Fenestrate Bryozoa," by Mr. A. W. Waters.
8 p.m. Chemical: "The Electromotive Force of Alloys in a Voltaic Cell," by Mr. A. P. Laurie, M.A.; "The Action of Nitric Oxide on Sodium Ethylate," by Messrs. G. W. Macdonald and D. Orme Mason; "Ethylic Butene Tetra-carboxylate," by Dr. D. Lean.
FRIDAY, Nov. 2, 8 p.m. Philological: "Puzzling Words and Passages in the Alliterative Poems," by Mr. I. Gollancz.
8.30 p.m. Viking Club: "A Norman Queen of Jerusalem," by Dr. Hyde Clarke.

SCIENCE.

Primitive Civilisations; or, Outlines of the History of Ownership in Archaic Communities. By E. J. Simcox. In 2 vols. (Sonnenschein.)

A FEW days ago I was privileged to see a remarkable document—in some way the most remarkable historical document of the later Greek period which has occurred for many years. It is a papyrus dated in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, containing more than seventy columns of writing, and was one of Prof. Petrie's fortunate discoveries in Egypt. It is being edited by Prof. Mahaffy and Mr. Grenfell. It contains a wonderful account of the customs' regulations and the laws relating to revenue in Egypt at this time, and is full of the kind of information so difficult to meet with in books, and so essential to a knowledge of the true history of the inner life of the old days. Similar documents on a smaller scale have been published by other scholars, notably by Mr. Kenyon, while M. Revillout has been making his way through the most difficult of Egyptian diplomata, namely those written in demotic. Others, again, like Dr. Hicks, have been distilling similar materials from Greek inscriptions, and been busy with the elucidation of the receipts for taxes on potsherd and other fragmentary debris. Presently we may be able to do for the old times what it is now seen is the essential thing in regard to more recent history: namely, to get at the kernel and the essence of the life of the common people and the classes whose rôle was not exclusively fighting. We shall then know not only how kings and heroes lived and died, but how their people suffered and survived; what local laws and regulations they made, and how they managed to evade the tax-collector; how their homes were regulated, how they tilled their land, and by what tenure they held it: in fact, how the inner life of the community was carried on.

To collect, to illustrate, and to condense the existing materials illustrating this side of the history of the old empires has been the aim of Miss Edith Simcox in the two fat and well-packed volumes before us. Those who know the reputation of the authoress will expect to find a learned and a laborious book; but they will hardly be prepared for the extent of the research and for the catholic sympathy which has brought together from many out-of-the-way corners so much wealth of material—so abundant, indeed, that it is impossible to review it adequately.

Those who know the story best will find something new here. Thus, they will be pleased to find the latest speculations of Dr. Glaser upon his very interesting discoveries in Central Arabia, where he virtually unearthed a new chapter of history, that of the empire of the Minaeans, contemporary with the neighbouring powers in Mesopotamia and the Valley of the Nile in the second millennium B.C. Miss Simcox has had the good fortune in this field to get hold of unpublished and inaccessible materials of high value, which have whetted our appetite for more; and it is to be hoped that

Dr. Glaser himself will not long delay the publication of his long-promised volume.

Again, in a chapter in the third book of vol. i., entitled "From Massalia to Malabar," will be found a large number of suggestive hints and statements about the very obscure side issues of history involved in the customs and economy of the primitive peoples of Asia Minor, of the Etruscans, and of the so-called Pelasgians; and, at the same time, new materials about the commercial settlements of early days on the coast of Malabar and Southern India.

Of course the work is unequal. In the second volume, dealing with China, Miss Simcox has not always been so fortunate in getting directly face to face with her materials as elsewhere, and has sometimes relied upon obsolete authorities. Nor is it to be expected that in such a laborious work, covering so much ground, there should not be a considerable number of statements suggestive of polemical issues still unsettled, rather than of facts actually ascertained. Granting this—which must be said of all similar works—the book is a marvellous storehouse of materials, and is generously indexed.

The reader of light literature—the person who expects to bring back treasures from the Indies without lading his bark with a corresponding cargo before he starts on his voyage—will not find much to profit him here. It is essentially a student's book, to be carefully read and sifted and weighed; and this is assuredly the kind of reputation which the learned authoress would like to attach to it.

As I have said, the most valuable and interesting part of the work is the economical and inner history of the various communities which come under review. Their history, in the ordinary sense of the word, is but lightly treated. Thus, we have nearly two hundred pages devoted to the internal economy of Ancient Egypt: the conditions of ownership of land, of tillage, of the administration of estates, of slavery, of home and foreign trade, of manufactures, of civil law and custom, and of the domestic relations and family law. Among the many sidelights which are treated with freshness and detail are the marriage contracts, showing how the wife in Egypt was really a proprietary partner in her husband's goods. We may perhaps be permitted to condense one of the documents. Patma, the husband of Ta utsem, says in such a contract:

"I have accepted thee for wife. I have given thee [then a sum is specified] for thy woman's gift. I must give thee [another sum is named] for thy toilet during a year. Thy pin or pocket-money for one year is apart from thy toilet-money. I must give it to thee each year, and it is thy right to exact the payment of thy toilet-money and thy pin-money, which are to be placed to my account. Thy eldest son, my eldest son, shall be the heir of all my property present and future. I will establish thee as wife. In case I should despise thee and take another wife, then I will give thee compensation. All my property is security for my promise until it is accomplished. The property that is to come to me from my mother I also make over to thee, and any son or daughter of mine who annoys thee on this matter shall pay thee a fine."

This and other documents prove what a prominent position the wife held in the Egyptian household. It would seem, further, that children had a sort of partnership in their parents' property during the lifetime of the latter; and, as is still the case in Central Asia, a family council was necessary for the disposal of any important property, movable or immovable. Miss Simcox has some very judicious remarks on the religion of the Egyptians, and disposes readily of the old-fashioned notion that it meant nothing more than a crude worship of animals.

"Real animals," she says, "were not deified, they were only held sacred. Much as the dove and the lamb are accepted as sacred emblems in Christian allegory and decoration, so the Egyptians symbolised certain spiritual qualities (or rather certain forces of nature) which had come to be associated with the animals. Ancestor worship, as in China, existed side by side with the worship of natural forces thus symbolised."

The chief distinctive feature in the Egyptian faith was the ritual connected with the disposal of the dead, and the notion of the spiritual double, or Kha, which might at will slumber in its own mummy or wander disembodied in the fields of the west. This was assuredly a very abstract notion for a primitive race to have reached, and possibly proves its antiquity even more conclusively than its early developed art does. Funeral offerings and worship were continued at the tombs by the relatives until the memory of the deceased had faded. Afterwards it became the fashion among those who could afford it to provide against the lapse of these attentions by the endowment of their tombs, as chantries were endowed in the middle ages to secure a succession of priests who should continue their services. I have sometimes thought, when we meet with scarabs of early kings in late graves, that they were really the outcome of a manufactory of such sacred tokens attached to the royal tombs, which continued to produce them for centuries.

From Egypt Miss Simcox takes us to Babylonia, whose history and whose customs are so different to those of the Valley of the Nile. Here, also, we pass from history into the mists beyond at a stage when the race was highly cultured, and when the country was occupied by a strange folk who seem to have come from Elam, whence their influence extended not only westward but eastward to China. I cannot in this behalf avoid a passing word about a friend who has just left us in the midst of his brilliant researches and discoveries in this very field—M. Terrien de Lacouperie. His place will, indeed, be hard to fill. It is a pity that so little that is definite has yet been recovered about the inner life of the earliest of the Babylonian peoples—namely, the Accadians. Of the later period of Babylonian history such materials abound for both the Old and the New Empire, and have been made available, notably by Oppert and Meissner. Assuredly no more interesting and valuable discovery was ever made than the records of the family of bankers and money-lenders named Egibi, extending over several generations, and consisting of hundreds of documents relating to almost every transaction of private life. We can only encourage our readers to read some of Miss Simcox's gleanings in this field—which are only gleanings. She sums up one of the lessons to be drawn from the documents tersely and well:

"In ancient Babylonia, as in modern China, the normal effect of a loan was supposed to be beneficial to the borrower. In Egypt, judging from the form of the deeds, the idea was that the creditor asserted a claim upon the debtor, or the debtor acknowledged a liability to the man from whom he had borrowed. In Babylonia the personal question is scarcely considered; one person owes money to another—that is the commonest thing in the world—such loans are in a chronic state of being incurred and paid off; one man's debt is another man's credit, and credit being the road of commerce the loan is considered rather as part of the negotiable capital of the country than as a burden on the shoulders of one particular debtor."

It is only by very wide reading and by bringing together the customs and habits of remote peoples that generalisations like this become possible. Not only so: but this bringing together of what seems so far apart geographically is rapidly extending our historical materials, and teaching us the great lesson that the history of different races of mankind is much more interbound than people supposed whose horizon was limited to classical landscapes. Mr. Seebohm and Prof. Ridgway, in their most instructive and original researches on measures and weights, have shown us what a fertile field this is; and now, in Miss Simcox's book, we have multitudes of facts illustrating other intimate affairs and social matters in which men are prone to be most conservative, and which, when analysed, promise to point out for us a pathway through the tangle where such materials as language and mythology often fail us.

What an instructive comparison, for instance, is that between some of the customs of the Malabar coast, which has been exploited from very early times by the traders of the West, and those of the Persian Gulf, and similarly the bringing together the customs of Dravidian India with those of Egypt. It is true we are only groping, and are apt to make mistakes and sometimes unduly enlarge our inferences; but such mistakes are infinitely better than the stagnation of the old pedantry, provided they are the outcome of real work and not merely the fantastic guessing of empirical charlatans. It is the man who brings us new ideas and new facts whom some of us cherish most, however rash he be, and not the fastidious critic whose accuracy is commendable, although it exhausts all his virtue. It is, in fact, the case of a photographer of skies compared with a painter of the sunlight.

The two volumes before us are packed with materials for abundant thought. They bristle with suggestions. They are not literature: that is to say, the man who knows nothing of the subject, and wants to be entertained and amused merely, should pass them by. They are not meant for him, but for the scholar and the historian they will fill a corner in the library not at present occupied. We congratulate the learned authoress on the pleasure and profit she will confer upon those who like to wander into the jungle because it is a jungle and the unexpected may always turn up, and who avoid the beaten roads, where every vagabond knows the milestones. And we congratulate her further upon the large number of instances which she has been able to collect and often to slyly insert in an unexpected way, in proof of the fact that the emancipation of her sex had reached a very considerable stage when the world was still young, and that few modern movements for the advancement of women lack precedents galore.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

OBITUARY.

JAMES DARMESTETER.

NOT alone Oriental scholars, but a wide circle of friends in this country, will have been saddened by the news of the sudden death of M. James Darmesteter, which took place on October 19, at Maisons-Lafitte. That bright soul and keen intellect has at last put off his frail mortal body, but not before he had accomplished work which, both in quantity and quality, may put to shame his more robust competitors. The loss of his brother Arsène, some few years ago, seemed almost to overwhelm him; but life was again made sweet to him by his marriage with the gifted lady whom we know as Mary Robinson.

James Darmesteter was born in 1849, at Chateau-Salins, which lies within that portion of Lorraine now German. As the name implies, the family came originally from Darmstadt. With his brother Arsène (three years his senior), he was educated in Paris, winning prizes at the Lycée Bonaparte, and always attracting the notice of his professors by his devotion to study and his unaffected charm of manner. According to the French fashion, he was early marked out for a career that combined research and teaching, though with but scanty emolument. In 1877, the year that he took his degree of docteur ès-lettres, he was appointed assistant-teacher of Zend at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes; and in 1885, he received the high distinction, at his early age, of a chair at the Collège de France. Shortly afterwards, according to another good French custom, he was deputed by the Government to undertake a philological mission to India. Apart from frequent visits to this country—in one of which he went as far as Ireland, where his brother had found a wife—the rest of his time was spent at work in Paris, where he seemed never to leave the printing press quiet. Besides being a frequent contributor to the newspapers and the reviews, almost every year he brought out some new book of Oriental research, of literary criticism, or of current politics. Quite recently he increased his multifarious duties by accepting the joint editorship of the new Revue de Paris.

The main work of Darmesteter's life, by which his name will ever be remembered along with that of Burnouf, was devoted to making known to Europe the Zend-Avesta, the Scripture of the ancient Persians, written in a tongue that is the twin sister of Sanskrit. The earliest thing that he published was an essay on the mythology of the Avesta, entitled Haurvatat et Ameretat (1874); during the last weeks before his death he was engaged on the proof-sheets of a second edition of his translation of the Vendidad, for the "Sacred Books of the East." His critical opinions on the subject are to be found in the three volumes published by the Musée Guimet (1892-93), which have revolutionised our ideas as to the composition and date of the Zend-Avesta. It was for this work that the Académie des Inscriptions awarded him the prix decennial of 20,000 francs, which may be called the blue ribbon of French scholarship.

His visit to India, where he spent some seven months on the Afghan frontier, bore fruit in two books, both published in 1888. Of them, Lettres sur l'Inde, is one of those charming descriptions of foreign travel which Frenchmen alone seem able to write: personal impressions and serious reflections, sharpened by wit that never leaves a sting. The other was Chants Populaires des Afghans, which, under a modest title, contains a final settlement of the vexed question of the affinities of the Afghan language. Trumpp had thought that it was nearer to the Sanskrit family; but Darmesteter proved, with a wealth of phonological argument, that it is really a derivative from Zend, and thus belongs to the Iranian branch.

Of the numerous other publications of James Darmesteter we have no space to speak in detail. But we must not altogether omit mention of his Essais de Littérature Anglaise (1883), of his editions of "Macbeth" and "Childe Harold," or of his admirable rendering into rhythmical French prose of his wife's English poetry. If he had not been so learned an Orientalist, he was capable of making his reputation as a critic of English literature, of which he possessed a most exact knowledge. Keats and Shelley he studied more than most Englishmen, with a special love for their melody and metre; and he wrote in French an admirable little illustrated book on Shakspere. From his trip to Ireland he brought back a study of Irish street ballads, which was printed at the time in the Débats. He also entertained a warm affection for English friends, though this was not inconsistent with a still more ardent patriotism, which he shared with all his French co-religionists. The pride that he felt in his Jewish descent was notably revealed in the very last book that he published, Les Prophètes, in which he advocated, with almost mystical enthusiasm, a return to Hebrew monotheism as the remedy for modern scepticism and social anarchy.

J. S. C.

SCIENCE NOTES.

WE hear that the number of Nature for November 1, commencing the fifty-first volume, will contain an introductory article from the pen of the Right Hon. T. H. Huxley, entitled "Past and Present." Mr. Huxley wrote the leading article for the first number of Nature, which appeared just twenty-five years ago—in the same month, we believe, as the first number of the ACADEMY also appeared.

THE first meeting of the Linnean Society for the new session will be held at Burlington House on Thursday next, November 1, at 8 p.m., when the Rev. George Henslow will read a paper on "An Error in the Descriptions of the Effect of a Centrifugal Force upon Growth."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE announce for early publication a Reading Book of Arabic prose pieces, compiled by Prof. Rudolf Brünnow. It has been arranged for use with Socin's Arabic Grammar, and has a Vocabulary.

THE same publishers will also shortly begin the issue of an Historical Grammar of the German Language (including Old and Middle High German), by Mr. A. J. W. Cerf, of Dublin. Part I., treating of Phonology, will be ready next week.

WE understand that Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie's library will shortly be sold, for the benefit of his widow. The collection, though not large, was kept in beautiful condition, and includes some rare works. Besides several Chinese MSS., dictionaries, grammars, &c., we may specially mention a complete set of Logan's Journal of the Indian Archipelago and Eastern Asia (12 vols.), which the late professor had got together on different occasions and at great cost; Legge's Chinese Classics (8 vols.); De Maille's History of China (13 vols.); G. Schlegel's Uranographie Chinoise (The Hague, 1875); Burnell's Elements of South Indian Paleography (Mangalore, 1874); and a presentation copy of the second (and best) edition of Sir Henry Yule's Marco Polo.

THE Philological Society resumes its meetings at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next at 8 p.m., when Mr. Israel Gollancz will read a paper on "Puzzling Words and Passages in the Alliterative Poems." Besides two "dictionary evenings," at which Dr. J. A. H. Murray and Mr. Henry Bradley will severally report on the progress of the New English Dictionary, the following papers have been promised: "Chaucer Miscellanies," by Prof. Skeat; "The Anglo-German and the Traditional Pronunciations of Ancient Greek, examined by the light of Inscriptions and Papyri," by Dr. A. N. Jannaris; "Old-English Personal and Place Names," by Mr. W. H. Stevenson; and "The Verbal System of the Saltair na Rann," by Prof. Strachan, of Liverpool.

FINE ART.

THE COLLECTED ESSAYS OF ERNST CURTIUS.

Gesammelte Abhandlungen von E. Curtius. Band II. (Berlin: Hertz; London: Williams & Norgate.)

WE have to thank Prof. Curtius for the completed republication of selected essays, most of which were not before generally accessible. They are more or less written up to date, by omission of matter now doubtful and inclusion of new literature on their subjects. The author's preface to the second volume is a pleasant acknowledgment of debt to the teachers—Böckh, Welcher, and Otfried Müller—who have most influenced his mind, as well as to Ritter, Mommsen, and Leake ("a man to whose keen judgment we perpetually come back afresh"). But the acknowledgment probably does less than justice to his own originality. There are many who gratefully acknowledge in their turn obligations to Ernst Curtius, obligations for more than mere knowledge imparted—for an impulse, a method, and a spirit.

These essays reveal the width of Curtius's powers and interests. The historian comes out in many political suggestions. The scholar shows his extraordinary sympathetic insight into the daily and intimate life of the Greeks, and puts a new meaning into many passages in the authors. The enthusiasm of the archaeologist perhaps overpowers the discrimination of the artist when the statuette from Paestum (p. 287) is praised for its beauty. But the artist speaks out too—notably in the remark that the way in which antiquities are set up in museums hinders our recognising for what environment they were originally meant. But the strongest threads in the web of the essays are, perhaps: (1) the desire to show the connexion of the Greeks with other early nations, and to rescue them from the isolation in which a wrong-headed Philhellenism would leave them; and (2) the interest in religious history traced in both mythology and art. Readers of Curtius's Greek History or of his Stadtgeschichte know how happily he unites literary skill with learning and originality. The right fact is always forthcoming at the right moment in his writings, and there is often, too, the pleasure of the unexpected. We take up one of his essays, and we know not whither it will lead us. He follows out the ramifications and developments of his topic, and (to use his own expression about the history of metal relief-work) his treatment, going right through with a subject, "unites the beginning and the end." Limits of space will only allow us to indicate the most important matters.

The papers fall into four groups: (a) Religious History.—I. (on Artemis) and II. (on the gods of Olympus) have the common task of insisting that "the gods, as much as the peoples, of antiquity have their history." The long career of Artemis before she ever stood by Apollo's side is well fitted to teach that "the Greek heaven was no ready-made system." These two essays should be read along with the important "Greek Mythology from the Historical Point of View" in Alterthum und Gegenwart, unfortunately not reprinted here. III., "The Altars of Olympia," finds that layers of ashes and old water-channels are the safest clues to the religious history and topography of Olympia. (b) History of Art.—I., a history of badges, one might almost say of armorial bearings, in the Greek world (we do not see that Curtius has included the branding of human property, as Xerxes and the people of Samos branded their prisoners). II., on kneeling figures, distinguishes those which really kneel from exhaustion or humility, and those which, seeming to kneel on one knee, are really meant to be travelling at speed. This explanation may be true of an archaic Gorgon pursuing Perseus, but is it true of the monuments of generations which knew how to draw? III. and IV., on the carved decorations of wells and springs, lead the English reader to think meanly of his own holy wells. From the quiet, almost still, life of men resting by the water, Greek art learned a new motive, foreign to all that mythology or the palaestra suggested. V., a double paper on the Harpy Monument, explains it in detail, and, referring the egg-shaped bodies of the Harpies to an Egyptian origin, is confirmed by an alabaster fragment from Naukratis. VI., improves on certain suggestions of Jahn's about Greek representations of Kairos, and appeals for some confirmation to a new fragment of a relief from the Akropolis. VII., on the birth of Erichthonios, turns on a terra-cotta, "the first perfect Athenian representation of the Erichthonios myth," of which an excellent drawing is given. VIII. and IX., on Herakles and the tripod, find the core of the legends in a struggle at Delphi of Hellenic and Semitic rites. No one of the essays exhibits greater ingenuity of combination than this. X., on Greek art in India, shows the Indians more ready to adopt parts than wholes: an acanthus leaf than a whole temple. XI., "The Archaic Bronze-Relief from Olympia," is much wider than its title, and deals at large with bronze reliefs and other decorations, even decoration with nail-heads. XII., Telamones. XIII., Canephoroi. XIV., the Darius Vase. XV.-XVII., pedimental groups. "Humble terra-cottas lead us back to great compositions of ancient art." XVIII., on votive-offerings of the Greeks after the Persian war, withdraws an earlier suggestion of Curtius—that there are palaeographical objections to the genuineness of the serpent-tripod now at Constantinople—but dwells on other difficulties in the way of our accepting it as a genuine product of Greek art. He will not repudiate it absolutely, but he is not satisfied. XIX., Philochoros and the death of Pheidias. XX., grouping of statues. XXI., hypaethral temples. Greek temples must have been lighted from above. (c) Epigraphy and Numismatics.—Of less general interest, except Essays VI. and VII., on colonial coins, and on the religious character of Greek coins. The religious devices which they bear were not at first impressed by mere state authority, but have a closer relation to the cults. "The gods were the first capitalists"; and the necessity of small change in dealing with their worshippers led the priests to the idea of issuing suitable pieces of bullion stamped with the god's mark. The Romans followed precedent in opening their mint in a temple, and Juno Moneta is a reflection of the Lacinian Hera. (d) Contains studies in modern Greek, whose importance to the scholar Curtius rightly vindicates. The appendix, "Paul at Athens," is a very suggestive paper on (1) the question whether Paul actually spoke on the Areiopagus (Curtius thinks not), and (2) the attitude of Paul to the Greek wisdom.

F. T. R.

RECENT ARCHAEOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT.

THE following report has been received by the Egyptian Exploration Fund from its Local Honorary Secretary for Cairo, Captain H. G. Lyons, R.E.:—

"October, 1894.—Among the recent acquisitions of the Giza Museum, perhaps the most noticeable are two squads of soldiers from a Vith Dynasty tomb at Assiut, which have been found since last winter.

"Each squad consists of forty figures, fixed to a wooden board in rows of four, and shown in the act of marching. The first one is composed of men of a brown complexion, presumably Egyptians, with thick heads of hair fastened back with the usual band, which is tied behind. The figures are of wood and are about thirteen inches high, the whole squad being well sized and containing few men below the general standard. They are clad in a loin-cloth, white or yellowish in colour, reaching rather more than halfway to the knee, while their equipment consists of spear and shield. The spears are about the height of the men themselves, and are carried vertically with the butts at the level of the knee. The heads are bronze, and make up about one sixth of the total length of the spear, becoming very broad where they meet the haft, like the large spears of the Baggara Arabs of to-day. The shields, which are about eight inches from top to bottom, have a square base and come to a point at the top. Inside there is a wooden batton across them, at the part where the shield begins to narrow, which serves to carry it by. All the shields are painted with rude splotches of colour, or irregular mottling, while some show a zigzag pattern of lines, or even diagonal bands, almost calling to mind the bars of heraldic shields; but so far as the position of the soldiers bearing these in the squad goes, nothing tends to show that they had any distinguishing value.

"The second squad are black-skinned, and have their hair similarly dressed and tied back, while their clothing consists of a very scanty loin cloth of a red or yellow colour, and some few also wear necklaces and anklets. They are armed with bows and arrows only, each man carrying four arrows in his right hand and a bow in his left. These arrows are tipped with flint, which is shaped to a chisel-like edge and not to a sharp point.

"The race distinction between the two squads is very marked, by a difference not only in complexion, but in size; for the black soldiers are at least half a head shorter, and have, besides, a much larger proportion of small men in their ranks. These smaller men are, just as in the Egyptian squad, arranged in the left centre section—i.e., in rows 6, 7, and 8. The Egyptian squad is closely "locked up," which contrasts strongly with the much looser formation in which the black troops are marching; and though this may be partly due to the fact that the blacks are armed with the bow instead of the shield and spear, still the impression which one gets is that they represented the irregular forces, rather than the regular drilled bodies to which the other squad seems to belong.

"From Dashur are two large boats, now on view in Room No. 16. They are about the same size and of a similar type, but one is considerably better preserved than the other. Of the former, almost the whole hull and a considerable part of the deck remains, as well as four or five of the cross thwart on which the deck is laid. The extreme length is about thirty feet, beam seven feet, and in depth about three feet. The planks of the hull are fixed together with dove-tailed dowels and wooden trenails.

"An extremely fine model of a boat comes from a XIIIth Dynasty tomb at Assiut. It is five feet long and about fifteen inches broad. It is fully decked over, and the after part of the deck is occupied by a two-roomed cabin, which takes up rather more than half the whole deck space. Each room has a wooden door, on which is drawn a portrait of the owner of the tomb, with his titles; in the forward cabin five figures are seated, while on the forward part of the deck are two more figures seated, and two standing, one of whom is in the bow with a punting or sounding pole. The cabins are roofed over with bent wooden rafters neatly fitted together. The mast is stepped in a hole in the deck, and supported by a wooden box, which was strengthened by three wooden struts to keep it firm.

"In Room 30 there is now exhibited a stela of burnt clay, on which have been stamped the names and titles of Amenhotep III., who is described as "lord of O," a blank oval wherein apparently any district name could be written. It also bears the figure of the king offering to the god. This stela was found by me in August, 1892, at the XIIIth Dynasty fortress of Matuka, on the Second Cataract; and a few weeks later a portion of another duplicate stela was found while excavating the XIIIth Dynasty temple at Wadi Halfa. This king seems, therefore, to have deposited one of these stamped stelae in several of the Nubian temples as he passed along.

"A Greek of the town of Medina, in the Fayum, is turning out Greek MSS. written on skin, which are offered for sale in Cairo; but no one having any acquaintance with ancient Greek MSS. could be deceived for a moment."

CORRESPONDENCE.

LEGIONARY TILES AT CARLISLE.

Christ Church, Oxford: Oct. 19, 1894.

It may be worth reading in the ACADEMY that a Roman tomb, made of tiles impressed with legionary stamps, has lately been found in Carlisle. The tiles bear the stamps

LIIG II AVG

and

LEG. XX. VV

and have been acquired for Tullie House by Chancellor Ferguson, through whose kindness I was able to examine them. They are the first tiles of these legions which have been found on or near Hadrian's Wall, though tiles of the Sixth legion have been found on its eastern half at Chesters and Corbridge.

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

LORD ASHBURNHAM'S beautiful and famous Rembrandt, "Renier Anslou and his Mother"—the former of whom is the subject of a well-known etching—very recently changed hands. It has become, for the time being, the property of Messrs. P. and D. Colnaghi & Co., of Pall Mall East.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours;

Messrs. Arthur Tooth & Sons' annual winter exhibition of English and continental pictures, including Mr. Alma Tadema's new work, "Past and Present Generations"; Mr. Thomas McLean's annual exhibition of cabinet pictures—both in the Haymarket; a collection of paintings and drawings by Mauve, at the Goupil Gallery, in Regent-street; and a collection of oil-paintings and water-colours, entitled "Picturesque Wales," together with pictures by Mr. W. Westley Manning, at Messrs. Henry Graves & Co's, in Pall Mall.

It is all very well to represent that, in the attention just now paid to the artistic "poster," there may be discerned the subject of a "new craze," and it is true, of course, that the rage may go too far; but those critics who are best informed upon the matter recognise far greater art in the show of "posters"—French posters in chief—just now opened, than is to be found in a round dozen of "minor exhibitions." First-rate draughtsmen and colourists in England have but lately taken up the branch of art which—the conditions of modern life being what they are—almost before all others requires to be decorative; and the productions of Mr. Wilson Steer, Mr. Mortimer Menpes, Mr. Dudley Hardy, that clever but uncanny Mr. Aubrey Beardsley, and Mr. Greiffenhagen, who is exceedingly distinguished, are at present but few, and based, too, for the most part on the efforts of one or other of their French confrères. Cheret, Grasset, Lautrec, and now, too, Sinet and Steinlen, are the most conspicuous of the accepted masters, Cheret being, perhaps, the most popular with those who least understand the virtue of an artist who works well within the conventions imposed by his material and his purpose. Not but that Cheret, indeed, is an interesting and brilliant artist; but he is more successful in draughtsmanship and design than in colour, and his works are more properly pictures on a large scale than first-rate decoration for the wall and the hoarding. Grasset, often quaint in design, is in treatment much broader and simpler. Lautrec, too, is a remarkable and engaging artist. One of Steinlen's best plates is a very charming, Kate Greenaway-like subject, potently advocating the claims of the "Lait Stérilisé"; another is a startling vision of Mlle. Yvette Guilbert débütant some startling phrase at the Café des Ambassadeurs. And the best print we know of Sinet's is, as it happens, a portrait or impression of the blonde Yvette seen facing her audience, and in act, as it appears, to relate to them some incident from a pensionnat de demoiselles. The art in these things, in the main wholly modern, though with touches derived from the Japanese and yet more from mediaevalism, is of a kind that only the fossils of conventional connoisseurship can allow to leave unnoticed.

THE excavations on the Roman Wall at Aesica have been concluded for this year. The most striking "finds" have been two very remarkable fibulae, a quantity of scale-armour, and some rings; practically nothing has turned up in the way of inscriptions.

THE Literarisches Centralblatt of October 6 contains a tolerably minute review of Mr. Cecil Torr's "Ancient Ships." The reviewer praises Mr. Torr's illustrations and citations from original authorities, but criticises rather sharply a good many of his theories.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE Crystal Palace Concerts commenced October 13. The performances under Mr. A. Manns's direction were excellent, but the programme included no novelty. Last Saturday, when, by the way, Dr. Mackenzie was conductor in place of Mr. Manns, the programme included a "Te Deum Laudamus" for organ and strings by G. Sgambati, whose clever Symphony in D was heard here more than ten years ago. This "Te Deum" is merely a short Andante movement, based on an old canto fermo: the music is clever and expressive, though more suitable for performance in a church than in a concert-room. Dvorák's Symphony, "From the New World," lately produced at a Philharmonic Concert, was remarkably well played. All that we wrote about it we feel inclined to repeat: the principal negro theme is not of sufficient importance for the first movement of a Symphony. The Largo is lovely; and the Scherzo, in spite of its length, very attractive. M. Sileti played Chopin's piano-forte Concerto in E minor. From a technical point of view, his performance was admirable; and yet the reading was not pure Chopin—it was too angular. The "Tausig" version was used, but the comments in the programme-book were based upon Chopin's original score: mention was made of the "long" orchestral Introduction, whereas in Tausig's transcription it is short. M. Sileti afterwards played two solos: a quiet "Consolation" by Arensky, and Liszt's Rhapsody No. 12: in the former, the pianist's delicate touch; in the latter, his magnificent control of the keyboard, was made manifest. Herr Lundqvist, principal baritone of the opera at Stockholm, appeared for the first time, and sang a ballad, entitled "Tannhäuser," by A. Söderman, a Swedish composer of some note. The music is not of particularly strong character, but it is decidedly interesting; the orchestral accompaniment, with its thoughtful details and picturesque colouring, is effective. Herr Lundqvist has a fine voice, and knows how to use it. He was afterwards heard in some Swedish popular songs, and met with a most favourable reception.

THE Palace Concert clashed with Dr. Richter's third and last concert given at the Queen's Hall. The programme included the Choral Symphony; variations on a Theme of Haydn's, by Brahms; and "Die Meistersinger" Vorspiel. Messrs. Lloyd and Nicholl sang in the closing scene from the first act of "Siegfried." From all accounts, the performances at this concert were of the best. The hall was crowded, and the audience most enthusiastic. The eminent conductor may well be proud of the success which has attended his short autumn series; and when he returns in the spring he will be sure of a hearty welcome.

MR. FRANZ RUMMEL gave his second piano-forte recital at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. He commenced with Handel's Variations in E, which were neatly rendered, but taken at a rate which would have surprised the composer could he have heard them: eighteenth-century music ought not to be played in the virtuoso style of the nineteenth. Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 27, No. 2) was admirably interpreted, with exception of some passages in the Presto, in which the accents were somewhat too abrupt. A fine rendering, too, was given of Schumann's great Fantasia (Op. 17). There were, it is true, a few moments in which the pianist was a little too anxious to reveal the strength of the music, but his reading throughout was intelligent and sympathetic. The March movement was bravely attacked. Mr. Rummel was not note-perfect in the terribly difficult coda; but we doubt whether any pianist, including the greatest, has ever taken it at the proper speed without fingerfall. The rest of the programme consisted of short solos. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

A SELECTION FROM JOHN C. NIMMO'S NEW BOOKS.

In 1 vol., small 4to, cloth, gilt top, price 21s. net.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

With Fourteen Plates, Designed and Etched by WILLIAM STRANG, R.P.E. Printed on thick Japanese Paper by F. Goulding.

*ALSO FIFTY SETS of early impressions of the plates specially printed by F. Goulding on Old French Hand-made Paper, and mounted, in a Portfolio. Each Portfolio numbered and signed by the Artist. Price £3 3s. net.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 12s. 6d. net.

CHARTERHOUSE, OLD and

NEW. By E. P. EARDLEY WILMOT and E. C. STREATHFIELD. With four Original Etchings by D. Y. Cameron, R.P.E.

NOTE.—This book contains personal reminiscences of Thackeray and of Life at the Old London School, as well as a full account of Life, Work, and Athletics, at Godalming.

In 2 vols., small 4to, cloth, gilt top, price 21s. net.

THE HERO of ESTHONIA, and other Studies in the Romantic Literature of that Country. By W. F. KIRBY, F.Z.S., F.L.S., Corresponding Member of the Finnish Literary Society. With a Map of Esthonia.

NOTE.—In this work an account of the unique Ancient Literature and Folklore of Esthonia is presented to English readers for the first time.

Nearly Ready.

In 2 vols., small 4to, cloth, gilt top. Uniform with "The Life of Michelangelo Buonarroti." Price 36s. net.

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS:

a Biography. Compiled from his Papers and Correspondence by HIRATIO F. BROWN. With Portraits and other Illustrations.

In 1 vol., small 4to, buckram, gilt top, price 7s. 6d. net.

MATTEO BANDELLO. Twelve

Stories Selected and Done into English, with a Memoir of the Author. By PERCY PINKERTON.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, price 5s. net.

BLANK VERSE. By John Ad-

DINGTON SYMONDS. Reprinted at the Author's special request.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. net.

MELTING SNOWS. By Prince

EMIL ZU SCHÖNHAICH-CAROLATH. Translated by MARGARET SYMONDS.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

GIOVANNI BOCCACCIO, as Man and Author. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

FOURTH EDITION, with 132 plates, nearly 2,000 distinct specimens, all coloured by hand, 4 vols., super-royal 8vo, price £6 6s. Now £3 3s. net.

A NATURAL HISTORY of

BRITISH MOTHS. By the Rev. F. O. MORRIS, M.A., Author of "A History of British Butterflies," "A History of British Birds," &c.

NOTE.—In this New Edition the Plates have been carefully revised and corrected, and the book has been increased in size, so that it is now uniform with the Rev. F. O. Morris's other Works on Natural History.

COMPLETION of the BORDER

WAVERLEY. Edited by ANDREW LANG.

Complete sets of Forty-eight Volumes may now be obtained from all Booksellers. Price 6s. per vol. The price of sets in leather bindings may be obtained from the Booksellers.

SEPARATE NOVELS CAN ALWAYS BE HAD.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, King William Street, Strand.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

In 6 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles.

THE COMPLETE WORKS

OF

GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

Edited from numerous MSS. by Prof. W. W. SKEAT.

Vol. IV., just published, 16s., containing THE TEXT of the CANTERBURY TALES.

The Complete Set of Six Volumes is offered to SUBSCRIBERS at THREE GUINEAS net, payable in advance.

NOTICE.—The SUBSCRIPTION LIST will be CLOSED for both Works on OCTOBER 31.

Recently published, 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

An ESSAY CONCERNING the HUMAN UNDERSTANDING. By JOHN LOCKE. Collated and Annotated, with Prolegomena, Biographical, Critical, and Historical, by A. CAMPBELL FRASER, Hon. D.C.L., LL.D.

"This work is the outcome of a life-long occupation with philosophy, and a life-long familiarity with the epoch of Locke, Berkeley, and Hume in particular. The editing is as full, as accurate, as completely satisfying, and the philosophical insight and sympathy as marked as in his edition of Berkeley. It will, no doubt, remain the standard edition of the famous Essay."—Scotsman.

THE WORKS of GEORGE BERKELEY, D.D., formerly Bishop of Cloyne; including many of his Writings hitherto unpublished. With Prefaces, Annotations, and an Account of his Life and Philosophy. By the Same EDITOR. 4 vols., 8vo, £2 18s.

THE LIFE, LETTERS, &c., separately, 16s.

BERKELEY.—SELECTIONS. With Introduction and Notes. For the Use of Students in the Universities. By the Same EDITOR. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

A HISTORY of FRANCE. With numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables. By G. W. KITCHIN, D.D. In 3 vols. Crown 8vo, each 10s. 6d.

Vol. I., to 1453. Third Edition. Vol. II., 1453-1624. Second Edition. Vol. III., 1624-1793. Third Edition.

THE MEMOIRS of EDMUND LUDLOW, 1625—1672. Edited, with Appendices of Letters and Illustrative Documents, by C. H. FIRTH, M.A. 2 vols., 8vo, £1 16s.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

CORNELII TACITI DE GERMANIA. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Map, by HENRY FURNEAUX, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

"I have ventured to hope that, by striking a balance between the meagreness of a school-book and the fulness of an exhaustive edition, I may have best consulted the requirements of most English readers."—FROM THE PREFACE.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE ANNALS of TACITUS.—Text.

With Introduction and Notes. Demy 8vo. Vol. I. Books I.—VI. 18s. Vol. II. Books XI.—XVI. 20s.

Books I.—V. With Introduction and Notes for the Use of Schools and Junior Students. Extra fcap. 8vo, 5s.

Book I., separately, 2s.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 24s.

The SOUNDS and INFLECTIONS of the GREEK DIALECTS: IONICS. By HERBERT WEIR SMYTH, Ph.D., University of Göttingen, Professor of Greek in Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania.

"The book is far more comprehensive than any that has yet been given to the world. ... The result is such that Professor Smyth must always be regarded as a leading authority on this subject, while his treatise adds to the literature of Greek philology, a work probably the most important of all that American scholarship has contributed to this department of learning."—Scotsman.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, uniform with the OXFORD CHAUCER.

PIERS THE PLOWMAN.

Edited from numerous Manuscripts, with Preface, Notes, and Glossary, by W. W. SKEAT.

At the desire of the Editor, Subscribers to the OXFORD CHAUCER have now the opportunity of obtaining "PIERS the PLOWMAN" (published at 31s. 6d.) at the Subscription price of ONE GUINEA net, payable in advance.

A WORK OF EXTREME IMPORTANCE TO STUDENTS OF BOTANY AND HORTICULTURISTS.

The Work will be completed in Four Parts, which will be issued to the Subscribers who take the whole Work at Eight Guineas net; and the Price will be raised on Publication.

Subscriptions will be received until the Publication of Part IV.

Part III., now ready.

Parts I. and II., published, 4to, cloth, £2 2s. each, net.

INDEX KEWENSIS: an Enumeration of the Genera and Species of Plants from the Time of Linnæus to the year 1885 inclusive. Edited by Sir J. D. HOOKER and B. D. JACKSON.

"The elaborate and exhaustive work of botanical reference, entitled 'Index Kewensis,' deserves a warm and appreciative welcome from all who concern themselves with the advancement of biological knowledge."—Times.

SHAKESPEARE'S SELECT PLAYS.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, stiff cover, 1s. 6d.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. Edited by WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A., Hon. D.C.L. and LL.D., Fellow, Senior Bursar, and Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Immediately, in 3 vols., cloth, 42s.

PLATO'S REPUBLIC. The Greek Text. Edited, with Notes and Essays, by the late Professor B. JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews. Vol. I., TEXT. Vol. II., ESSAYS. Vol. III., NOTES.

BOUND UNIFORM WITH ABOVE.

THE REPUBLIC. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introduction, by the late Professor B. JOWETT, M.A. Third Edition. Medium 8vo, 12s. 6d.; half-roan, 14s.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE HISTORY of SICILY from the EARLIEST TIMES. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., late Regius Professor of Modern History, Fellow of Oriel College, &c.

VOLUME IV.

FROM the TYRANNY of DIONYSIOS to the DEATH of AGATHOKLES. Edited from Posthumous MSS., with Supplements and Notes, by ARTHUR J. EVANS, M.A., Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, &c. With Maps and Numismatic Plates.

Also published, Vols. I. and II., 42s.; Vol. III., 24s.

ITALY and HER INVADERS. With Plates and Maps. By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L. (A.D. 376–553).

Vols. I.–II. The Visigothic Invasions. The Hunnish Invasion. The Vandal Invasion, and the Herulian Mutiny. Second Edition. £2 2s.

Vols. III.–IV. The Ostrogothic Invasion. The Imperial Restoration. 36s.

"We have re-read the work with increasing admiration for Mr. Hodgkin."—Athenæum.

Just published, demy 8vo, buckram, 8s. 6d. net.

MODES of ANCIENT GREEK MUSIC. By D. B. MONRO, M.A., Provost of Oriel College, Hon. Doc. of Letters in the University of Dublin.

"Mr. D. B. Monro's scholarly monograph is so well based in original study, and so well supported by some recent monumental discoveries, that the essay will probably be the chief authority on its theme for some time to come."—Scotsman.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART

No. 1174.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

LIBRARY OF HUMOUR.

Copiously Illustrated.

"The books are delightful in every way, and are notable for the high standard of taste and the excellent judgment that characterise their editing, as well as for the brilliancy of the literature that they contain."—Boston (U.S.A.) Gazette.

Large crown 8vo, roan, price 6s. per vol.; also in cloth elegant at 3s. 6d.

THE HUMOUR of FRANCE. Selected and Translated, with Introduction and Biographical Index, by ELIZABETH LEE. With 70 Illustrations by Paul Frenzeny.

"From Villon to Paul Verlaine, from dateless fables to newspapers fresh from the kiosk, we have a tremendous range of selections."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE HUMOUR of GERMANY. Selected and Translated, with Introduction and Biographical Index, by HANS MULLER-CASENOV. With 60 Illustrations by C. E. Brock.

"It is an excellently representative volume, comprising selections from all the best writers in the humorous vein, whether high or low German. Of course Heinrich Heine figures largely, and in addition are capital extracts from Hauff, Zschokke, Ludwig Tieck, Chamisso, Fritz Reuter, and others."—Daily Telegraph.

THE HUMOUR of ITALY. Selected and Translated, with Introduction, Biographical Index, and Notes, by A. WERNER. With 55 Illustrations by Arturo Faldi.

"Will reveal to English readers a whole new world of literature."—Athenaeum.

THE HUMOUR of AMERICA. Selected by JAMES BARR. With an Introduction and a Comprehensive Biographical Index of American Humorists. 80 Illustrations by Charles E. Brock.

"Certainly these 462 pages of queer stories and good illustrations are as exceptional for amusing narration as they are for excellence of printing and binding."—Liverpool Mercury.

THE HUMOUR of HOLLAND. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by A. WERNER. With numerous Illustrations by Dudley Hardy.

"Apart from the quality of humour, one is much struck by the evidence that in Holland during the present day there is a genial literature, of which we know nothing at all."—Bookman.

THE HUMOUR of IRELAND. Selected by D. J. O'DONOGHUE. With numerous Illustrations by Oliver Pague.

"A most conscientiously, exhaustively, excellently compiled book; the editor could not have done his work better. Every genre of Irish Humour as it is, or has been, written, from the twelfth century down to the evening-newspaper age has a specimen to represent it."—Speaker.

JUST ISSUED.

THE HUMOUR of SPAIN. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by S. TAYLOR. With numerous Illustrations by H. R. Millar.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

RECENT VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s., numerous Illustrations.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with numerous Illustrations.

APPARITIONS and THOUGHT TRANSFERENCE: an Examination of the Evidence for Telepathy. By FRANK PODMORE.

Ready October 25. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Diagrams, price 6s.

AN INTRODUCTION to COMPARATIVE PSYCHOLOGY. By Prof. C. LLOYD MORGAN.

BOOKLETS BY COUNT TOLSTOI.

These little stories, issued in Russia as tracts for the people, have become extremely popular in England, the Publishers have determined to present them in a form more suitable than that in which they have hitherto appeared.

They are now published in small 12mo, cloth, with Embossed Design on Cover, each volume containing Two Stories by Count TOLSTOI, and Two Drawings by H. R. Millar.

Volume I. contains—WHERE LOVE IS, THERE GOD IS ALSO. THE GODSON.
Volume II. contains—WHAT MEN LIVE BY. WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN?
Volume III. contains—THE TWO PILGRIMS. IF YOU NEGLECT THE FIRE, YOU DON'T PUT IT OUT.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt elegant, gilt edges, in box, price 2s. 6d.

THE CULT of BEAUTY: a Manual of Personal Hygiene. By C. J. S. THOMPSON.

MR. GEORGE MOORE'S NEW NOVEL.

Cloth, crown 8vo, 6s.

ESTHER WATERS: a Novel. By George Moore.

OTHER NOVELS BY GEORGE MOORE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

A DRAMA in MUSLIN. Seventh Edition.

A MODERN LOVER. New Edition.

A MUMMER'S WIFE. Twentieth Edition.

VAIN FORTUNE. 6s. With Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. A few Large-Paper Copies at One Guinea.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MODERN PAINTING. By George Moore.

"Of the very few books on art that painters and critics should on no account leave unread, this is surely one."—Studio.

"His book is one of the best books about pictures that have come into our hands for some years."—St. James's Gazette.

"A more original, a better informed, a more suggestive, and, let us add, a more amusing work on the art of to-day, we have never read than this volume."—Glasgow Herald.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 1s. 6d. per vol.

THE REPUBLIC of PLATO. Latest Vols.

Edited, with an Introduction, by THEODORE WRATISLAW.

PASSAGES from FROISSART. Edited, with an Introduction, by FRANK T. MARZIALS.

BOOKS BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

IN THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d. per vol.

At 1s. 6d.
per Vol.

THE AUTOCRAT of the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE PROFESSOR at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE POET at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.

IN THE NEW ENGLAND LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. per vol.

At 2s.
per Vol.

THE AUTOCRAT of the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE PROFESSOR at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE POET at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
ELSIE VENNER.
A MORTAL ANTIPATHY.

GRAVURE EDITION.

Crown 8vo, printed on antique paper, price 2s. 6d. per vol. Each vol. with a Frontispiece in Photogravure.

At 2s. 6d.
per Vol.

THE AUTOCRAT of the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE PROFESSOR at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE POET at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.

IN SETS.

In three styles of brocade binding, in shell case to match, price 6s. per set.

At 6s.
per Set.

THE AUTOCRAT of the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE PROFESSOR at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.
THE POET at the BREAKFAST-TABLE.

At 4s. 6d.
and 5s.
per Set.

The above are also supplied in Cloth, Shell Case, price 4s. 6d. per Set; and in Pedestal Case at 5s. per Set.

At 12s. 6d.
per Set net.

In Half-Calf, Red, Blue, and Buff, Gilt Top, in Shell Case.

The Five Vols. of Holmes in the "New England Library" can be obtained, bound in Bronze-Green Cloth, Gilt Top, enclosed in Shell Case to match, price 10s. per Set.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

| | |
|---|-----|
| FRONDER'S ERASMUS, by Prof. KARL PEARSON . . . | 313 |
| MR. CROCKETT'S NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE . . . | 314 |
| STRACHAN-DAVIDSON'S CICERO, by Prof. A. S. WILKINS . . . | 316 |
| TWO BOOKS ON INDO-CHINA, by STEPHEN WHEELER . . . | 346 |
| NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL . . . | 317 |
| SOME BIBLIOGRAPHICAL WORKS . . . | 349 |
| NOTES AND NEWS . . . | 349 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . | 350 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "IN MEMORIAM: Prof. JOHN NICHOL," by C. M. A. . . . | 351 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . | 351 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . | 351 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— "Fortuna Minor," by Prof. Skeat: The Septuagint versus The Hebrew Text of the Bible , by Sir H. H. Howarth and Dr. Aldis Wright; The Fethard Inscrup- tions , County Wexford, by Colonel Philip D. Vigors . . . | 352 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . | 354 |
| MR. NISBET'S EDITION OF THE FORESTER, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS . . . | 355 |
| SCIENCE NOTES . . . | 356 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . | 356 |
| THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND . . . | 356 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— "Ancient Ships," by Cecil Torr . . . | 357 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . | 357 |
| STAGE NOTES . . . | 357 |
| RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . . | 358 |

BOOKS AND BOOKPLATES BOUGHT in any quantity. Prompt cash payment.—Address J. S. EASTES, Bookseller, 67, Great Queen Street, Holborn, W.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT
PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address
Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by KAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.
Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

IMPORTANT TO AUTHORS.

AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS PRINTED AND PUBLISHED ON liberal terms.—Address ALPHA, care of 165, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS at the most
moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

CATALOGUE (No. 29) of SECOND-
HAND BOOKS. 32 pages. Upwards of 1,000 interesting items, offered at exceedingly moderate prices.—Thomas THORNE, 40, Blakett Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGIS-TRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions.
Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLE-
MEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE,
46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Esler, Esq., of Norton, Middlesex; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.B.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, 36, Porchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Disset, R.E., C.B.E.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

EXAMINERSHIP IN MORAL PHILOSOPHY AND LOGIC.

EXAMINERSHIP IN ENGLISH.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, in the month of December, appoint TWO EXAMINERS for DEGREES in ART as above, to hold office in each case for three years, from 1st January, 1895, at an annual salary, in the case of Moral Philosophy and Logic, of £50, and in the case of English, of £30.

Candidates must lodge with the undersigned twenty printed copies of their application and testimonials, on or before Friday, Nov. 30th.

ALAN E. CLARKE, Esq.,
Secretary of the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

THE TONGUE of the BELLS. By

G. H. LONGRIGG, Author of "Sermons in Timber and Stone,"
With Illustrations by the Author. Fancy cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. net.
"Charmingly quaint."—Chester Courier.

Chester: PHILLIPS & GOLDER.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume,
is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on Application.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPE'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7d., and tins, 1s. 12d., Labelled:
JAMES EPPE & CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

THE NEW "AUTONYM."

By REEF and PALM.

By LOUIS BECKE. Preface by the EARL of PEM-BROKE. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"The details are admirable, the picture always holds the eye, now and again with a rare and subtle charm."
Daily Chronicle.

THE NEW "PSEUDONYM."

LESSER'S DAUGHTER.

By Mrs. ANDREW DEAN, Author of "A Splendid Cousin," &c. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"Every phase of it arouses in us something like breathless interest."—Saturday Review.

THE NEW "BROWNIE."—The

BROWNIES AROUND the WORLD. Written and Illustrated by PALMER COX.
4to, cloth, 6s.

TOPSYS and TURVYS (Number 2). By P. S. NEWELL. Coloured Illustrations, oblong size, paper boards, 3s. 6d. net.

It is needless to say that this book is as funny as its predecessor, which the Speaker described as "exceedingly comical," and the National Observer as "diverting as ingenious."

HALF YEARLY VOLUMES OF

ST. NICHOLAS for YOUNG

FOLKS. In 2 Parts, sumptuously bound in red cloth, gilt, 5s. each.

"The most delightful of all magazines for young folks."
Daily News.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE: his Life, by W. M. SLOANE, with many Illustrations, and the first of a Series of Articles, entitled "The Churches of Provence," by Mrs. VAN RENNSLAER. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell, commences in the NOVEMBER

PART OF THE CENTURY. Price 1s. 4d. Monthly.
This Number commences the New Volume.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MOUNTAINS of CALIFORNIA.

By JOHN MUIR. Fully Illustrated.

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE BREHON LAWS:

A Legal Handbook, affording a comprehensive view of the Laws and Law Books of Gaelic Ireland, the Legislative Assemblies, the various Classes of Society, the Clan System, the Land Laws, the Law of Distraint, Criminal Law, Capital Punishment, Marriage, Fosterage, &c. By LAURENCE GINNELL, Barrister-at-Law.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE ECONOMIC INTERPRE-

TATION OF HISTORY. Lectures on Political Economy and its History, delivered at Oxford, 1887-88. By Prof.
THOROLD ROGERS. Third Edition.

"Most interesting and welcome."—Daily News (leader).

A KING of DREAMS and SHADOWS. By "SALIK." Cloth, 5s.

"The author has told a very pretty little story in a delicate and musical style."—Glasgow Herald.

THE DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND:

a Story of the Wild North-West. By JOHN MACKIE.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE MARK o' the DEIL,

And other Northumbrian Tales. By HOWARD PEASE,
Author of "Borderland Studies." Cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Seldom have we read local stories which have impressed us with a greater sense of their absolute truth of local colour and of the author's knowledge of local character and speech."
Athenaeum.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, in 1 vol.

CATHARINE FURZE:

A Novel. By MARK RUTHERFORD. Crown 8vo,
cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Mark Rutherford is a writer of extraordinary force."
Athenaeum.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S DOGS

Is the title of a most interesting Illustrated Paper, by FRANK J. CARPENTER, in the NOVEMBER PART OF ST. NICHOLAS. Price 1s. This Number commences the New Volume.

Catalogues and Lists sent, post free, to any address on application.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

"NAPOLEON ET LES FEMMES."

NAPOLEON and the FAIR SEX. Translated from the French of FREDERIC MASSON. With TEN PORTRAITS. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s. net.

CONTENTS:—Youth of Napoleon—Matrimonial Projects—Josephine de Beauharnais—The Reconciliation—Grassini—Actresses—Readers—The Coronation of Josephine—Madame—Eléonore—Hortense—Madame Walewska—The Divorce—Marie Louise—Elba—The 100 Days, &c., &c.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The author shows that this side of Napoleon's life must be understood by those who would realise the manner of man he was. We cannot know any man accurately until we know his relations towards women; least of all can we know Napoleon, with his wonderful vitality, his sensitiveness to feminine charms, and the subtle association of certain women with his larger public career and his conceptions of his place and work in modern Europe."

BIRMINGHAM POST.—"We are indebted to M. Masson for bringing together in a condensed and occasionally brilliant review the character and conduct of the two women who exercised the strongest influence upon Napoleon's life."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"From the general reader's point of view, the volume is distinctly interesting."

"VIEUX SOUVENIRS."

MEMOIRS of the PRINCE DE JOINVILLE.

Translated from the French by Lady MARY LOYD. With many Illustrations from Drawings by the Author. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"This is a book of remarkable interest, with illustrations by the author. They are spirited, and in many cases give representations of scenes which are of considerable historical moment, with lifelike portraits of the personages. The recollections of a man who has dined in childhood with Louis XVIII. at the Tuilleries; who has had the same tutor as Metternich, and remembers a coronation at Rheims; who (as the son of the reigning king and as captain of a frigate) was long afterwards charged with the duty of bringing to France the ashes of Napoleon Bonaparte; and who has lived to see the exile of his father, the Second Republic, the Second Empire, and the twenty-fourth year of the Third Republic, cannot but be striking; and the Prince de Joinville's 'Memoirs,' which are written with extraordinary freedom, will enjoy an undoubted success."—Extract from a notice of the French Edition in the Athenæum.

POETRY AND THE DRAMA.

MR. GOSSE'S NEW POEMS.

IN RUSSET and SILVER: Poems by Edmund

GOSSE. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

"Incomparably stronger than any of the author's previous work. The noble 'Dedication' to Mr. L. L. Stevenson is the high-water mark of Mr. Gosse's genius."—Mr. A. C. Benson in the New Review.

HANNELE: a Dream Poem. By Gerhart Haupt-

MANN. Translation and Introduction by WILLIAM ARCHER. Small 4to, with portrait, 5s.

SKETCHES.—"Artistically, it is interesting as a piece of realism, carried out with great insight and consistency. Morally, it stirs our hearts with pity, and may teach us many a lesson."

BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS.

THE ATTACK on the MILL. By Emile Zola.

With 21 Illustrations and 5 Plates, exclusively printed in Colours from Original Drawings by E. Courboin. Small 4to.

A BATTLE and a BOY. By Blanche Willis

HOWARD, Author of "Guenn." With 40 Illustrations by A. MacNeill-Barbour. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LITTLE JOHANNES. By F. van Eeden. From the Dutch by CLARA BELL. With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG.

Parts I. and II. are ready, price 2s. 6d. each net.

REMBRANDT: his Life, his Work, and his

Times. By EMILE MICHEL, Member of the Institute of France. Translated from the French by FLORENCE SIMMONDS. Edited by FREDERICK WEDMORE. A New Edition, to be completed in 16 Monthly Parts, each of which will contain five plates in Photogravure and Colour.

MASTERPIECES IN PHOTOGRAVURE.

REMBRANDT. Seventeen of his Masterpieces, from the Collection of his Pictures in the Cassel Gallery. Reproduced in Photogravure by the Berlin Photographic Company. With an Essay by FREDERICK WEDMORE. In Large Portfolio, 27½ in. by 20 in.

The Collection of Rembrandt's in the Cassel Gallery enjoys the distinction of consisting of a group of unsurpassed masterpieces, and of the twenty-one pictures now in the Museum, seventeen have been selected for reproduction. These will be printed on the finest Japanese paper.

The first twenty-five impressions of each Photo are numbered and signed, and of these only fourteen are for sale in England at the net price of Twenty Guineas per set. The price of the impressions after the first twenty-five is Twelve Guineas net per set.

"AUTOUR D'UN TRÔNE."

THE STORY of a THRONE. Catherine II. of Russia. From the French of K. WALISZEWSKI. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s. Portrait.

"The Story of a Throne" is, in a measure, a sequel to "The Romance of an Empress"; it completes M. Waliszewski's study of Catherine by showing her in the midst of those who contributed to her greatness. We see the statesmen, soldiers, favourites, and adventurers who surrounded her in Russia; the foreign men of letters—Voltaire, Diderot, Grimm—who spread her fame throughout Europe, and with whom she kept up a sort of intellectual coquetry; and the picture of her reign affords a view of almost everything that was happening just then in Europe and Asia alike in politics, literature, and art.

EDMOND and JULES DE GONCOURT, with

LETTERS, AND LEAVES FROM THEIR JOURNALS. Selected and Edited. With New and Original Portraits, specially prepared for these Volumes. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

The Selections from the Journals of Edmond and Jules de Goncourt give a lively and interesting account of the inner aspects of literary life in Paris, with many anecdotes and illustrations referring not only to what is known as the later or New School of French literature, but also to the higher as well as to the lower strata of Society in the capital of France during the past half-century. Lifelike pen portraits are given of many historical and literary notabilities of the time, and the work is full of kaleidoscopic scenes and incident.

FICTION.

THREE NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A DAUGHTER of this WORLD. By F. BATTERSHALL.

AT the GATE of SAMARIA. By W. J. Locke.

ELDER CONKLIN, and other Stories. By FRANK HARRIS.

TWO SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.

"IT IS AMAZINGLY CLEVER."

THE EBB TIDE. By Robert Louis Stevenson and LLOYD OSBOURNE. Fourteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TIMES.—"The episodes and incidents, although thrilling enough, are consistently subordinated to sensationalism of character.....Yet when he dashes in a sketch it is done to perfection.....We see the scene vividly unrolled before us."

"OF MAGNIFICENT VITALITY AND DRAMATIC FORCE."

THE MANXMAN. By Hall Caine. Forty-fifth

Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TIMES.—"The novel before us goes very straight to the roots of human passion and emotion.....'The Manxman' is a remarkable book, throbbing with human interest."

THREE POPULAR NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

EACH IN TWO VOLUMES, PRICE 12s.

A DRAMA in DUTCH. A Novel. By Z. Z.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"One does not care to put the book down until the last page is turned."

"AN ADMIRABLE STORY, ADMIRABLY RENDERED."

HER OWN FOLK. ("En Famille.") By

HECTOR MALOT, Author of "No Relations." Translated by Lady MARY LOYD.

WORLD.—"The author is one of the best writers of the day in the entirely healthy line of French realistic fiction, and it is a good thing that works of this kind should be made known to English readers, especially by so accurate and accomplished a translator."

"ONE OF THE BRIGHTEST NOVELS OF THE YEAR."

A VICTIM of GOOD LUCK. By W. E. Norris.

WORLD.—"Here is Mr. Norris in his best form again, giving us an impossible story with such imperturbable composure, such quiet humour, easy polish, and irresistible persuasiveness, that he makes us read 'A Victim of Good Luck' right through with eager interest and unflagging amusement."

UNIFORM EDITION OF THE NOVELS OF IVAN TURGENEV.

Translated from the Russian by CONSTANCE GARNETT.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. net each vol.

Vol. I. RUDIN. With a Portrait of the Author and an Introduction by STEPNIAK.

Vol. II. A HOUSE of GENTLE-FOLK.

UNIFORM EDITION OF THE NOVELS OF BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

Vol. I. SYNNOVE SOLBAKKEN. With an

Introductory Essay on BJORNSTJERNE and a Bibliography by EDMUND GOSSE.

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., Art Reproducers.

“—QUOD PETIS HIC EST.”

IT will be in the recollection of our numerous clients, and the public generally, that for a long period a widely felt want was experienced amongst Artists, Authors, Publishers, and Printers alike, in the way of obtaining easily accessible and reliable information as to the best and cheapest methods—consistent with high-class work—of Reproduction, as applied to Oil Paintings, Water-Colour Drawings, Pen and Ink Sketches, Photographs, MSS., &c., &c.

The marked success which has attended our efforts to meet this want induces us to make more widely known the lines on which our House was established.

For many years we had made a special study of the various processes adopted, both at Home and Abroad, for the Reproduction of Works of Art in Monochrome and Colours; and our House being the first to enter the field to supply so necessary a desideratum, we had the good fortune, in our interviews with the various Continental Firms, to secure valuable concessions from many of the leading houses in France, Bavaria, Germany, and Austria, and in some cases to obtain exclusive rights for Great Britain and Ireland.

These various concessions have proved to be highly advantageous, alike to manufacturer and client—to the manufacturer from a widely increased and rapidly extending business, and to client from excellence of results, combined with the lowest remunerative charges.

We are thus enabled to supply the highest possible class of work, and at the same time to advise as to the best method of reproduction according to the nature of the original. We are not committed to any one process, and are perfectly unbiassed in giving advice to our clients, who may in all cases rely upon safe guidance as to the methods best suited to their varied requirements. This is a special feature of our business.

For many years past we have been entrusted with commissions from most of the principal Fine Art Publishers, who have on every occasion expressed themselves in terms of high approval of our various processes.

The well-known house of Herr FRANZ HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, gave us the sole right for Great Britain and Ireland to supply their Photogravure, Block and Collotype processes. This house bears a world-wide reputation for artistic finish. In all their methods of Art Reproduction it is unsurpassed by any European establishment, while as regards their Photogravure Process, many of our leading artists consider that it stands without a rival.

Herr HANFSTAENGL's Studios are of the most elaborate and extensive character, and the liberal support we have received on his behalf from our chief London Publishing Houses is a proof of their appreciation of the value and importance of his work. We have constantly on view many costly and important plates from paintings by artists of high repute, and a visit to our offices will confirm the high encomiums we have received on all hands as to the excellence and quality of the work that has already emanated from our firm in all its branches.

OFFICES: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

FROM the CLYDE to the JORDAN;
Narrative of a Bicycle Journey. By HUGH CALLAN, M.A., Author of "Wanderings on Wheel and on Foot through Europe" and "The Story of Jerusalem." With 80 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

The NATURAL HISTORY of PLANTS.

From the German of ANTON KERNER von MARILAUN, Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna. By F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc., Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London. With about 1,000 Original Woodcut Illustrations, and 16 Coloured Plates. To be completed in 16 Monthly Parts at 2s. 6d. each net, and in 4 Half-Vols., cloth, at 12s. 6d. each net.

Now ready: Parts I. to VII., and Half-Vol. I.

BLACKIE'S SCHOOL AND HOME LIBRARY.

A Selection of the Best and most Interesting Books for Young Readers, strongly bound in cloth, 1s. 4d. each volume.

NOW READY.

Dana's Two Years Before the Mast.

Southey's Life of Nelson.

Waterton's Wanderings.

Anson's Voyage Round the World.

Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare.

Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin.

Marryat's Children of the New Forest.

Miss Mitford's Our Village.

Scott's Talisman.

The Basket of Flowers.

Marryat's Masterman Ready.

Little Woman. By Louisa M. Alcott.

Cooper's Deerslayer.

Parry's Third Voyage.

Dickens' Old Curiosity Shop. 2 vols.

Plutarch's Lives of Greek Heroes.

Other volumes in preparation.

BERNTHSEN'S ORGANIC CHEM-

ISTRY: a Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. By A. BERNTHSEN, Ph.D., formerly Professor of Chemistry in the University of Heidelberg. Translated by GEORGE M'GOWAN, Ph.D. New Edition, thoroughly revised and much enlarged by Author and Translator. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Sure to take as high a place among the elementary text-books of organic chemistry in the English language as it has already done in the Fatherland."—Nature.

ELEMENTS of METALLURGY.

Adapted to the Syllabus of the Science and Art Department. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., and WILLIAM J. HARRISON, Junior. Copiously illustrated. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE OXFORD MANUALS of ENGLISH HISTORY. KING and PARLIAMENT.

A.D. 1603-1714. By G. H. WAKELING, M.A., Lecturer in History at Wadham College. Cloth, 1s.

Other volumes in preparation.

BLACKIE'S MODERN FRENCH TEXTS.

THE LETTERS of PAUL LOUIS

COURIER. Edited by J. G. ANDERSON, B.A., French Master in Merchant Taylors' School. Cloth, 1s.

Other volumes in preparation.

CÆSAR'S INVASIONS of BRITAIN.

Parts of Books IV. and V. of the Gallic War. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, English Exercises, and Vocabulary, by JOHN BROWN, B.A., formerly Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. With Map. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

HORACE.—THE HISTORICAL and

POLITICAL ODES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by the Rev. A. J. CHURCH, M.A., sometime Professor of Latin at University College, London. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

READINGS from CARLYLE: a Selection of Representative Extracts from the Works of Thomas Carlyle. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by W. KEITH LEASK, M.A., late Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

DESCHANEL'S NATURAL PHILO-

SOPHY. Translated and Edited by Prof. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S. With nearly 800 Wood Engravings, and 3 Coloured Plates. Thirteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised and much Enlarged. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s.; also in Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I.—Mechanics, &c.

Part II.—Heat.

Part III.—Electricity, &c.

Part IV.—Sound and Light.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

GEORGE ROMNEY and his ART. By HILDA GAMLIN. With Photogravures, Colotype, and other Illustrations. 9s.

DIARY of a CAVALRY OFFICER in the PENINSULAR and WATERLOO CAMPAIGNS. By late Lt.-Col. TOMKINSON. Second Edn., Revised; Maps and Plates. 7s. 6d.

PRIMITIVE CIVILISATIONS. By E. J. SIMCOX. 2 vols., large 8vo, 32s. "A contribution to economical and social history of exceptional value and importance."—Times.

CONCORDANCE to the POETICAL WORKS of MILTON. By JOHN BRADSHAW, M.A., LL.D. Royal 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

LECTURES on HUMAN and ANIMAL PSYCHOLOGY. By Prof. W. WUNDT. Cuts. 8vo, 15s.

SOCIALISM: its Nature, Strength, and Weakness. By Prof. R. T. ELLY, Ph.D., LL.D. 6s. "A useful, interesting, and lucid discussion of this thorny subject. A more fair-minded book we never read."—Daily Chronicle.

RECORDS of the HOLE CRAFT and FELLOWSHIP of MASONS. With a Chronicle of the History of the Company. By EDWARD CONDER, Jun., Master. Facsimiles. 4to, 21s. net.

STUDENTS' ANGLO-SAXON DICTIONARY. By J. R. CLARK HALL, M.A., Ph.D. 4to (treble columns), 15s.

SCHOOL EDITION of SEYFFERT. DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES. Edited by the late Prof. H. NETTLESHIP and Dr. J. E. SANDYS. School Edition, Revised, with all the illustrations. 10s. 6d.

COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR of GERMAN and ENGLISH. By Professor VICTOR HENRY. English Edition, by the Author himself. 7s. 6d.

PROGRESS in LANGUAGE, with SPECIAL REFERENCE to ENGLISH. By Prof. OTTO JESPERSEN. (Written in English.) 7s. 6d.

GREEK SYNTAX. By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. Oxon. 2s. 6d.; or, with the "Accidence," in 1 vol., 4s. 6d.

RAINMAKING and SUNSHINE. By JOHN COLLINSON. 3s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LONDON.

MUDIE'SSELECT*LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. "Telegraph," "Africanism," London."

SEELEY & CO.'S NEW BOOKS FOR THE AUTUMN.

JUST PUBLISHED.
NEW VOLUME OF "EVENTS OF OUR OWN TIME" SERIES.
THE LIBERATION of ITALY. By the Countess Evelyn MARTINENGO CESARESCO. With 4 Portraits on Copper. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"A noteworthy contribution to the history of Italian unity."—Times.

EVENTS OF OUR OWN TIMES SERIES.

THE REFOUNDING of the GERMAN EMPIRE. By Colonel Malleon, C.S.I. With Portraits and Plans. Cloth, 5s. Library Edition (200 only), 10s. 6d.

THE AFGHAN WARS. By Archibald Forbes. Second Edition. With Portraits and Plans. Cloth, 5s. Library Edition (200 only), 10s. 6d.

THE DEVELOPMENT of NAVIES. By Captain Eardley Wilmot, R.N. With many Illustrations. Cloth, 5s.

THE WAR in the CRIMEA. By Sir Edward Hamley, K.C.B. Fifth Edition. With Portraits, Maps, and Plans. Cloth, 5s. Library Edition, 10s. 6d., net.

THE INDIAN MUTINY. By Colonel Malleon, C.S.I. Fourth Edition. With Portraits and Maps. Cloth, 5s. Library Edition, 10s. 6d., net.

ACHIEVEMENTS in ENGINEERING. By Professor Vernon Harcourt. With many Illustrations. Cloth, 5s.

JUST PUBLISHED.
THE FALL of ATHENS. A Tale of the Peloponnesian War. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH, Author of "Stories from Homer." With 16 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"Told in Professor Church's most effective and interesting style."—Glasgow Herald.

JUST PUBLISHED.
RADIANT SUNS. A Sequel to "Sun, Moon, and Stars." By AGNES GIBERNE. With 16 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

JUST PUBLISHED.
A DOUBLE CHERRY. A Story by M. E. Winchester, Author of "Adrift" and "Nest of Sparrows." With Illustrations, large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

JUST PUBLISHED.
KENSINGTON PALACE in the DAYS of QUEEN MARY II. A Story by EMMA MARSHALL, Author of "Under Salisbury Spire." With Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"Will be read with pleasure by all who are interested in that picturesque period."—Scotsman.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.
THE INNS of COURT and CHANCERY. By W. J. Loftie. With upwards of 60 Illustrations, chiefly by Herbert Railton. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

London: SEELEY & CO., Limited, Essex Street, Strand.

45, ALBEMARLE STREET,
30th October, 1894.

MESSRS. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO. beg to announce that they are preparing a SIXTH Edition of "TRILBY," by GEORGE du MAURIER, 3 vols., which will be ready in a few days.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

No. 264, for NOVEMBER.

OCCASIONAL NOTES:—London School Board Election; Headmasters' Conference; The Royal Commission; King's College, London; Mr. Walter Wren on "Education"; Dr. Branton on School Games; Holiday Course in Pedagogy; Edinburgh Medical Degrees for Women; Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes; Professor Herkomer on South Kensington "Art"; Professor Froude, &c.

HOW to MAKE ROOM for all the SUBJECTS which are to be TAUGHT in SCHOOLS. By Professor MIALL.

AN EPISODE.
THE IRISH "MANAGERIAL" DIFFICULTY. By AN OLD AGITATOR.

THE LAWS of ATTENTION and INTEREST APPLIED to EDUCATION. By ALICE OLDHAM, B.A.

MRS. STANTON BLATCH on SEWING for GIRLS,
BOYS' SCHOOLS in ANCIENT ATHENS. By S. E. HALL.

THE REV. CANON DANIEL
SOMERVILLE COLLEGE.

NOTES on ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.
TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

FOREIGN NOTES:—America, Germany, France, Belgium.
TRANSLATION and EXTRA PRIZES.

Price 6d.; per post, 7d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Fourth Edition, pp. 306, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL BRALL, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 39, Pall Mall.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, REDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

NOVEMBER.

THE CRIMEA in 1854 and 1894. By General Sir EVELYN WOOD, G.C.B., V.C., &c.

KOREA, CHINA, and JAPAN. By R. S. GUNDRY.

BURNING QUESTIONS of JAPAN. By A. HENRY SAVAGE-LANDOR.

HERMANN von HELMHOLTZ. By ARTHUR W. RUCKER, F.R.S.

WOMEN'S NEWSPAPERS. By MISS EVELYN MARCH-PHILLIPS.

RAMBLES in NORSK FINMARKEN. By GEORGE LINDSEY.

A NOTE on WORDSWORTH. By THOMAS HUTCHINSON.

SYMMETRY and INCIDENT. By MRS. MEYNELL.

VENETIAN MISSALS. By HERBERT P. HORNE.

LIFE in OTHER PLANETS. By SIR ROBERT BALL, F.R.S.

THE HEART of LIFE. By W. H. MALLOCK.

AN APPENDIX. By OUDY.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

FOREIGN BOOKS.

JUST OUT. Post free on application.

FOREIGN BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 115.—THEOLOGY, CLASSICS, ORIENTALIA,
FRENCH and GERMAN LITERATURE, HISTORY.

FOREIGN BOOK CIRCULAR,
SCIENTIFIC SERIES, No. 60.—FOREIGN SCIENTIFIC PUBLICATIONS.

GERMAN CATALOGUE.—
GENERAL LITERATURE, HISTORY, VOYAGES and TRAVELS, NOVELS and TALES, POETRY, DRAMA, &c.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden,
London; 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

for NOVEMBER, which contains, among other articles of interest:—LADY JEAN'S VAGARIES. Chaps. I.-IV.—THE GOUVERNEUR of PARIS.—THE TREE and FLOWERS of TENNYSON.—BLACK BAT.—GIB-RALTAR.—A MODERN HEBBO (Conclusion), &c.

NEW WORKS JUST PUBLISHED.

Vol. I., ready this day, remaining volumes at intervals of one month.

THE HISTORY OF ROME

from the Earliest Times to the Reign of Augustus. By THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated with the sanction of the Author by WILLIAM PURDIE DICKSON, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow. New and Cheaper Edition, revised, and embodying all the most recent alterations and additions made by Dr. Mommsen. In 5 vols., crown 8vo, to be issued at monthly intervals, price 7s. 6d. each.

Vol. I., ready this day, remaining volumes at intervals of one month.

THE HISTORY OF THE FRENCH

REVOLUTION (1789-1800). By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated, with Notes and Illustrations from the most authentic sources, by FREDERICK SHOBERL. New Edition, with 50 Illustrations on steel. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, to be published monthly, price 9s. each.

NOW READY.

THROUGH TEN ENGLISH COUNTIES.

Surrey, Hampshire, Wiltshire, Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Warwickshire, Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire.

THE CHRONICLE OF A DRIVING TOUR.

By JAMES JOHN HISSEY,

Author of "On the Box Seat," "A Holiday on the Road," "Across England in a Dogcart," &c.

Demy 8vo, with 16 Full-Page Illustrations by the Author, Engraved by Pearson, and a Plan of the Route, 16s.

NOW READY.

TWO SUMMERS IN GUY-

ENNE, 1892-3: a Chronicle on the Wayside and Waterside. By EDWARD HARRISON BAKER, Author of "Wandering in France," &c. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 16s.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH WHIST AND

ENGLISH WHIST-PLAYERS. By WILLIAM PRIDEAUX COURTNEY. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES

POWER COBBE. By HERSELF. Second Edition. In 2 vols., square crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 21s.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

NOW READY.

THE OLD OLD STORY.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY. Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Carey's story is wholesome and sweet, full of refinement of thought, and true to a not impossibly high standard of action. An invincible dignity of purpose, a chastened outlook upon life, impart to the tale a certain spirituality."—Globe.

NOW READY.

THE PRINCESS ROYAL.

By KATHARINE WYLDE,
Author of "Mr. Bryant's Mistake."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Among the most cleverly-constructed and eminently readable novels of a year which has been exceptionally productive of high-class English works of fiction."—Daily Telegraph.

"A very good novel."—World.

"The reader will be always interested."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE INTENDED. By

H. DE VERE STACPOOLE. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
"The situation thus far is strange enough, but that is the mere beginning of a plot which has extraordinary wild and sensational developments. The story is conceived with no little ingenuity and much daring, and told in a vigorously athletic style."—Scotsman.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

MAX PEMBERTON'S NEW STORY.

Just published, price 6s.

THE SEA WOLVES.

By MAX PEMBERTON.

Crown 8vo, 320 pages, with 9 Full-page Illustrations, cloth gilt.

Encouraged by the great success of his brilliant story, "The Iron Pirate," issued last year, Mr. PEMBERTON has written us an enthralling tale of wreckers, rogues, sea-fights, and hair-breadth escapes centring round the Spanish Sea.

POMONA'S TRAVELS.

A Series of Letters to the Mistress of Rudder Grange from her former Handmaiden.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Illustrated. 5s.

THE LIFE of DANIEL DEFOE.

By THOMAS WRIGHT,

Principal of Cowper School, Olney.

With 17 Full-page Illustrations. 21s.

CASSELL'S GAZETTEER OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

A Complete Topographical Dictionary of the United Kingdom.

With numerous Illustrations and Maps in Colours.

Vol. I. 7s. 6d.

THE NEW COMPLETE COOKERY BOOK.

Just published, price 6s.

CASSELL'S NEW UNIVERSAL COOKERY BOOK.

By LIZZIE HERITAGE,

Holder of First-class Diplomas in Cookery and Domestic Economy.

WITH PREFACE BY

LEONARD GRÜNFELDER,

Chef, Grand Hotel, London, formerly Chef of the Reform Club.

Containing 12 Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations in the Text.

Extra crown 8vo, 1,350 pp., bound in cloth with leather back.

* * A List of Cassell & Company's NEW and FORTHCOMING VOLUMES for the SEASON 1894-5 will be sent post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LONDON; PARIS AND MELBOURNE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN the DAY of BATTLE: a

Romance. By J. A. STEUART, Author of "Kilgrom: a Story of Ireland," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

"A straightforward, rattling breezy romance. It is a gallant story, in which the exciting adventures tumble over each other's heels. A good, honest, wholesome novel. In the ranks of our new school of romances this author deserves to find a prominent place."—Daily Telegraph.

"A story of picturesque adventure, of moving accidents by flood and field. There is not a dull page in the three volumes. Narrative and descriptive power of a high order is shown in all; and the tale as a whole will be voted striking and absorbing in the extreme. The account of the hand-to-hand conflict with the treacherous Abram ben Aiden stirs the soul like a trumpet."—Globe.

"A story of hairbreadth escapes by sea and land..... Amazing adventures detailed with picturesqueness and power."—Scotsman.

THREE NAPOLEONIC NOVELS BY ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

Never before Translated.

Each in 2 vols., uniform crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per vol.

THE COMPANY OF JEHU.

THE VENDEANS.

THE FIRST REPUBLIC; or, The Whites and the Blues.

LOW'S SERIES OF ORIGINAL NOVELS.

Each in One Volume at 6s.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By

WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Daughter of Heth,"

(Eight Thousand).

"The story is a delightful one. Indeed, it is long since Mr. Black has given us so much of his best as in these fascinating pages."—Speaker.

PERLYCROSS: a Tale of the Western Hills. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of

"Lorna Doone," &c. (Thirteenth Thousand).

"A noteworthy book.... In essence a study of rural life in south-western England."—Spectator.

THE MAN from OSHKOSH: a Story.

By JOHN HICKS, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru.

THE GATES of DAWN. By Fergus

HUME, Author of "The Fever of Life," &c. (Next week).

THE LIFE and TIMES of J. GREEN-

LEAF WHITTIER: 1807-82. By S. T. PICKARD.

With Steel-Plate Engraving. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

(Ready November 10.)

An entirely new and authoritative biography based on the Quaker Poet's own letters and papers.

THE UNITED STATES of AMERICA:

a Study of the American Commonwealth, its Natural Resources, People, Industries, Manufactures, Commerce, and its Work in Literature, Science, Education, and Self-Government. Edited by N. S. SHALER, S.D., Professor of Geology in Harvard University. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, 36s.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS. Correspondence between General and Senator Sherman, from 1837 to 1891. By Mrs. SHERMAN THORNDIKE.

With Portraits, 8vo, cloth, 16s.

GENERAL GRANT, PERSONAL

MEMOIRS of. New and Cheaper Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

NOVEMBER NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

ELECTION NIGHT in a NEWSPAPER OFFICE. (Illustrated.) JULIAN RALPH.

ENGLISH RAILROAD METHODS. (Illustrated.) H. G. FROST.

CHARITY. PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. Painted by Louis Deschamps. With Full-page Illustration (frontispiece) and portrait of Deschamps.

THE HORSE. (Illustrated.) N. S. SHALER.

TRUE PICTURES among the POOR:—The Bells of Aberdovey. ROBERT HOWARD RUSSELL.—Korby's Fortune.

WILLIAM T. ELISNO.—A Tenement-Court Festival.

ED. W. TOWNSEND.—The End that Crowned. JAS. BARNES

THE AMERICAN GIRLS' AET CLUB in PARIS. (Illustrated.) EMILY MEREDYTH ATYWARD.

HOW WHALEBONE CAUSED a WEDDING. (Illustrated.) JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS.

THE KING of CUBRUMPAW: a Wolf Story. (Illustrated.) ERNEST E. THOMPSON.

THE THIRD RELIEF. GEORGE I. PUTNAM

THE CONQUEROR. BESSIE CHANDLER.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. 70-78. GEORGE W.

CABLE. &c. &c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,

St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1894.

No. 1174, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Life and Letters of Erasmus. Lectures delivered at Oxford, 1893-4, by J. A. Froude, Regius Professor of Modern History. (Longmans.)

THIS England of ours must be a strange study to the observant foreigner. With vast material for historical research, we have no school of historical criticism; and when an historical genius is born, not bred, among us, we leave him to penury, or, before his life-work is half done, crush his productivity under the routine of a bishopric. While our genuine historical workers can be numbered on the fingers of one hand, we disregard them and promote the brilliant but inaccurate littérateur to the chief historical chair in the kingdom. No better justification for the outcry which met Lord Salisbury's appointment of Mr. Froude to the regius professorship at Oxford could have been found than the publication of Mr. Froude's lectures on Erasmus. These lectures have to be criticised, not like Mr. Froude's "Short Studies," as popular historical essays to be distributed from the circulating library, but as a contribution to historical literature on the part of an English university professor of the highest standing. The one may be leniently judged; the other, whatever may be the circumstances following its publication, must be honestly and, if necessary, sternly criticised, if we are to maintain our self-respect before continental scholars. This is not a small point, wherein de mortuis nil nisi bonum can rule our pen. Mr. Froude's Erasmus is not the only historical work which has appeared in England this year and has been greeted by the press with almost unqualified praise. Where historical research is at a low ebb, how is historical criticism likely to fare better? Yet, can anything be more painful to those who would hold high the reputation of English scholarship than to see inaccuracy, want of comparative study, and total failure to grasp scientific method praised by our English critics; while they are exposed at once—and not without an irritating tone of superiority—by their better trained German colleagues? If we cannot produce first-class historical work, at least let us refrain from the delusion that our bad is good. To know our feebleness is the primary condition of reform, as well as the sole means of retaining our self-respect in the face of European scholars.

Reviewing Mr. Froude's Luther nearly twelve years ago, the present writer ventured to suggest that, when he came to study the Reformation at first hand, he would modify his views as to the relative merits of the methods of Luther and Erasmus. It is, perhaps, the sole advantage of hero-worship that, if the worshipper be only catholic enough, he will, however little he grasps the background of his characters, ultimately be forced to balance one exaggerated life by a second. It is clearly impossible to worship both Luther and Erasmus contemporaneously; and in the passage from one shrine to another Mr. Froude could not fail to gather some insight into the real history of the Reformation. When he wrote his Luther, Mr. Froude could not have made a close study of the works or letters of Erasmus. He knew them intimately as little as he knew, when writing of Erasmus, the works or letters of Reuchin, Pfefferkorn, Hochstraten, or any other of the strange figures of that motley age. For Mr. Froude Reuchin is the man who "was suspended and imprisoned while the question what was to be done with him was referred to the Pope"; for him Hochstraten is "the Hebrew scholar" who attacks Erasmus; for him the Graf von Neuenar is not ridiculous as the "Count of New Eagle"; for him we feel sure that to the last the Spongia and the De Libero Arbitrio were mere names. Yet Mr. Froude progressed—and progressed in the right direction—between his Luther and his Erasmus. In 1883, he considered that, if the Reformation movement had been left to Erasmus and the Humanists, "a cultivated Epicureanism would have taken the place of real belief, and dissolved the morality of mankind." In 1894, he recognises that Erasmus was in the first place working for the moral regeneration of Europe, while Luther was setting up the tyranny of a new set of dogmas. He half admits that the Erasmian element was the permanent one in the changes which followed the sixteenth century convulsions. Luther and Erasmus may be of the same celestial material, "but one blazes like a comet, perplexing nations with the fear or reality of change; the other light is fixed and steady, if less immediately dazzling, and may shine on when the comet has burnt out." Erasmus, Mr. Froude now finds, wrote thus—"Strange as it may seem, there are even men among us who think, like Epicurus, that the soul dies with the body. Mankind are great fools, and will believe anything"— and accordingly could hardly have preached a "cultivated Epicureanism." He is now, indeed, the man from whose letters the youth of Oxford will obtain the "best description of the state of Europe in the age immediately preceding the Reformation." If we will only take Erasmus for a guide in that tangled period, Mr. Froude tells us, we shall not wander far out of the way. Yet it was Erasmus who wrote that wherever Lutheranism flourishes, there learning perishes! Mr. Froude learnt—as we all learn with increased study—to modify earlier opinions. It is not this of which we complain—emphatically not this when the change is towards the truth. But it is the absence of knowledge of the background of his characters which vexes us in Mr. Froude's pages at every turn. He has not "heard the other part" in all these controversies of which he talks; he shows no knowledge of the social conditions of the period, its religious literature, both learned and vernacular; he does not know of its schools, of the character and customs of its various religious orders, of the real extent in the monasteries of moral laxity on the one hand and of religious earnestness on the other. He has not attempted to grasp either the range of thought, or the work, or the policy of the mediæval church.

It is often only a slight hint which tells us of Mr. Froude's laches in these respects, but it is sufficient to show us Mr. Froude's want of historical study. Thus, take his account of Erasmus at the Devonter School. Erasmus tells us, in a letter written in middle life, that he was ill-taught, that his master was illiterate, and did not understand him.

"Erasmus hated the master, and perhaps with some reason. We have only Erasmus's own story, however, and one would like to hear the other. It is quite certain that the man retained the confidence of Erasmus's father in spite of the boy's complaints."

Now, to a student of fifteenth century educational reform, it is clear that Mr. Froude knew nothing of the reputation of Deventer or the real goodness of its work. Genius never gets on with its teachers, even though they be Hegius or Arnold; and Erasmus had a very obvious purpose in his letter to Grunnius. Now, about "the man" and his school, Mr. Froude might have learnt all that he could wish. Hegius, even before Wimpfeling, was a great pedagogic reformer. It was he who first made classics the centrepiece of school instruction: he first incited his students to study Greek—a language in which, we are told, he was as competent as in Latin. If Mr. Froude had not hit upon Butzbach's account of his old master, he might at least have discovered that the Hegius whom Erasmus himself elsewhere reckons among the restorers of true Latinity, whose works—"however careless he has been of his own reputation as a writer—according to the judgment of all scholars, deserve immortality," is the old Deventer schoolmaster, "the man" whom Erasmus's father ventured to trust!

Mr. Froude is equally unhappy about Erasmus's second school. He does not follow the clue that one of Erasmus's guardians was master of a school at Gouda, but he learns that Erasmus was placed in a house of "Collationary Fathers." Of these Fathers Mr. Froude writes: "Except from this account of Erasmus, I never heard of these people, nor can I learn any more about them." We wonder why not. Had Mr. Froude made a study of pre-Reformation vernacular literature—and no true judgment of the state of the Church in the age of the Reformation is possible without it—he could scarcely have failed to see the imprint of the Collatie-Broeders of Gouda, and this would have set him on the right track as to Erasmus and the real value of the work of this fraternity. The ignorance of vernacular religious literature was always a stumbling-block with Mr. Froude. When he was worshipping at Luther's shrine, it was Luther's New Testament which "settled for ever the determination of the German people to have done with the old idolatry." He had no idea of the existence of a "German Vulgate" in some nineteen pre-Lutheran High or Low German editions; he had no idea that the "September-Bibel" was rather a twentieth edition of the German Vulgate than a new and independent translation. That the Bible was a lost book till Luther re-discovered it is a myth which Mr. Froude persisted in for years. He had probably never handled one of the five-and-twenty German editions of the Gospels and Epistles which, besides the nineteen complete Bibles, preceded the Lutheran New Testament. When Mr. Froude begins to worship at the shrine of Erasmus the error changes; but there must still be an epoch-making Bible to destroy the Catholic superstition. This time it is Erasmus's Greek Testament which revolutionises public opinion. Mr. Froude's text must be cited as it stands:

"Of the Gospels and Epistles so much only was known to the laity as was read in the church services, and that intoned as if to be purposely unintelligible to the understanding. Of the rest of the Bible nothing was known at all, because nothing was supposed to be necessary, and lectures like Colet's at Oxford were considered superfluous and dangerous. Copies of the Scripture were rare, shut up in convent libraries, and studied only by professed theologians; while conventional interpretations were attached to the text which corrupted or distorted its meaning. Erasmus had undertaken to give the book to the whole world to read for itself—the original Greek of the Epistles and Gospels, with a new Latin translation—to wake up the intelligence, to show that the words had a real sense, and were not mere sounds like the dronings of a barrel-organ.

"It was finished at last, text and translation printed, and the living facts of Christianity, the persons of Christ and the Apostles, their history, their lives, their teaching, revealed to an astonished world. For the first time the laity were able to see, side by side, the Christianity which converted the world and the Christianity of the Church with a Borgia pope, cardinal princes, ecclesiastical courts, and a mythology of lies. The effect was to be a spiritual earthquake."

The part played by Erasmus's Greek Testament in the history of scholarship is a very important one; the Humanist of to-day knows, as his predecessor of Erasmus's own time knew, how to value the real humanity, the essential morality of Erasmus's commentary. But Mr. Froude's words represent no historical facts; they are pure fustian. How is "the whole world to read for itself," either the Greek original or the Latin translation? How is it to reach the masses, who fail to follow the vernacular—presumably owing to the "intoning"—in the churches? Why, because a Testament appears in Greek, are the laity able to see for the first time the two Christianities? If the laity could read Latin, then there were more than 150 editions of the Latin Bible before Erasmus's Testament. The Vulgate is not the critical text of to-day; but it is a ridiculous error to suppose it incomprehensible, or that the main facts of Christianity cannot be extracted from it. If Eckehart and Thomas à Kempis learnt their Christianity from the Vulgate, we may be quite sure that the laity had not to wait for Erasmus's Greek Testament to have the lives and teaching of Christ and the apostles revealed to them. Nay, a little study of the popular literature of the day would have convinced Mr. Froude that Bible words and Bible instances were on everybody's tongue. Nor is it to be wondered at. Schoolmasters read the Bible daily with their scholars; so that some boys had read nearly the whole Bible by ten years of age, and others knew the Four Gospels by heart. Until writers understand that it was not a biblical revelation, but a great social movement, which produced the Reformation, we shall have no real history of that period. Mr. Froude's talk about "the awful countenance" of the sacred text "being now practically revealed for the first time for many centuries," or our difficulty in realising "what the effect must have been when the Gospel was brought out fresh and visible before the astonished eyes of mankind," is merely Protestant myth, comparable with Catholic tales of Luther's personal immorality. Hard conditions of life—hunger or tyranny—produce great social changes: the social movement may take its watchwords from a religious book, from a Rousseau or from a Marx; but it is not a new acquaintance with the book, or the appearance of the intellectual leader, which produces the revolution. Deep down economic causes will be found at work, and these are not what Mr. Froude ever succeeded in bringing to the surface. He begins with the leaders, or rather one leader, and never studies the mass of men.

If Mr. Froude has so far advanced, from his Luther to his Erasmus, as to attribute some share of our modern freedom to Erasmus's labours—nay, to admit that the world after all has come round to the Erasmusian view—we still find his old blunders as to Luther repeated. Luther is driven into a monastery, not by fear of a thunderstorm but in order to devote himself to the service of God. He still finds that unknown book—a New Testament—lying dusty on the shelves. Every Greek scholar and every friend of learning were on his side, at any rate at first. We have still the same mythical views on Indulgence, the same complete incomprehension of the real danger that threatened Europe from the Turks—the Turkish crusade was invented to quiet the Lutheran movement. If we pass all this by, however, and ignore also Mr. Froude's incapacity for really understanding Fisher of Rochester, Albrecht of Mainz, or Leo X.; if we forget all the poor history of his Tenth and Eleventh Lectures, and forgive him for confusing fanaticism with enthusiasm because so many to-day write down all enthusiasm as fanaticism, may we not still be grateful for a pleasant portrait of Erasmus told in Erasmus's own words? Alas! even here we have but small comfort. The letters profess to be "abridged" translations, but there is no mark to show where an omission has been made. Occasionally one sentence stands for ten of the original; occasionally two sentences far separated in Erasmus's letters are run into one. The Rip van Winkle incident related by Erasmus about the Scotists in his letter to Grey is half-spoiled by the arbitrary and unmarked contraction. The repeated leaving out of half-sentences gives a jerkiness to Erasmus's style which is far from being his own.

Some of the letters to Battus are hardly capable of being identified with the originals, they are such poor skeletons of their real selves. Let the reader compare, too, in this respect Mr. Froude's version of the famous picture of More with its original: To judge from Mr. Froude's version Erasmus bracketed women with fools. In the translations themselves there is often vigour and careful choice of words, though occasional blunders too, as when Mr. Froude translates the τελώνης—i.e., publicanus of Erasmus—who, Erasmus actually tells us, freed the boatmen from custom-dues—into a literary wine merchant, a publican!

As is well known, the dates fixed by the old editors to Erasmus's letters are very doubtful quantities, but Mr. Froude's rearrangement cannot always be considered successful. Thus, he removes a letter of invitation of Henry VIII. to Erasmus, clearly written about 1529, when the divorce question was forcing Henry into the Protestant camp, back to 1509! The result is that Henry appears on ascending the throne to have asked Erasmus to come and help him in the work of church reform—in restoring Christ's religion to its primitive purity! Mr. Froude considers the letter as an invitation to join the Privy Council. This it may have been; but as it was written long after Erasmus's last visit to England, it was certainly not an invitation of the greatest weight supporting in 1509 Mountjoy's proposal to Erasmus to come to England. Erasmus's disappointment as to English provision for his maintenance was certainly not due to a failure in Henry to carry out his own offer. That offer only came when Henry himself was starting his anti-papal campaign.

We have said enough to indicate that, while Mr. Froude's last work marks a real epoch in his own development, it has still all the defects of his earlier want of scholarship and impatience of minute study. Neither as a popular book, nor as an historical biography, is it anything like as complete or careful as Drummond's Life and Character of Erasmus, a book which itself might be much bettered in a new edition. Little touches of the personal there are in Mr. Froude's latest work, which will undoubtedly render it welcome to his admirers. Erasmus does not suffer from the hands of his biographer as Carlyle did. Mr. Froude is, if anything, too lenient to Erasmus's weaknesses. Perhaps in the interval between the two biographies Mr. Froude learnt the great truth, with which he concludes his Lecture XIII., and for the statement of which so clearly and tersely much may be pardoned him.

KARL PEARSON.

MR. CROCKETT'S NOVELS.

The Raiders; Mad Sir Uchtred of the Hills; The Lilac Sunbonnet. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE publication of The Lilac Sunbonnet makes it more uncertain than ever whether Mr. Crockett is an original romancist or only a clever imitator—with an eye to scenery, however, that is all his own—who can, when the call is made upon him, run with Mr. Barrie or hunt with Mr. Stevenson. Nothing he has done since The Stickit Minister is at all equal to that early volume in simplicity or sincerity. But, then, The Little Minister is not equal to Auld Licht Idylls or the Window in Thrums: Mr. Barrie, too, has yet to demonstrate that he is a novelist of the calibre, say, of Mr. Thomas Hardy.

Two dogmatic statements may be hazarded of these three books. The Lilac Sunbonnet is greatly inferior to The Raiders, and Mad Sir Uchtred of the Hills is greatly inferior to either. The last may, indeed, be dismissed as an historical impertinence in the guise of historical fiction. No doubt many extraordinary claims were put forward in behalf of the persecuted and hunted adherents of that Solemn League and Covenant which, as Burns said, "now brings a smile, now brings a tear." But among them was not, so far as I am aware, the power of working miracles. Yet it is this power which is exercised by the Rev. Alexander Renfield, who, when he is arrested by Sir Uchtred of Garthland, acting as the agent of Lauderdale, calls down a curse upon him, and converts him into a Galloway Nebuchadnezzar. Apart from this miracle, there is absolutely nothing in the story that can be said to be impressive. The great wild cat—which snaps weasels as if they were rotten sticks, which "watches with yellow-irised eyes the dreams chase themselves across the clouded brain of that man whom God had driven out to eat with the beast of the field," and which "that man" welcomes with "Sweet Belus, my god!"—has the effect of a bit of low comedy thrust into the heart of a tragedy. The love-making of Randolph Dowall to his brother's wife Philippa is ineffective and unreal—mere Restoration-and-water. Even Mr. Crockett's scenic effects are here failures. He gives one or two phrases, such as "the indigo-blue night winking with stars," which startle by their trickiness, not by their graphic power; for it is the stars that wink, not the night. As a rule, however, this is the sort of thing that Mr. Crockett thinks good enough for his readers.

"Then the night came. A serene and austere coolness settled down on the hills. The world was very full of sweet air to breathe. The bog myrtle, which men name 'gall of the hills,' gave forth a rare smell, and Sir Uchtred awoke out of his dream."

Such a description is suggestive not of the open air, but of a well-ventilated sick-room.

The Lilac Sunbonnet is strong where Mad Sir Uchtred is palpably weak. I cannot help quoting from one of the best chapters in it, because the passage indicates better than anything else its author's power of reproducing the influence of scenery and of night, with its awe-inspiring stillness and its eerie possibilities, upon a coarse, superstitious nature.

"He noted where, on the broad bosom of the loch, the stillness lay grey and smooth like glimmering steel, with little puffs of night wind purling across it, and disappearing like breath from a new knife-blade. He saw where the smooth satin plain rippled to the first water-break, as the stream collected itself, deep and black, with the force of the water behind it, to flow beneath the arch. . . . He looked over. He saw the stars which were perfectly reflected a hundred yards away on the smooth expanse first waver, then tremble, and lastly break into a myriad delicate shafts of light, as the water quickened and gathered. He spat in the water and thought of trout for breakfast. But the long roar of the rapids of the Dee came over the hill and brought a feeling of stillness with it, weird and remote. Uncertain lights shone hither and thither under the bridge in strange gleams and reflections. The ploughman was awed. He continued to gaze. The stillness closed in upon him. The aromatic breath of the pines seemed to cool him and remove him from himself. He had a sense that it was a Sabbath morning, and that he had just washed his face to go to church. It was the nearest thing to worship he had ever known. Such moments come to the most material and are their theology. Far off a solitary bird whooped and whinnied. It sounded mysterious and unknown, the cry of a lost soul. Ebbe Farriah wondered where he would go to when he died."

Mr. Crockett rather spoils the effect of this passage by making Ebbe resolve "that he would go seldomer to the village public o' nights, and that he would no more find cakes and ale pleasant to the palate." "Cakes and ale" and "o' nights" are too obviously meant for English consumption; yet the quotation illustrates what is likely to be of permanent value in The Lilac Sunbonnet. As a story, it is ill-compacted. The love-making is painfully slow, and the lovers have an intolerable habit of making light comedy out of their own sentimentalities. There is a suspicion of Mr. Barrie's Egyptian in Winsome Charteris; Ralph Peden, the divinity student and distracted lover, is a (physically) robust Mr. Dishart; and the confession of Mr. Welsh, the Marrow minister, that he is the father of Winsome Charteris, at once recalls the confession of the Dominie in The Little Minister, that he is Mr. Dishart's father. The villainy in The Lilac Sunbonnet is of mere intrusion. Jess Kissock, the gipsy rival of Winsome, who intercepts letters, and Agnew Greatorix, the tippling young laird, who tries his hand at abduction, are lugged in merely in order that Ralph Peden may not have it all his own way. Mr. Crockett ought, too, in this connexion, to give up his bad habit of moralising in this commonplace fashion: "Black-browed Egypt, the serpent of old Nile, can sit in a country byre and read another woman's letter. For Cleopatra is not history—she is type."

Galloway may be to Mr. Crockett what Thrums is to Mr. Barrie; or, better still, what Wessex is to Mr. Hardy. The love-making and the rude philosophy of Saunders Mowdielwort would seem to indicate that he cherishes an ambition of this kind. The chapter in which Saunders rehearses in the byre his intended attack on the heart and the waist of May Kissock is no doubt genuine Scotch fun, and therefore something very different from mere "comic copy." But he must beware of "effects," like "Meg's clours are like original sin, and to be borne wi' a' complaisancy; but Birsio's dunts are, so to speak, gratuitous, and amount to actual transgression." This is simply an exercise in the "new humour" by a man who has been brought up on the Confession of Faith. Shakspeare's gravedigger would have managed better; so would Joseph Poorgrass.

Before I leave The Lilac Sunbonnet, I must say that Mr. Crockett would do well to deal with the serious charge of plagiarism which has been made against him in Scotland, and which, so far as I have seen, he has not hitherto attempted to meet. That charge is to the effect that his most notable and most distinctly Hardy-esque exhibition of the humour of Scotch rusticity, the chapter entitled "The Cuif before the Session," has been to all appearance lifted without acknowledgment from "Jockey and Maggy's Courtship, Part III.," a chapbook of Dugald Graham, the skellat bellman of Glasgow, who died in 1779, and whose works were reprinted in 1883. It has been pointed out that in the chapbook there is a dialogue which runs on thus:

"Mither, I hae been three or four times through the Bible and the New Testament, and I never saw a repenting stool in't a'. . . . But a daft history book tells me that the first o' them was used about Rome among the Papists. . . ."

Mr. Crockett's chapter contains this:

"Mother, I've been through the Testaments mair nor yince—the New Testament mair nor twice—an' I never saw naethin about stools o' repentance in the house o' God. But my son Saunders was readin' to me the ither nicht in a fule history buik, and there it said that among the Papists," &c.

The Raiders is conspicuously superior to The Lilac Sunbonnet in style, in flow of narrative, and in plot. But, as I have already said, I cannot learn from it whether Mr. Crockett will be a great, in the sense of an original, romancist. For one thing, it recalls too many books with which one is familiar. The love-making between Philip Heron and May Maxwell forcibly recalls one of the courtship of John Ridd and Lorna Doone. Silver Sand, otherwise John Faa, reminds one here and there of Alan Breck. The fighting makes one think of Mr. Conan Doyle—at his best. However, there is no doubt that Mr. Crockett has a mastery of Galloway scenery, and of the art of reproducing it with a few rapid dashes. In spite of "The Cuif" chapter, I am disposed to believe that he has also a thorough knowledge of Galloway character. Lady Grizel is quite as good as Miss Grant in Mr. Stevenson's Catriona; and I hope that henpecked, garrulous Samml Thompson is all Mr. Crockett's own, for he is a delightful companion and gossip. The fight on the Bridge of Dee, and, indeed, the whole series of struggles between the outlaws and their scarcely more civilised enemies, demonstrate Mr. Crockett's capacity for battle-pieces. Somehow, it is impossible to refrain from comparing him with Mr. Barrie and Mr. Stevenson. He has not Mr. Barrie's humour, but he has a wider knowledge of Scotch nature generally. His style has not the distinction of Mr. Stevenson's, nor has he such an eye either for the picturesque or for the virile in scoundrelism. But he has more sympathy with the average man, and still more with the average woman. Neither the May Mischief of The Raiders nor the Winsome Charteris of The Lilac Sunbonnet is such an artistic creation as Catrina; but both are more distinctly girlish and natural. Yet Mr. Crockett has done nothing so memorable as both Mr. Barrie and Mr. Stevenson have done. His achievements prove nothing as to the future. They may be but the preliminary canters of genius; or they may be the best work of a second-rate writer who has struck oil.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS."—Cicero and the Fall of the Roman Republic. By J. L. Strachan-Davidson. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

THE editor of the series of "Heroes of the Nations" has been fortunate in inducing his colleague at Balliol to undertake to write the Life of Cicero. The memorable articles in the Quarterly Review (1879 and 1880) proved long ago not only Mr. Strachan-Davidson's intimate familiarity with the literature, but—what is of more importance for such a task—the admirable steadiness of his judgment. The genius of Mommsen, the learning of Drumann, the brilliant literary gifts of Profs. Froude and Beesly, alike failed to mislead him into harsh and unsympathetic criticism; and several generations of students have recognised in those articles the safest—and, be it said in parenthesis, the most attractive—of guides through the problems of the period. It is a matter for some regret that the lines of Mr. Strachan-Davidson's present work do not allow him to enter often or at any length into discussions, which the student, if not the general reader, would have welcomed. Hence it is only those who have had occasion to work over the ground for themselves, who will understand how much careful weighing of statements and arguments on either side underlies many a short paragraph or even sentence.

What Mr. Strachan-Davidson has attempted in this volume has been to narrate rather than to criticise, and this has been done with admirable clearness. He has wisely, and with very happy skill, used as largely as possible Cicero's own words in doing so. The material supplied by a writer who was at once the prince of storytellers and the most charming and diversified of correspondents is abundant, and has often been employed for a similar purpose; but it has never been selected more felicitously or translated more agreeably. The weaknesses and inconsistencies of the orator are not disguised, and indeed they lie on the surface. But they are not allowed to blind the reader to the honesty and elevation of his purpose, to the range and variety of his powers, and to the charm of his personal character. On the main question, which determines our judgment of his political action, the essential nature of "Caesarism," Mr. Strachan-Davidson strikes no uncertain note:

"After all, the tree is known by its fruit, and Caesarism is condemned by the character which the despotism necessarily stamped upon the generations bred under it. We must look for its perfect work in the subjects of the later Empire, ground down by an intolerable burden of taxation, with souls which had lost all nobler political interests, trusting to hired soldiers to fight for them, no longer capable of managing their own concerns, nor of striking a blow in defence of their own hearths. All the horrors of the barbarian invasion and all the darkness of the Middle Ages were not a price too heavy to pay for the infusion of fresh and stronger blood, and the revival of the sense of dignity in mankind."

Cicero may not have foreseen all the steady degeneration of national character that would result from a world-wide despotism. But at least he "accepted it as the first axiom of politics that 'some sort of a free state' is the necessary condition of a noble and honourable existence; and that it is the last calamity for a people permanently to renounce this ideal, and to substitute for it the slave's ideal of a good master."

Mr. Strachan-Davidson admirably shows how the endeavour to hold to this creed, without falling into the impractical rigidity of a man like Cato, explains Cicero's frequent embarrassment and hesitation. But even now it is far easier to see the difficulties that beset any conceivable line of action, than where the path of duty lay. The clear-sighted, resolute policy of Caesar gained its immediate end; but it led inevitably to the Ides of March, and "miserably crushed out all the possibilities of a worthier future for his nation and for the world."

The scholarship, which is stamped on every page of this volume, goes without saying, and can hardly be referred to without impertinence. It might perhaps have been better to give a less definite rendering of "pusilla laboret" than "my dear little girl is near her time." We have not, I think, any reference to any child of Tullia's before that one whose birth proved fatal to her; and "is far from well" is probably close enough to the Latin. If the Antonius of Juv. viii. 105 be, as is usually supposed, Cicero's colleague in the consulship, he does not fall within the eleven years mentioned on p. 44. It would be of interest to have Mr. Strachan-Davidson's reasons for believing that the consular elections in B.C. 63 were held on October 28. Since the publication of Dr. C. John's well-known investigations, all historians seem to agree in admitting that there is no reason to suppose that they were held later than July (cp., e.g., Ihne vi. 244). The one exception that I have noticed is Mr. Shuckburgh; and he fixes September 21, but on what authority I cannot say. It is also open to question whether there was, as Mr. Strachan-Davidson says, a meeting of Catilina's partisans on the evening of November 7, after the failure of the attempt on Cicero's life. If Mommsen is right in supposing the attempt to have been made on the morning of November 8, there obviously was not. It appears to rest on no authority.

A. S. WILKINS.

TWO BOOKS ON INDO-CHINA.

The Colonisation of Indo-China. Translated from the French of J. Chailley-Bert, by A. B. Brabant. (Constable.)

Around Tonkin and Siam. By Prince Henri d'Orleans. Translated by C. B. Pitman. (Chapman & Hall.)

It is two years now since M. Chailley-Bert republished, in the form of a book, a series of articles on Hong Kong and Burma, which he had written for the Revue des Deux Mondes. An English translation so long afterwards is scarcely called for. Even when the papers were first printed, there was no particular reason for translating them. In the main, they are a summary, not of the author's personal observations, but of his studies of English Blue-Books, which any Englishman who is interested in the subject can read for himself. Possibly this reflection has occurred to the publishers. At any rate, the title is curtailed in a way that may lead the unsuspecting purchaser to imagine that the book is a Frenchman's account of French colonies: that is to say, of Tong-king and Cochin-China. But the French title is La Colonisation de l'Indo-Chine: l'expérience Anglaise; and the author only deals with the results of British rule in Hong Kong and Burma.

Assuming, however, that there was some demand for an English version, and that the delay in preparing one was unavoidable, why not have entrusted the task to a competent person? Mr. Brabant cannot write decent English. The author speaks of "les études comparées, en général si fécondes." This is rendered, not "the comparative method," but "compared methods," which is nonsense. Occasionally the meaning of the original is entirely destroyed. The following extract is not the only instance that might be cited. We read:

"The Government of India sent King Thebaw an ultimatum which he could not possibly accept. Immediately British troops crossed the frontier (1885). The expedition was conducted with almost unprecedented rapidity. By September 25 both troops and ships had all left Rangoon, and the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Bernard, had to take upon himself the responsibility of detaining a gunboat under orders to return to India."

This would imply that a naval and military expedition left Rangoon for Upper Burma on September 25; whereas General Prendergast, as we are told a few lines lower down, did not start till November. In the original, however, we have "le 25 septembre, il n'y avait encore à Rangoon ni troupes ni bateaux." Why Mr. Brabant should render this "both troops and ships had all left" I fail to see. At times, too, the baldness of his translation is excruciating; as, for example, in the following reference to the European population of Hong Kong:

"The Portuguese is the only community which has a proportion of 136 women to 100 men. The climate of Hong Kong has not deterred them from coming. The English wives who are so courageous have been distanced (distançées). But that they have been surpassed (dépassent en nombre) by the American and Portuguese women, is less dangerous for their reputation than for the morals of their husbands (moins dangereuse pour leur gloire que pour la vertu de leurs maris)."

It need hardly be said that when M. Chailley-Bert makes a slip, his translator follows him with alacrity. The name of the vessel which was seized by a mutinous Chinese crew in 1853 was the Aratoon Apcar. Every Englishman who has been west of Suez knows who the Apcars are; but both author and translator write Apcar. The printers of the English version introduce their own variations. Thus we read, on p. 39:

"... difficulties in regard to the land occupied by colonists; the titles of ownership have been put in order. The first barrister established himself at Hong Kong. A small steam-tug named Corsair,"

&c. This is what comes of having English books printed at Leyden. Considering that the translation costs nearly twice as much as the French original, such slovenly production is unpardonable.

It is time, however, to recognise the gratifying fact that M. Chailley-Bert formed a very favourable opinion of British rule in the East. He merits, indeed, the thanks of every Englishman for the pains he took to collect trustworthy information, and for the use he has made of it. His appreciation of the good work which is being done by England in Hong Kong and Burma may be no more than strict justice; but it is none the less satisfactory to find so intelligent a critic approving and admiring our efforts in these regions. It may almost seem ungracious to suggest that once or twice he goes astray on points of minor importance; but his translator might have mentioned that the Governor-General of India in Council can hardly be said to "admit the Commander-in-Chief to the discussion of his views solely from motives of courtesy and for the furtherance of his own interests," seeing that the Commander-in-Chief is always a member of the Executive Council. Elsewhere the author remarks that in India the English—Mr. Brabant, by the by, always translates les anglais as "the British"—shield their fellow-countrymen, in their intercourse with the natives, from the vexatious (fidieuses) consequences of their acts; and he expresses some surprise that an Englishman in Hong Kong who thrashes a cooly should be liable to punishment. So he would be in India. These, however, are trifles; and speaking generally, M. Chailley-Bert may be complimented on the accuracy of his information, which is exactly of the kind one would like to have set before French readers.

The narrative of Prince Henry's journey through Tong-king and parts of Siam has also suffered at the hands of an incompetent translator. One may grow habituated to such un-English expressions as "the Yunnan" for the province, and "the Laos" for the country of the Lao tribes; but there are worse mistakes than this in the book. Sometimes they are quite inexplicable. For instance, the author is made to say the exports of silk from Canton amount in value to the prodigious sum of £96,000,000 a year. The total exports of all goods from Canton do not amount to five million sterling. Not infrequently the translator, in his attempt to disguise the meaning of the original, is aided by the printer. Travellers, we read, "are not likely to forget the two words which are so linked with the name of the Dong-trieu, coal operates, representing as they do the future and the fuel of the colony." This dark enigma can only be solved by referring to the original, where for the mysterious phrase "coal operates" I find charbons et pirates, and for "fuel" le peril. Prince Henry was saying that the future prosperity of Tong-king depended on its coal mines; while the great danger of the present day was piracy, or what we more commonly speak of as "dacoity." But even without assistance from the printers, Mr. Pitman can put quite a new meaning on his author's words. Speaking of the Buddhist temples at Luang Phrabang, Prince Henry remarked—"Pensemble me rappelle assez l'architecture hindoue, de loin, de bien loin, quelque chose du bel art Musulman qui éclate dans les merveilles du Penjab." Having also travelled in India, he is careful to distinguish between the architectural styles, exemplified, say, in the Golden Temple of Siva at Benares and in the Mosque of Wazir Khan at Lahore. A temple on the banks of the Me-kong, with its carved façade and bright frescoes, might remind a traveller of the one; but there would be very little resemblance to the other. Such distinctions, however, do not trouble the translator, who, omitting all reference to "le bel art Musulman," is content to make his author say, "The whole effect reminds me, in a measure, of the Hindu architecture." In this chapter, I may add, and perhaps elsewhere, there are variations which make it clear, either that Mr. Pitman has taken inexcusable liberties with the original, or that his translation was not written from the author's final proofs. Over and above this, the English version does not contain the valuable appendices printed in the Paris edition, nor has it been thought necessary to reproduce some of the more interesting maps and illustrations. The omission of route maps, of the author's itinerary, and of a vocabulary of words used by five of the Indo-Chinese races, detracts greatly from the value of the volume.

The blunders and ineptitudes of the translation are the more to be regretted, as Prince Henry's book is useful as well as entertaining. It appears to give a fair and impartial account of the present state of affairs in Tong-king. The author does not hesitate to speak out when he considers that the French are not going the right way to work there; and he must have had access to sources of information which would either be closed or unfamiliar to English inquirers. Nor are his observations without interest for the geographical student. What he tells us about the various races among whom he travelled—Shans and Kas, Meos and Yaos—about their manners and customs, dress and appearance, is a solid addition to our knowledge of Indo-Chinese ethnology. Besides the vocabularies left out of the English version, he obtained some curious examples of folklore: among other things, a manuscript-book of songs sung by the villagers on the banks of the Nam-u. A summary of one song is given in the text. It relates to the adventures of two maidens who became mothers after eating a fig thrown into the river by a divine lover who had seen them while they were bathing. The late Terrien de Lacouperie quotes a tradition in which a floating bamboo takes the place of the fig. The description of the head-dress worn by the Yaos is suggestive. The hair, we are told, is hardened with wax and then gathered into a small peak, upon which is placed an erection resembling two horns. Other travellers have found this horn-shaped head-dress amongst the Lolos, and this is not all. Some of the tribes in Kafiristan wear the horn head-dress, as also do the Druses of Syria. According to Sir Henry Yule, the Druses say that they originally came from China; and he also suggests that the Crusaders brought the fashion from Syria to Western Europe. In Asia it is certainly an old one, since it is mentioned by one of the Chinese pilgrims as existing among the Yetha in the sixth century A.D.

There is still a fair chance that the French may succeed in making Tong-king a profitable possession. Prince Henry, however, is convinced that the main obstacle to progress is the indifferent character of the administration. "It is incumbent," he writes, "that Tong-king should not be regarded as a place for shooting rubbish and providing posts for all the protégés of influential personages." M. Chailley-Bert lays special stress on the fact that the English in Burma and in India generally have avoided this error.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

NEW NOVELS.

The Old, Old Story. By Rosa N. Carey. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

At Market Value. By Grant Allen. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A New Note. In 2 vols. (Hutchinson.)

The Face and the Mask. By Robert Barr. (Hutchinson.)

The Green Carnation. "Pioneer Series." (Heinemann.)

Both Worlds Barred. By Sydney Kean. (Fisher Unwin.)

An Artist's Fate. By Cecil Clarke. (Elliot Stock.)

Hollyberry Janet. By Maggie Symington. (Innes.)

The Lone House. By Amelia E. Barr. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Conscience Makes the Martyr. By S. M. Crawley Boevey. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

THE "old, old story" tells itself very comfortably, and very much in the old-time and long-approved manner, through the medium of Miss Carey. Of her two pairs of lovers, one is of mild and secondary interest; and things might have gone as smoothly with the other pair had fate not made them hero and heroine, and thus obliged them to accept their love affairs twisted. The undoing of this twisting the reader must patiently follow; and, in spite of long yarns about uninteresting persons, and of some attempt to "wring his bosom" over most trifling incidents, at the end he will quite sincerely rejoice that all goes well. This he must do, because Miss Carey is herself wholly wrapped up in her people, whom she makes tolerably human, though of a sort generally met with between the covers of a novel. There are moments, especially when Aunt Clemency walks the stage, when you would fain exclaim, "This is admirable!"—just as at other moments you are forced to groan, "This is twaddle." But, full of quiet, homely, honest feeling, with not a hint of the world of sin and suffering all around, The Old, Old Story is a book to be read by the young girl without harm and by the older reader without boredom. One thing must be mentioned as surprising in so practised a hand. In the first volume you meet a certain model husband. It is not too much to say that he is a paragon; but by and by you find, without warning, that his name is changed. Perhaps it is as a tribute to his paragonship that his wife accepts the new name without comment or question, and for evermore calls him by it.

At Market Value is one of those pleasantly written stories, with humour, satire, and an easy knowledge of the world for their main ingredients, which Mr. Grant Allen knows so well how to produce. Its chief character is an Earl of Axminster, who finds, to his chagrin, that tribute is everywhere rendered to his rank and title, while not a single creature prizes him for what he is in himself. He is taken at his nominal value instead of at that "market value" which is the test of ordinary men's worth. So he effaces himself, takes another name, and becomes a sailor in the summer and a painter in the winter. Guiltless of the snobbery which marks the counterfeit aristocrat, he frankly acknowledges his calling and is surprised to find that the sailor is not regarded as a gentleman. He does not understand why the gentleman should vanish when the craftsman comes upon the scene. The budding conscience which led him to sink the earl in the sailor afterwards attains an abnormal growth, as fate still forces on him honour and regard not due to himself, but to something outside himself. Such a hero is a difficult being to manage without irritating the reader. Indeed, at one point, where Lord Axminster, alias Arnold Willoughby, is prepared to wreck all his happiness and that of the woman who loves him for a hair-splitting sense of right, one is inclined really to fall out with him. Among many excellent things in the story the portrait of Reggie Hesslegrave stands out. Reggie is a young man "in the city," whose notions of male perfections are based on the officers of the cavalry. He accordingly regulates his expenses and his social conduct by his ideas of what a gentleman "ought" to spend and do, and this on £80 a year—with what his sister makes by painting. At the same time he scolds her severely for not keeping a maid and otherwise conforming to the rule of what a young lady "ought" to spend. There are many such touches of quiet humour and good-natured satire in Mr. Grant Allen's two volumes.

It is an established custom that any "new note" in fiction should appear in green, and this anonymous New Note is faithful to the tradition. Its characters converse almost as much in dashes as in words, and there is much repetition of phrases—faults which lessen as the story goes on; but the note in the book is struck well and with a purpose. The author is apparently a 'prentice hand, yet he or she (probably she) is capable of artistic restraint, that unknown quantity to beginners. It has been done before, of course—the situation of the woman turning from the genuine life's love of a good man and a gentleman to yield at length to the unworthy passion of a man who was neither—but seldom with this delicate insight into shades of feeling and this certain hold of human nature. Hints there are of George Meredith, notably in Victoria Leathley's father and in Aunt Dora. Needless to say, Mr. Meredith would have drawn those particular two better; but with the characters the author has made her own—Victoria, Jerry Annesley, Loevio—she has made a distinct success. The "small, insolent, feminine flutter" of Victoria's eyelids as she turns on the inevitable "other woman" is the touch of a true artist in humanity. Saving the aforesaid most irritating dashes, the style of the book throughout is in that happy mean for fiction: the line between the purely literary and the merely colloquial.

To Mr. Robert Barr's The Face and the Mask one turns with decorous eagerness to see how he comes out of a long story, only to find the very attractive covers of the book filled with various old friends collected from all corners of the earth. But many of them will doubtless be new to most people, and it is only fair to Mr. Barr to say that his tales and sketches are almost as well worth a second reading as a first. The "Tales of Revenge" are not included in the collection: indeed, there is strangely little that is harrowing. Through nearly all the two dozen stories there is a sunny and equable humour that lures the soothed and comfortable reader on. Every now and then a death occurs; but it happens with such calm precision, and the fact is told in so few words, that only an intellect on the alert could perceive that there had been a tragedy at all. "The Great Pegram Mystery," which is a skit on "our mutual and lamented friend Sherlock Holmes," "The Predicament of de Plonville," and "The Sixth Bench," are perhaps in their several ways as good as any of the stories.

The clever audacity of The Green Carnation undoubtedly takes the reader by storm, revolted though he must needs be by the constant, entirely unnecessary, and often spiteful allusions to various worthy persons who are each striving to amuse or instruct the world in his or her own way. From the first instant when Lord Reggie admires himself in his glass before going out to dinner, and looks "like some angel in a church window designed by Burne Jones, some angel a little blasé from the injudicious conduct of its life"—from that instant to the last, when he drives away with Esmé Amaranth to take up again "his marvellous scarlet life in London"—the brilliant narrative runs on, wearisomely brilliant sometimes, but never ceasing to be smart, cutting, and absurd. You enjoy it, you cannot lay the book down; but when at last you close it, you ask yourself: To what end? It is but a caricature of an affectation in life and literature, of an abnormality, a worship of abstract and "scarlet" sin, which must of its very nature pass away with the personality that first flaunted it before a wondering, half-attracted, half-revolted world. Was this worth caricaturing? Only the cleverness of the performance saves the answer from being emphatically—"No."

If the author of Both Worlds Barred had introduced fewer personages into his book, and had centred the interest a little more strongly on his hero and heroine, it would have been a story more at one with itself. As it is, the heroine is merely seen and is no more than a sketch. Of the hero we learn more, and one feels an irresistible sympathy with Fred Dlear in the troubled workings of his mind and under the temporal ills that beset him. Excellent glimpses there are, too, of various phases of Scotch character and manners, which none but a Scot could have drawn. That Mr. Kean is a Scot a little pardonable confusion of "would" and "should" very plainly shows. Was it quite necessary, one must ask, that Fred Dlear, after all his struggles and ups and downs, should find no satisfaction on earth at last?

One of the chief features of An Artist's Fate is the combining in one tale of two stories that have nothing to do with each other. The artist in one of them might have fallen in love with the girl in the other, though he didn't. But that girl's story involves some pleasant descriptions of the Danes, and their land and ways, so it is not wholly amiss. It should be said, too, that the writer of the book is genuinely interested in both sets of his people, which is a step towards making a reader interested. His local colour is, perhaps, a little consciously laid on. One of his characters ingeniously remarks: "It would take a cleverer Swedish girl than I am," &c. Now would Mr. Clarke say: "It would take a cleverer Englishman than I am to do so and so"?

Miss Symington's Hollyberry Janet is an excellent addition to a charming series. Without any preaching or thrusting of morals down throats, the children who read it will learn many good lessons and have much right feeling instilled into them, nor will they dream that they are doing more than enjoying an interesting story. There is nothing, of course, that children and Alice in Wonderland's White Queen cannot believe; but the average "grown-up" is a little surprised at a young woman of ten who owns to having read The Wandering Jew, Monte Cristo, the Life of Peter the Great, Wallenstein, Macaulay's Essays, Aurora Floyd, and Faust during the last month, and who also protests that she "makes a practice of never reading anything published by the Religious Tract Society!"

Miss Barr's story, The Lone House, is a study of the character of a strong and deeply religious Scotchman. Spiritual pride in his own rightness and uprightness is his virtue and his vice. Terrible disgrace and trials fall upon him, and Miss Barr's delineation of their effect is excellent. To English readers there may be a strangeness in the uncompromising earnestness with which some Scotch people regard the small details of religious life, but with this earnestness there are mixed flashes of humour that only the Scotch character can produce.

Conscience makes the Martyr is a story of efforts to be noble, of humble but true love, of equally humble and equally true villainy, with the usual ingredients of ungrammatical conversation, beer, and rustic stupidity and wisdom. Its sensationalism is of a healthy kind; and it contains fairly natural portraits of folk, good, bad and indifferent, among what we are pleased to call the lower classes.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME BIBLIOGRAPHICAL WORKS.

Dated Book-Plates. By Walter Hamilton. Part I. (A. & C. Black.) Mr. Walter Hamilton is chairman of the Ex Libris Society, and we fancy that the present work is mostly reprinted from that Society's Journal. It by no means deals only with its special matter of dated book-plates; for by far the greater portion of Part I. consists of a treatise on the origin and development of ex libris. Here may be found, written in a gossiping style but with abundant knowledge, little essays on such subjects as—French and German ex libris; styles of English book-plates; notes on armorial bearings; hints on selecting a book-plate; an apology for collecting, &c. This introductory treatise fills no less than eighty-five pages, and is illustrated with numerous full-page plates and engravings in the text. Then follows a table of all book-plates dated before 1700. As is well-known, all the earliest book-plates are of German origin. For the whole of the sixteenth century, England can only show two dated examples: those of Sir Nicholas Bacon, the father of Francis (1574), and of Sir Thomas Tresham (1585). There are, however, also included here the label (dated 1589) on the books given by Bishop Andrewes—not Andrews—to the library of Pembroke College, Cambridge; and a spurious plate issued by Spiers of Oxford about the middle of the present century with the date 1590! Two future Parts will catalogue dated book-plates of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, when English examples will naturally occupy a more prominent place.

THE University of Leyden has undertaken the pious task of issuing a bibliographical catalogue of all the works of its professors, from the date of its foundation, to be compiled by Mr. Louis D. Petit, the university librarian, and to be published by Mr. S. C. Van Doesburgh. The mode of publication is in five volumes, each consisting of four or five parts, and will extend over about six years. The first part, which is now before us, is devoted to the professors of the theological faculty, for the period between 1575 and 1619. The most familiar names are those of Francis Junius, Jacob Arminius, and G. J. Vossius. The compiler has been careful to state where a copy of every work mentioned is to be found, which is sometimes in London, Oxford, or Cambridge. The book is printed on hand-made paper, in a form that recalls the "Anecdota Oxoniensia" series. We could have wished that the introduction had been written in Latin!

WE ought to have noticed before this two very similar Catalogues of Academical Dissertations which we received a good while ago from Germany. One is a second edition of Prof. Varnhagen's well-known catalogue, continued from 1877 to 1893, by Dr. J. Martin, of the Royal Gymnasium at Erlangen. It omits Varnhagen's introductory essays on the history and importance of "program-literature"; but otherwise it follows the original plan. It is divided into four parts, with numerous subdivisions; (1) general philology and literature, including writing and folk-lore; (2) Romance philology and literature; (3) English; and (4) pedagogy and cognate subjects. As a sample of the results, we may mention that nine pages are devoted to Shakspeare, while Corneille and Molière each have nearly three, but Dante only two. The other work is more in the nature of a sale catalogue, representing the extraordinary extent of the collections of this kind formed by Gustav Fock of Leipzig. It is confined to classical philology, in which department of learning alone it enumerates no less than 18,300 dissertations. It is divided likewise into four parts, each with a separate pagination and numbering of the lots: (1) Greek; (2) Latin; (3) miscellaneous, including epigraphy, palaeography, dialects, music, &c.; and (4) history and archaeology. Here, again, it is enough to record that Homer has 800 entries, and Cicero more than 500. At the present time, when academical dissertations are so freely interchanged, the utility of such catalogues as these cannot be overestimated.

MR. LEO S. OLSCHKI, of Venice, has issued a second catalogue of the Incunabula he has for sale, the lots being numbered on continuously (567-645) from his former catalogue, which was noticed at the time in the ACADEMY. There are appended about forty of the choicest Aldines. As we said before, though this purports to be only a sale catalogue, the rarity of the books and the pains that have been expended upon their identification raise it to the rank of a valuable contribution to bibliography. In his preface Mr. Olschki quotes with natural pride the praise bestowed upon his former catalogue of Incunabula by Mr. W. A. Copinger; nor is he ashamed to reprint the list of minor errors which Mr. Copinger's skilled eye detected. To the present catalogue he has added illustrations, consisting of photographic facsimiles of title-pages, &c. We may specially mention: Dante's Divina Commedia, with the commentary of Landino (Venice, 1491), with woodcuts and initial letters; Petrarch's Sonnets, &c. (Venice, 1497), also with woodcuts; The Revelations of Saint Bridget (Nuremberg, 1500), with seventeen engravings by Albert Dürer; Laurentius Valla's Latin translation of Herodotus (Venice, 1494), the title-page of which has a magnificent bordering in black and white; and the Aldine Theocritus (Venice, 1495), with initial letters and vignettes. Mr. Olschki promises more catalogues of the same sort.

THE latest of the Linguistic Bibliographies, compiled by Mr. James C. Pilling for the Bureau of Ethnology in connexion with the Smithsonian Institution, deals with the languages of the Wakashan family, spoken by scattered tribes on the coast of British Columbia. The name seems to be due to Captain Cook, who heard some Indians in Nootka Sound use the word waukas = good, and thought that it was their tribal appellation. This bibliography has been compiled with the same exhaustive industry and minute accuracy as its predecessors; but it contains less of general interest. We are given facsimiles of two title-pages: (1) of a book describing the sufferings of an English sailor, John Jewitt, who was kept captive for nearly three years by the savages of Nootka Sound in the first decade of the present century; and (2) of a translation of Matthew's Gospel into Qa-gutl or Kwagiutl, made by the Rev. A. J. Hall, of the Church Missionary Society, in 1882.

MR. C. G. LUZAC, the publisher, has compiled a second Bibliographical List of English Books on Africa and the East, and dedicated it to Dr. Reinhold Rost. As the former covered the period between the eighth and ninth Oriental Congresses, so the present one is carried down to the recent meeting at Geneva. If these two years have not been marked by any oriental publications of the first importance—at least, in England—they have certainly been prolific in popular works, all of which are duly recorded here. To take one of the most trivial, we believe that May Edwood's story of Anglo-Indian life was entitled The Story of a Spin, and not "Spur" as here printed. Some objections might be urged against Mr. Luzac's principle of classification, which is according to subjects, and also to his practice. Some books refuse altogether to be classed with any others, and are left under the author's name. Ancient Egypt and Hieroglyphics ought not to be two subdivisions; and if they are, Prof. Mahaffy's edition of the Petrie Papyri should come under the first, and not under the second. But, on the whole, this fault is cured by means of cross-references, and an author's index—which should not, by the way, be called an "index of private names." A useful feature is the appending of the published prices; but we should have been glad to see the publishers' names as well.

MESSRS. MATTHEWS & BROOKE, of Bradford, have begun the issue of a sale catalogue of modern second-hand books, which, judging from the first instalment (A—C), is rather more carefully compiled and classified than such productions usually are. We notice a set of Audubon's works on American ornithology.

NOTES AND NEWS.

AN English translation of the text of the Old Syriac Gospels, as contained in the Sinai Codex, has been prepared by Mrs. S. S. Lewis, and will shortly be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. Mrs. Lewis has made the Authorised Version the basis for her choice of English phrases, so as to bring out more clearly the points of resemblance between the Sinai Codex and the text of the Revised Version, to which references are given on the margin, as also to Cureton's text, and to that of the Codex Bezae, as a representative of the Old Latin. The volume will be also furnished with an appendix, giving a list of words and phrases in the Textus Receptus which have no equivalent in the Sinai text, of which conciseness is a leading characteristic. This, it is hoped, will make the volume more useful to Greek scholars unacquainted with Syriac.

ALL those who read a series of papers on wild animals in confinement, which have been appearing from time to time in the Spectator—especially those describing the results of experiments with music, entitled "Orpheus at the Zoo"—will be glad to hear that the author, Mr. C. J. Cornish, has collected them into a volume, together with some unpublished chapters on such attractive subjects as "The World from the Animals' Point of View" and "Criminal Animals." The book will be published next week by Messrs. Seeley & Co., under the title of Life at the Zoo, illustrated with reproductions of instantaneous photographs by Mr. Gambier Bolton, and of Japanese pictures.

A MEMOIR of the author of "East Lynne" has been written by her son, Mr. Charles W. Wood, who succeeded her in the editorship of the Argosy. It will be published by Messrs. Bentley, with photogravures and other illustrations.

THE sixth edition of Mr. Herbert Spencer's Data of Ethics in its original form having been exhausted, the author has decided to discontinue the dearer edition of the work, and to issue a cheap edition, which will be ready early next week.

MR. THOMAS O'FLANNAOILE, the well-known Celtic scholar and lecturer in Irish to the London Irish Literary Society, is engaged on a volume to be called For the Tongue of the Gael. It will be a collection of essays, literary and philological, on Irish-Gaelic subjects. Several of them appeared originally in London and Dublin journals, and were highly spoken of; but most of them will be new. These will include a biographical and critical sketch of "Michael O'Clery, Chief of the Four Masters," besides essays on "Mediaeval Irish Tales," "Finn and the Solar Myth Theory," "Irish Surnames," "Irish Dictionaries," "Dialects of Irish," &c. The book will be brought out by a London firm, and may be expected early in December.

UNDER the title of Days of a Soldier's Life, Messrs. Chapman & Hall will shortly publish a volume by General Sir C. P. Beauchamp Walker, made up mainly from his diaries and letters written during active service in the Crimean, Chinese, Austro-Prussian, and Franco-German Wars. The book will be illustrated with a portrait.

MR. S. S. THORBURN, of the Bengal Civil Service—who wrote some years ago an admirable account of the Punjab frontier district of Bannu—has a new book in the press, on a wider frontier question. It will be entitled Asiatic Neighbours, and will be published by Messrs. Blackwood & Sons, in one volume, illustrated with four maps.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce for early publication Rhymes of Rajputana, by Colonel G. H. Trevor, who at present holds the same post of Governor-General's Agent in Rajputana which formerly afforded inspiration to Sir Alfred Lyall.

MR. E. T. DILLON—a pupil of Prof. Bickell, of Vienna—will publish shortly, through Messrs. Isbister, a volume of Studies on the Books of Job and Ecclesiastes, some anticipations of which have already appeared in the Contemporary Review. The book is to be called "The Sceptics of the Old Testament."

MR. FISHER UNWIN has ready for immediate issue a short sketch of Irish history, by Mr. Bouverie-Pusey, of Pusey House, Berkshire, who has interested himself for thirty years in Celtic questions as a member of the Anthropological Institute.

THE next volume to appear in the "Story of the Nations" series will be The Crusades; or, the Story of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem, written conjointly by two representatives of the young Oxford school of historians—Mr. T. A. Archer and Mr. C. L. Kingsford.

EDNA LYALL'S new novel, Doreen: the Story of a Singer, will be published by Messrs. Longmans, in a single volume, at the end of next week.

EARLY in November, the four "Pseudonyms" contributed by John Oliver Hobbes to Mr. Fisher Unwin's popular library will appear in one volume, with the author's latest revisions, and a portrait by Mr. Walter Spindler.

MR. MAX PEMBERTON'S new story of adventure, The Sea Wolves, will be published this week by Messrs. Cassell & Co., with full-page illustrations.

MESSRS. WELLS, GARDNER, DARTON & Co. will publish immediately a pictorial edition of Grimm's Fairy Stories, containing over 150 drawings and decorative designs by Mr. Gordon Browne, whose father, the famous "Phiz," illustrated the same work many years ago. The Rev. S. Baring-Gould has written an introduction to the present volume.

MESSRS. HACHETTE & CIE. will shortly publish an edition of Schiller's Der Geisterseher, by the Rev. Dr. C. Merk. This is the third time that the novel has been edited for the use of English schools. In the present instance, the text has been considerably abridged; and the introduction contains an inquiry into the various sources of which Schiller made use.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces the following volumes of verse for immediate publication: Seven Love Songs, by Ellis Walton; Themes and Variations, by Mrs. Wilson Glenny; The Islet o'er the Sea, by H. H.; and Sea Spray, by Jeannie Bednall.

MR. STOFFORD BROOKE'S Tennyson: his Art and Relation to Modern Life, has already reached its fourth thousand, in a not very cheap form.

THE first number of the Realm, "a comprehensive weekly review of politics, society, and the arts," is announced to appear on Friday, November 15, under the joint editorship of Lady Colin Campbell and Mr. Earl Hodgson. Each number will contain a complete story; and it is proposed that an interview with some personage on a subject of the day, and a signed article by some authority, shall appear in alternate weeks. We are also told that the leading articles are to be "opinionated."

THE forthcoming number of the North American Review (London: Heinemann) will contain the following articles: "The Fight of the Yalu River," by the Secretary of the United States Navy; "The War in the Orient," by the Japanese Minister; "Possibilities of an Anglo-American Union," by Captain Mahan and Lord Charles Beresford; and "French and Anglo-Saxon Immorality," by Max O'Rell.

THE annual session of the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution will be opened on Wednesday next with an address by Mr. Hall Caine, who has chosen for his subject "Moral Responsibility in the Novel and the Drama." Among the other arrangements are: "Climbing in the Himalayas," by Mr. W. Martin Conway; "Lakes and Lochs," by Dr. H. R. Mill; and "Life and Scenery in Bosnia and Herzegovina," by Dr. R. Munro—all with lime-light illustrations.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

SIR HENRY ACLAND has intimated his intention of resigning shortly the regius professorship of medicine at Oxford, to which he was appointed so long ago as 1853, having previously been for thirteen years Lee's reader in anatomy.

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday, it will be proposed to confer the degree of M.A., by decree, upon Mr. Robert Warrington, the new Sibthorpean professor of rural economy.

MR. F. DARWIN, reader in botany at Cambridge, has been appointed deputy to Prof. Babington for a second year.

MR. G. F. STOUT, of St. John's, the editor of Mind, has been appointed university lecturer in moral science at Cambridge for a term of three years.

SEÑOR MOREL FATIO has been appointed Taylorian Lecturer at Oxford for this year. The subject of his lecture, to be delivered on November 21, will be "Don Quixote regarded as a Reflection of Contemporary Life and Manners."

THERE are two candidates for the curatorship of the Bodleian Library, vacant by the death of Mr. Mowat: Prof. D. S. Margoliouth, and the Rev. H. A. Wilson. The election will take place in Congregation next Thursday.

THE Rolleston memorial prize, awarded every alternate year for original research in biology, has been divided between Mr. Marcens S. Pembrey, of Christ Church, and Mr. Edwin S. Goodrich, of Merton.

MR. H. H. TURNER, the new Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, proposes to deliver a lecture, illustrated with lantern slides, on Thursday next, upon "The Transit of Mercury."

MR. ARTHUR J. EVANS, keeper of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, announces a course of lectures upon his discovery of a pre-Phoenician system of writing in Crete and the Peloponnese, upon which he read a paper at the recent meeting of the British Association. The first lecture, entitled "Cretan Photographs," was to be delivered on Friday of this week.

ON the invitation of Prof. Margoliouth, Mrs. S. S. Lewis will deliver a lecture at Oxford on Tuesday next, illustrated with lantern slides, under the title of "Through the Desert to the Library on Mount Sinai."

IN connexion with the teachers' training syndicate at Cambridge, a course of twelve lectures, on "The Theory of Education," is being delivered this term by Mr. W. E. Johnson, of King's College.

A REPORT of the Council of the Senate, on degrees for advanced study and research, is printed in the Cambridge University Reporter. It recommends the appointment of a syndicate on the subject, with power to confer with Oxford and other universities, and also to consult the professors and heads of departments at Cambridge. In an appendix are printed: (1) the resolutions adopted at Oxford last term; (2) the draft ordinances made by the Scottish Universities Commission; and (3) a letter from the Minister of Education at Ontario, complaining that Canadian students are deterred from pursuing a post-graduate course at Oxford or Cambridge by the necessity of a preliminary examination. Attention is also called to the proposals in the report of the London University Commissioners, and to the scheme for post-graduate studies already in operation at Harvard.

A LETTER from the Curators of the University Chest is published in the Oxford University Gazette, calling attention to the present state of the corporate finances, and suggesting that any schemes of new expenditure should be postponed. A table of receipts and payments for the last thirteen years is given, from which it appears that an average surplus of £2000 was turned into a deficit in 1893. The gross income has been fairly maintained, a decrease in rents being compensated by an increase in dues and fees. More fortunate than Cambridge, Oxford still derives a handsome revenue from its corporate estates; but the net income from this source has fallen from £10,375 to £6038, despite the development of a building estate at Bexley, in Kent. The degree fees fluctuate in an unaccountable way; but the matriculations show a tendency to increase, the minimum having been 749 in 1885, and the maximum 813 in 1893. The Clarendon Press can be relied upon for an annual profit of at least £5000. As to the expenditure, the chief increase is shown under institutions and buildings, which have risen from £10,046 to £12,926, and in interest and sinking funds, which have risen from £4193 to £5882. It is against any further augmentation on these two accounts that the appeal is specially directed.

FROM the published list of matriculations at Cambridge, it would appear that about eleven are natives of India, including a fair proportion of Mahomedans. There are also two Japanese names.

MR. W. R. SORLEY, of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been elected to the vacant chair of moral philosophy at Aberdeen.

THE Royal University of Ireland has conferred the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Mr. William John Fitzpatrick, author of several historical works relating to the Union.

MR. J. J. FINDLAY has been appointed by the College of Preceptors to the principalship of their Day Training College for Teachers in Secondary Schools, to be opened next year. Mr. Findlay studied educational theory and method at Jena under Prof. Rein, and took his doctor's degree at Leipzig with a thesis on theory of education.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

IN MEMORIAM: PROF. JOHN NICHOL.

(Obit October 11, 1894.)

O FIERY heart, now still for evermore!
O keen and active brain now lulled to rest!
Too fiercely burned life's fire within thy breast,
Too large thy spirit for the flesh it bore.
O well-loved voice, that thrilled all to the core,
Who heard its wondrous tones, so rich and sweet,
Now hushed in death! Ah! we shall never meet Those flashing eyes, through which there seemed to pour

The ever-changing passions of the mind.
Inspiring Teacher of the poet's art,
Thyself a poet; critic, who couldst see—
What lesser men thro' blindness fail to find—
The thoughts that dwell within the poet's heart,
The truths that rule the world and make us free.

C. M. A.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of Mind is a particularly good one. Psychology is given a prominent place, yet the wider field of philosophy is not lost sight of. The most remarkable article is the second instalment of a study of "Assimilation and Association" by Dr. James Ward. Readers who know this writer's views only through the medium of his article, "Psychology," in the last edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, will be surprised to find how full a knowledge he possesses of biology, and especially of the physiology and pathology of the nervous system, and how well he understands how to apply this to psychological questions. The essayist deals with assimilation, or the recognition of sensations, in an original and instructive fashion. He is quite certain that there is a distinct psychical function answering to these terms, and opposes Lehmann and others, who would say that there is nothing but sensation and the revival of ideas by these through contiguous association. He is as clear as Dr. Bain that, before the hearing of a person's name can call up the image of that person, the name must be assimilated, identified, or, as he is disposed to say, "appereceived." Only he will not allow that this is a case of a sensation calling up the image of a past sensation which fuses with it. He rather follows Höfding, who describes recognition as experiencing a sensation which has as its mark or concomitant familiarity (Bekanntheit). He seeks to establish his position by a very careful investigation of the pathological phenomena of psychical blindness. These, he contends, go to show that sensations, recognitions of sensations, images proper, and general images, are different psychical processes, connected with distinct central nervous tracts or seats. It seems plain that, if a woman can mentally picture a common object, as a fork, so as to give a fair description of it, and yet not recognise it when it is shown her, recognition does not depend on imaging the thing as seen before. We know, too, that in the development of mind recognition precedes imagination: we may be able to recognise faces and yet unable to picture them. Dr. Ward's article is one of the most thorough bits of psychological work that we have seen for some time; and we congratulate him on what may perhaps, in view of the account here taken of neurological facts, be regarded as a new departure in psychological investigations. Its significance lies in the fact that it moves away from the old-fashioned standpoint from which mind was regarded, as a thing having contents, to the biological standpoint, from which it is seen to be a complex of functional activities. Another good psychological study in this number is "An Analysis of Attention," by A. F. Shand. It aims at establishing a process of attention, of which he maintains (in opposition to Ward) we are immediately conscious, and at criticising the common view that attention increases the intensity and the clearness of sensations. So far as this is effected, it is due to motor adjustments of the sense-organ, and not to attention. Attention does not make our sensations more intense or clear, but gives us a fuller and clearer awareness of such intensity and clearness as they actually have. Attention seems thus to be identified with Herbert's apperception. There is also a curious "Dialogue on Time and Common Sense," from the pen of Prof. Sidgwick, in which, with a judicious admixture of "Dichtung" with "Wahrheit," he reports, in an entertaining yet suggestive way, a conversation he recently had with a Russian professor of philosophy. The remaining articles are—a careful attempt to define the boundaries and the relations of psychology, epistemology, and ontology, by S. H. Mellone; and a scholarly essay on the philosophy of Lord Herbert of Cherbury, by W. R. Sorley.

THE September number of the Psychological Review shows that the American Universities are busy in the new field of experimental psychology. Prof. Münsterberg, who is at present at Harvard, sends a group of studies from the psychological laboratory of that college; and Prof. Armstrong, of the Wesleyan University, contributes a report of some investigations, on the plan devised by Mr. F. Galton, into the mental imagery of certain American students. The impression made by this number is that America is busy just now collecting psychological data, and is not disposed to embark on theoretical excursions.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUN, F. Bibliographische Seltenheiten der Trublerliteratur. Leipzig: Harrassowitz. 1 M. 50 Pf.
ALGOVER, J. Antelm Feuerbach. Sein Leben u. seine Kunst. Bamberg: Buchner. 8 M.
BIBLIOTHEK älterer deutscher Übersetzungen. Hrg. v. A. Sauer. 1. Bd. Weimar: Felber. 8 M.
BLUM, H. Fürst Bismarck u. seine Zeit. 2. Bd. 1853–1863. München: Beck. 5 M.
BORDEAUX, H. La Vie et l'Art. Ames modernes. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
BAUINIA, J. W. Faust vor Goethe. I. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M. 80 Pf.
CAGNAT, R., et H. SALADIN. Voyage en Tunisie. Paris: Hachette. 4 fr.
FOURRAU, F. Rapport sur ma mission au Sahara et chez les Touareg-Adzger, Oct. 1893–Mars 1894. Paris: Chailamel. 10 fr.
FRANCE, la, artistique et monumentale. T. V. Paris: Lib. Illustrée. 25 fr.
FRIEDRICH, J. Johann Adam Möhler, der Symboliker. München: Beck. 2 M.
LÜCKE, H. Die königl. Gemäldegalerie zu Dresden. I. Lfg. München: Haufstaengl. 12 M.

- MODES féminines, un siècle de (1794–1894). Paris: Charpentier. 8 fr. 50 c.
MÜLLER-FAUSTRICH, C. Die Ritter- u. Bambergermanen. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M. 60 Pf.
PANZER, F. Lohengrinstudien. Halle: Niemeyer. 1 M. 60 Pf.
PEISER, K. Johann Adam Hiller. Ein Beitrag zur Musikgeschichte d. 18. Jahrh. Leipzig: Hug. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SCHÖNBACH, A. E. Ueb. Hartmann v. Aue. Drei Bücher Untersuchungen. Graz: Leuschner. 12 M.
WEISSERFELS, R. Goethe im Sturm u. Drang. 1. Bd. Halle: Niemeyer. 10 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BIBLIA veteris testamenti aethiopica. Ed. A. Dillmann. T. V. Berlin: Asher. 20 M.
BURL, F. Studien zur Topographie d. nördlichen Ostjordanlandes. Leipzig: Deichert. 1 M.
KLOSTERMANN, E. Analecta zur Septuaginta, Hexapla u. Patristik. Leipzig: Deichert. 3 M.
OLDENBERG, H. Die Religion des Veda. Berlin: Besser. 11 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ADLER, K. Zur Entwicklungslehre u. Dogmatik d. Gesellschaftsrechts. Berlin: Heymann. 4 M.
ALBUM academiae Vitebergensis ab a. Ch. MDII usque ad a. MDCLII. Vol. II. Halle: Niemeyer. 21 M.
BERGER, A. E. Die Kulturaufgaben der Reformation. Einleitung in e. Lutherbiographie. Berlin: Hofmann. 5 M.
BOCQUET, L. Le Célibat dans l'Antiquité, envisagé au point de vue civil. 5 fr. Le Célibat ecclésiastique jusqu'au Concile de Trente. 6 fr. Paris: Giard.
BÖHMER, J. F. Regesta imperii. V. 1198–1172. Hrg. v. J. Ficker u. E. Winkelmann. 8. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 3 M. 60 Pf.
BOQUET, L. Lettres du Maréchal, 1830–1858. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 5 fr.
GEFFERT, H. Zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung vor Gratian. Leipzig: Veit. 2 M. 50 Pf.
GESCHICHTSBLÄTTER, hantsche. Jahrg. 1893. Leipzig: Duncker. 4 M. 60 Pf.
HECK, Ph. Die altfränkische Gerichtsverfassung. Weimar: Böhlau. 12 M.
JHERING, R. v. Entwicklungsgeschichte d. römischen Rechts. Aus dem Nachlass hrg. Leipzig: Duncker. 3 M.
JUBAINVILLE, H. d'Arbois de. Etudes sur le Droit celtique. T. I. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
JUNG, J. Fasten der Prov. Dacien. Innsbruck: Wagner. 4 M. 80 Pf.
LEHMANN, M. Friedrich der Grosse n. der Ursprung des 7-jährigen Krieges. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M. 80 Pf.
PASQUIER, Mémoires du Chancelier, p. le Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier. 2^e Partie. Restauration. T. 5. Paris: Plon. 8 fr.
PISCHKE, R. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der deutschen Zigeuner. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M.
PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 59. Bd. Politische Correspondenz d. Kurfürsten Albrecht Achilles. Hrg. v. F. Priebebach. 1. Bd. 1470–1474. Leipzig: Hirzel. 25 M.
REGESTA Episcoporum Constantiensium. 2. Bd. 1. Lfg. 1293–1314. Bearb. v. A. Cartellieri. Innsbruck: Wagner. 4 M.
REGESTEN der Markgrafen v. Baden u. Hachberg 1050–1515. Bearb. v. R. Fester. 4. u. 5. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 4 M.
STERN, A. Geschichte Europas seit den Verträgen v. 1815 bis zum Frankfurter Frieden v. 1871. 1. Bd. Berlin: Besser. 10 M.
URKUNDENBUCH, Rappoltsteinsches, 759–1500. 3. Bd. 1409–1442. Colmar: Ba. th. 32 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BEITSÄGE zur Anthropologie, Ethnologie u. Urgeschichte v. Tirol. Innsbruck: Wagner. 8 M.
CREDDNER, H. Die Stegocephalen u. Saurier aus dem Rothliegenden d. Plauen'schen Grundes bei Dresden. Berlin: Friedländer. 40 M.
DRUSSEN, P. Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie m. besond. Berücksicht. der Religionen. 1. Bd. 1. Abth. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 7 M.
MARTINAK, E. Die Logik John Locke's, zusammengestellt u. untersucht. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M.
SCHILLING, C. Wilhelm Olbers, sein Leben u. seine Werke. 1. Bd. Berlin: Springer. 16 M.
SCHMELTZ, J. D. E. Schnecken u. Muscheln im Leben der Völker Indonesiens u. Ozeaniens. Leiden: Brill. 1 M. 50 Pf.
SUDROFF, K. Versuch e. Kritik der Echtheit der Paracelsischen Schriften. 1. Thl. Berlin: Reimer. 18 M.
TADE, G. La Logique sociale. Paris: Alcan. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BOLTZ, A. Der Apollonmythus, die Engel u. ihre Verehrer. Darmstadt: Brill. 1 M. 20 Pf.
COOK, A. S. Glossary of the old Northumbrian Gospels. Halle: Niemeyer. 10 M.
HOLT, G. Beiträge zur deutschen Altertumskunde. 1. Hft. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M.
JERANJAQUET, J. Recherches sur l'origine de la conjonction "que" et des formes romanes équivalentes. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 40 Pf.
LANG, H. R. Das Liederbuch des Königs Denis v. Portugal. Halle: Niemeyer. 8 M.
NOBEN, A. Altschwedisches Lesebuch. Halle: Niemeyer. 4 M. 80 Pf.
SCHMIDT, B. Der Vocalismus der Siegerländer Mundart. Ein Beitrag zur fränk. Dialektforschung. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M. 60 Pf.
SCHOLIA antiqua in Q. Horatium Flaccum recensuerunt A. Holder et O. Keller. Vol. I. Innsbruck: Wagner. 20 M.
SOCIN, A. u. H. STUMME. Der arabisches Dialekt der Howara des Wad Sus in Marokko. Leipzig: Hirzel. 8 M.
WEISSBACH, F. H. Neue Beiträge zur Kunde der eussischen Inschriften. Leipzig: Hirzel. 3 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"FORTUNA MAIOR."

Cambridge: Oct. 27, 1894.

In his Troilus (iii. 1420) Chaucer mentions the rising in the east of Fortuna Maior. This phrase is explained by Gawain Douglas, in a prose note upon his translation of Vergil, Aen. i. 223, as meaning the planet Jupiter: an explanation which I have adopted in my note on the passage, as I had no suspicion that it was wrong.

But it is certainly incorrect. Fortuna Maior does not refer to a planet or even to a single star, but to a certain cluster of stars. Mr. A. J. Butler kindly drew my attention to the corresponding passage in Dante (Purg. xix. 4); for it is clear that this is the particular passage which Chaucer imitates, as was long ago noted by Cary. Hence the question becomes, What does Fortuna Maior mean in Dante?

This has been, to a great degree, explained by the commentators; but they have not quite got to the bottom of the matter. They rightly say that Fortuna Maior is a figure in geomancy, and that Dante refers to a cluster of stars (situate in Aquarius and Pisces) which resembles this figure. This is all very true, but it is not sufficiently explicit. I longed to know more.

The sixteen geomantic figures are given by Cornelius Agrippa. Three of them are named Rubeus, Puella, and Puer. My notes on the Knights Tale (in vol. v.) will show Chaucer's use of these.

Two more of the figures are named, respectively, Fortuna Maior and Fortuna Minor. They present the appearance of groups of six dots or stars, arranged in a particular manner. Imagine the four of diamonds placed just above the two of the same suit, and you have a grouping of diamonds (or dots, or stars) which is called Fortuna Maior. Imagine the four of diamonds placed just below the two, and you have the group called Fortuna Minor.

The next step was to find a similar group in the sky. We are told that Fortuna Maior was to be found in the end of Aquarius and the beginning of Pisces in the time of Dante. Whether this refers to the constellation Aquarius or to the sign Aquarius, or (in some degree) to both, we are not informed. However, in such cases, we know that the reference is, primarily, to the signs.

Having got so far, I naturally desired to verify the result, wishing to see the cluster in the sky for myself. Accordingly, I put the question to our Cambridge astronomer, Sir Robert Ball, expressing it as clearly as I knew how.

From him I received a most kind and satisfactory answer. There are six rather bright stars, four of which form an irregular square, while two others, rather close together, form a sort of tail to it. They are clearly shown in Plate 63 of Ball's Atlas of Astronomy, and their names are as follows: the two at the "top" are θ Pegasi and α Aquarii; next come π Aquarii and γ Aquarii, whilst the tail is formed by ζ Aquarii and η Aquarii. "The lower group of four— π , γ , ζ , and η —is one of the most familiar asterisms," are Sir Robert's words.

I am bound to add that the figure is rather lop-sided and irregular; but it seems sufficient, and is clearly the one intended, some of the stars being in the sign of Pisces.

All that remained, before I could be quite satisfied, was to see these stars in the sky. Several nights have been cloudy, but last night (October 22) was beautifully clear, and I soon found them. One has only to look for the bright square formed by α Andromedae and α , β , and γ Pegasi, and to be guided by these to the six stars, by help of a star-map; and now that I have seen Fortuna Maior for myself, I am satisfied that this is the group to which Dante refers. It is a pity that θ Pegasi is a little remote from its geomantic place, but it cannot be helped.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE SEPTUAGINT VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

Athenaeum Club: Oct. 27, 1894.

I must again thank Prof. Swete for his very civil letter. I think your readers who are interested in the Septuagint are under some obligations to me for drawing from so good an authority not only an emphatic appreciation of the kind of edition of the Septuagint we all need, but also for the information he has given us as to the scope of the intended new edition, which, it seems, is to include the collation of every available source, Jewish and Christian, and, it is to be hoped, will also include a collation of the Samaritan books, both the Pentateuch and the so-called Samaritan Targum, the Book of Jubilees, &c. We want, if possible, the whole of the accessible materials. Having said this, I must add that, although no one will be more pleased to see a really critical edition of the Septuagint than myself, it was not entirely with that end that I began these letters. It was rather for the purpose of arousing the attention of those in authority to the necessity of reconsidering the attitude they have so persistently taken with regard to the relative merits of the Hebrew and the Greek Bibles. To speak plainly, it was to champion, in my rough, untutored way, the cause of the Septuagint against the Masoretic text. That I have aroused at least one distinguished Hebrew scholar is plain from a breezy letter in your last number from Prof. Cheyne, in which he describes me in an unusual English phrase, which is, perhaps, a translation from the Hebrew. Prof. Cheyne seems to think that I am a kind of poacher in a field that ought to be reserved for a few pundits, and that I have in some way claimed to have made a discovery, which he and his brethren who have championed the Masoretic text will not hear of. I am no discoverer. I have merely tried to revive a very old story supported by some good old scholars. I hold the issue to be one of the highest moment, not merely for superior people, but for humbler folk; and I have done nothing more than exercise a little common sense and judgment upon materials which abound, and do not seem to me to present the stupendous difficulties which Prof. Cheyne speaks of. At all events, he and others must have made light of these difficulties when they so emphatically decided in favour of the Masoretic text being taken as the standard text by the late Revision Committee. Is not the stupendous difficulty that of men who have committed themselves to a wrong conclusion, and find it difficult to realise the fact?

I must remind your readers that it is not the Septuagint which has to justify itself, but the Hebrew text. The Bible appealed to by Christ and the Apostles in support of their teaching, and appealed to by Josephus in making his great apology for his people and their faith, and which was the Rule of Faith of Christendom for fifteen centuries, needs no other warranty until something better is forthcoming. Those who displaced it in the sixteenth century, and those who defend its displacement now by the Hebrew text, ought to make out their case, if they have one. The burden of proof is upon them, unless the Thirty-nine Articles are to be accepted as a proof, and we are to concede the inspiration of Cranmer and his friends in England, and of Luther and Calvin abroad. At the Reformation time, when men substituted

"the Book" for the Church as a Rule of Faith, it was very convenient, no doubt, to turn to the ready-made Bible of the Jews which had been extolled by Jerome, and to lean upon it instead of the old Christian Bible. It had the double advantage of being presumably written in the original language and of having been preserved, apparently without variation, by the checks and machinery of the Masorets, and those who wanted an infallible Book instead of an infallible Church took refuge here. It was easy for them to say that the variants of the Greek text were mere corruptions.

It was a rude shock to all this when, in 1650, Capelli, a Protestant, published his wonderful book, the result of thirty-six years' work—namely, the Critica Sacra—and showed that the variants in the Septuagint were no corruptions, but for the most part represented a different original text. What a curious story it is to read of the efforts made to suppress this book, which was virtually stifled for ten years by the Hebraists of the day! And what curious reading Buxtorf's reply—the Anti-Critica—is, with its extraordinary dogmatic statements! His main argument was, that inasmuch as the Hebrew codices were all alike and showed no variation whatever, therefore it must be concluded that the variants in the Versions are corruptions. This was Buxtorf's citadel. Presently it was stormed by a great English scholar, Kennicott, who showed, by an examination of over 600 MSS. of the Hebrew Bible, and by numerous references from the Talmud, &c., that the position of Buxtorf was in fact ridiculous: that the old MSS. abounded in various readings, and that, if it had not been for the very simple and efficacious method of creating uniformity—due to the Jewish doctors, who altered their MSS. without scruple in accordance with the Massora—the variants would be perhaps as remarkable as those in the MSS. of the Septuagint. This was a serious blow to the theories upon which the Reformers relied when they displaced the Christian Bible by that of the Jews. If the Septuagint has suffered from time and other causes, so has the Hebrew text; and it only increases the difficulty of the latter that the wounds have been so carefully concealed by the Rabbins.

This was not all, however. Men had for a long time seen that the variants between the Hebrew text and the Septuagint could not be classed among alterations caused by careless copiers. These interpolated paragraphs, these omitted verses, these rearranged books, these mutilations and alterations of verses useful in the great religious polemics, these changes so redolent of later Jewish exegesis and thought—all these pointed to something more than the decay caused by time. They pointed to deliberate editing and sophistications somewhere. Then it was remembered how the early Fathers had directly charged the Jews, on the appearance of Aquila's translation, with tampering with the documents in an anti-Christian sense. Of these quite a catena can be quoted, and they are well known, the most important being the earliest—namely, Justin Martyr and Irenaeus. Then came a more careful survey of the problem by scholars like Isaac Voss, Houbigant, Hody, Whiston, Jackson, Kennicott, and others, some of whom analysed the problem from another side by making use of the Samaritan Version as a touchstone to try the Hebrew text. When they showed that in 2000 places the Septuagint and the Samaritan text, which are completely independent, agree against the Hebrew text, the case against the latter seemed proved. Gesenius is often said to have demolished the case for the Samaritan text. I wonder how many people who repeat this state ment have studied his famous dissertation. I confess that I never myself read an argument in which an a priori prejudice seemed so conspicuously the major premiss of an irrational conclusion. That anyone, in fact, should attack the problem at all without reference to what the Septuagint has to say to it, passes all belief; but I need not discuss him, for even Prof. Cheyne repudiates his defence of the Masoretic text. To my mind, Kennicott's masterly vindication of the Samaritan remains unanswered.

Then the more important passages in which the Septuagint and the Hebrew versions vary were subjected to closer scrutiny; and it was found, by the confession of very devoted Hebraists, that in a great many cases, I may say in nearly all the important cases, the reading of the Septuagint was to be preferred. This is the kind of evidence of which I have tried to present some samples in your pages. If it be of any value or purport—and it is not new—it assuredly does rest with the champions of the Hebrew text to come to its rescue, and especially with those who profess to teach helpless parsons how to meet the difficulties of the day—I mean the university professors. If the Hebrew text has been deliberately altered and sophisticated, there is no use hiding our heads in the sand and crying out that the question is really very difficult. It must be met; and the burden of proof, I repeat, is upon the champions of the Hebrew text. Prof. Cheyne complains that I have quoted old writers too much, instead of quoting new ones. But the fact is, I have a belief that there was some very good wine in old English bottles long before the Germans began their systematic criticism of the Old Testament; and I have preferred to take my examples from them where I could, not only in justice to our own neglected and forgotten scholars (quite as acute and learned as any now living), but because I have a prejudice that when it comes to questions of judgment, as distinguished from minute research, our race has some advantages over others. It would have been just as easy to buttress my case with the very latest German memoirs.

The story, I say, is a very old one, and my complaint against Prof. Cheyne and others who have influenced English opinion is that they have so very largely ignored it. Occasionally the Septuagint has been called in by them as a kind of Cinderella to help to explain a difficulty; but the great and fundamental issue raised so well as far back as the seventeenth century has been virtually ignored. In Prof. Cheyne's most valuable books (as also in Prof. Driver's Introduction), the unwary reader would hardly realise that a large and increasing school of critics not only give a much greater importance than formerly to the Septuagint, but are growing very suspicious indeed about the Masoretic text and the results so confidentially based on it.

The Hebraists have had it their own way very largely because they have had command of a bogey in the shape of a difficult language, which has frightened quiet people into acquiescence in their dogmatic assertions. The late Prof. Robertson Smith's caustic remarks about the way in which Keil (a great oracle among some English critics) treated the Septuagint, is a good warning from a Hebraist to his brethren.

I must repeat that, in view of the length of time the issue has been before the world, and the abundant materials for its examination which exist, and have lately been considerably used in Germany, it remains a discredit to English scholarship, and especially to its University representatives, that so little has been done here to settle it. We have had of recent years plenty of excellent scholars who have taken up the parable of the Higher Criticism: some of them, like Profs.

Cheyne and Driver, not only learned and patient investigators, but also courageous ones. Others have merely added large buckets of water to the condensed wine which they have imported from the Teutonic vineyard; but there has been an almost complete neglect of what some of us deem the fundamental problem of all: namely, the settling and securing of a text of the Bible as free as we can from mutilations and additions. What is the use of minutely criticising a text if it turns out to be a spurious one? If I have hastily said anything unfair in pressing this homily, I am most wishful to make amends; but I do not know where I have offended.

Does Prof. Cheyne think, with Delitsch, that the Masoretic text carries us back to the time of Ezra; or, with the older Hebraists, that it represents the work of that mythical body, the Great Synagogue; or does he think, with Lagarde, Kuenen, and others, that it is derived from a single MS. whose text was largely settled and fixed in the second century A.D., when (as Justin Martyr shows) the Jews turned their backs on the Septuagint, which they had previously spoken most highly of, and when they began to have a fierce polemic with Christianity? If so, does he dispute that, when the whole catena of variants involving actual change of sense is examined, many of them do not show what the Germans call a "Tendentz," a polemical animus, proving a preconceived motive? If he holds by the views of Keil in these matters, he is right, no doubt, in standing by the Masorets at all hazards. If he holds rather with Lagarde and Nestle, and others of our day, and with the old heroes Voss and Whiston and Houbigant, &c., he will do well, instead of waving his hand in real or affected patronage of unaccredited vagabonds like myself, to add the influence of his acumen, learning, and courage to secure for us as nearly as possible the Bible used by Christ, His early followers, and His Jewish contemporaries. He will also help us to displace a Bible from which apostolical quotations have been erased, and in which alterations have been deliberately made—some in order to equate the text with absurd and obsolete notions of propriety or literary taste and value, and some in order to undermine the Rule of Faith of Christendom—by a number of very partially competent Jewish fanatics, with most fantastic theories of exegesis, and as late as the second century A.D.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

Trinity College, Cambridge: Oct. 27, 1894.

In Sir Henry Howorth's Letter VIII. on this subject, which appeared in the ACADEMY of October 6, there is the following statement:

"It is curious that throughout Joshua, as in the case of the Pentateuch, the name Gergashites has been changed to Gershonites in the Hebrew. The former name always occurs in the Samaritan and Septuagint versions of the Pentateuch, and in the Septuagint version of Joshua."

I have carefully examined the passages in the Pentateuch, seven in all, and the one passage in Joshua, in which "Gershonite" appears in the Hebrew; and in every instance I find that it is represented by an equivalent in both the LXX. and the Samaritan Version, and never by anything like "Girgashite." In the first sentence, therefore, which I have quoted from Sir Henry Howorth I should propose to insert "not," and, in the second, for "always" I would read "never."

Is this a consequence of bad handwriting, or—what?

WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT.

[In reference to Sir H. Howorth's inquiry about the Book of Jubilees, we ought to have remembered to state—what a correspondent recalls—that a translation of the text by the Rev. R. H. Charles, based on two hitherto uncollated Ethiopic MSS., is appearing at the present time in the pages of the Jewish Quarterly Review (David Nutt).—Editor ACADEMY.]

THE FETHARD INSCRIPTIONS, COUNTY WEXFORD.

Holloden, Bagenalstown, Ireland: Oct. 18, 1894.

I have now before me not only photographs (taken quite recently by a friend of mine, Fleet-Surgeon R. W. Brereton, R.N.) of the Baginbun inscription, but also of the one in the yard of the Castle of Fethard, together with "rubblings" of both, which I made about six weeks since with the greatest care, with the view of clearing up, if possible, the very divergent interpretations given to them, and the connexion, if any, of the Fethard Castle inscription with that on the cross at Carew Castle in South Wales, a drawing of this inscription, traced from a rubbing, having also been kindly supplied me by Mr. J. Romilly Allen.

It may be best here to review the letters of Mr. R. A. S. Macalister, Mr. E. W. B. Nicholson, and Lord Southesk, which have appeared in the ACADEMY up to this date. And first let me remark that the copy of the Baginbun inscription, given in the ACADEMY of September 22, from a "careful tracing" by Mr. Macalister, appears to me to be a very good representation of the original. There are, however, two or three minor details that give room for conjecture in the outline of the letters.

In the second letter of the top line, the diagonal stroke on the side next the first letter is so indistinct, as to leave doubts whether it is part of the second letter or only a natural mark in the stone.

In the next three letters, my rubbing agrees perfectly with Mr. Macalister. In the fifth letter of this line, the short line he makes as going only half way across the bottom portion of this letter appears by my rubbing to go distinctly across the whole space. In the last letter of this line we agree, as we do also in all the letters of the second line, except that, after the closest examination, I fail to discover with any degree of certainty the short horizontal line at the beginning of this line as given by Mr. Macalister; if anything in the shape of a letter did exist here, it appears to have been a vertical line, the full length of the first letter, as given by Mr. Macalister, and forming, as it were, a round-headed A. In the sixth letter in this line, the bar across the circle appears to me clearly to extend from side to side, like the diameter of a circle and not as in the drawing.

In the third or bottom line, I have only to remark that I cannot find the mark joining the bar over the third letter of this line with the circle under it; and in the sixth and seventh letters as given by Mr. Macalister, both the photograph I have and my rubbing give a line joining these two letters, by continuing the loop line till it meets the sixth letter, nor have I found any depression to justify the turn to the right at the bottom of the sixth letter as given in the drawing in the ACADEMY.

The only difference I can observe in the final letter is the question of the chord-line extending below the circle; it may do so, but it is doubtful, so I have marked it and other questionable parts of the inscription with dotted lines in my rubbing.

The mixture of nondescript letters is very strange; but I should be sorry to consider the inscription what Mr. Macalister terms it, "a hopeless puzzle." Mr. Nicholson's letter contains matter of grave thought, and much of it would appear to be applicable to this inscription; but there appears to be an error in giving Hübnér credit for describing this stone as a duplicate of a Welsh inscription. I have not Hübner at hand; but it is most probably the Fethard Castle inscription which Prof. Rhys referred to as so described by Hübner, and which I think is given by that writer in his Inscriptiones Britanniae Christianae.

As to either of the Fethard inscriptions—at the Castle, and at Baginbun Bay, about one mile from the village of Fethard—being forgeries, for my part I would, after the careful examination I have personally made of both, as soon call the Rosetta Stone a forgery. How such an experienced antiquary as the late Rev. James Graves came to the conclusion that both these inscriptions were forgeries I know not; and I much doubt whether, if he were now alive, he would adhere to that opinion. To my eyes neither inscription presents the smallest appearance in any one point of being recent, but quite the contrary.

I regret I cannot accept Lord Southesk's interpretation; and after his lordship has seen the rubbings and photographs (which I shall be happy to send him) I feel confident he will abandon the view he adopts in the ACADEMY of October 10.

Mr. E. McClure's theory, that the inscription as printed is "upside down," I cannot agree with. It begins near the upper rounded edge, and ends about the middle of the stone, leaving room for perhaps three additional lines or more of writing. The stone slopes away gradually till it enters the earth. The photograph and a sketch I have of it will show what I am endeavouring to describe.

Mr. Macalister gives the size of the upper surface of the stone as 45 inches by 33 inches.

As to the Baginbun Stone being part of an Ogham inscribed stone, the idea may at once be abandoned. The stone is a "boulder," perfect, so far as one can judge from what is overground; and apparently it is in its original position. I do not think it was ever upright.

Before proceeding to the Fethard Castle Stone, I would add that the first letter of the inscription as given by Mr. Macalister may, I think, be described under the head of "Gaulish," according to Petrie, and the sixth letter of the first line as an Irish S, and those like the Greek σ as a Welsh O or OL. The last letter in the inscription appears to be a compound one, perhaps containing two or more letters. There is only one "dot"—that shown in the third line; but under it is something like a horizontal line some two inches below the letters of this line, and extending about three inches in length, with a "dot" near its right-hand end.

There are no signs of "tooling" on this stone, except, of course, the lettering; the edges are round—none square. It is about ten feet from the edge of the cliff, which is, I believe, fast falling away. At present it is about 25 feet or 30 feet in height here.

With respect to both these co. Wexford inscriptions, it should not be lost sight of that they are close to the reputed landing-place of Fitzstephen in Ireland in 1169,* and of Strongbow two years later. While some say they landed in Bannow Bay, and others in Baginbun Bay, it is well to remember that these places are only two or three miles apart, and that the village and castle of Fethard lie between the two bays.

Reference has been made to the inscriptions on the St. Vigeian's Stone in Forfarshire, and to the Newton Stone, Aberdeenshire, as well as to others which I have not had an opportunity of seeing drawings of. It appears to me that the safest and best way to arrive at a truthful conclusion as to the meaning of these inscriptions is to compare them with those that have already been deciphered—such as are represented in Petrie's Irish Inscriptions, Hübner's British Christian Inscriptions, Westwood's Welsh Inscriptions, and other like works.

I now come to the consideration of the inscribed stone in the wall of an outhouse in the yard of Fethard Castle. It is about three feet from the ground, and has been recently white-washed! A hole was also drilled in it (as seen in the drawing) near the second letter from the end, apparently to allow the end of the spindle of a grinding stone to revolve in. No doubt this ancient stone is no longer in situ. But where its original resting-place was after being taken from the quarry I know not, nor could I find out by inquiry.

The Castle of Fethard is within about forty yards of the present church, which was built on the site of a very ancient church or cell; but whether this stone was originally in the wall of the church or in that of the castle there is no evidence.

The author of the Lapidarium Walliae, in speaking of the inscription on the cross at Carew Castle, says, "It is remarkable that a not quite correct copy of this inscription has been found in Ireland on a block of sandstone at Fethard Castle, belonging to the Carew family" [the italics are mine]. He then gives the inscription correctly. I know no authority for calling the Fethard inscription a copy of the Carew one, and still less for the statement that Fethard Castle belonged to the Carews. I have searched in vain for any fact in support of this assertion. A correspondent, writing to me last August, says: "I never saw it stated anywhere that Fethard was a Carew castle, and I know no reason for saying so." The town of Fethard, it is true, is said to have been one of the earliest built towns of the Anglo-Norman colony in Wexford county. The castle belonged at an early period to the See of Ferns, in which diocese it is situated. Lewis, in his Topographical Dictionary, says that the castle was built by Raymond-le-Gros, and the reader is referred to this book for further particulars.

It is my intention to have the Welsh (Carew) and Fethard Castle inscriptions engraved side by side, and also the Baginbun one from the rubbings, &c., in my possession, by which means I think it will be easier to observe the differences and other points of importance.

The following differences are observable in the two inscriptions.

The first letter of the Fethard inscription [M] differs slightly from the corresponding one in the Welsh inscription, the third letter differs very considerably, and the fourth slightly. In the second line the first letter in both inscriptions has hitherto been taken as an E; but by my rubbing a top stroke appears which makes the letter much resemble a T, like the third letter in this line.

The horizontal strokes or heads of the T's in the Fethard inscription are curved, those of the Welsh are all straight.

There is a much larger space between the two T's in the last line on the Fethard Stone than on the Carew one, and the final letter in the latter inscription is not at all so well formed or distinct as the corresponding letter in the Wexford inscription.

The last letter but one on the Welsh stone appears to be clearly an E, whereas the letter in the same position on the Fethard Stone appears to me to be intended for F.

I omitted to notice that the two parallel lines at the end of the second line of the Fethard inscription are altogether wanting in the Carew Castle inscription.

The large circular mark near the final letter on the Fethard Stone is, as I have already observed, a modern vandalism—being a hole drilled to receive an iron axle.

This stone is so rough on its surface and corroded by age and weather as to make the lettering indistinct in places; but with the aid of the late George V. du Noyer's drawing, made about thirty years since, one can, I think, arrive at a truthful representation of the lettering.

It is to be noticed that, with the exception of the one dot under the third letter of the Carew inscription, there do not appear to be any others; and while this particular dot is omitted on the Fethard Stone, it has two others, as it were, to divide the two T's in the last line.

As to the meaning of these several inscriptions, I do not feel myself capable of offering an opinion. We have first of all Du Noyer, in 1863, giving as the reading of the Fethard Castle Stone the following:—

| | | |
|-----|-----|------------------------|
| MAQ | for | Magister |
| GIT | „ | lies |
| CI | „ | ici, here |
| TRE | „ | Trefoncier [the owner] |
| CET | „ | this—T for tomb, and |
| FX | „ | fecit. |

Then we have Prof. Sayce reading the Welsh inscription as

| |
|----------|
| MARGIT |
| EUT DE |
| CETT FX, |

and rendering it thus:

"Margiteut Decett fecit Cruceem," and I understand that both Prof. Sayce and Mr. Romilly Allen attribute this cross to the ninth century—the latter gentleman, I think, makes the final letter a Y.

The representation of the Irish inscription as given in pl. 57 of either Westwood or Hübner is not correct, as can be seen by comparing it with my rubbing and Du Noyer's drawing.

Mr. Nicholson reads the Fethard Stone thus:

MAQ GIT — EV TRE = CET . T . EQU,

and the Carew Castle one

MAQY GIT — EUTRE — CET . TEQU.

He puts some letters as capitals and divides the words as above. He appears to agree with Du Noyer as to the name of the occupier being inscribed.

I am sending Mr. Nicholson my photographs and rubbings of these stones, and trust they may enable him to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

PHILIP D. VIGORS (Colonel).

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 4, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Mediæval City," by Prince Kropotkin.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Mr. Kidd's Social Evolution," by Mr. J. A. Hobson.

MONDAY, Nov. 5, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

7.30 p.m. Carlyle: "In Memoriam, John Nichol," by the President; Discussion, "Carlyle's Chartism in connexion with Kingsley's Alton Locke."

8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Extremity," I, by Prof. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: Inaugural Address, "An Essential Distinction in Theories of Experience," by the President, Mr. Bernard Bosanquet.

TUESDAY, Nov. 6, 8 p.m. Anglo-Russian Literary Society: "Thoughts on Russian Folk-lore," by Miss Hodggets.

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Hippopotamus in Egyptian Texts and Beasts-Gods," and "A Review of the Scientific Labours of the late Brugsch Pasha," by the President, Mr. P. Le Page Rénouf.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "New Species of Oedionychis and Allied Genera of Coleoptera," by Mr. Martin Jacoby; "The Hydroid Arch of Ceratodus," by W. G. Ridewood; "Additions to the Batrachian Collection in the Natural History Museum," by Mr. G. A. Boulenger.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 7, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "English Municipal Heraldry," by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope.

8 p.m. Geological: "Some Recent Sections in the Malvern Hills," by Prof. A. H. Green; "The Denbighshire Series of South Denbighshire," by Mr. Philip Lake; "Some Points in the Geology of the Harlech Area," by the Rev. J. F. Blake.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Sir Philip Sidney and the Arcadia," by Mrs. J. M. Strachey.

* By some writers he is stated to have landed in Baginbun Bay, which is exactly at the stone.

THURSDAY, Nov. 8, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Extremity," II., by Prof. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Electric Tramways in the United States and Canada," by Mr. H. D. Wilkinson; "Electric Traction, with special reference to the Installation of Elevated Conductors," by Messrs. R. W. Blackwell and Philip Dawson.

8 p.m. Mathematical. Annual Meeting; Election of Officers and Council; Address, "Mathematics," by the Retiring President, Mr. A. B. Kempe; "A Generalised Form of the Hyper-geometric Series, and the Differential Equation which is satisfied by the Series," by Mr. F. H. Jackson; "Certain Infinite Products," III., by Prof. L. J. Rogers; "The Kinematics of Non-Euclidean Space," by Prof. W. Burnside.

FRIDAY, Nov. 9, 5 p.m. Physical: "The Photographic Action of Stationary Light Waves," by Dr. J. Larmor; "Vapour Pressure," by Prof. S. Young; "The Luminescence of Glass," by Mr. John Burke.

SATURDAY, Nov. 10, 8 p.m. Irish Literary Society: "A Night with Goldsmith," by Mr. P. J. Kirwan.

SCIENCE.

The Forester. By James Brown. Sixth Edition, enlarged. Edited by John Nisbet. In 2 vols. (Blackwoods.)

MERELY to treat Mr. Nisbet's book as Lord Macaulay measured Dr. Nares's shows that it contains at least 150 more pages than the single volume which made up Brown's fifth edition of The Forester. Careful inspection discloses that its last editor has not only rearranged and re-written much of the book, but has also lopped off many of the previous editor's conclusions.

Mr. Nisbet is favourably known as one of the few English "woodwards" (to use the old term) who have studied the modern continental science of silviculture, and have grafted the rules of Gayer, Hess, and other German authorities upon the good old English stock of tree-culture as expounded by Evelyn, Selby, Michie, and others. The careful treatment of every question connected with the cultivation of trees, whether for aesthetic purposes or for profit, is very noticeable in Mr. Nisbet's pages. He has determined to be thorough, and he has succeeded. Draining, choice of land for timber-crops, methods and cost of planting, fencing, tending and pruning, and, lastly, the best modes of utilising timber, are treated at length and lucidly. Many subsidiary questions are answered. The formation of nurseries, the value and treatment of coppice-crops, the transport and sale of timber, the lifting and packing of specimen trees—these subjects are handled judiciously by a man of experience as well as of theory.

The book opens with a full description of English forest trees, well illustrated; and this is not the least useful part of the book. The pathology of forest trees, their parasitic foes and the injuries inflicted on them by beetles, moths, and butterflies, forms a most interesting chapter. The book ends with a system of book-keeping for the use of owners of woodlands, and the best modes of preparing working plans for managing forests, followed by a comprehensive appendix which reviews the chief forest districts of the world. The compendious character of The Forester therefore fits it to become the companion of the country gentleman as well as of the timber dealer. Mr. Nisbet is to be congratulated on the amount of minute pains which he has expended on every point treated in these two handsome volumes. A good index and numerous illustrations render them still more valuable.

As the editor has already expounded the principles of silviculture in his lectures delivered at Oxford in 1893 (see ACADEMY, September 8, 1894), little need be here said of it, save to remind the reader that it views timber-growing as a crop which will be harvested in due time like any other crop, and that the two great divisions of the subject relate to trees grown in mixed or in pure forest. Much experience concerning sunshine, rain and humidity, soil, drainage, and pruning, naturally centres round these two heads. With regard to the eventual profit to be expected from a timber crop, although scientific rules can be laid down, they are of course liable to be defeated by a thousand mischances common to agriculture in general.

"Vidi lecta diu et multo spectata labore Degererare tamen."

Over and above the pressure of rent, taxes, rating of woodlands, high railroad rating and the like, the general depression in trade and agriculture, large importations of foreign timber, destructive gales, and the use of substitutes for timber, heavily weigh down the timber grower. Larch-crops, indeed, pay in thirty years; but he who plants oaks, plants for a very late posterity. In most cases timber-growing means hope deferred. Yet Mr. Nisbet states that England imports forest produce to the extent of over £20,000,000 annually, about one half of which might quite easily be grown in Britain. This reminds a reader of the enormous quantities of poultry and eggs which England annually imports, much of which she is told she herself could easily produce. Theoretically, this may be true; in practice, with the present modes, it will often be found impossible.

"It is to be hoped," says Mr. Nisbet, "that the time is rapidly approaching when the reformation of the woods that can be proved to have once existed naturally in England, and the planting and distribution of trees, will be undertaken with due regard to well-defined natural laws."

All will agree with the latter part of this golden future for forestry. Silviculture finds here her legitimate province. But it is vain to hope that much of the ground once covered with trees will again be planted in England: the spread of population and the urgent need of producing speedy food-crops will always prevent the realisation of this dream. Iron has proved of late years a most formidable rival to oak and ash. There is not the same demand for the finest timber that there was. But ornamental timber was never more grown than at present. In the last twenty years many coverts for game have been planted. Scotch fir is always in demand. There is in England as much taste and liking to plant as there ever was; but the necessity of waiting, if it be only a hundred years, for a timber harvest, indisposes a landowner to embark on timber-growing as a means of profit. To recommend forming extensive plantations of oak, elm, and ash is much like the nostrums so frequently urged upon farmers at present—jam-making, fruit-growing, and the like. Still, there is room on most estates for plantations and aesthetical tree-planting; and here Mr. Nisbet's injunctions are of extreme value. Whether sowing the seed or transplanting the young trees be chosen, the suitable modes of trenching, draining, and protecting against cattle are carefully detailed. Cost and measurements and convenient roads are taken into account, with the mensuration of growing timber crops, preparation of working plans, and the best modes of book-keeping. In a word, the grower of timber will here find his desires for information on every possible point satisfied when he turns to Mr. Nisbet's Forester.

The chapters which treat of the diseases of trees and the injuries inflicted on timber by insect depredations will interest the naturalist as well as the tree-planter. They are well illustrated; so that those most ignorant of these branches of natural history will profit by their perusal. The exhaustive accounts of the deciduous and coniferous trees are most useful. An addition might be made here and there to the special use of the several trees: as, for instance, that the hawthorn is a wood much used in the machinery of mills, that the alder is largely fashioned into clogs and the like. The review of forestry on the continent has been extended, even since the publication of this edition, by the issue from the French Ministry of Agriculture of a report dealing at considerable length with the forestry statistics and administration of France. It may be gathered from this that, out of the eighty-seven Departments, there are eleven in each of which the forest-covered area exceeds 200,000 acres. The most productive district of French forests lies in the north-east, but there are a good many heath and boggy districts, like our Dartmoor, which carry neither timber nor coppice. It must be remembered that the planting of large areas of such waste land, even supposing it could be profitably accomplished, would almost certainly change the climate of the district. Here again Mr. Nisbet deals fully with the subject, showing the effect of clearing away forests and the influence of woodlands on the other hand in ameliorating climate. Even if the reader does not accept the conclusions of the modern school of silviculture which are here insisted upon, the value of The Forester as a practical manual of growing and disposing of timber is extreme. Cyclopaedic is the adjective that best suits these two copious volumes.

There is no purer pleasure in the country than to plant and tend woodlands. White, of Selborne, carried acorns in his pocket, which he planted in every suitable place during his walks; and some oaks of his undoubted planting are now shown to the pilgrim at Selborne. Sir Walter Scott's plantations were the delight of his leisure. Any book which, like The Forester, largely contributes to extending this rustic taste, and thereby increasing the happiness of country-dwellers, is much to be commended. To sit under the trees which a man himself has planted is to realise one side of Paradise:

"Aureus hanc vitam in terris Saturnus agebat."

M. G. WATKINS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE first annual meeting of the London Mathematical Society since its recent incorporation will be held at 22, Albemarle-street, on Thursday, November 8, at 8 p.m. The meeting is empowered to elect a council and officers, to frame by-laws, and to pass resolutions with regard to the affairs of the society. The following have been recommended by the present council for election for the ensuing year: president, Major P. A. MacMahon; vice-presidents, Messrs. M. J. M. Hill, Kempe, and Love; treasurer, Dr. J. Larmor; secretaries, Messrs. M. Jenkins and R. Tucker; other members of council, Messrs. Bassett, G. H. Bryan, Lieut.-Col. J. R. Campbell, Lieut.-Col. Cunningham, Messrs. Elliott, Glaisher, Greenhill, Hobson, and W. H. Hudson. An address will be delivered by the retiring president (Mr. A. B. Kempe), on "Mathematics," after which the meeting will proceed to the ordinary business.

THE following scientific societies will also hold their first meetings next week: the Zoological, on Tuesday; the Geological, on Wednesday; and the Institution of Electrical Engineers on Thursday.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. W. M. LINDSAY'S large work on Latin comparative philology is nearly ready. It will be called The Latin Language: an Historical Account of Latin Sounds, Stems and Flexions, and will be published by the Clarendon Press.

AT the first meeting of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for the new session, to be held at 37, Great Russell-street on Tuesday next, at 8 p.m., the president, Mr. P. Le Page Renouf, will review the scientific labours of the late Brugsch Pasha. He will also read a paper on "The Hippopotamus in Egyptian Texts."

DIWAN TEK CHAND—of Christ's College, Cambridge, and one of the selected candidates for the Indian Civil Service—has been awarded an Ouseley scholarship of £50, in connexion with the oriental school of the Imperial Institute.

The Theory of Conditional Sentences in Greek and Latin, for the Use of Students. By R. Horton Smith. (Macmillans.) It is by no means easy to give an account of Mr. Horton Smith's ponderous volume, and quite impossible within any reasonable limits to criticise it. The theory of the structure of conditional sentences is stated and illustrated by abundant quotations in 284 pages. Then follow nearly 400 pages of notes and sub-notes and sub-sub-notes on every imaginable point which is in any way connected with anything mentioned in the text, or contained in the quotations or the notes to them, ranging from the perils of kissing, or the moral character of those who within the last few years have shown a love for hair dyed yellow, to Luther and St. Paul or Dr. Rutherford's theory of ascripta. It is impossible to open the volume anywhere without finding something amusing or instructive, or both at once. It is almost equally impossible to do so without awakening strong feelings of doubt or of antagonism. One thing may be said with confidence, that Mr. Horton Smith's treatise in 600 pages will be much less serviceable to students than if it had been limited to 60; and not a few will be inclined to go further, and think it less helpful for its particular purpose than six pages of Madvig or Kennedy or Roby. So far as it is possible to disentangle what is original in Mr. Horton Smith's theory from what is generally recognised, it consists (1) in holding that ἔν means "really," so that γίγνεται ἔν = it happens upon the actually existing state of things—i.e., it happens in very truth; (2) that in a sentence like εἰ ἴσθη, τοῦτο ἐγίγντο ἔν, the ἔν is appended to the whole of the sentence, not to the verb to which it is attached; (3) that εἰ, with the first subjunctive (= optative) may be translated "if soever"—e.g., εἰ τις δοκῶν = "if soever anyone was seeming." Elaborate tables are given, in which, apparently for the sake of theoretical completeness, we have such astonishing combinations as ἔν ἔτυπεν ἔν. Sometimes the English idiom is strained beyond all endurance, as when εἰ feriret is translated "if he were to have been striking." The collection of examples shows enormous diligence, and the translations appended are usually exact and at the same time vigorous. But to claim that the present essay and arrangement have done much to dispel the mists that surround the subject and to banish the confused and vague explanations of most grammarians, is to set up a claim which the struggling reader will be very slow to acknowledge. It may be added that Mr. Horton Smith's spelling of Latin is deliberately and consciously pre-scientific, and that his pages abound in impossible forms. The indexes are of most admirable fulness.

MR. G. F. NICHOLL, Lord Almoner's professor of Arabic at Oxford, has sent us a little pamphlet (W. H. Allen), containing metrical versions, in Arabic, Persian, and Sanskrit, of Mr. Lewis Morris's Ode on the opening of the Imperial Institute. The Arabic and Persian versions are on the Ramal base, the Sanskrit on the Upajati base; and each is furnished with copious foot-notes. How far any of them would satisfy a native poet we cannot say.

FINE ART.

THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE eighth ordinary general meeting of the Egypt Exploration Fund was held on Friday last, October 26, in the large room of the Zoological Society, 3, Hanover-square, the president, Sir John Fowler, Bart., being in the chair, supported by E. Maunde Thompson, Esq., C.B., acting vice-president of the society.

The usual election of officers having been made, with the addition of that of Mr. Arthur Evans, Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, as a member of the committee, the financial report for 1893-4 was read by the hon. treasurer, Mr. H. A. Grueber. First dealing with the accounts of the Exploration Fund as apart from those of the Archaeological Survey (for which latter separate subscription has always been asked), Mr. Grueber pointed out that the expenditure for the year 1893-4 had been about £2415, and that this sum included the large outlay involved by the excavation of the temple of Deir el Bahari (the expenses under this item being the heaviest ever incurred by the Fund) the cost of publications, and ordinary and extraordinary office expenses. Since the total receipts for the same period had only amounted to some £1773, owing to the falling off of subscriptions from England, America, and abroad—but more especially from America—the expenditure for the year had exceeded the receipts by over £600. The receipts of the Archaeological Survey during this year had been about £681, and its expenses the same, one satisfactory item of expenditure having been the payment of an instalment of £104 towards the debt of £700 incurred by the Survey to the Exploration Fund proper during the year 1892-3. Mr. Grueber earnestly appealed for increased public support; for, since the committee had found it impolitic to delay the clearing of the temple of Deir el Bahari, the expenses of the forthcoming season must of necessity be as great, if not greater, than those of 1893-4.

In the unavoidable absence of the hon. secretary, Prof. R. S. Poole, LL.D., his statement was read by Miss E. Paterson, secretary. This statement announced the publication of an introductory volume on Deir el Bahari, being the Exploration memoir for 1892-3; of "El Bersheh I," being the third memoir of the Archaeological Survey of the Egypt Exploration Fund, and issued to the subscribers for 1892-3; and of the Archaeological Report for 1893-4. Advance copies of the three publications were placed on the table. The Archaeological Report not only contains brief accounts of the society's own excavations, and of all others made in Egypt during the season of 1893-4, but also an editorial report by Mr. Griffith on the general progress of Egyptological research, together with papers by Mr. Cecil Smith on "Graeco-Egyptian Antiquities," by Mr. F. G. Kenyon on "Graeco-Egyptian Literary Discoveries," and by Mr. W. E. Crum on "Coptic Studies." Each article has its bibliographical appendix, and the Report contains maps, illustrations, and a plan of the temple of Deir el Bahari. The secretary also called attention to the fact that there are now three local hon. secretaries of the Egypt Exploration Fund in Egypt: at Alexandria, Mrs. Charteris; at Cairo, Capt. H. G. Lyons, R.E.; and at Luxor, Dr. Leigh Canney. She concluded by informing the subscribers that a representative series of negatives of photographs taken in connexion with the work of the society is now being made at the London office, so that anyone wishing to purchase such photographs on lantern slides may there make his own selection.

M. Ed. Naville, the director of the excavations at the temple of Deir el Bahari, gave a brief summary of his work there, of which the discoveries and immediate results have been duly recorded from time to time in the ACADEMY and in the publications of the Egypt Exploration Fund.

Mr. D. G. Hogarth, now one of the chief officers of the society, next addressed the meeting. He said his excuse for speaking about the temple of Deir el Bahari was that he was able to look at it from a different point of view to M. Naville. His experience in excavation had been gained elsewhere than in Egypt—partly in Greece, partly in Asia Minor, and partly in Cyprus—and he had gone out to Deir el Bahari last season partly as a critic and partly as a learner, for in Egyptology it was generally the rule for criticism to go before knowledge. The meeting was probably aware that certain attacks had been made upon the Fund for digging at Deir el Bahari, and upon the general policy of the Fund in excavating large temples. This criticism had been made by a critic for whom he had the most profound admiration and respect: in fact, he would almost go so far as to say that he would rather be wrong with him than right with anyone else. He never knew which to admire most: his extraordinary perspicacity, his power of observation, or, still more, his power of meeting any and every difficulty and emergency which arose. But it must be remembered that there was another public to be considered besides the public of Egyptologists, or specialists, or those who were only interested in the matter from the point of view of history. There was a very large public who went to Egypt in order to study the art of Ancient Egypt, and particularly to have their aesthetic senses excited; and for their sake it was well that the Fund had undertaken to excavate such a temple as Deir el Bahari. As M. Naville had said before, the site had been turned over and over again by previous explorers, with the result that the mound at the northern side of the temple was of all dates and periods. When he (Mr. Hogarth) had first gone there, he had thought that it would be possible to discover a certain amount of the history of the temple from the study of the stratification of the mound; but he should never forget his disillusionment. When they were about sixteen feet down they had come upon a small fragment of a German newspaper of the year 1875, and this was by no means a singular experience. Another objection which had been taken by the distinguished critic he referred to, was that this temple was all of one period. But it was nevertheless necessary that all these temples of one great period should be excavated. Another far more serious objection was the enormous expense of these excavations, to which the balance-sheet that had just been presented and read by the hon. treasurer testified. It was quite possible that the Egyptian Government ought to have undertaken the work, but it was safe to say that the Government would not have touched it for years to come; and he thought the Fund might take credit for unselfishness, therefore, in opening to the world so splendid a monument of ancient Egyptian art. The case of Deir el Bahari was much the same as that of Philae. Everyone seemed to take the question of Philae as a question to be considered between engineers and archaeologists alone; but there was another party to the suit, viz., the ordinary world outside both these classes. It was not only a question for the archaeologists and the irrigators, but it was far more a question for everyone who was capable of being stirred by the sight of a scene of singular beauty. And so it was at Deir el Bahari. Coming, as he had, from Greek art, he had been astounded by the extraordinary beauty of the work at Deir el Bahari. Criticisms had also been passed on the methods of work adopted at their excavation of this temple. As many of those present were aware, there were two methods of digging in Egypt. One was to pay your men as you would in England, to put over them overseers, and over the overseers yourself; to give your men only occasional backhish for what they might find, and to trust to a rudimentary sense of honesty that they would bring you all. The other system was the one upon which Mr. Petrie worked; and it was to pay the workmen the market price for everything they might find, which made it to their own interest to hand over all. This was the most satisfactory way of working where possible, but at Deir el Bahari it was not possible. Here they dug within three miles of Luxor, which was visited by an enormous number of tourists, and was a market for antiquities, real and forged, which exceeded anything he had ever imagined to exist. Everyone there seemed to buy something, particularly scarabs. The principal small things found at Deir el Bahari were scarabs, and how could the excavators there hope to outbid a market where from £1 to £5 was frequently given for what was often not worth five shillings? Moreover, there was another argument which bore upon himself more than upon M. Naville; and this was that, in consequence of being so close to Luxor, they were in danger of having forgeries and articles of very small value palmed off upon them. For example, directly he had begun to give backhish last season the increase in the number and the decrease in the quality of the scarabs were remarkable. But as many small things as possible must be secured from the soil at Deir el Bahari; for in archaeology small things are of as much, and sometimes more, value than large ones. If history was, as he understood it, the study of the young life of the world, with the view of judging under simpler conditions the motives and actions of the modern complex age, and if archaeology was, as he understood it to be, the building up, stone by stone, of the conditioning circumstances of that young life, then every relic of antiquity, however small, had its value. Mr. Petrie had shown them what an enormous amount of knowledge could be obtained from the study of small objects: therefore he thought they should take the utmost pains to secure as many of these small objects as possible, as he believed they had done last season. He was afraid that in the future they would not get very many small objects at Deir el Bahari, except in the northern part of the central platform. Here there was still an enormous mound, which had been fifty feet and was now twenty feet high, and at the western end of this there was still an apparently almost untouched part of the temple. While that mound was being removed two pairs of eyes must be incessantly upon the watch. When that was finished they would come upon a piece of ground which had been worked over and over again, and was, in fact, absolutely honeycombed with holes, there being no two feet of earth which had not been dug. But, whatever was or was not found, he thought there would be no reason to regret having dug the site, if only for the sake of the magnificent publications which would be issued by the Fund. Mr. Hogarth then briefly referred to his schemes of future work.

After alluding to the previous addresses, the chairman referred to the question of the proposed Nile reservoirs, and authoritatively stated that there was little danger of the destruction of the temples of Philae, Philae being now under the protection of the whole civilised world, including the Egyptian people, and its preservation not being, as was at first supposed, in any way incompatible with proper measures for the irrigation of Egypt. Sir John Fowler then asked the consent of the meeting to the following presentations:—To the British Museum: Fragment of limestone from the excavations at Tell Bakliak (1892), inscribed in sunk hieroglyphs with the name of the ancient Egyptian city of that site—Bah, in the nome of Thoth—and dated XXXth Dynasty; a fine bronze from Bubastes, inscribed round base, and representing the cat-headed goddess Bast and four kittens. To the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, U.S.A.: Fragment of limestone slab inscribed with hieroglyphs in relief, and coming from the excavations at Tell Mokdam (1892), a site which M. Naville has identified with the Leontopolis of Strabo; a fine unused mummy-case from the embalmers' quarters in the temple of Deir el Bahari, inscribed for Na-Menkhet-Amon, a prophet of Amon, connected with the royal family of the XXIIInd Dynasty, one of his ancestors having been son to an Osorkon, and brother to a Takelothis.

The meeting terminated with the usual votes of thanks.

In the evening, in the same room, and to a large audience, M. Naville gave a full and interesting lecture on his work at Deir el Bahari, illustrated with admirable limelight photographic views of the excavations in progress, and of the beautiful halls and sculptures which he has restored to the knowledge of the world. The chair was occupied by Major-Gen. Sir Charles Wilson.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"ANCIENT SHIPS."

London: Oct. 27, 1894.

In to-day's ACADEMY you call attention to a review of "Ancient Ships" in the Literarisches Centralblatt, in which, as you observe, a good many of my theories are rather sharply criticised. As you have thought the review worth mentioning, I should be glad if you would allow me to say that, so far as I can see, the reviewer's criticisms are based upon a series of mistakes.

For instance, I said that the triremes could not carry more than fifteen tons; and he says that I have given them a displacement of only fifteen tons. But the displacement is not the weight that a ship carries; it is the weight that a ship carries plus the weight of the ship itself.

I have written a brief Entgegnung upon the leading points; and this is shortly to be published in the Literarisches Centralblatt.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

IT is now announced that the famous Rembrandt—"Reiner. Ausloo and his Mother," of which mention was made in the ACADEMY of last week—has been sold by Lord Ashburnham to the Berlin Museum, and has already left this country.

THE collections, literary and artistic, of the late Mr. J. M. Gray, first Curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, are to be sold next week at Edinburgh, the entire proceeds of the sale, together with the major part of Mr. Gray's modest estate, going to increase the funds of that public institution to which he was devoted, and which for years he ably served. No less than three days will be occupied in the dispersion of the miscellaneous treasures—no one thing, perhaps, exceedingly valuable by itself—which are comprised within the nine hundred and fifty-one lots of which the sale consists. Mr. Gray was the possessor of certain interesting manuscripts, of a few ancient bindings, of a considerable number of miscellaneous engravings, of a few works in oil, of groups of etchings by Geddes and by Whistler, of first editions of those literary contemporaries who were his friends, and of here and there some specimens of blue and white china. In connexion with the sale of Mr. Gray's effects, it may be of interest to add that a brief biographical account is in preparation, to be published within a reasonable time.

MR. HEINEMANN announces an authorised English translation of Prof. A. Furtwängler's Meisterwerke der Griechischen Plastik, which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of April 21. It will be edited by Miss Eugene Sellers; and will be illustrated with about twenty photogravures and more than two hundred engravings in the text, most of which reproduce monuments either unpublished or but little known.

A THIRD series of pastels of "Wild Animals studied from the Life," by Mr. J. T. Nettlehip, will be on view next week at the Rembrandt Head Gallery, in Vigo-street. Another exhibition to open next week will be one of drawings in black and white at Mr. Mendoza's Gallery, in King-street, St. James's.

THE Alpine Club proposes to hold an exhibition of pictures, drawings, &c., illustrating mountain scenery, at the 19th Century Art Galleries, Conduit-street, from December 11 to December 22. Owners of such works, especially by Turner, are requested to communicate with Dr. W. A. Wills, 58, Upper Berkeley-street, W.

THE first meeting of the new session of the Archaeological Institute will be held at 20, Hanover-square, on Wednesday next, at 4 p.m., when Mr. W. H. St. John Hope will read a paper on "English Municipal Heraldry," illustrated with an exhibition of the arms, seals, &c., of various boroughs.

DR. BLISS, who is conducting excavations for the Palestine Exploration Fund in Jerusalem, has sent home a report of recent work, in which he states that he has found, at a depth of a few feet, the foundations of a wall which may be those of the actual first wall of the city, and are certainly on the site of that wall. In the course of the work he has uncovered three large square towers. He has also found a gateway, the door-sill of which is still in situ, with the holes of the door-posts and the holes for the bolts. This sill was four feet above the ancient paved road, which passed through the wall at this point; but on digging deeper Dr. Bliss found, four feet below (and therefore on a level with the ancient road), the sill of an older gateway. Of less importance, but still very curious, is a discovery reported by Herr Schick, who has found a postern in the north wall on the exact spot where the Leper's Gate is placed by writers of the twelfth century—a fact which seems to show that the present position of the wall is what it has always been, and that the city never extended farther north than this wall.

A ROMAN milestone has lately been discovered near Carlisle, close to the Roman road which runs south towards Penrith. It has been used twice, once for Constantius or Constantine, and once (probably earlier) for another Emperor, as yet unidentified. Chancellor Ferguson has acquired it for the Tullie House Museum.

THE STAGE.

THE last nights of Mr. Grundy's successful "Bunch of Violets," are, as we write, running their course at the Haymarket; and before Mr. Tree departs for his first visit to America he will produce Mr. Haddon Chambers's new piece, which, if report speaks rightly, has of late been subjected to a certain measure of manipulation, the parts of Mrs. Tree and of Mrs. Patrick Campbell (who joins the Haymarket Company) having, presumably, gained in importance.

THE return of Mr. Irving to the Lyceum is this winter looked forward to with even more than customary interest, as he brings with him a new part and a new piece. Dr. Conan Doyle's little one-act play, dealing with the latest episodes in the life of a veteran of Waterloo, is believed—is indeed declared by those who, in the provinces, have already beheld it—to afford to Mr. Irving the opportunity of an impersonation singularly picturesque and dramatic. The piece, of course, will be played along with some longer drama of more established importance, but possibly by no means of greater charm.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE thirty-seventh season of the Popular Concerts commenced last week. The programme opened with Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74). Mlle. Wietrowetz was leader, and her associates were Messrs. Ries, Gibson, and Whitehouse. The reading of the work was excellent, if not inspired. Mlle. Wietrowetz has been trained in a good school, and time will mature her feelings, and experience will give her full control of them; she shows much promise for the future. Mr. Leonard Borwick played Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111). This sonata-testament of the composer's is becoming quite a favourite with pianists. And no wonder! It is one of the grandest and one of the most poetical of the master's works, and yet it affords opportunities for technical display. With the composer technical difficulties were merely means towards an end, and that end was the expression of his thoughts; and the pianist must interpret in a similar spirit. Mr. Borwick never forgot this, and his reading was therefore most acceptable. There was perhaps a little too much of the brio in the Allegro; apart from this, the pianist deserves nothing but praise. His performance was received with enthusiasm, and we only wish that he had resisted the foolish demand for an encore. He is a rapidly rising artist, and can help powerfully towards the removal of a nuisance. Miss Helen Trust sang two clever though tricky songs, by Max Stang, with skill and charm; both songs and singer pleased greatly.

ON the same evening the first of a series of British Chamber Music Concerts was held at the small Queen's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Fowles. He wishes to make the public acquainted with, and interested in, works "worthy of the highest attention," and to encourage native composers "to consecrate their genius to the cause." Mr. Fowles's aim is excellent; but in the future he must take care lest by excess he defeat the very object which he has in view. As a beginning, however, the exclusively British character of his programmes may serve as a vigorous protest against the essentially German character of those of the Popular Concerts. Mr. Fowles's first programme included Dr. Stanford's excellent Quartet in A minor (Op. 45) and Dr. Parry's Duo in E minor for two pianofortes, played by Miss Agnes Zimmerman and Mr. Fowles. But we can only say a few words about the last piece—viz., the Quintet in E minor, No. 2, for pianoforte and strings, by Mr. Alvern Ashton. This is a thoughtful and clever work; the thematic material, especially of the second and last movements, is interesting. In the development of his subject-matter the composer is apt to indulge in too much storm and stress, and he is occasionally dry; but the Quintet is well worthy of a hearing. Mr. Fowles was efficiently supported by Messrs. J. and W. Sutcliffe, A. Hobday, and W. H. Squire. Miss Hilda Wilson was the vocalist. Mr. Fowles not only

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS'S LIST

OF

New Books in Belles-Lettres.

MR. WEDMORE'S NEW SHORT STORIES.

ENGLISH EPISODES. By FREDERICK WEDMORE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

Like "Renunciations," but unlike "Pastorals of France," this book deals—in a spirit of "polite" or of poetic "realism"—with entirely English themes.

POEMS of LIONEL JOHNSON, AUTHOR of the "THE ART of THOMAS HARDY." With Title-Design by H. P. Horne. Printed at the Chiswick Press, on Hand-made Paper. Square 8vo, 5s. net. [Immediately.]

OUT of EGYPT: Stories from the Threshold of the East. By PERCY HEMINGWAY. Cover-Design by Oleeson White. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [On Monday next.]

REVOLTED WOMAN: PAST, PRESENT, and to COME. By C. G. HARPER. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, 5s. net. [Just out.]

SONGS from VAGABONDIA. By BLISS CARMAN and RICHARD HOVEY. Decorations by Tom B. Meteyard. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net. [On Monday next.]

TRAVELS in a TREE-TOP. By Dr. C. C. ABBOTT. Small 8vo, 5s. net. [Just ready.]

THE BIRDS ABOUT US. By Dr. C. C. ABBOTT. Over 70 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

"DIVERSI COLORES" SERIES. The Series of Books began in "DIVERSI COLORES" by Mr. HERBERT P. HORNE will continue to be published by Mr. ELKIN MATHEWS. The intention of the Series is to give, in a collective perfected form, Poems and Essays by various Writers which have appeared from time to time in the Hobby Horse. The Series will be edited by Mr. HORNE, and will contain—

No. 2. CAROLS and POEMS. By SELWYN IMAGE. [Immediately.]

No. 3. ESSAYS upon MATTHEW ARNOLD. By ARTHUR GALTON. [In preparation.]

No. 4. POEMS. By ERNEST DOWSON. [In preparation.]

No. 5. THE LETTERS and PAPERS of ADAM LEGENDRE. [In preparation.]

Each Volume will contain a new Title-Page and Ornaments designed by the Editor, and will be uniform with "Diversi Colores."

OCCASIONAL PORTRAITS. By WILL ROTHENSTEIN. With Comments on the Personages by Various Writers. [In preparation.]

IN the KEY of BLUE, and other Prose Essays. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. Cover-Design by C. S. Ricketts. Second Edition. Thick crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

RHYMERS' CLUB, THE SECOND BOOK of the. With Contributions by E. DOWSON, E. J. ELLIS, G. A. GREENE, A. HILLIER, L. JOHNSON, R. LE GALLIENNE, V. PLARR, E. RADFORD, E. RHYS, T. W. ROLLESTON, A. SYMONDS, J. TODHUNTER, and W. B. YEATS. 100 copies (400 for sale). Square 16mo, 5s. net. Also 50 Copies Large-Paper, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

A LITTLE CHILD'S WREATH: a Sonnet Sequence. By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN. 350 copies. Square 16mo, 3s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

LYRIC POEMS. By LAWRENCE BINYON. With Title-Page by Selwyn Image. 16mo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

DANTE: Six Lectures. By Rev. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. net. [Ready.]

THE POETRY of TENNYSON. By HENRY VAN DYKE. Fourth Edition, Enlarged. Portraits. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

THE POEMS of ARTHUR HENRY HALLAM, together with his ESSAY on the LYRICAL POEMS of ALFRED TENNYSON. Edited, with an Introduction, by RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. Small 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

DIVERSI COLORES: Poems. By HERBERT P. HORNE. Title designed by the Author. Printed at the Chiswick Press. 16mo, 5s. net.

POEMES SANS RIMES. Par OLIVIER GEORGES DESTREE. Imprimé à Londres aux Presses de Chiswick. 25 copies for sale. Square crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LOUISE DE LA VALLIÈRE, and other Poems. By Mrs. HENRY A. HINKSO (Katharine Tynan). Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

WHISPER! A Volume of Verse. By FRANCES WYNNE. With Memoir by Mrs. HINKSON, and Portrait. Small 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

(The Four preceding Volumes transferred by the Authors to the present Publisher.)

NEW CATALOGUE of PUBLICATIONS now ready, free on application.

LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS, VIGO STREET, W.

gives English music, but entrusts the interpretation of it to English artists.

In connexion with these concerts we may notice a prospectus issued by Mr. E. Van der Straeten of a "Society for the Cultivation of Modern Chamber Music." Here the scheme is international: the criterion for selecting works will be "originality of invention and good workmanship." There is plenty of room for such a society, and it certainly deserves support; it has, for president, Mr. Ebenezer Prout. The first season of the society's meetings will be held at Messrs. Brinsmead's concert room.

Mr. ERNEST KIVER gave a concert at the small Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening. The programme opened with a new Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violin, by Miss Ellicott. The work consists of three movements, of which the first two, an Allegro brillante and an Andante Pastorale, are the best: the writing shows skill and taste, but the music savours of the past rather than the present. The Sonata was admirably interpreted by Messrs. E. Kiver and E. Sauret. Some new violin solos, "From the North," by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, proved highly attractive novelties. The pieces, three in number, are based on old airs of Scottish origin. No 1 Andante has a plaintive theme, which receives tender treatment; No. 2 Andantino is charming, though perhaps the middle section is a trifle too long; No. 3 Allegretto is full of quaint humour. They were rendered in a most sympathetic manner by M. Sauret. Dr. Mackenzie himself was at the pianoforte; and at the close a cordial reception was given to both the composer and the interpreter. No. 3 was, in fact, repeated. Mr. Kiver played Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses—some of them exceedingly well. Miss Hilda Wilson was the vocalist.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

PUBLISHED BY ELLIOT STOCK.

NEW VOLUME OF THE ELIZABETHAN LIBRARY.
In Tudor cloth, full gilt side, price 3s. 6d.; Roxburgh, 5s.; Large Paper Roxburgh, 15s.

BRAVE TRANSLUNARY THINGS:
being Selections from the Prose and Verse of BEN JONSON. By Dr. A. B. GROSART.

"Mr. Alexander B. Grosart has, as usual, gathered together the rich and rare and curious in smallest compass, and in introductory chapter and scattered note has illuminated many a difficult matter."—Morning Leader.

THE OTHER VOLUMES OF THE ELIZABETHAN LIBRARY.
GREEN PASTURES: being Choice Extracts from the Works of ROBERT GREENE, M.A.
Made by Dr. A. B. GROSART.

"Dr. Grosart has made a charming collection of snatches from Greene. Some of them are very captivating, and books of this kind often lead readers to seek nearer intimacy."—Bookman.

THE LOVE VERSES from the MINOR POEMS of EDMUND SPENSER. Selected and Edited by Dr. A. B. GROSART.

"Dr. Grosart, in selecting one representative portion of Spenser's poetry, most wisely chose the love-verse, partly because it is easily separable from the vast remainder, and partly because it shows the poet 'at his highest and finest and most distinctive in almost every characteristic of his genius.'"—Antiquary.

THOUGHTS THAT BREATHE and WORDS THAT BURN. From the Writings of FRANCIS BACON. Edited, with Preface, by ALEXANDER B. GROSART.

"The extraordinary fulness of Bacon's matter, and the splendour of the style, would make the most haphazard anthology from his works attractive; and Dr. Grosart's, so far from being a random choice, is probably one of the finest anthologies in literature."—Speaker.

A BOWER of DELIGHTS. Being Interwoven Verse and Prose from the Works of NICHOLAS BRETON. With an Introduction on his Life and Characteristics of his Writings, and a Facsimile of Breton's Handwriting.

"We welcome Dr. Grosart's dainty little tome as the production of one whose name is already associated with his author, and who is well able to fish out worthy examples."—Black and White.

CHOICE PASSAGES from the WRITINGS of SIR WALTER RALEIGH: being a Small Sheaf of Gleanings from a Golden Harvest.

"Here indeed is a 'box where sweets compacted lie'; a real pocket companion, a vinaigrette for the soul. Such a book may cheer us all the day, checking our pessimism, and restoring our faith in human nature."—Daily Chronicle.

A CABINET of GEMS. Cut and Polished by Sir PHILIP SIDNEY. Now for the more Radiance, presented without their setting by GEORGE MACDONALD.

"We have here much riches in little room."—Notes and Queries.

"In some cases the gems are made more striking by their severance from the passages to which they properly belong."—Morning Post.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

JAMES NISBET & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

WORDS to the LAITY. By the Ven. William Macdonald Sinclair, D.D., Archdeacon of London. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"Able and tolerably written."—Scotsman.

GREAT PRINCIPLES of DIVINE TRUTH. By the Rev. the late Canon HOARE. With Portrait. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW ACTS of the APOSTLES. Being Lectures on Foreign Missions. By the Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D. With Coloured Chart showing the prevailing Religions of the World and the Progress of Evangelisation. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"Its publication ought to create a new enthusiasm in missionary work."—Christian Commonwealth.

PRAYERS for HEART and HOME. Being Morning and Evening Devotions for One Month for Family and Private Use. By the Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A. Pott 4to, 2s. 6d.

"A thoroughly devotional spirit breathes through this useful manual. It ought to be present and valued in many homes."—Liverpool Mercury.

THE HOLIEST of ALL. An Exposition of the Hebrews. By the Rev. ANDREW MURRAY. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d.

GOD is LOVE, and other Sermons. By the late Rev. Aubrey L. MOORE, M.A., Hon. Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

"Terse, practical, full of spiritual fervour and ethical insight."—Times.

WELL BEGUN. Notes for those who have to make their way in the world. A Book for Young Men. By the Rev. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D., Author of "The People's Bible," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"There is not a page without something to stimulate the mind to action, and all that is said has a sound practical value."—Rock.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES and INCIDENTS. By the late R. M. BALLANTYNE. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FROM PLOUGHSHARE to PULPIT. A Tale of Aberdeen University Life. By GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"This delightful story."—British Weekly.

"Dr. Gordon Stables is as fresh and entertaining as ever."—Spectator.

LIZETTE. A Story for Girls. By Emma Marshall. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"The purity and simplicity of style which charmed the readers of Mrs. Marshall's early stories are still apparent in 'Lizette,' and the plot moves on with never-hurrying, but never-flagging, interest."—British Weekly.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also.
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED. Fine Irish Linen, 2s. free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 11d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each, 2½ yards by 3 yards, 3s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 5s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

365 SHAVES FOR 6d.

A STICK of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP
is said to LAST A YEAR.

STICKS 6d., 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; CAKES 1s., 2s., 3s.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

"VAN TASSEL" EDITION.

THE SKETCH-BOOK OF GEOFFREY CRAYON, GENT.

By WASHINGTON IRVING.

Uniform in general style with "THE ALHAMBRA," "GRANADA," and "KNIKERBOOKER."

2 vols., 8vo, printed from New Type with Artistically Designed Borders and 32 Illustrations from Drawings by Rackham, Barraud, Church, Rix, and Darley, cloth extra, 25s. net.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

By SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH.

A Narrative of his Life, and an Account of the Political, Religious, and Military Affairs of England during his Time.

With Portrait and Plans of Marston Moor and Naseby. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

THE WRITINGS OF THOMAS PAINE.

Edited by MONCURE D. CONWAY,

Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," &c., &c.

4 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s. 6d. per volume.

Vol. I., 1774-1779. | Vol. II., 1779-1792.

THE EMPIRE OF THE TSARS AND THE RUSSIANS.

By ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU.

Translated from the French by Z. A. RAGOZIN.

With Maps. 3 vols., 8vo, 12s. 6d. each.

Vol. I., The Country and its Inhabitants. | Vol. II., The Institutions. | Vol. III., The Religions. (In preparation.)

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

Illustrated with numerous Full-Page Plates and Maps, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.; roxburgh, 6s.

CICERO and the FALL of the ROMAN REPUBLIC. By J. L. STRACHAN-DAVIDSON, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, OxfordPRINCE HENRY (of PORTUGAL) the NAVIGATOR, and the AGE of DISCOVERY in EUROPE. By C. R. BEAZLEY, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. [Shortly.]Previously Issued—Nelson, Gustavus Adolphus, Pericles, Theodoric, Sir Philip Sidney, Julius Cæsar, John Wyclif, Napoleon, Henry of Navarre.

THE EGYPTIAN BOOK of the DEAD . Edited and Translated by CHARLES H. S. DAVIS, M.D.

The Most Ancient and the Most Important of the Extant Religious Texts of Ancient Egypt. With 99 Full-page Illustrations from the Turin and the Louvre Papyri, and 25 Designs representing the Egyptian Gods. Large 4to, cloth, 25s. net. [In preparation.]

THE WINNING OF THE WEST

By THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Vol. 3.—THE FOUNDING of the TRANS-ALLEGHANY COMMONWEALTHS, 1781-1790. 8vo, cloth, with Map.

7,000 WORDS OFTEN MISPRONOUNCED

By W. H. P. PHYFE.

A Guide to correct Pronunciation. 26th Thousand, carefully Revised. With a Supplement of 1,400 Words. 16mo, cloth.

5,000 WORDS COMMONLY MISSPELLED

By W. H. P. PHYFE.

A Carefully Selected List of Words Difficult to Spell, together with Directions for Spelling and for the Division of Words into Syllables. 16mo.

THE STORY OF THE CIVIL WAR

By J. C. ROPES.

A Concise Account of the War in the United States of America between 1861 and 1865. To be complete in 3 vols. Vol. I., Narrative of Events to the Opening of the Campaign of 1862. With 5 Maps. 8vo, 6s. [Preparing]

SPAIN AND THE SPANIARDS

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS.

"Saragossa" Edition. Translated from the Italian by W. W. CADY. 8vo, cloth extra, with 24 Illustrations.

HOLLAND AND ITS PEOPLE

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS.

"Van Dyke" Edition. Translated from the Italian by CAROLINE TILTON. 8vo, cloth extra, with 81 Illustrations.

Catalogues on application.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1175.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

"R.T.S." NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Illustrated by Pen and Pencil. Comprising English, Scottish, Irish, and Welsh Pictures. A Handsome Presentation Volume. Elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, 78s.

WALKS IN PALESTINE.

By HENRY A. HARPER. Illustrated by 16 Photogravures from Photographs. Cloth, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.
"A cheaper edition of a charming book."—Christian.

PICTURES FROM BOHEMIA.

Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By JAMES BAKER, F.R.G.S. Cloth, gilt, 8s.
"One of the most attractive and interesting of the 'Pen and Pencil Series.'"—Scotsman.

FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT IN POLYNESIA.

By the Rev. W. WYATT GILL, LL.D. 6s.
"Students of ethnology, as well as all who are interested in missions, will find much that is attractive in this volume."—Speaker.

THE MEETING-PLACE OF GEOLOGY AND HISTORY.

By Sir J. W. DAWSON, LL.D., F.R.S. 5s.
"A popular exposition by a competent authority of the results of recent researches in the debatable ground intervening between the later part of the geological record and the beginnings of sacred and secular history."—Times.

A FORGOTTEN GREAT ENGLISHMAN.

The Life and Work of Peter Payne, the Wyclifite. By JAMES BAKER. 5s.

THE DAISIES OF NAZARETH.

By HUGH MACMILLAN, D.D. 3s. 6d.
A useful book for all who have to speak or read to young people.

AMONG THE TIBETANS.

By ISABELLA BIRD BISHOP, F.R.G.S. 2s. 6d.
"Mrs. Bishop has here given us another delightful book of travel."—Record.

PONDS AND ROCK POOLS.

With Hints on Collecting for, and the Management of, the Micro-Aquarium. By HENRY SCHERREN. 2s. 6d.
"The amateur will find this book a very valuable and accurate guide."—Daily Chronicle.

SANITARY CODE OF THE PENTATEUCH.

By the Rev. C. G. K. GILLESPIE. 2s.
"Should be in the hands of all who have to do with sickness or disease."—Record.

PRESENT DAY PRIMERS.

1. EARLY CHURCH HISTORY.

By J. VERNON BARTLET, M.A. 1s.

2. THE PRINTED ENGLISH BIBLE.

By the Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. 1s.

3. HOW TO STUDY THE ENGLISH BIBLE.

By Canon GIRDLESTONE, M.A. 1s.

4. A BRIEF INTRODUCTION TO NEW TESTAMENT GREEK.

By Rev. S. O. GREEN, D.D. 1s.

5. A PRIMER OF ASSYRIOLOGY.

By A. H. SAYCE, LL.D. 1s.

ANNUAL GIFT BOOKS.

THE LEISURE HOUR ANNUAL.

812 pages, imperial 8vo, profusely illustrated, 7s. 6d., handsome cloth; for Libraries, in 2 vols., 3s. 9d. each.

THE SUNDAY AT HOME ANNUAL.

878 pages, imperial 8vo, Coloured and Wood Engravings, 7s. 6d., handsome cloth; for Libraries, in 2 vols., 3s. 9d. each.

THE BOY'S OWN ANNUAL.

Coloured and Wood Engravings. 8s., handsome cloth; for Libraries, in 2 vols., 4s. each.

THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL.

Profusely illustrated. 8s., handsome cloth; for Libraries, in 2 vols., 4s. each.

NEW VOLS.
BEGIN WITH
NOV.
6d.
PARTS
NOW
READY.

PUBLISHED BY THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, 56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

A SELECTION FROM MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

RITA'S NEW NOVEL.

PEG the RAKE. In 3 vols.

[At all Libraries.]

MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN'S NEW NOVEL.

RUN to GROUND: a Sporting Novel.

In 3 vols. By the Author of "The M.F.H.'s Daughter," "Drawn Blank," &c.

THE LARGE FIRST EDITION OF FRANKFORT MOORE'S NEW NOVEL.

ONE FAIR DAUGHTER, in 3 vols.,

being exhausted, a Second Edition is now ready.

The STANDARD says: "A really cleverly conceived novel. The character of the heroine is worked out with very considerable skill and discernment."

The ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE says: "There is so much that is brilliant in the book. It has every quality likely to command success. 'One Fair Daughter' may be heartily recommended."

"The latest book of which people are talking."—World.

A NEW NOTE. In 2 vols.

"Exceedingly readable, and we should say will be read. The writing is brisk and clever, and the character-drawing very good."—St. James's Gazette.

A Second Edition now ready.

A THIRD EDITION THIS DAY.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "A YELLOW ASTER."

CHILDREN of CIRCUMSTANCE. In

3 vols. By IOTA.

The ATHENÆUM says: "'Children of Circumstance' displays a noteworthy advance in the art of writing. Three characters are finely drawn and leave no option but to confirm the opinion which we expressed of the author's work in 'A Yellow Aster.' The character of Betsy is marked by genuine creative power. It alone would dispose us to think that the author may give us a third romance still better than her first and second."

A Fourteenth Edition of "A YELLOW ASTER" is now ready, in cloth gilt, 6s.

With 186 Full-page and other Illustrations by the Author.

THE LAND of the SPHINX. By G.

MONTBARD, Author of "Among the Moors." In royal 8vo, richly gilt cloth and gilt top, 16s.

The TIMES says: "The numerous sketches are full of interest for all who know Egypt and its history, and contain many bright appreciations of Egyptian life and manners."

NEW VOLUME OF "THE POETS AND THE POETRY OF THE CENTURY."

HUMOUR, SOCIETY, PARODY, and

OCCASIONAL VERSE. Selections from the Poetry of George Crabbe, Theodore Hook, J. H. Frere, Austin Dobson, Ashby Sturges, W. S. Gilbert, Lewis Carroll, Sir F. P. Hook, C. S. Calverley, W. H. Murray, Sir Theodore Martin, Frank Locker-Lampson, May Kendall, and others. Edited by ALFRED H. MILLS. With Biographical and Critical Notices by leading Critics. In fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s.; in buckram gilt (limited Edition), 6s.; and in parchment in complete sets of 10 vols. (Edition limited to 100 Copies), £3 15s. net.

BY ALPHONSE DAUDET.

FROMONT JUNIOR and RISLER

SENIOR. Translated by E. VIZETELLY. With 18 Wood Engravings by Fromont and Hamel from Original Drawings by George Roux. In large crown 8vo, artistic binding, 6s.

* An Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 Copies for England and America, each Copy Numbered and Signed, with 88 Illustrations by George Roux, and 20 Full-page Etchings by Fernand Desmoulins. In royal 8vo, £1 1s. net.

Nothing published this season is likely to surpass in interest and in value "The Crimson Sign." A NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

THE CRIMSON SIGN. A Narrative of the Adventures of Mr. Gervase Orme, some time Lieutenant in Mountjoy's Irish Regiment. By Dr. R. R. KEIGHTLEY. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with frontispiece, 6s.

"Of adventure stories nothing published this season is likely to surpass in interest and in value 'The Crimson Sign.' The heroine is a delightful personage. But the whole story is admirable, full of exciting situations, and cleverly conceived portraiture."—Yorkshire Post.

"It is a brilliant and most amusing book, and may be enjoyed unreservedly."—Athenæum.

THIRD AND CHEAP EDITION OF

THE GREEN BAY TREE: a Tale of

To-Day. By W. H. WILKINS and HERBERT VIVIAN. In cloth gilt, 6s.

MRS. ALFRED MARKS' NEW NOVEL.

DAVID PANNELL. In cloth gilt, 6s.

The ATHENÆUM says: "'David Pannell' is a fine piece of work. Mass and interest beyond and above the common." "It affords pleasure of no ordinary kind."—Globe.

HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| ROSE'S THE REVOLUTIONARY AND NAPOLEONIC ERA, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS | 367 |
| WRIGHT'S LIFE OF DUFFOY, by D. W. RANNIE | 369 |
| JONES'S CO-OPERATIVE PRODUCTION, by R. SEYMOUR LONO | 370 |
| STANLEY WEYMAN'S NOVELS, by GRANT RICHARDS | 371 |
| MONTEBARD'S THE LAND OF THE SPHINX, by PERCY ADDLESHAW | 371 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE | 372 |
| CURRENT LITERATURE | 373 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 374 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 374 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "To Dr. Joyce," by A. PERCIVAL GRAVES | 375 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 375 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 375 |
| CORRESPONDENCE | |
| A Charge of Plagiarism, by S. R. CROCKETT; Covenanted Miracles, by A. LANG; The Septuagint versus The Hebrew Text of the Bible, by Prof. Cheyne and Dr. Albrecht; The Fehard Inscriptions County Wexford, by R. A. S. MACALISTER and G. H. ORPEN; The Rev. George Horner and the Coptic Versions, by Dr. C. R. GREGORY; An Unknown (?) Hymn in Honour of St. Patrick, by Hugh VAGANAY | 376 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 377 |
| CATULLUS AND HIS MODELS, by E. F. M. BENECKE | 377 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Connection between Babylonian and Greek Astronomy, by Robert Brown, jun.; Was Lindum a Colonia? by Dr. R. J. LLOYD | 379 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 380 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 380 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 380 |
| OBITUARY: F. G. HAMERTON, by F. W. DOUGLASS; DOCUMENTS RELATING TO CHINA'S ALTAR-PICURE, "THE INCREDIBILITY OF ST. THOMAS," by FEDERICO SACCHI | 381 |
| THE ASSIMILATION MUSEUM | 382 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 382 |
| M. SARDOU'S NEW PLAY, by CECIL NICHOLSON | 382 |
| RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 383 |
| OBITUARY | 393 |

STAMPS.—WANTED TO PURCHASE, a good Collection.—H. DEANE, Dundonian, Moffat, N.R.

BOOKS and BOOKPLATES BOUGHT in any quantity. Prompt cash payment.—Address J. S. EASTES, Bookseller, 67, Great Queen Street, Holborn, W.C.

EDITOR of Suburban Weekly seeks REVIEWING (English, French, and German), Correcting, or other literary work.—Write "Box 273," Willing's Advertising Offices, 162, Piccadilly, W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. R. BROCKEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING. AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

IMPORTANT TO AUTHORS.

AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS PRINTED and PUBLISHED on liberal terms.—Address ALPHA, care of 263, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices. Catalogues on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL, & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 759. Telegraph, "Africanism London."

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

HOW HE BECAME A PEER:

A Story of Modern Politics.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

WARD & DOWNEY, LTD., 12, YORK BUILDINGS, STRAND.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE EXTERNAL EXAMINERS OF THE UNIVERSITY.
JAMES ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, Examiner in Greek.
F. ALTHAUS, Ph.D., Professor of German, University College, London, Examiner in German Language and Literature.
THOMAS BARLOW, M.D., F.R.C.P., Examiner in Medicine.
CLOVIS REVENOT, Professor of French in Mason College, Birmingham, Examiner in French Language and Literature.
T. G. BONNEY, D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Geology, University College, London, Examiner in Geology.
JOHN FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus.D., Examiner in Music.
W. BURNSIDE, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics, Royal Naval College, Greenwich, Examiner in Mathematics.
W. WATSON CHEYNE, M.B., F.R.C.S., Professor of Surgery, King's College, London, Examiner in Surgery.
C. J. CULINGWORTH, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lecturer on Midwifery in St. Thomas's Hospital, London, Examiner in Obstetrics and Diseases of Women.
J. A. EWING, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics, Cambridge, Examiner in Engineering.
G. F. FLETCHER, M.A., Sc.D., Professor of Natural Philosophy, Trinity College, Dublin, Examiner in Physics.
ISRAEL GOLLANCZ, M.A., Examiner in English Language.
ALEXANDER HENRY, M.A., LL.B., Professor of Jurisprudence in University College, London, Examiner in Law.
G. B. HOWES, F.R.S., Assistant Professor of Biology, Royal College of Science, London, Examiner in Zoology.
WILLIAM ANGUS KNIGHT, LL.B., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of St. Andrews, Examiner in Logic and Philosophy.
A. P. LUFF, M.D., B.Sc., Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence, St. Mary's Hospital, London, Examiner in Forensic Medicine.
ALEXANDER MACALISTER, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy, Cambridge, Examiner in Anatomy.
J. LANE NUTTER, M.D., Professor of Military Hygiene, Army Medical School, Netley, Examiner in Public Health.
F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc., Quain Professor of Botany, University College, London, Examiner in Botany.
Rev. T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., (late) Fellow and Tutor of New College, Oxford, Examiner in Latin.
HERBERT E. RYLE, B.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity, Cambridge, Examiner in Hebrew.
GEORGE FAIRBURN, M.A., Examiner in English Literature.
E. A. SCHAEFER, F.R.S., Professor of Physiology, University College, London, Examiner in Physiology.
ARTHUR L. SMITH, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, Examiner in History and in Political Economy.
RALPH STOCKMAN, M.D., Lecturer in Materia Medica and Therapeutics, School of Medicine, Edinburgh, Examiner in Materia Medica and Pharmacology.
G. SIMS WOODHEAD, M.D., F.R.C.P., Director of Laboratories of the Conjoint Board of Physicians and Surgeons, London, Examiner in Pathology and Morbid Anatomy.
SYLVIA YOUNG, B.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry, University College, Bristol, Examiner in Chemistry.
APPLICATIONS are invited for the EXAMINERSHIPS in GREEK, LATIN, POLITICAL ECONOMY, and in LAW. The appointment will be for three years, at the expiration of which the Examiner is not eligible for re-election. Applications, which may be accompanied by copies of testimonials or references at the candidate's discretion, should be sent in on or before November 30th, 1894. Further particulars may be obtained from ALFRED T. BENTLEY, M.A., Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the next HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 14th of JANUARY, 1895. In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at Mason College, Birmingham; The Merchant Venturers' Technical College, Bristol; Durness College (for University College), Cardiff; The Royal Medical College, Exeter; The Training College, New City Road, Glasgow; The Yorkshire College, Leeds; Rutherford College, Newcastle-on-Tyne; The High School, Oswestry; The Public School, Plymouth; and The Grammar School, Portsmouth. Every Candidate is required to apply to the Registrar (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry not later than Monday, December 18th.
November 2nd, 1894. ARTHUR MILMAN, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

EXAMINERSHIP IN MORAL PHILOSOPHY AND LOGIC.
EXAMINERSHIP IN ENGLISH.
The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, in the month of December, appoint TWO EXAMINERS for DEGREES in ART as above, to hold office in each case for three years, from 1st January, 1895, at an annual salary, in the case of Moral Philosophy and Logic, of £50, and in the case of English, of £30. Candidates must lodge with the undersigned twenty printed copies of their application and testimonials, on or before Friday, Nov. 30th.
ALAN E. CLAPPERTON, Secretary of the Glasgow University Court, 91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
GIBBON COMMÉMORATION, 1794–1894.
President—The EARL of SHEFFIELD.
MONDAY, 12th November, at 12 noon—EXHIBITION, at the British Museum, of Portraits, Manuscripts, and Relics of Gibbon.
THURSDAY, 15th November, at 4.30 p.m.—MEETING at the Museum of Practical Geology, Jernyn Street, S.W.
Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, President, in the Chair.
ADDRESSES by FREDERIC HARRISON, V.P.R. Hist. S., and others.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Fisher, Esq., of Norton, Midlothian; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgway, 36, Forchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

AT MRS. LOUISE JOPLING'S ART SCHOOL, Logan Place, Earl's Court Road. MISS HOPE REA will give a SERIES of FIVE LECTURES (weekly) on "ITALIAN SCULPTURE," with lantern illustrations, commencing FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 23rd, at 4.30. Tickets: Series, 5s.; Single 1s.—Apply Miss REA, 60, Belzize Park Gardens, or the LADY SUPERINTENDENT, Art School, South Kensington.

MINIATURE of a LADY, in antique gold frame, with hair painted by Cosway, warranted, price £45. CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street, Birmingham. Book Catalogues gratis. Libraries Purchased. Established nearly 50 years.

EMIL SAUER—ST. JAMES'S HALL.—EIGHT PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

EMIL SAUER will give his FIRST PIANOFORTE RECITAL AT ST. JAMES'S HALL. (Under the direction of Mr. ERNEST CAVOUR, On TUESDAY, November 13, at 3 p.m. Concert Grand by Rud. Ibach Sohn. Tickets—Stalls, 15s., 10s., 6s., 7s., 6d.; unreserved seats, 3s., 2s., and 1s., at Basil Tree's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall; Messrs. Chappell and Co's, 54, New Bond Street; usual agents; of Rud. Ibach Sohn, 113, Oxford Street, W., and of the Concert Direction ERNEST CAVOUR, 138, Adelaide Road, N.W.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

ACADEMY. A complete series, or any vols. bound in cloth. CHAUCER SOCIETY PUBLICATIONS. Last 10 years. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE. Vol. 67 to 1886-1890. EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY PUBLICATIONS. Last 10 years. ECONOMIC REVIEW. Any parts. JOURNAL OF PHILOLOGY. Vols 1 to 9, or any of numbers 9 to 18. MIND, Journal of Psychology, Nos. 40 to 64, or any. ONCE A WEEK. Any vols. since 1972. SATURDAY REVIEW, recent years. SPECTATOR. A set. G. BUCKLE, 60, Stanhope Street, Newcastle Street, W.C.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN. The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Exeter, Glasgow, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Tarr, &c. For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, LL.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

Pail Mall.—Ancient Objects of Japanese Art, being the second and final portion of the Collection from Osaka, Kyoto, and Tokio, consigned from Japan, ex Verona and Salazie, in continuation of the Sale 25th October last.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce FOR SALE BY AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PAUL MALL, on THURSDAY NEXT, 15th November, at 1 o'clock precisely, ANCIENT OBJECTS of JAPANESE ART, consigned as above, comprising some valuable lacquers by the rare masters—Koyetsu, Korin, Tanhito, Kitsu, and Kaji-kawa, a few swords, some rare sets of armour and sword guards by Mitsu, Umetada, et cetera, by Hirata, Yasuhide, Hanenobu, and others, illustrated books of good quality and coloured woodblocks, engravings, and an important series of antique pottery and porcelain. May be viewed Tuesday and Wednesday next, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Paul Mall.

Ready this day, crown 8vo, price 3s., post paid. A COMPENDIUM of PAINTING. BY J. ACQUES BLOCK. A literal translation of the Second French Edition. Copyright. London: Percy Young, 17, Gower Street, W.C.; and of all Booksellers and Artists' Colourmen.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FABLES of ÆSOP.

Selected, Told Anew, and their History Traced, by JOSEPH JACOBS. Done into Pictures by Richard Heighway. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, 6s.
[The Cranford Series]

THE COMPLETE WORKS of

ALFRED Lord TENNYSON. In 1 volume. With Portrait engraved on Steel by G. J. Stodart. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MORNING POST.—"May fairly be described as the best one-volume edition of any modern poet's writings."

PEN DRAWING and PEN

DRAUGHTSMEN. Their Work and their Methods. A Study of the Art To-day, with Technical Suggestions. By JOSEPH PENNELL. A New and Enlarged Edition, with 395 Illustrations. Demy 4to, 42s. net.

DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Joseph Pennell has brought out a second and greatly enlarged edition of his excellent treatise 'Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen.' . . . A splendid album of illustrations. . . . It is a veritable encyclopædia of its subject, and its value will increase with age."

SIBYLLA. By Sir H. S.

CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E., Author of "Wheat and Tares," &c. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"A book to be read at least twice—once for the story, and as often as one pleases for the good things scattered in it."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"One of those rare books which are no sooner read than they tempt their reader to prompt and assiduous re-perusal."

A CORNER of CATHAY:

Studies from Life Among the Chinese. By ADELE M. FIELDE. With Illustrations and Coloured Plates. Fcap. 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"With charming illustrations by native artists. . . . Contains some very interesting facts about the life of the Chinese."

MAURICE; or, the Red Jar. A

Tale of Magic and Adventure for Boys and Girls. By the Countess of JERSEY. With Illustrations by Rosie M. M. Pitman. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALL MALL BUDGET.—"There is a charm of genuine simplicity in the narration."

OBSERVER.—"The book is quite delightfully written, for Lady Jersey is one who writes prose as a poet writes it. . . . The illustrations are very suitable to the text, and show no little skill in designing."

MY NEW HOME. By Mrs.

MOLESWORTH. Illustrated by Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

DAILY NEWS.—"Bright and readable, and fully sustains the authoress's reputation."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A gracefully told tale for girls."

JUDAH. An Original Play in Three Acts. By HENRY ARTHUR JONES. 12mo, 2s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of the ENG-

LISH LANGUAGE. By OLIVER FARRAR EMERSON, A.M., Ph.D., Assistant-Professor of Rhetoric and English Philology in Cornell University. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

INTEGRAL CALCULUS for

BEGINNERS. With an Introduction to the Study of Differential Equations. By JOSEPH EDWARDS, M.A., formerly Fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

A TREATISE on CHEMIS-

TRY. By SIR H. E. ROSCOE, F.R.S., and the late C. SCHORLEMMER, F.R.S. Vol. I. the Non-Metallic Elements. New Edition. Completely Revised by Sir H. E. Roscoe, assisted by Drs. H. G. Colman and A. Harden. With 374 Illustrations and a Portrait of Dalton engraved by C. H. Jones. 8vo, 21s.

THE RISE and DEVELOP-

MENT of ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By Carl SCHORLEMMER, LL.D., F.R.S., late Professor of Organic Chemistry in the Owen's College, Manchester, Victoria University. Revised edition. Edited by ARTHUR SMITHHELLS, B.Sc. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

THE ODES OF HORACE AND THE CARMEN SÆCULARE.

Translated into English Verse by the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.
A limited number of Copies, printed on best Hand-made Paper, rubricated, will be sold at One Guinea each net.
[Just out.]

JOSIAH WEDGWOOD, F.R.S., the Great Artistic Potter, His Personal History.

By SAMUEL SMILES, LL.D., Author of "The Lives of the Engineers," of "Self-Help," "Character," &c. [Next week.]

SIR WILLIAM GREGORY, KCMG., FORMERLY M.P., AND SOMETIME GOVERNOR OF CEYLON.

With Portrait, 8vo, 16s.

An Autobiography.

Edited by Lady GREGORY.

"The charm of the book lies not only in the spirited anecdotes with which it abounds, but in the self-revelation of a versatile and sunny nature."—Standard.

"The volume is one of the most fascinating works of biography of the season."—Scotsman.

THE LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF WILLIAM BUCKLAND, D.D., F.R.S., SOMETIME DEAN OF WESTMINSTER, TWICE PRESIDENT OF THE GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY, AND FIRST PRESIDENT OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

By his Daughter, Mrs. GORDON.

"Next to Charles Darwin, Dean Buckland is certainly the most interesting personality in the field of natural science that the present century has produced."—Daily News.
"We commend the book to our readers, alike for its record of an interesting career and its picture of a character as lovable as it was original."—Westminster Gazette.

SIR VICTOR BROOKE, Bart., Sportsman and Naturalist.

His Diaries and Correspondence.

With a Chapter on his Researches in Natural History, by Sir WILLIAM H. FLOWER, K.C.B., Director of the Natural History Branch of the British Museum.

Edited, with a Memoir of his Life, by O. LESLIE STEPHEN.

[Just out.]

AN UNRECORDED CHAPTER OF THE INDIAN MUTINY.

Being the Personal Reminiscences of REGINALD G. WILBERFORCE, late 52nd Light Infantry.

Compiled from a Diary and Letters Written on the Spot.

[Just out.]

THE ENGLISH NOVEL,

From its Origin to the Publication of "Waverley."

By Professor RALEIGH, University College, Liverpool.

This work is bound in two forms, either as a library book or as one of the Series of "University Extension Manuals."

"He has read enormously and has digested his learning; his style has ease, measure, point; his summaries are luminous; his criticism of individuals is generally sound; and, on the whole, his book is one to have as well as read—alike for the conclusions it achieves and the information it arrays."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A SELECTION FROM THE WRITINGS OF DEAN STANLEY.

Edited by the Venerable A. S. AGLEN, Archdeacon of St. Andrews.

"A series of animated and picturesque passages culled from the writings of the Dean. He was one of those writers, we venture to think, who are seen more to advantage in select passages than in continuous works, and this volume ought to prove highly popular."—Athenæum.

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

By GEORGE SALMON, D.D.

A New Edition (Seventh), with Appendix consisting of Six Notes by Dr. Salmon. 1. Latin Translations of the Bible—2. The Synoptic Question. 3. The Gospel of St. Peter. 4. The Alogi. 5. Codex Bezae. 6. The Syriac Text of the Epistle to the Hebrews. [Shortly.]

A NEW SERIES.—8vo, 14s.

DR. DÖLLINGER'S ADDRESSES ON HISTORICAL AND LITERARY SUBJECTS.

Translated, in accordance with the wish of the late Author, by MARGARET WARRE.

CONTENTS.—Universities, Past and Present—Founders of Religions—The Empire of Charles the Great and his Successors—Anagni—The Destruction of the Order of Knights Templars—The History of Religious Freedom—Various Estimates of the French Revolution—The Literature of the United States of America.

NEARLY READY.

THE LIFE and CORRESPONDENCE of SIR BARTLE FRERE, Bart.

Derived from hitherto Unpublished Documents. By JOHN MARTINEAU. Portraits and Maps. 2 vols., 8vo.

ROMAN GOSSIP. By Mrs. Minto Elliot, Author of "An Idle Woman in Sicily," "Old Court Life in France," &c. Crown 8vo.

THE LIFE of PROFESSOR OWEN. Based on his Correspondence, his Diaries, and those of his Wife. By his Grandson, the Rev. RICHARD OWEN. With a Chapter by the Right Hon. T. H. HUXLEY. With Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY
ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume,
is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERK HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes
in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

THEATRES.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE LADY SLAVEY. Miss
May Yoke and Mr. Charles Dabry; Mesdames Adelaide
Astor, Jenny McNulty, and Blanche Barnett; Messrs. Robert Pateman, H. Snarling, G. Humphrey, and Henry Beaumont.
At 7.45, THE FUTURE MRS. RANSOME.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE NEW WOMAN. Mr.
Fred Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. J. G. Grahame, Mr. Wyes,
Mr. Champion, Mr. Byron; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Alma
Murray, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Gertrude Warden, Miss Ri-kards, and Miss Wilfred Emery.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Arthur Chodligh.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A GAY WIDOW, adapted by Mr. F. C. Burnand from Farjou and Deslandes' farcial comedy, "Belle Maman." Preceded at 8 by Theyre Smith's OLD CRONIES.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE CASE OF REBELLIOUS
SUSAN. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Mr. Kemble, Mr. Fredk.
Kerr, Mr. C. P. Little, Mr. Bea Webster, Mr. E. Dagnall;
Miss Fanny Coleman, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Nina Boucicault, and Miss Mary Moore.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIRLY GIRL. Messrs.
C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Geo. Grossmith, jun., Lawrence D'Orsay, Farren-Soutar, R. Somerville, Gilbert Portous, Charles Eaton, and Rutland Barrington; Mesdames Kate Cutler, Nellie Malone, Marie Studt, and Louie Pound. Kate
Hodson, Violet Robinson, Nina Martino, and Lottie Venn.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

TO-NIGHT, at 7.30, THE DERBY WINNIE. Mrs. John
Wood, Misses Beatrice Lamb, Alma Hunter, Patti Browne,
Evelyn Hughes, L. Moodie, Hettie Dene; Messrs. Arthur Houheiter, George Giddens, Lionel Bland, Harry Evers-field, Charles Dalton, East, Lawford, Harding, and Charles Cartwright.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S.
Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer,
Oecil Thornbury, and H. Roberts Smith; Misses Ada
Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves, Nina Boucicault,
At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

PRINCE OF WALES THEATRE.

MR. ARTHUR ROBERTS' SEASON.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CLAUDE DUVAL. Messrs.
Eric Thorne, Fitzroy Morgan, H. O. Clarey, E. Stevens, and Mr. Arthur Roberts. Misses A. Liddell, E. Ellerslie, N.
Ardie, Thornhill, L. Norman, I. Young, F. Schubert, G.
Edwards, M. Crichton, A. Peppiatte, M. Burdell, and Miss Marie Halton.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, MIREITE. Messrs. Courtice Pounds, Scott-Fisher, Walter Passmore, John Coates, Scott
Russell, and Richard Temple; Mesdames Florence Percy, Emmie Owen, and R. Brandram.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Messrs. Arthur
Helmere, J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K.
Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, T. Kingston, J. L. Mackay;
Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer,
A. Beet. Preceded at 8.15, by LOYAL.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED.

Free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled
Irish Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-dozen, post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner
Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table

IRISH LINEN

Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each,
2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10s. 6d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard;
and Linen Diaper, 8s. 6d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4s. 6d. per yard;
Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN
HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.
per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow
Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—
Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—
Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Crests of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

READY THIS DAY.

Crown 8vo, 150 pages, 2s., cloth.

MODERN JOURNALISM

A Handbook of Instruction and Counsel for the Young Journalist.

By J. B. MACKIE,

Fellow of the Institute of Journalists.

LONDON: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON,
7, STATIONERS' HALL COURT, E.C.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL BAILEY, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against
Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

Hansard & Sons, 59, Tall Mall.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICA-TIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO AND A HALF PER CENT. INTEREST ON DEPOSITS

repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum

monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

365 SHAVES FOR 6d.

A STICK of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP

is said to LAST A YEAR.

STICKS 6d., 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; CAKES 1s., 2s., 3s.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

NATIONAL

Financial Year ends 20th November, 1894.

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENT

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,700,000
PAID IN CLAIMS, £9,000,000

INSTITUTION.

All the Profits are divided amongst the Assured; already divided £4 600,000. All persons now assuring will receive an additional share of Profit over later Entrants,
at the next Division in 1897.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

Just ready, demy 8vo, cloth, price 25s.

THE GREAT ICE AGE,
And its Relation to the Antiquity of Man.By JAMES GEIKIE, D.C.L. LL.D. F.R.S., &c.
Marchion Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh.Third Edition, largely Rewritten and much Enlarged.
With Two New Chapters on the "Glacial Phenomena of North America," by Prof. T. C. CHAMBERLIN.
Also 18 Maps and 78 Illustrations.

A NEW FAMILY ATLAS.

STANFORD'S
FAMILY ATLAS OF
GENERAL GEOGRAPHY.Exhibiting the various Physical and Political Divisions of the Chief Countries of the World.Fifty Maps, with a List of Latitudes and Longitudes.
Imperial Folio, half-morocco, price Five Guineas.
Size, when shut, 16 inches by 23 inches.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

STANFORD'S
LONDON ATLAS OF
UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY.QUARTO EDITION. Containing 48 Coloured Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Steel and Copper
Plates, and an Alphabetical List of about 30,000 Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, cloth sides, gilt edges, price 30s. Size, when shut, 12 inches by 15 inches."We have used it constantly for years and we have never found it surpassed for the combined merits of handiness,
cheapness, accuracy, and clearness."—Saturday Review.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED.

STANFORD'S
OCTAVO ATLAS OF
MODERN GEOGRAPHY.Containing 28 Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Copper-Plates; also an Alphabetical List of over 30,000 Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Handsomely bound in morocco, gilt edges, price 21s. Size, when shut, 7½ inches by 13 inches.

A NEW LARGE SCALE MAP OF LONDON.

STANFORD'S NEW MAP
OF THE
COUNTY OF LONDON.On the scale of four inches to one mile, in twenty sheets.
Size, when mounted as one Map, 84 by 57 inches. Prices:
Coloured sheets, 15s.; flat in portfolio, 18s.; mounted to fold in case in five divisions, 45s.; mounted on mahogany rollers and varnished, 45s.; mounted on spring roller, £6. The sheets are also sold separately, price 1s. each. Prospectus, with Index Map, sent free on application.

Recently published, Fourth Edition, 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d.

THE NEXT NAVAL WAR.

By Capt. S. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.N.

With Frontispiece by Chevalier E. Martino.

Demy 8vo, illustrated wrapper.

"A terse and vigorous declaration of facts."—Globe.
"Written with considerable ingenuity."—Scotsman.
"An interesting forecast."—Broad Arrow.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

STANFORD'S MAP OF EASTERN CHINA, JAPAN,
AND KOREA,The Seat of War in 1894, showing the Treaty Ports, Railways, and Submarine Cables. New Edition, Revised to Date, and
with an Enlarged Inset Map of Korea. One sheet, size 22 inches by 30 inches. Scale 110 miles to an inch. Prices:
coloured sheet, 3s.; per post, packed on roller, 3s. 6d.;
mounted to fold in case, 5s.; per post, 5s. 3d.LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHANCING CROSS, S.W.
Geographer to Her Majesty the Queen.

PUBLISHED BY ELLIOT STOCK.

NEW VOLUME OF THE POPULAR COUNTY HISTORY SERIES.

In demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. Hand-made paper, Roxburgh binding, 10s. 6d. net. Large Paper, 31s. 6d. net.A HISTORY OF LANCASHIRE. By Lieutenant-Colonel FISHWICK, F.S.A. (the Lancashire Historian)."In this handy work Colonel Fishwick gives us a selected history of the county superior to any other Lancashire history within the compass of a single volume."—Bury Times.

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED IN THE SERIES.

A HISTORY OF WESTMORELAND. By RICHARD S. FERGUSON, M.A., LL.M., F.S.A.

"This book is a very thorough and ample treatise; it is written in a style as distinguished as interesting, and should prove attractive to readers far beyond the boundaries of the county specially dealt with."—Black and White.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE. By THOS. W. SHORE, F.G.S.

"A very valuable volume. It presents to the reader, for the first time in a condensed form, a general view of the entire history of Hampshire."—Hampshire Advertiser.

A HISTORY OF CUMBERLAND. By RICHARD S. FERGUSON, M.A., LL.M., F.S.A.

"If Mr. Stock can find a Mr. Fergusson to write the history of each of the other counties of England and Wales, the success of his series of 'Popular County Histories' may be considered as assured."—The Speaker.

A HISTORY OF WARWICKSHIRE. By SAM. TIMMINS, F.S.A.

"Mr. Timmins has made many useful discoveries in the history of his county, which are here set forth. But the book appeals quite as much to the general reader as to the Warwickshire man."—St. James's Gazette.

A HISTORY OF BERKSHIRE. By Lieut.-Col. COOPER KING.

"Colonel King has done his work well, and his sketch of Berkshire is both useful and entertaining."—*Morning Post*THE HISTORY OF DERBYSHIRE. By JOHN PENDLETON, Author of "Old and New Chesterfield.""An entertaining and very instructive guide to all that is most interesting in the county."—Times.THE HISTORY OF DEVONSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S., Author of the "West Country Garland," &c."Ought to be greatly popular with the residents, and will have general interest for all who have the talent for locality."—Contemporary Review.A HISTORY OF NORFOLK. By WALTER RYE, Author of "The Norfolk Antiquarian
Miscellany," &c."At once the most learned and entertaining county guide that has ever been compiled. It is difficult to describe Mr.
Rye's delightful book."—Athenaeum.

NOTE.—Some of the Large-Paper Editions of above are out of print.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

NOW READY, price 2s. 6d., at all Bookstalls.

THE AMBASSADORIAL NUMBER OF

The Salon.

The most unique production offered at the price.

The Contents include—

SIGNED CONTRIBUTIONS by the various AMBASSADORS and MINISTERS accredited to the COURT OF ST. JAMES.PORTRAITS and BIOGRAPHIES of their EXCELLENCIES. With Facsimile Autographs.

Preceded by a

FULL-PAGE PORTRAIT OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
NATIONAL ANTHEMS in FULL SCORE of England, France, Germany, Russia, Austria, Italy, Denmark, Spain, Portugal, Greece, Belgium, Switzerland, Serbia, Turkey, Persia, Sweden, Norway,
United States, Brazil, China, and Japan. (In all, 21 pages of Music.)
DEFINITIONS OF PEACE. Written and Signed by the Various Ambassadors.ARTICLES ON PEACE AND CONCORD. By Sir Joseph Paine, Bart.,
M.P., President of the Peace Society, and Hodgson Pratt, Esq., Chairman International Arbitration and Peace Association.The whole issue forms a luxurious International Album, which should find a place in every refined home.

SALON Publishing Office, 21, Farnival St., London, and all Newsagents

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW LIST.

ARROWSMITH'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL, 1s.

THE INDISCRETION OF THE DUCHESS.

By ANTHONY HOPE, Author of "The Prisoner of Zenda."
"It is amazingly brilliant and adroit, and compels unshaken admiration."
—Today. "Exceedingly entertaining."—St. James's Budget.
"Well worthy of the author of 'The Prisoner of Zenda,'—it continues the Gazette. "Exciting incidents crowd one upon the other, and hold the reader's attention in the same close way as did those of 'The Prisoner of Zenda.'—Publishers' Circular. "The indiscreet duchess is our charming, insinuating little friend Dolly."—The Referee.

By ARCHIBALD FORBES, THE FAMOUS WAR CORRESPONDENT.

CAZAR and SULTAN: the Adventures of a British Lad in the Russo-Turkish War. By ARCHIBALD FORBES. Demy 8vo, 423 pp., cloth, 10s. 6d. 13 Illustrations. "A complete and most spirited history of the Russo-Turkish War."—The Queen. "Vivid, readable, and exciting."—Review of Reviews.HUSBAND and BROTHER. A few Chapters in a Woman's Life of To-day. By KATHARINE
ST. JOHN CONWAY, B.A. 228 pp., demy 12mo, 1s.THE IDEAL CITY. By Rev. Canon
BARNETT. 32 pp., demy 16mo, One Penny.

Printed J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL & Co., Ltd. And Railway Bookstalls.

JAMES NISBET & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

WORDS to the LAITY. By the Ven.

WILLIAM MACDONALD SINCLAIR, D.D., Archdeacon of London. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.
"Able and tolerably written."—Scotsman.

GREAT PRINCIPLES OF DIVINE

TRUTH. By the Rev. the late Canon HOARE, M.A. With Portrait. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. (In a few days)

THE NEW ACTS of the APOSTLES.

Being Lectures on Foreign Missions. By the Rev. A. T. PIER-SON, D.D. With Coloured Chart showing the prevailing Religions of the World and the Progress of Evangelisation. Extra crown 8vo, 6s."Its publication ought to create a new enthusiasm in missionary work."—Christian Commonwealth.

PRAYERS for HEART and HOME.

Being Morning and Evening Devotions for One Month for Family and Private Use. By the Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A. Post 4to, 2s. 6d."A thoroughly devotional spirit breathes through this useful manual. It ought to be present and valued in many homes."—Liverpool Mercury.

THE HOLIEST of ALL An Exposition of the Hebrews. By the Rev. ANDREW MURRAY.

Post 4to, 7s. 6d. (In a few days)

GOD is LOVE, and other Sermons.

By the late Rev. AUBREY L. MOORE, M.A., Hon. Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.
"Terse, practical, full of spiritual fervour and ethical insight."—Times.

WELL BEGUN. Notes for those who have to make their way in the world. A Book for Young Men.

By the Rev. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D., Author of "The People's Bible," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s."There is not a page without something to stimulate the mind to action, and all that is said has a sound practical value."—Rock.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES and INCIDENTS. By the late R. M. BALLANTYNE. With Portrait.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FROM PLOUGHSHARE to PULPIT.

A Tale of Aberdeen University Life. By GORDON STABLES,
M.D., R.N. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.
"Dr. Gordon Stables is as fresh and entertaining as ever."—Spectator.

LIZETTE. A Story for Girls. By

EMMA MARSHALL. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.
"The purity and simplicity of style which charmed the readers of Mrs. Marshall's early stories are still apparent in 'Lizette,' and the plot moves on with never-hurrying, but never-flagging, interest."—British Weekly.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

New Works and New Editions.

Vol. I, Now Ready, remaining volumes at intervals of one month.

The HISTORY of ROME

from the Earliest Times to the Reign of Augustus. By THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated with the sanction of the Author by WILLIAM PURDIE DICKSON, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow. New and Cheaper Edition, revised, and embodying all the most recent alterations and additions made by Dr. Mommsen. In 5 vols., crown 8vo., to be issued at monthly intervals, price 7s. 6d. each.

Vol. I, Now Ready, remaining volumes at intervals of one month.

THE HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION (1789-1800). By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated, with Notes and Illustrations from the most authentic sources, by FREDERICK SBOBERL. New Edition, with 50 Illustrations on steel. In 5 vols., demy 8vo., to be published monthly, price 9s. each.

NOW READY.

THROUGH TEN ENGLISH COUNTIES.

By JAMES JOHN HISSEY.
Author of "A Holiday on the Road," &c.
Demy 8vo., with 16 Illustrations, 16s.

NOW READY.

TWO SUMMERS IN

GUYENNE, 1892-3: a Chronicle on the Wayside and Waterside. By EDWARD HARRISON BARKER, Author of "Wayfaring in France," &c. 1 vol., demy 8vo., with numerous Illustrations, 16s.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH WHIST and

ENGLISH WHIST-PLAYERS. By WILLIAM PRIDEAUX COURNEY. 1 vol., demy 8vo., 14s.

NOW READY.

LETTERS from the

CAMP to HIS RELATIVES at HOME DURING the SIEGE of SEBASTOPOL. By COLIN FREDERICK CAMPBELL. With Introduction by Field-Marshal Lord WOLSELEY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., 7s. 6d.

NOW READY.

PERSIAN PICTURES—

SAFAR NAMEH: a Book of Travel in the East. In crown 8vo., 6s.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

NOW READY.

A FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.

By the AUTHOR of "DR. EDITH ROMNEY."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

The PRINCESS ROYAL

By KATHARINE WYLDE.
Author of "Mr. Bryant's Mistake."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

THE INTENDED.

By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo., 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

A. & C. BLACK'S NEW BOOKS.

THE LIFE of CHRIST as REPRESENTED in ART. By FREDERIC W. FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S. With Photogravure Frontispiece and about 200 Illustrations and Cuts. 1 vol., demy 8vo., 21s.

The RELIGION of the SEMITES

—The FUNDAMENTAL INSTITUTIONS. By the late W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged by the Author. Demy 8vo., cloth, 15s. net.

SYRIAC LITERATURE. By the late WILLIAM WRIGHT, Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo., cloth, 6s. net.

MONISM as CONNECTING

RELIGION and SCIENCE. The Confession of Faith of a Man of Science. By Professor ERNST HAECKEL. Translated from the German by J. D. F. GILCHRIST. Crown 8vo., cloth.

HISTORICAL PROGRESS and

IDEAL SOCIALISM. By J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo., cloth, 1s. 6d.

LABOUR and the POPULAR

WELFARE. By W. H. MALLOCK, Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" "Social Equality," &c. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo., paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE SENILE HEART: its

Symptoms, Sequels, and Treatment. By GEORGE WILLIAM BALFOUR, M.D., LL.D. Crown 8vo., cloth, illustrated, 5s.

ON the PROCESSES for the PRODUCTION of EX LIBRIS. By JOHN VINYCOMB, M.R.I.A. Fcap. 8vo., cloth, illustrated, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON UP TO DATE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.
Second Thousand. Crown 8vo., cloth, 3s. 6d.

POSTE RESTANTE: a Novel.

By C. Y. HARGREAVES, Author of "Paul Romer." 3 vols., crown 8vo., cloth, 31s. 6d.

JOHN DARKER: a Novel. By

AUBREY LEE. 3 vols., crown 8vo., cloth, 31s. 6d.

DRYBURGH EDITION WAVERLEY NOVELS.

Illustrated by 250 Woodcuts, especially drawn and engraved for this Edition. Now Complete in 25 vols. Price in sets, cloth, £6 5s. Also in half-calf, plain; half-calf, extra, gilt top, and half-morocco, gilt top.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

READY TO-DAY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Life and Times of J. Greenleaf Whittier 1807-1892.

By S. T. PICKARD

With Steel-Plate Engravings. 2 vols., crown 8vo., 18s.

An entirely new and authoritative biography based on the Quaker Poet's own letters and papers.

Whittier's services, when a young journalist, to the Anti-Slavery movement were memorable. "Every word," it was admitted, "which he wrote on this great question was a blow, and many a time-server who was proof against Lloyd Garrison's denunciations or Wendell Phillips' invectives quailed before Whittier's Rhymes." In the manner of his life, as well as in much of the method of his work, Whittier was the Cowper of New England.

THE SHERMAN LETTERS.

Correspondence between General and Senator Sherman, from 1837 to 1891. By Mrs. SHERMAN THORNDIKE. With Portrait, 8vo., cloth, 16s.

PICTURE BOOK CEYLON.

Vol. II. KANDY and PERADENIYA. By HENRY W. GAVE. Demy 4to, numerous full-page illustrations in Woodburygravure, gilt edges, roxburghs binding, 28s. net.

"A series of beautiful photographic illustrations of scenery and life... accompanied by appropriate letterpress, descriptive and historical."—Times.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN the DAY of BATTLE: a

Romance. By J. A. STEUART, Author of "Kilgroom: a Story of Ireland," &c. 8 vols., crown 8vo., 31s. 6d.

"A bold and stirring story, full of colour, incident, and strife... The pirates, the Arab tribes, and their crimes and conflicts are vigorously depicted; and the third volume, in which the Scotch hero gets safely into and out of the Holy City, is strikingly picturesque and interesting."—World.

"A straightforward, rattling, breezy romance. It is a gallant story, in which the exciting adventures tumble over each other's heels. A good, honest, wholesome novel. In the ranks of our new school of romance the author deserves to find a prominent place."—Daily Telegraph.

THREE NAPOLEONIC NOVELS BY ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

Never before Translated.

Each in 2 vols., uniform crown 8vo., cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per vol.

THE COMPANY OF JEHU.

THE LAST VENDEE; or, The She-Wolves of Machecoul.

THE FIRST REPUBLIC; or, The Whites and the Blues.

LOW'S SERIES OF ORIGINAL NOVELS.

Each in One Volume at 6s.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By

WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Daughter of Beth,"

PERLYCROSS: a Tale of the Western Hills. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," &c.

THE MAN from OSHKOSH: a Story.

By JOHN HICKS, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru.

THE GATES of DAWN. By Fergus

HUME, Author of "The Fever of Life," &c.

THERMODYNAMICS Treated with

Elementary Mathematics, and containing Applications to Animal and Vegetable Life, Tidal Friction and Electricity. By J. PARKER, M.A., Author of "Elementary Thermodynamics." With numerous Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, 10s. 6d.

A TEXT-BOOK of MECHANICS and HYDROSTATICS. By HERBERT HANCOCK, M.A., F.R.A.S., Lecturer on Geometry to the Architectural Association, and Mathematical Master in Bancroft's School, Woodford. With over 400 Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 5s.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

NOVEMBER NUMBER.

CONTENTS.—Election Night in a Newspaper Office (Illustrated). Julian Ralph—English Railroad Methods (Illustrated). H. G. Prout—The Horse (Illustrated). N. S. Shuler—True Pictures Among the Poor (Four Articles)—The American Girl's Art Club in Paris (Illustrated). Emily Aylward—How Whalebone Caused a Wedding (Illustrated). Joel Chandler Harris—The King of Curranpaw: a Wolf Story (Illustrated). Ernest E. Thompson—John March, Southerner, Chaps. Ixxviii., George W. Cable, &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1894.

No. 1175, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

"CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES." — The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 1789-1815. By J. H. Rose. (Cambridge: The University Press.)

THE "Cambridge Historical Series," edited by Prof. G. W. Prothero, promises well, if I may judge from the first of its parts before me. This sketch of the Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, from the pen of Mr. Rose, is, for its size, a book of no common merit. I certainly do not altogether concur with the views of the author on some passages of that marvellous drama of human nature. Some of his conclusions are perhaps without warrant; he has omitted considerations that should have been made prominent; here and there, I think, he has run into paradox. But he has admirably worked out the central idea, which he has made the cardinal feature of his work; he has grouped his facts around it with remarkable skill; he has, for the most part, placed events in their true proportions and just significance; and he has described the actors, in the great scenes he sets out, well. His narrative is well arranged and attractive; his information and research are copious; and much of his work is of sterling value, especially his account of some facts in the obscure and ill-known politics of the time, of the everchanging negotiations of 1795-1815, and of the Congress of Vienna and its many intrigues. I have detected only a few errors; and these are not of much importance, bearing in mind the general scope of the volume. The style of Mr. Rose is keen and vigorous; but I have noticed a few words and some phrases which Macaulay and Whewell would have branded as unfit for Cambridge.

The chief purpose of Mr. Rose is to show how the revolution which passed over France caused a revolution which shook the continent: how each were parts of a stupendous whole. This conception of the period is not new; but it has not hitherto been worked out with equal skill and judgment, at least in a book of small compass. Three main causes enabled France to overthrow the old order of Europe, and to send forth her ideas, amid war and terror, to triumph over the wreck of the decaying feudal monarchies. The German Empire had never recovered from the disasters of the Thirty Years' War; the long strife between Prussia and Austria had paralysed the chief states of Germany; and the blind foreign policy of the leading German powers, looking towards the East and not towards the West, made them disregard the storm when it broke out in France, and unable to quell it even if they had the will. Again, feudalism in France was completely effete, though its institutions were far from gone. It was odious to the mass of the French nation; and this aversion to it found much sympathy in Germany, in Italy, and in other parts of the continent, though feudalism in them still had power, and even retained, in appearance, much of its vigour. Nevertheless, the soil in Central and Southern Europe was ready to receive the seeds of a great change, even though wafted from a distant clime; and this tendency had been distinctly increased by the benevolent despots of the eighteenth century. Finally, the intellectual ideas of France had been dominant for many years: these, whether they flowed from Voltaire or Rousseau, from Diderot, Helvetius, or even Turgot, were all hostile to the Ancient Régime, as it existed from the Po to the Oder; and the old continent was largely swayed by their power.

Mr. Rose has described all this very well, though he has, perhaps, exaggerated the force of the new French philosophy. His account of the Revolution, in its first years, in France is, on the whole, exceedingly good. I can only indicate points in which it may be questioned. He makes too much, perhaps, of the extreme unwisdom of the Court when the States-General met, and of the Conservative tendencies of the Tiers Etat. Society and government fell to pieces at once in France; and if the Revolution need not have been what it was, it was inevitable to a very great extent. He justly remarks that the political work of the National Assembly was an evanescent phantom—he has fairly sketched this creation of conceited theory; but I much doubt if he is correct in saying that its essential tendency was to centralise, though he is certainly right in showing that its social work in abolishing feudalism and all that belonged to it had enormous and far-reaching effects. He sets forth, in the main well, the succession of follies, faults, and crimes—no party in France is free from grave blame—that led to the horrors of 1793-4; and he clearly points out that it was the ambition and greed of Austria and Prussia, and of that Machiavel of women, Catharine, which, fixing on their hapless prey, Poland, gave the Revolution time to arm itself for the field. I think he overrates the importance of the Terrorist rule as the means of saving France from her foes. It gave to her forces, no doubt, an energetic impulse; but she owed more to the blunders, the selfishness, and the half-hearted weakness of the divided and jealous Allies, to the heroism of her military chiefs and her armies—nay, to the old soldiers of the fallen monarchy. The power, too, of her ideas was at this crisis immense. The evangel she proclaimed of the rights of man had prodigious influence in old Europe, before it felt the weight of her sword. It contributed largely to her success in 1792-3. It should be added that, in this part of his work, Mr. Rose has ably vindicated the foreign policy of Pitt, from the beginning of the Revolution until the time when England was unhappily forced into war with France.

The war, after the Peace of Basle, had been, to a certain extent, transformed: it had begun to resemble one of the old wars of Europe. The onset of the coalition had failed; the Revolution in France had become less violent; the exhaustion of disenchantment had arrived; France was fighting a league of discomfited enemies. In these circumstances she came, by degrees, under the influence of the extraordinary man whose destiny it was to give to the Revolution, and to all that was best and most solid in it, an extension it would not have acquired otherwise. Mr. Rose's picture of Napoleon is vivid and striking. He does full justice to his marvellous powers; but he has hardly brought out the human side of his character. Mr. Rose, too, I believe, is quite wrong in describing Napoleon as, at any time, a Terrorist: he hated the Terror and its bloody cruelty. It is probable that he never knew Robespierre; and if he ever stooped to Jacobin rant, he abhorred Robespierre's fanatical crimes. I entirely differ from Mr. Rose, who has drawn a disadvantageous contrast between the "opportunistic" conduct of Bonaparte at the outset of his astonishing career, and the "principles" of the men in power in Paris: the first exhibited the keen insight and strong common sense of a statesmanlike mind, the second was the craze of half-blind enthusiasts. It is a mark of Napoleon's commanding powers that from the first moment he tried to reconcile revolutionary France with old Europe, and to stifle the "ideology" he properly despised. But, as Mr. Rose points out very well, he fastened on what was really sound and beneficent in what the Revolution had done; he stood out from the beginning as the strong destroyer of feudalism and exclusive privilege, and as the champion of social equality, of the liberation of the soil, of the extension of just laws to all orders of men. Mr. Rose, following the confuted falsehoods of Jung, has not done justice to Napoleon at Toulon; but he has sketched the magnificent campaigns in Italy and the campaign of Egypt extremely well. He has rightly shown that Napoleon's genius as a great captain shone out from the first, but that his ambition as a conqueror was also made manifest. There can be no greater proof of Napoleon's supreme influence than his easy triumph of the 18th Brumaire. The Revolution seemed about to perish; France was menaced by a most formidable league; she was in a state of prostration, discord, and anarchy; and she turned, with a true instinct, to the deliverer she found.

Mr. Rose, as usual, has clearly sketched the great deeds of war which saved France from defeat, and made her the queen of the continent at the Peace of Amiens; but I must pass over this part of his narrative. He has described very well how Napoleon baffled Siéyes, and changed the constitution of the year VIII. into an instrument to make a great despot supreme; and, on the whole, he has done justice to the noble and creative reforms of the Consulate. He has not, however, placed in sufficient prominence the immense superiority Napoleon showed over all other Frenchmen in these conceptions; nor has he exactly indicated the nature of the results. Napoleon was the last of the great beneficent despots; but he was far greater than his predecessors; his work has stood the infallible test of time; and if he banished "ideology" from the renovated state of France, he secured the interests the Revolution had formed; and this, and his extraordinary genius in war, were the causes of the omnipotence he long possessed in France. Mr. Rose has fairly described the events which led to the rupture of the Peace of Amiens. I think with him that England deserves the least blame; but he might have indicated that the ruling powers in England, an aristocracy of privilege and wealth, were certain to come into sharp conflict with the democratic despotism now supreme in France. Mr. Rose's account of the preparations made by Napoleon to descend on our shores, and of the naval defence of England, ending in the crowning day of Trafalgar, is one of the least satisfactory parts of his book. He inclines to the belief that Napoleon's projects were, more or less, in the nature of a feint; but this view is impossible, if his Correspondence is fairly read. It should be specially noticed that Napoleon's idea that England would overthrow her government and set up a democratic Republic, should the feared army effect a landing, shows how little he understood England, though he was well aware of her formidable power. This is the most striking instance of the inborn contempt for patriotism and national passions and instincts which was perhaps his most conspicuous fault, and which contributed so much to his tremendous fall.

I pass over Mr. Rose's account of the tragic death of the Duc D'Enghien, and of the negotiations which led to the Coalition of 1805, described remarkably well in this volume. Nor can I dwell on the triumphs of Ulm and Austerlitz. I can only glance at the two great facts: the French Empire set up in 1804, and the settlement of Germany after the Peace of Presburg. It seems to me that Napoleon had much more than personal and dynastic views in placing the imperial crown on his head: he perceived the isolation of France in Europe; and his policy was to bring her into line with the old monarchies that still held sway on the continent. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that France had no sympathy with his gigantic dream of reviving the domination of Charlemagne. Here his powerful imagination overbore his judgment; here his ambition exceeded all just limits. Mr. Rose has indicated very ably, following out the leading idea of his work, how ripe, at this period, Germany was for a great political and social change; and how, under Napoleon's auspices, she accepted what he had made permanent and vital in the Revolution in France. The course of events, since the Peace of Lunéville, had been to break the old Empire up, and to dissolve it into chaotic fragments; and German feudalism and aristocratic privilege could no longer contend against the influence of the social equality, and the material welfare, which the institutions of the Consulate and its firm government had made completely secure in France. The results were seen in the Confederation of the Rhine, and in the extension of parts of the new order in France over whole tracts of Western and Southern Germany; and if the existence of the first was very brief, the second has been a lasting possession.

Mr. Rose, as always, has described well the complicated negotiations of 1806-7, which ended in Jena, Friedland, and Tilsit. He does full justice to the marvellous statecraft and ability of Napoleon in those events; but I do not think they give proof of the insight and wisdom he exhibited at an earlier period. Tilsit was a gigantic mistake: the alliance between an oriental despot and the crowned soldier of the French Revolution, founded on a plan to partition Europe, was in opposition to the nature of things; and the French Empire had already become an impossible portent that could not endure, a defiance to the laws that rule the world. Mr. Rose places the apogee of Napoleon's power at this moment of his career; but the Empire had far overpassed its climax. It was already creating discontent in France; it was committed to the ruinous Continental System, with its necessary results, universal conquest and the ill-will of every subject race from the Vistula to the Po and the Scheldt; and it had completely failed in its struggle with England. Yet it would be a mistake to suppose that, even in these years, Napoleon's system of internal government was a scheme of unmixed and harsh despotism. Mr. Rose ought to have given us a description of this; but he has scarcely attempted to touch the subject; and this omission is a grave shortcoming. He has probably made it because he has alleged that Napoleon's method of ruling France resembled that of the Committee of Public Safety—at least in the machinery employed—a paradox on which I shall not comment.

This volume sets forth, in the main correctly, the causes that led to the fall of Napoleon. I shall not follow Mr. Rose in detail, but shall notice positions of his that seem open to question. He has pointed out, rightly, how Napoleon's statecraft and tyranny led to the rising of Spain, the stirring of Austria in 1809, when victory hung for months in suspense, and the mighty upheaval of down-trodden Prussia; and there can be no doubt that the Continental System contributed largely to these events. He has clearly shown, too, that the Continental System was the principal cause of the quarrel with Russia, which ended in the catastrophe of 1812, and this precipitated at least Napoleon's ruin. But he has hardly made it sufficiently plain how the Continental System was itself due to the supremacy of England in every sea; and how England, therefore, from this very circumstance, became a chief author of Napoleon's fall, for she made his rule almost universally odious. On the whole, Mr. Rose, I think, overrates the effects of the rising of Prussia in 1813, and underrates the enormous power of England in bringing about the collapse of the Empire. We may accept in this matter Napoleon's judgment: "England was his greatest and most persevering enemy." Mr. Rose, too, has not dwelt enough on the consequences of the Peninsular War in wearing away Napoleon's military strength, and on the ambiguous, perhaps perfidious, policy of Austria at the crisis of 1813, which led the Emperor fatally astray. We must not forget his own emphatic words: it was the "Spanish allies and the Austrian match" that "really lost me the Imperial throne." The contest, too, with Rome, and the exhaustion of France, after many years of devouring war in which the nation had no interest, were potent agencies in producing the ultimate result; and to this should be added the greatest weakness of revolutionary despotism in the hour of misfortune. Mr. Rose, in considering this whole period, has hardly indicated with sufficient clearness how the principle of nationality exerted itself in Germany, and even in submissive Italy, and how this mighty force, despised by Napoleon, ran directly counter to his imperial system of power.

I shall not dwell on the gigantic contests of 1813 and 1814—the embodiment, so to speak, of the mighty forces combined to effect Napoleon's overthrow; they are very finely narrated in this book. Europe was in arms against one man, backed only by a single worn-out nation; and the ultimate result could not be doubtful. All the usual forces, as Mr. Rose shows, so powerful in war had changed sides: they upheld France in 1792-3; they were arrayed against her at the later period. The influences of the Revolution were now overborne by patriotic and national passions; and these, combined with overwhelming material power, made the efforts of Napoleon's genius fruitless. I have exceeded my limits, and must pass over the events that culminated in the fall of Paris, the sudden restoration of the house of Bourbon, and the negotiations at Vienna of the famous Congress; these are all well described in this volume, especially what occurred at Vienna. Nor can I dwell on the return from Elba, the memorable period of the Hundred Days, and the last struggle on the field of Waterloo. As to this Mr. Rose is, I believe, wrong in making the fall of La Haye Sainte as late as 6 p.m.; and he does not take sufficient account of the state of Napoleon's health in its effects on the result, especially on the operations of June 19. Things like these, however, are of no importance compared to the moral of the great events of which Mr. Rose has traced the outline. He has pointed this moral, in the main, rightly; his conclusions are, for the most part, just. The Revolution, spreading from France, was extended by Napoleon as far as the Oder, in all that was best and most fruitful in it. He leavened the continent with its most useful principles. In the extravagance of his overgrown power these influences were for a time checked; the Holy Alliance and the rule of Metternich were the successors of the Napoleonic Empire. But the seeds that were sown remained vital; they ultimately reappeared in the improved order we see over a large part of the continent, freed from feudal privilege and under equal law. The Revolution first produced these; Napoleon saved them and made them prolific, giving them an expansion they would not have had without him—and this is not the least of his titles to renown.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

The Life of Daniel Defoe. By Thomas Wright, Principal of Cowper School, Olney. (Cassells.)

THERE was certainly room for a new biography—at once sympathetic, critical, and complete—of Daniel Defoe. If the previous Lives had been satisfactory, a new biographer had the pretext of a good deal of fresh material, which has come to light since the publication of Mr. Lee's work in 1869. Even without such an excuse, readers would willingly be interested in another attempt to treat systematically a career so mysterious, and to estimate justly gifts so striking, activities so indefatigable and so versatile, morals so questionable, as those of the author of Robinson Crusoe. Mr. Wright says, with truth, at the outset of his preface: "With the personality of no eminent man of letters of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries is the public less familiar than with that of Daniel Defoe."

But the previous biographies were not satisfactory. Wilson's, with all its merits, was inevitably superseded by that of Mr. Lee. The latter, the standard authority because the best compendium of material up to date, had two serious blemishes: it was an uncritical panegyric, and it was not well written. A badly written biography of one of the absolute masters of English prose is a solecism which English people could not endure for ever, even if they could be taught to look on Defoe as a flawless hero and martyr. Prof. Minto's monograph, excellent in style and painstaking in criticism, was, of course, too slight either to supersede or to supplement Mr. Lee's work. Mr. Wright, therefore, had a fair and promising field for his efforts.

The chief difficulties which confront the critic of Defoe arise out of the prodigious and many-sided energy of the man. The traits of his personal character are lost in his activity, and especially in his literary activity, like the outlines of a wheel in its rapid revolution; and it is impossible to consider him closely without bewilderment. It is the business of Defoe's biographer to remove or, at least, to lessen that bewilderment, not so much by the discovery of fresh facts as by the discovery, if possible, of some unifying principle, some dominant note of temper, some irresistible compulsion of circumstance, some hidden persistency of motive, which may help to explain the career. The task is extremely difficult; for not only were Defoe's "principles" somewhat inconsistent, but his temper was sweet, and he was not egotistic, in any deep sense of the word. He committed no resounding sins; and he was always advertising other people and things rather than himself. If Robinson Crusoe be as autobiographical as Mr. Wright thinks, it came towards the close of Defoe's life, when his reputation was well established.

The true key to Defoe lies in his identification with the period in which he lived. He was so true a servant of his time that he would have no principles far beyond its reach; and so able a servant that none of its interests lay outside the range of his activity. It was a great economic and commercial epoch; and Defoe was a master of economics. It was the time of the formation of Great Britain; and Defoe was the ablest English advocate of the Union. It was the time when opinion on current events began to be freely and rapidly registered; and he was the real founder of English journalism. It was the time when men were ready to find in an expansion of the essay an artistic substitute for the comedy of manners; and Defoe is the real founder of the English novel. His peculiar genius, the means by which he carried out his self-identification with his time, was in his style, in his unrivalled gift of realising and representing everything with which his mind had contact.

The satisfactory biographer of Defoe would be he who should use some such key in going through the story of his life. It must be said at once that Mr. Wright has not done so, and that his work therefore fails to be what it might have been. As we have already indicated, he announces in his preface that his object was to exhibit Defoe's "personality"; but he seems to have been led astray by that indefinite term. One's understanding of the personality of such a man as Defoe, of the unifying principle which gave to his character such self-consistency as it possessed, is not much helped when one has seen pictures of all the houses he ever inhabited; when one can refer to a ground-plan of his garden; when one knows the approximate length of his walking-stick; or even when one has been told that in his childhood he was "sometimes naughty, like other little boys." Mr. Wright announces again that two chief features of his work will be the identification in detail of the story of Robinson Crusoe with the story of Defoe's own life, and the exhibition of Defoe as an eminently religious man. To those features, and especially to the former, he certainly does full justice. Crusoe, in fact, he has as much on the brain as had Mr. Gabriel Betteredge in The Moonstone. One of the many illustrations of the book is a portrait of the Rev. Timothy Cruso, an old schoolfellow of Defoe, whose name may have suggested that of the immortal hero. The "key" which Mr. Wright uses is the supposed fact that every cardinal event in the novel happened just twenty-seven years before a corresponding cardinal event in Defoe's life. The arithmetical process involved in using the key hangs on the corrected date of Defoe's birth (1659, instead of 1660 or 1661), ascertained by Mr. G. A. Aitken, and which therefore could not have been properly performed by previous biographers. Mr. Wright's readers must judge as to the validity of the process and the importance of the results. There is no doubt that, in the preface to the Serious Reflections, Crusoe is described (by Crusoe himself) as an autobiographical allegory; but, on the whole, we agree with Prof.

Minto, that "it would be rash to take what he says too literally."

As to Mr. Wright's other contention, that Defoe was pre-eminently "a man of God," and a kind of veiled Puritan divine, one feels that the new biographer has stumbled into the old pitfall of uncritical panegyric. Full of religious feeling and aspiration Defoe probably was; but no evidence brought forward by Mr. Wright will convince the world that his character was a sublimated one. In spite of Religious Courtship and the Family Instructor, in spite of the unmistakably sincere piety of the last pathetic letter, our complete and final impression of the man cannot be that of a saint. It can only be that of a man much better than many of his contemporaries, a patriot and a friend of humanity as well as a man of genius.

The first part of Mr. Wright's book, which he styles "Pamphleteer and Poet," deals with the more public and varied aspects of Defoe's career down to the publication of Crusoe in 1719. Through this period Mr. Wright conducts us in an easy, chatty way. The chapters are broken up into short sections, each of which is named in a lively and suggestive manner, e.g. "The Occasional Conformity Struggle: Playing Bo-Peep with God Almighty"; "At Newgate, Horrid Place: Te Denm Laudamus." It was during this part of Defoe's life that he was most closely connected with the historical events of his time; and Mr. Wright would have done well to mark the connexion more fully and with greater accuracy. Had he done so he would scarcely have described Harley in 1702 as facile princeps among the Whig (!) leaders; and he would have been a little more thorough in his treatment of the Union and Defoe's Scottish missions. Still, it is pleasant to go, under any kind of faithful and genial guidance, through a record of labour so incessant, of cheerfulness so undaunted, of versatility so unlimited, of literary readiness so unprecedented. Every reader must feel that he is in contact with one of the most irrepressible workers and buoyant optimists whom the world has known.

The second part of the book is headed "Novelist and Historian." This title is a little puzzling, inasmuch as a plain man, if he thought of Defoe as an historian, would think of him as the author of the History of the Union, with which Mr. Wright deals in his Book I. But Mr. Wright, always with Robinson Crusoe on the brain, has convinced himself that Defoe's novels were history and not fiction; and he can, of course, support his opinion by pointing to the "histories" of Jack Sheppard and others, including the Devil. In all this Mr. Wright seems to make the mistake about Defoe's romances which was made by "High-fliers" and Dissenters alike about the Shortest Way—he takes them too seriously. Defoe's power and method in fiction are defined by the Journal of the Plague Year, in which the verisimilitude of immediate perception is given to what had been obtained by hearsay and imagination.

Mr. Wright's method of dealing with the novels shows a characteristic of his criticism throughout: namely, his tendency to give other people's opinions rather than his own. Thus, Crusoe runs a gauntlet extending from Dr. Johnson to M. Zola; and Mr. Wright is never tired of quoting from Prof. Minto, Mr. Lee, and especially Mr. Saintsbury. Such self-effacement seems a little excessive.

The chief moral puzzle of Defoe's public life, his retention in the camp of Jacobite journalism by the Ministries of George I., is treated by Mr. Wright with the charity which it deserves. We might, indeed, have expected more trenchant criticism than this: "Whether [Defoe] is to be blamed or not different persons will have different opinions. If it is dishonourable to be a spy, Defoe's conduct cannot be defended; if it is not dishonourable, let no stones be cast at him." Defoe is to be as much or as little blamed as any man who has been fortunate enough to make himself indispensable at political headquarters; and who, at a time characterised by a low standard of public honour, and in presence of a great and treacherous danger to the state, suffers himself, with views transcending those of any party, to make a living by party journalism.

The chief merits of Mr. Wright's book, besides its gossiping liveliness, are its embodiment of the latest material on the subject, and its bibliographical accuracy and fulness. Mr. Wright gives the story of Defoe's meeting with Alexander Selkirk at Bristol, and the acquisition of his papers as a basis for Crusoe. He hardly realises the novelty of the doctrine that these "papers" had any real existence, else he would have been more explicit as to the evidence by which it is supported.

To each section of the biography is prefixed a list of Defoe's works published within the period with which the section deals; and in the appendix Mr. Lee's list is printed with additions. Minor merits are that the book is well bound and well-printed, pleasant to handle and easy to read, and that it abounds in illustrations of all sorts.

Some blunders need correction. Louis XII. for Louis XIV. (p. 55), and Hoardley for Hoadley (p. 217), are probably printer's errors. If Mr. Wright will look into Redgauntlet he will find that Skiddaw's Scottish vis-à-vis is now called Criffel, not "Scruffell" (p. 143).

Of the style it is not necessary to say much; and it would be unfair to give specimens of it, either at its best or its worst. Readers not unduly sensitive will pardon its eccentricity for the sake of its cheerfulness, and forget its occasional bad taste in its unflinching good nature.

DAVID WATSON RANNIE.

Co-operative Production. By Benjamin Jones, with a Prefatory Note by A. H. Dyke Acland. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE problem of how to secure for the worker a fair share in the produce of his labour, is recognised as the essential feature in all the various social movements of our time; and there seems a general agreement that the solution is to be looked for in the application of the co-operative principle in some form or other. Hence nothing can be more opportune than the appearance of the two volumes before us, which furnish a detailed history of the experiments in co-operative production which have been made during the present century, and of the success or failure by which they have been attended in each case. The subject is one which has never been adequately treated before. What has been written on the topic, in this country at least, has mainly had reference to societies of distribution, such as the Rochdale Pioneers, whose story has been so well told by Mr. Holyoake; but the more important department of co-operative production remains, as Mr. Acland says in his preface, "on many sides an unexplored field." It was well that the movement should find a chronicler who has some practical acquaintance with his subject. Mr. Acland says of our author:

"Those who have taken an interest in the co-operative movement among working men and working women in this country are well aware of the capacity of Mr. Benjamin Jones to give information on the subject. . . . I have little doubt that the historical value of this book is, and will be, very considerable."

As we have said, this history of co-operation in England is almost entirely confined within the limits of the present century. Possibly, if Mr. Jones had gone deep into medieval antiquities, he might have lighted on some anticipations of modern experiments; for, as he quotes from Prof. Marshall:

"The co-operative productive society in its rudimentary form is a product of all ages, and all races, and all places, and the independent productive societies which we find now scattered over the whole of Great Britain are representatives of a very ancient race."

However, the first attempt in this line which Mr. Jones notices is that made by the Levellers, in the early days of the Commonwealth, to form an agricultural community in Surrey. They asserted that "all the liberties of the people were lost by the coming of William the Conqueror; and that ever since the people of God had lived under tyranny and oppression worse than that of our forefathers in Egypt. Their intention was to restore the creation to its former condition. That as God had promised to make the barren land fruitful, so now what they did was to restore the ancient community of enjoying the fruits of the earth, and to distribute the benefits thereof to the poor and needy, and to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. That they intended not to meddle with any man's property, but only with what is common and untitled, and to make it fruitful for the use of man. That the time will come when all men shall willingly come in and give up their lands and estates and submit to this community. And for all such as will come and work with them they shall have meat, drink, and clothes."

Interesting as this movement is, by reason of the close analogy which it presents to the aspirations of modern Socialists, it bore no fruit at the time, and met with summary suppression.

Modern co-operation may be said to date from the closing years of the eighteenth century, when we read of several associations of consumers being formed for the purpose of working corn-mills. Of these, several "still remain with us in a more or less flourishing condition." This trade seems to have been one to which the co-operative principle has been most successfully applied; but always "from the consumer's side," there being "no instance where the workers have started a co-operative corn-mill."

Mr. Jones gives an interesting account of the theories and experiments associated with the name of Robert Owen, of New Lanark, to whose services as a pioneer he does full justice. Many of Owen's ideas were decidedly crude, and particular schemes, such as the Labour Exchange of 1832, ended in failure; but the impulse which his teaching and example gave to the co-operative movement in general can hardly be overrated. The same may be said of the Christian Socialists of 1850, though their efforts seemed at the time to have been utterly fruitless.

Mr. Jones notes the great disadvantages under which co-operators laboured while the old law of unlimited liability was in force, and the advantages gained by the Joint Stock Companies Act of 1862, of which they largely availed themselves.

"Without this privilege every shareholder—regardless of the amount of his holding, whether large or small—remained under an unlimited legal obligation to the full extent of his means to pay the creditors of the association in which he held shares in case the association failed to do so. Those persons, therefore, who had most to lose shrank from such a risk; and hence the practice of association would have been kept within very narrow bounds indeed if the law had remained unaltered."

Simultaneously with the great extension thus given to the movement, we remark a change in its character. It has become less ideal and more practical. "The old notion of forming and living in communities which in past years had acted so powerfully on the imaginations of many thousands of co-operators had now died out." It is true that attempts have more recently been made to revive schemes of this description, but history does not offer much encouragement in this direction. The great successes of co-operation have been achieved on quite different lines.

"Co-operators had realised the fact that half a loaf was better than none; and they had begun to see with a fair approach to unanimity that it was quite possible to apply the principle of co-operation, bit by bit, in sections, to all the circumstances of their lives, until a system of complete co-operation should finally be evolved. They had further begun to see that the effective force of machinery, with the necessary consequence of a still more minute division of labour, was altogether irresistible; and that the idea of little self-supporting colonies must give way to the infinitely grander idea, that the whole world is one family with members mutually dependent on their industrial exertions and mutually benefiting by the exchange of products."

Mr. Jones gives a full account of the co-operative efforts which have been made in every branch of industry. The successes seem to have been greatest in the corn, the cotton, and (of late years) the shoemaking trades; while in the iron and coal industries the history has up till now been "mostly one of disaster." In agriculture, which has always fascinated the imagination of co-operative theorists, many endeavours have been made, but as yet with but moderate success, though it cannot be said that the prospect is by any means hopeless.

In the last four chapters of his work the author states the main conclusions to which his studies and experience have led him as to the future of co-operation. He considers the relative merits of the autocratic and democratic principles, and decides in favour of the latter.

"The attempts at autocratic justice by people possessed of the power to act in such a manner have not been sufficiently numerous or successful to inspire confidence among the masses of the people in the principle of autocratic action; and the comparative lack of unselfish effort on the part of the overwhelming majority of those who, by their knowledge, position, and wealth, would be pointed to as natural autocratic leaders, has not only failed to inspire confidence, but has inspired positive distrust."

After a discussion of various systems of organisation and management, Mr. Jones decides "that the best form of democratic organisation is where the people are combined together on the basis of consumption; where for their services as capitalists or as workers the members are remunerated by the payment of such fixed interest and wages as the majority of the members of these organisations consider to be just; and where all the members receive the goods produced or the services rendered at the exact cost of producing the goods or supplying the services."

In working out this theory, Mr. Jones arrives at the conclusion that its logical consequence is a system of state and municipal socialism.

"The nation, being itself the consumer or user, should undertake to perform for itself, as part of the ordinary functions of government, everything that is required to be done, if the thing required is wanted in sufficiently large quantities to justify the formation of an establishment for doing it."

This includes the nationalisation of railways, ports, and docks. Other industries will to a large extent be municipalised, and "the voluntary co-operative associations of consumers, both individualistic and federal, come into use to fill up the gaps and vacancies that have been left." Manifestly these proposals open out too wide a field to be discussed here; but they must be received as the opinions of a thoughtful and well-informed writer, by no means devoid of practical experience.

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

Under the Red Robe. By Stanley Weyman.
In 2 Vols. (Methuen.)

My Lady Rotha: a Romance. By the Same.
(Innes.)

To the many who, upon the appearance of A Gentleman of France, hailed Mr. Weyman as a second Dumas, the comparative failure of his later efforts must come as a considerable disappointment. In that book Mr. Weyman proved himself a master of heroic incident, and, in a lesser degree, of a certain heroic type of character. His story hung together, too: was a rounded and complete whole; and this is a merit by no means apparent in the later romances we are now considering. The truth is, perhaps, that Mr. Weyman is writing too much. To plan so many exciting adventures has given him, it may be supposed, no time for considering his plot; and so, while A Gentleman of France remains a living, sensible book, a picture, to some extent, of its time and manners, Under the Red Robe interests one mainly as a study in a somewhat sordid and yet sympathetic type of character, and My Lady Rotha compels in every chapter comparison with the best work of Mr. Henty.

It is the great Richelieu himself who pulls the strings to which Mr. Weyman's hero dances in Under the Red Robe; and so Gil de Berault, "bully, common bravo, gamester," breathes the very air which inspired the four great creations of Dumas. But here the resemblance ceases. Not even Aramis can be likened to this hero, whom the reader comes gradually to love, despite his duplicity. There are episodes and chapters that certainly equal any in the author's earliest book. And it must not be forgotten that in Under the Red Robe Mr. Weyman has, by the choice of such a hero, made it far more difficult to gain the sympathy, and keep the interest, of his readers. It is not in scene or incident that this new book falls short of the standard we had a right to expect: it is from the general scheme that dissatisfaction arises. Berault owes more of his infirmity of purpose to the indecision of his creator than to his own temperament. And yet Mr. Weyman's difficulty is one easy to understand. He has made his hero worm his way unhesitatingly into the confidence of two women, the relatives of one whom he can only hope to make his prisoner by trickery. But once within their house procrastination becomes necessary. Even when Berault can almost lay his hand upon the man, he lingers; and when at last he is driven to arrest him and is on the way back to Paris, indecision again steps in, and he sets his prisoner free. The ending is unsatisfactory, unexplained; and one finishes the book convinced that, while the author has been entirely successful in his choice and treatment of individual episodes, his plot has been spun out as chapter after chapter came to be written.

With My Lady Rotha this same fault becomes even more prominent. Here, indeed, Mr. Weyman seems to have had no higher aim than to lead his characters into all sorts of adventures, for which the Thirty Years' War made a fitting background. There is absolutely no reason why the romance should end where it does, nor why Rotha should ultimately choose Count Leuchtenstein for her husband, instead of the Waldgrave. The plot has, in fact, no consistency; it leads up to no inevitable and proper climax.

The infinite variety of incident in Scott and Dumas—to name but these—might make one think that nothing remains except to ring the old changes again and again. But it can at least be said that in this respect both these books are originally and admirably conceived. Occasionally, however, Mr. Weyman lays himself open to the charge of repetition. Twice in My Lady Rotha do the same characters escape in the dead of night by a way whose narrowness is one of its chief dangers. And when Count Leuchtenstein retorts to an accusation of the Waldgrave's that he "had never dreamed of, never heard of, never conceived such a bargain," the reader who remembers just such an incident in Under the Red Robe will smile.

GRANT RICHARDS.

The Land of the Sphinx. By G. Montbard.
(Hutchinson.)

I WAS staying a few weeks ago at a little town in France. The tiny inn where I lodged was seldom visited by foreigners, but the courtyard made a brave show of carts and waggons on market days. Each evening a few gendarmes, the verger of the cathedral, and a well-to-do tradesman would come into the kitchen for a glass of wine. These visitors, ignorant of Parisian politics, were most friendly to the stranger; the conversation, though graciously inquisitive, was kindly and courteous. One evening I pulled out of my pocket a copy of the Daily Telegraph, for the son of my hostess was something of an English scholar; and I translated, badly enough, an account of the doings of the Licensing Committee of the London County Council. My audience, though good-tempered, was intelligent, and refused to take me seriously. To these quiet French people the conduct of our metropolitan wiseacres was a vast joke, and a good one: their only comment, "What wags you English are." Not unnaturally I conceived a royal notion of Gallic wit. Taking up M. Montbard's book with a solid certainty of pleasure, the result was unfortunate, unexpected.

I acknowledge, quite willingly, that no lover of Egypt can afford to be without the book; but I must admit, too, that he will regret the necessity that compels him to buy it. For it is very bad, and also very good. Were one to judge by the pictures, it were easy to prove M. Montbard an enthusiastic admirer of the Nile Valley and the fellahin. No artist has caught more cunningly the indescribable charm of the river as seen from Bulaq; no draughtsman has more completely seized the aspect of the Great Pyramid looming above the horizon beyond the narrow ribbon of green fields and waving palm clumps. In his portraits, at least, the artist has paid to the mummied faces of the Pharaohs the respect due from courtier to prince. He has understood, again, that the mere hewers of wood and drawers of water are not without dignity and grace, calling forth the best and most reverent pencilling. To look through the illustrations is to see the real Egypt—bright, unique, exquisite. The heart leans to the enchanter who, even in the grey London of October, can warm us by perfect glimpses of "that long summer which still girds the Nile." The tiny sketch of the Port of Alexandria disseminates a real heat, for which we are the happier. So one turns to the words of the magician with excited hope.

Can it be that M. Montbard is untrue to France, fearful lest his enthusiasm render him ridiculous? As a writer he becomes unintelligible, if not infinitely absurd. He can draw the Sphinx with notable skill and rare poetic feeling; he can call her "that monster which possesses nothing remarkable but its size." He laughs laboriously at the "Cookites," yet speaks of the Valley of Kings with a flippancy unknown to the most personally-conducted of tourists. His drawings convey the grandeur of the obelisks; he babbles, straying far from grammar and sense in his wanton abuse: "Those stupid landmarks, those pales of Titans." His reader may never forget that the author is a Frenchman; yet has no man of ability made France appear in so absurd a rôle. We have believed, it would seem, too long in a legend that vaunts the keenness and potency of French wit. M. Montbard has failed to destroy the legends and mysterious beauty of Egypt; he has only shaken our faith in a later but quite honourable delusion. His narrative is infantile, his personages a libel on his own countrymen. Had an Englishman designed them, war, with some reason, were inevitable. There is a grim satisfaction in realising that Englishmen have not a monopoly in the trick that compels an audience to yawn. Humour of the newest contains not so much of mandragore as these foolish pages. It is impossible to be angry; great faults affect the heart, not the temper. That a man of a nation, to which artists and writers owe so huge a debt, should have builded up a jest thus stupid and irreverent is matter for tears. Had the joke succeeded, it would have deserved contempt. A cathedral is not a music hall; Egypt is sacred. But no one, save M. Montbard himself, can laugh at these pages. Even he, we may hope, is now ashamed of them. And his pictures make it easy to pardon him.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

NEW NOVELS.

Highland Cousins. By William Black. (Sampson Low.)

Appledore Farm. By Katherine S. Macquoid. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

6,000 Tons of Gold (Innes.)

A Husband of no Importance. By Rita. "Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

Romances of the Old Seraglio. By H. N. Crellin. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Mill on the Usk. By Mrs. Arthur Treherne. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

An Unfinished Martyrdom, and other Stories. By A. St. John Adcock. (Bristol: Arrow-smith.)

BEGINNERS in literature are generally supposed to be ardent students of the utterances of their reviewers; and it is reported that a critic in the most obscure provincial paper has power to transport them to a seventh heaven of bliss. Were Mr. Black a beginner, a really competent critic might honestly praise Highland Cousins in a way that would make him happy for a week. He might speak of its graceful style, of its pleasant bits of description, of its gleams of insight; and he might make various other eulogistic remarks which would prove very agreeable reading. But, then, nobody expects anything from the beginner, while from Mr. Black we expect a good deal, and, what is more to the purpose, we feel that we have a right to expect it. It may be unfair to complain of him for repeating his background. If his heart is in the Highlands, by all means let his stories be there also; but, if he insists on taking us these long journeys northward, he is really bound to give us something as good as he has to give at the end of it. In the new novel he is certainly a long way below his best. Its story of the worthy young man who foolishly ignores an equally worthy young woman, and lays his heart before a pair of "pathetic eyes" with nothing but ugliness behind them, is terribly worn and frayed; and it is not commended anew by Mr. Black's treatment of it. Neither the characters nor the drama in which they play their parts ever arouses really strong interest; there is a want of life everywhere, a suspicion of manufacture—the one thing which the author's really characteristic work never suggests. Allan Henderson and Jess are admirable in a wooden way that does not charm; Barbara is wicked in an equally wooden way that does not convince. Her shop-lifting, for example, is introduced mechanically, as if Mr. Black felt it necessary to make her do "something bad," and did not know what else to hit upon, for he never makes us feel that the petty thefts are an inevitable outcome of her character: it is simply a push given to a story that has no vital movement of its own. Nor do the minor personages—with the single exception of the excellent Mr. MacFadyen—atone for the weakness of the principals; for Mrs. Maclean's malapropisms and the drunken MacIntyre's denunciations of whisky become mere Dickens'-like tricks. And so it would seem as if the book were unsatisfactory all round. As a matter of fact, it is so because it is written by Mr. Black, not by the beginner: it owes to the temperament of which Mr. Black cannot denude himself certain pleasant qualities which recall better work.

Mrs. Macquoid is another novelist whose latest story does her much less than justice. Middle-aged and elderly readers will remember the time when musical young ladies used to play pianoforte "pieces" consisting of a setting of some popular melody with what were called "variations." Appledore Farm may be described as a variation of "Auld Robin Gray"; but, as in some of the melodious disguises the original air was hardly recognisable, save by a very painstaking listener, so in the novel the old ballad is "translated" to such an extent that some readers may fail to discern the familiar features. The new Robin Gray who comes to the rescue of the distressed farmer, Mr. Bryant, is not old at all; and though he acts with exceeding folly in the third volume of the story, he is a manly, honourable, kindly, and most estimable fellow, with whom no girl need be ashamed to fall in love. The new Jamie, on the contrary, is a thorough-going cad and an unmitigated blackguard, of whom it is possible to say only one good thing—that he is perfectly free from the vice of hypocrisy. Indeed, so brutally frank is his revelation of himself to Ruth Bryant that sympathy with the love-lorn damsel is simply impossible; and the worthy Clifford, who might have a claim to such sympathy, renders the claim invalid by his really incredible lack of common sense. Mrs. Macquoid must really look to her laurels.

The anonymous story, 6,000 Tons of Gold, is evidently the work of an author who likes plenty of elbow room. One thousand tons would have served his purpose as well as six, but he is perhaps to be congratulated on his moderation in not making it six hundred. To invent a credible story to account for the possession of such a treasure by one man is clearly impossible; but the writer's scheme is probably as satisfactory as any that would have occurred to Mr. Rider Haggard, or any other great inventive expert. The narrative of the finding of the gold—good as it undoubtedly is in its impossible way—is, however, subsidiary to the other narrative of the spending, or rather the manipulation of it; and the record of the financial operations of Richard Brent in the American money-market is always spirited, and at times really exciting. Though his aims, instead of being selfish, are entirely benevolent, he manages to make a positively unique mess of things; and, in the final chapter, what remains of his millions is solemnly shot into the sea to the immense satisfaction of everybody concerned. The financial terminology is at times a little too technical; but even the most unlearned reader will not miss the thread of a very ingenious and well-told story.

A Husband of No Importance is emphatically a book of no importance, though it will probably achieve a succès d'estime in virtue of that journalistic rather than literary quality which is known as "up-to-dateness." It deals principally with the doings and the sayings—especially the interminable and unspeakably wearisome sayings—of Mrs. Hex Rashleigh, a dreadful woman who writes novels intended to reform her race, goes much into society, where she delivers herself of multitudinous moral platitudes, and of course neglects her house and her husband, whom she considers a most insignificant person. Indeed, he seems so to others besides his wife, but like the immortal parrot, he thinks the more; and finally he writes a play in which Mrs. Rashleigh is held up to scorn—a proceeding which so impresses her that she bursts into tears and on the spot renounces all her new-womanish ways. Other people come into the story; but the only one who is not rather tiresome is the young Irishman, Blake Beverley, and even he is somewhat ineffective. A Husband of no Importance is too obviously made to sell.

Simple-minded people who like stories which, while scrupulously moral, are entirely unburdened with a moral, or indeed with any purpose whatsoever beyond the provision of light entertainment, will find in Mr. Crellin's Romances of the Old Seraglio something to suit them. His previous volume, Tales of the Caliphs, is unknown to me, and I regret my ignorance; for if the Tales are as good as these Romances they must be very good indeed. Mr. Crellin's name seems to proclaim him a fellow-islander of Mr. Hall Caine; but he might be an Oriental, so completely has he absorbed the spirit and feeling of the Eastern story-teller. Freshness of structure, fertility of invention, and briskness of narration are all manifest in these lively pages, in which the plots and jealousies, the comedies and tragedies, of an Oriental court are treated as they might be treated by one native and to the manner born. The stories well deserve the success they are certain to command.

In her preface to The Mill on the Usk Mrs. Arthur Treherne writes thus:—

"I think the tale may have an especial interest to the public mind, as the scene in which the events narrated occurred in one of the loveliest valleys in South Wales, where also H.R.H. the late deeply lamented Duke of Clarence spent three days during the last autumn of his brief life."

This prepares the reader for a good deal of absurdity, but hardly for so much as is to be found in the story. It is, however, a very fair sample of "English as she is wrote" in Mrs. Treherne's pages. Detailed criticism would be waste of space.

Mr. St. John Adcock's short stories come with a kind of guarantee of quality, inasmuch as they are reprinted from certain magazines and journals which do not generally give harbourage to clumsy incompetent work. There is nothing remarkable about "An Unfinished Martyrdom" and its companion tales; but they are constructed in a business-like sort of way and in a literary manner which somewhat recalls the quieter manner of Dickens. The title-story, which tells how two elderly people took the total abstinence pledge for the sake of example, and found it too much for them, is as good as anything in the book.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

An Outline of English Local Government. By Edward Jenks. (Methuen.) This little volume supplies a much-needed want. Prof. Jenks tells us that he has attempted "to state in Christian English and in concise form, the outlines of a subject usually relegated to the fathomless abysses of those professional treatises which Charles Lamb (had he been required to pronounce judgment upon them) would assuredly have classed as biblia abiblia—books which are no books."

The author's modest claim is fully borne out by the pages that follow; and it may be hoped that the book will do something to give to the general reader clearer ideas about a subject which, dry though it may seem, does, as Prof. Jenks says, "very substantially affect daily life." Our author begins with the smallest unit of administration, the township or parish, and gives an excellent summary of the chief features of the new organisation which has been bestowed upon it by the Act of the present year. He then deals with the intermediate areas between the parish and the county, grouping them under the head of the oldest division among them, whose functions are now almost obsolete as "The hundred and its analogues." The third section of the volume is devoted to the county, and the last to the borough. Prof. Jenks has, in general, abstained from going into the history of English local institutions further than is necessary to explain their present forms. His book certainly gains in conciseness by this course, but possibly it loses something in interest. It might, for instance, have been worth while to point out how many of the most recent changes have been but a falling back upon very old precedents. Notably is this the case with the more popular character now given to local government. Our author does notice the old town-moot; he might have shown how strikingly it has been revived in the modern parish meeting. So, too, the district council may be considered as representing the ancient hundred-moot and the county council the shire-moot, both originally popularly elected bodies. Prof. Jenks does not seem very clear as to the origin of the term "shire"; and as to whether all counties are shires or not he might with advantage have consulted Mr. Freeman's essay on the "Shire and County" in which it is shown that our English counties fall into two well-marked classes quite different in their origin. The West-Saxon counties represent for the most part tribal settlements older than the kingdom of England or even of Wessex, and were not made but grew. In Mercia, on the other hand, the ancient divisions were obliterated by the Danish occupation, and the country was portioned out anew after the English reconquest. It is to these latter divisions alone that the appellation of "shires" (i.e., things shorn or parted off from a larger unit) properly belongs, though it is now (with a few exceptions) used indiscriminately for both classes of counties. Hence Prof. Jenks' statement that the "boundaries were not fixed arbitrarily, in the way that a modern colony is mapped out, nor even by natural geographical features," is true only of the former class; the latter seem, as Mr. Freeman argues, to have been systematically arranged around the local capital as a centre.

From Spring to Fall. By A Son of the Marshes. (Blackwoods.) Since Jefferies' lamented death his mantle has fallen upon the "Son of the Marshes." Both evince the same sympathy with nature, the same poetical appreciation of her homely moods, and a similar power of winning the confidence of bird and beast. A dozen chapters here paint the glory of the Surrey woodlands for nine months of the year, and let the reader into many secrets of their inhabitants known only to those who have carefully watched and studied their habits at all hours. Two of these essays, "In Summer Heat" and "From Weir to Mill," are admirable. The first treats of nature in the heat and drought of 1893. The author does not notice, however, that most plants flowered that year a fortnight sooner than usual. The second shows that the "Son of the Marshes" has most carefully noted the habits of otters. It would be difficult for the most watchful naturalist to add a touch to his picture. More pleasant pages dwell upon the traits of our game-birds. Few sportsmen will peruse them without knowing more of the life history of these birds. Hares only held their own in the past because of the game laws, now they are rapidly becoming extinct for want of a little more protection. A gale in winter is described with much power. The book is edited, as usual, by Mrs. Owen. All the author's many admirers must be thankful to see no diminution, whether of observation or literary skill, in this charming book.

The Building of the City Beautiful. By Joaquim Miller. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.) Mr. Miller's is not an unknown name, for he has won a good deal of honour as a poet and hunter; some of us, too, feel friendly towards him as the author of Memories and Rhyme. His work has been, generally, rough, and even wilfully faulty; but something very like genius often illumined it. Then, too, the man himself, or our fancy-woven picture of him, made us amiable critics. The words of anyone who has really lived acquire a certain potent charm, a certain unique value. Many of his admirers will no doubt like this book, because it is full of colour and force and earnestness. But the harder-hearted and more cynical of us will refuse to take it seriously. It is difficult to believe that the religious novel can ever be worth writing; it is certainly never worth reading. That the religious opinions of Joaquim Miller have an interest of their own is conceivable, but he has not in this book given himself a chance. It is as dull as a "silent woman" who speaks for many pages can make it. The story is wandering and incoherent; the ideal republic uninteresting and impossible. The whole book is a mistake, though it has passages of wonderful colour and charm. No one, save a few fanatic admirers, will read it who is not obliged to do so; and some of those who are expected to peruse its pages will not be greatly blamed if they shirk the task. We grow tired of literary men who desire to pose as preachers: the two attitudes are seldom compatible. And a man who is a hunter as well as a poet should not sink to such base ambition.

A King of Dreams and Shadows. By Salik. (Fisher Unwin.) The doom of the fairy tale was signed when Kiug Moral ascended the throne. The days of the irresponsible, volatile, illogical, and real fairies are over. They have passed with William the Conqueror into the dust of history. Somehow this little book seems to plead earnestly for the truth of our assertion. No child could care for it; and when a child renounces the elfa and pygmies introduced to him, the self-respecting adult must do likewise. Yet Salik writes prettily, sometimes quite well, and—though the advice may seem foolhardy—should try to put his ideas into verse. The best things in the book are the occasional scraps of poetry, which have a rare quaintness and fancy. The stories are good, although too sombre, too obviously pregnant with lofty desire and serious meaning. But Salik has done sufficiently well to make us curious about his next book.

General Gordon and Lord Dundonald. (Chambers.) The lives of heroes are never out of place; and these are written soberly and carefully, doing full justice to the characters and exploits of the undaunted soldier and sailor. Every boy's library ought to possess this little volume. It abounds in admirable teachings of duty and gallantry. There is no need to dwell upon Gordon's career; but the chapter which depicts his home-life at Southampton is full of interest, and throws much light upon his earnest character. Full justice is done to the numberless daredevil victories of Dundonald, who invariably acted up to the spirit of the advice given him by Nelson in regard to naval warfare: "Never mind manoeuvres; always go at them!" By this means he captured with the Speedy in thirteen months fifty vessels, 122 guns, and 534 prisoners. Lord Dundonald's innocence in regard to the great Stock Exchange fraud of 1814, and the uninterrupted felicity of his married life, form the climax of a heroic life. This book is much to be commended. May England in her need find many such brave souls!

Tales from Scott. By Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart. (Elliot Stock.) This is a fascinating little volume to which Prof. Dowden has added an introduction. We consider the present experiment has abundantly justified itself. As Prof. Dowden aptly says, these "Tales from Scott"

"quickly and easily marshal my recollections, and as I read them many things revive in my memory, gather round his narrative and enrich it. To peruse Scott's novels once again would be undoubtedly better than to read these tales; but life is not of unending duration, and leisure is a good deal shorter than life."

The memories of eight of Sir Walter's delightful books are revived by these Tales—Waverley, Guy Mannering, The Antiquary, Rob Roy, The Black Dwarf, Old Mortality, The Bride of Lammermoor, A Legend of Montrose, and Ivanhoe. We miss from this list Scott's masterpiece, The Heart of Midlothian; but as these tales are written for children, there may be reasons for its exclusion. We are glad that room was found for Old Mortality, the "Marmion" of the novels, as Lockhart named it.

The Russian Jews. By Leo Errera. (David Nutt.) This is a translation from the French, by Bella Löwry, of a work which was noticed at the time in the ACADEMY. The author is a Professor at the University of Brussels, and he writes with marked moderation. His pen cannot command the dramatic power of the author of The New Exodus, but his work is the complement to Mr. Harold Frederic's. He says, truly enough, that in persecuting Jews, Christians show themselves oblivious of the origin and the principles of their own religion. Humane solidarity, he pleads, should not be a meaningless word. The book has been well translated, and is an authority on one of the saddest scenes in this "Human Comedy."

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. MASPERO's long-expected work, Les Origines, will be published at the end of next week, simultaneously in Paris, London, and New York. It is an attempt to describe, in a manner at once interesting and accurate, all that the monuments have revealed to us concerning the earliest civilisations in the two valleys of the Nile and the Euphrates. The period dealt with covers the history of Egypt from the earliest times to the XIVth Dynasty, and the history of Chaldaea down to the twenty-fourth century B.C. The most recent discoveries of the present year have been included. The English translation has been made by Mrs. McClure, under the editorship of Prof. Sayce, who adds a preface; and will be published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It forms a handsome demy quarto volume of more than 800 pages, with a map and 470 illustrations specially engraved for the work.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will shortly issue a translation of Prof. Pasquale Villari's History of Florence, giving a general outline of the various constitutions and forms of government, from the origin of the Commune down to a few years after the death of Dante. It has been translated by the author's wife, Mme. Linda Villari.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO. will publish early in December a work in defence of the House of Lords, by Sir William T. Charley, Q.C., entitled The Crusade Against the Constitution.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish, before the end of the present month, Behind an Eastern Veil, being a plain tale of events occurring in the experience of a lady who had an unique opportunity of observing ladies of the upper class in Persia. The book has been edited by Mr. C. J. Wills, author of "In the Land of the Lion and Sun."

MR. R. L. STEVENSON is enthusiastic in his determination to make "The Edinburgh Edition" of his works worthy alike of the unique character of the publication and of his own reputation. For he has written a new section of Underwoods and an introduction to The Master of Ballantrae, which are both to be included in the edition. The introduction, which may be followed by others, recalls the manner of Sir Walter Scott; and the scene is laid in the house of the author's friend, Mr. Charles Baxter, W.S., Edinburgh. The edition will possibly be enhanced by the reproduction of The Graver and the Pen and other rare booklets, which Mr. Stevenson and his stepson, Mr. Lloyd Osbourne, executed wholly themselves, setting the type, engraving the woodcuts, and doing all the other work. Of the quaint sketches in these literary curiosities remarkably good facsimiles have been obtained; and if they are used, the type will be presented, letter for letter, as in the original. It has been arranged to issue the first of the "Edinburgh" volumes on December 15. The edition is edited by Mr. Sidney Colvin, of the British Museum; but for the numerous excisions, alterations, and additions the author is alone responsible. The edition is, in fact, not a mere reprint, as few papers are left untouched, while much new matter is added.

MR. HEINEMANN will publish immediately a dainty little volume, entitled A Century of German Lyrics, translated by Mrs. Freiligrath-Kroecker. Beginning with Goethe, it contains a selection, in chronological order, of the principal lyrical poets of Germany, including not a few who are still living, and who are not so well known in England as they deserve to be.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON have nearly ready for publication a translation, by Mr. Edward Vizetelly, of Alphonse Daudet's novel, Fromont Junior and Risler Senior. The ordinary edition will contain eighty-eight wood engravings, by Fromont and Hamel, from drawings by George Rouse; and an edition on large paper, limited to one hundred copies, will contain in addition twenty full-page etchings by Fernand Desmoulin.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN announces, as the forty-fourth volume of his "Pseudonym Library," Helen, by Oswald Valentine, who made his first appearance in A Passing of a Mood, in the same series.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will also publish shortly Louis Couperus's Majesty, translated from the Dutch by A. Teixeira de Mattos. The hero of the book is heir to an empire, and the chief interest of the story lies in the analysis of his character.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces the following novels as nearly ready for publication: Killeen: a Study of Girlhood, by Miss O'Connor Morris; The See-Saw of Life, by W. A. Morley; Max Reichner, by H. O. Ward; and Raymond's Folly, by E. St. John Leigh.

THE "Home Words" publishing office are about to issue a series of cheap stories, entitled "Home Words" Library of Tales for all Readers. The first two volumes, Almost a Crime, by the Rev. T. S. Millington, and A Black Diamond, by Mr. Edward Garrett, will be ready in the course of a few days.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS have in the press a new book by Dr. Gordon Stables, entitled Shireen and Her Friends: the Autobiography of a Persian Cat, with illustrations by Mr. Harrison Weir.

TOWARDS the end of the present month, a new volume is to be added to Mr. Walter Scott's series of "Canterbury Poets,"—Cradle Songs and Nursery Rhymes, edited with an introduction, by Mrs. Ernest Rhys.

MR. H. R. ALLENSON will publish immediately a new volume of sermons by the Rev. F. Warburton Lewis, entitled The Unseen Life. The book is divided into two parts: "The Crowning of Love" and "The Life Eternal."

THE first edition of Mr. Gordon Browne's illustrated Fairy Tales from Grimm being exhausted, a second edition will be issued shortly by Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. will publish next week a new edition of Light and Shadows: being Examples of the Supernatural, by the Rev. S. G. Lee.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS announce a revised edition of The Golden Milestone, by Mr. Scott Graham.

THE centenary of Gibbon's death will be celebrated next week: (1) by an exhibition at the British Museum of portraits, manuscripts, and relics, to be opened on Monday and to remain on view for a fortnight; and (2) by a meeting to be held on Thursday, at 4.30 p.m., at the Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn-street, with Sir M. E. Grant Duff, president of the Royal Historical Society, in the chair, at which addresses will be delivered by Mr. Frederic Harrison and others. It is hoped also to publish a memorial volume, containing a catalogue of the objects exhibited, a report of the addresses delivered, and possibly some of Gibbon's unpublished writings—though these last, we fear, are not of any great value.

AT the meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, to be held at 20, Hanover-square, on Monday next, at 8 p.m., Mr. S. Foskett, of the Camberwell Public Libraries, will make a formal reply to some views advanced by Mr. Charles Welch at the last meeting regarding the educational value of the public library movement.

MR. A. F. ETHERIDGE, sub-librarian at All Souls' College, Oxford, has been elected librarian of Lincoln's-inn, in succession to the late Mr. Nicholson.

MAX O'RELL (M. Paul Blouët) starts at once on a fourth lecturing tour in the United States and Canada. He will be absent about six months.

AT the annual meeting of the Edinburgh Bibliographical Society, held last week, Mr. John S. Gibb was elected president, and Mr. William Brown vice-president. The papers for the past session, printed for issue, with accompanying facsimiles, to the members, comprise: "Bibliographical Gleanings, 1890-93, being Additions and Corrections to his Annals of Scottish Printing," by Mr. J. P. Edmond; "The Ballad MSS. of C. K. Sharpe and James Skene of Rubislaw," by Mr. William Macmath; "The First Book printed by James Ballantyne, Kelso, 1799," by Mr. George P. Johnston; "Thomas Finlason and his Press, with a Hand-list of his Books," by H. G. Aldis; "Bibliographical Notes on Bishop Laud's Prayer Book, 1637 (known as Laud's Liturgy)," by Bishop Dowden.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE University of Oxford proposes to confer the honorary degree of M.A. upon the following: Mr. George Smith, publisher of The Dictionary of National Biography; Mr. George Fox, F.S.A.; and Dr. Charles Wells, the newly appointed reader in Turkish.

THE University of Cambridge has conferred the honorary degree of M.A. upon Major Henry Earle, adjutant of the University Rifle Volunteers.

THE following have been elected members of the new board of studies at Oxford for the honour school of English language and literature, in addition to the official members: Mr. D. B. Monro (provost of Oriel), Sir Frederick Pollock, Prof. W. P. Ker (of University College, London), Prof. A. A. Macdonell, Mr.

F. York Powell, the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, Mr. C. H. Firth, and Mr. H. T. Gerrans.

MR. BERNARD P. GRENFELL, Craven fellow, has been elected to a fellowship at Queen's College, Oxford, under a clause of the statutes which empowers the election of a person who shall undertake definite literary, scientific, or educational work. Mr. Grenfell will study Greek papyri in England or abroad, or will explore in Egypt with a view to the discovery of fresh documents, or will undertake other palaeographical work of importance to be approved by the college.

DR. EDWARD CAIRD, the new master of Balliol, has been elected an honorary fellow of Merton; and Prof. Bywater has been elected an honorary fellow of Queen's.

AT Cambridge, Prof. J. J. Thompson has been elected president of the Philosophical Society, in succession to Prof. T. McKenny Hughes; and Mr. W. M. Fawcett has been elected president of the Antiquarian Society, in succession to Mr. Jenkinson.

A MEETING of graduates in Divinity, and other graduates interested in theological studies, will be held in the library of the Divinity School at Cambridge on Monday next, when a paper will be read by the Rev. W. R. Churton on "The Word ἀρρέτιος in the Decree of the Council of Chalcedon."

ON Thursday of this week, the Rev. Dr. Mills was to deliver a public lecture at Oxford, in the Indian Institute, on "The Zoroastrian and Jewish Religions"—a subject which, it may be remembered, has attracted the attention both of Prof. Cheyne and of the late James Darmesteter.

AT the last meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, Mr. Bowes described a copy of Linacre's translation of Galen De Temperamentis, printed at Cambridge by John Siberch in 1521, which he had found in the library of Trinity College, Dublin. It differs from all other known copies in not having the second treatise, the De Inequali Intemperie, and consequently having eight fewer leaves. It would seem as if, after the book was printed, but before it was issued, it had been determined to include this treatise; and to do this, the last two leaves (Q 5 and 6) were cancelled, and two additional sheets (R and S) added, and the title and contents (being printed last) are made for the whole volume. The two cancelled leaves have never been noticed before, and the Dublin volume is probably unique.

FOR a meeting of the Oxford Architectural and Historical Society, to be held next Tuesday, Mrs. Moe has promised a paper on "The History of Kettle Hall," which was built in the first half of the seventeenth century by a president of Trinity, and which has recently come into the possession of that college.

THE University of New Zealand has been admitted to the privileges of a colonial university at Oxford.

MR. THOMAS RALEIGH, the new Quain professor of law at University College, announces a course of six lectures, to be delivered on Wednesdays, at 4.30 p.m., at Lincoln's Inn. The subject of the first lecture is "The British Empire: a Field for Comparative Law."

THE Oxford Magazine gives, as on previous occasions, an elaborate table, showing the places of education of the successful candidates at the recent examination for the Indian Civil Service. Out of the total of 61, Oxford has 30, Cambridge 12, and Dublin 4, while Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the Royal University of Ireland have each one. The six natives of India are widely distributed, coming from Baroda, Bombay, Calcutta (2), the Panjab, and Sindh.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO DR. PATRICK WESTON JOYCE, IRISH FOLK-
LORIST, HISTORIAN AND MUSICIAN, IN DEDICA-TION OF THE FORTHCOMING IRISH SONG-BOOK
IN THE NEW IRISH LIBRARY SERIES.

DEAR JOYCE, who erst so unlucked the lore
Delightful of Erin's templed shore,

That Cahir and Cashel and Cloon and Curragh
Thrilled with Her ancient past once more,

Who then so held our hearts in fee,
Of old Romance arch-shenachie,

That each, turned child amongst his children,
Saddened or smiled around your knee.

Who last the historian's full renown
Have compassed, crowning with equal crown

The dread defenders of leaguered Derry,
The fiery warders of Limerick town.

Who yet, the while, with purpose strong,
Lest famine's fierce, far scattering thong,

Lest false new fashion or party passion
Should slay or sully our ancient song,

Still fondly gleaned its failing gold
From the faltering strings of the blind and old,

From lamenting crone and crooning mother,
The whistle and drone of the field and fold;

But gathered still pure strain on strain,
So generous free from thought of gain,

No minstrel brother has asked you ever
Of your abundance, yet asked in vain.

Therefore and since of that clairseach crew
I most have studied to mint anew

To measures olden your treasures golden,
This garland of song is your guerdon due.

ALFRED PERCEVAL GRAVES.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for November gives a fair idea of the varieties of tendency among theological students. Prof. Lumby contributes an orthodox essay on Ps. cx., overlooking the fact that the strictest Messianic theory of that Psalm is only tenable on the critical principles of Stade. Mr. G. B. Gray gives a really helpful and instructive introduction to some of the questions most recently raised in the criticism of Isaiah and in Biblical theology. Prof. Boet seeks to refute, on Biblical grounds, certain widely held millenarian views. Mr. John Watson gives an eloquent plea for religious optimism (with one sad misprint in the name of the author of the "City of Dreadful Night"). Prof. Cheyne protests against the assumption that the "Doctrine of Scripture" in Robertson Smith's controversial defences of 1879-80 is his final legacy on the subject, and against Prof. Lindsay's uncomprehending criticism of the Broad Church School. Prof. A. Harper has a short and by no means trustworthy essay on "Archaeology and Criticism." Lastly, Prof. A. S. Wilkins gives Part I. of an attempt to consider the evidence adduced by Mr. Rendel Harris for his new theory respecting the Western Text of the Greek Testament.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for November indicates very clearly the differences that exist between advanced liberal theology and historical criticism in Holland and the forms of theology and of criticism which in Germany might receive the same epithets. Dr. Bruining discusses the last editions of the dogmatic theological treatises of Hermann Schultz and the late R. A. Lipsius, showing how, in spite of considerable divergencies, they agree in taking up what may be called an a priori principle, as compared with the more revolutionary views of Dutch theologians. Dr. Herderschee gives a sketch of Bornemann's "Elementary Lessons in Christianity"—a work which fails to satisfy in all points its rather radical critic, but which he finds highly suggestive. Dr. H. Was gives a new explanation of Plato's "Symposium." A wild but learned work on the history of the Israelites, by C. Niebuhr, is reviewed by Prof. Koster; Harnack's sketch of the history of dogma, and H. L. Oort's dissertation on the title "The Son of Man," by Dr. Bruins. There are also shorter notices of German and English books, by W. C. van Manen.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DAUDET, Alph. Kose et Ninette. Paris: Flammarion. 8 fr. 50 c.
FSANZ, A. Kunstarchiologische Aufnahmen aus Mähren. Brünn: Knauth. 8 M. 50 Pf.
HAYARD, H. L'Œuvre de P. V. Galland. Paris: May & Motteroz. 40 fr.
LE ROUX, Hugues. Notes sur la Norvège. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
MAER, P. Mer bécie: mœurs maritimes. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 8 fr. 50 c.
PIRST, G. Curiosità popolari tradizionali. Vol. XIV. Teatro popolare lucchese, a cura di G. Gianini. Torino: Loescher. 5 fr.
PIZZI, J. Storia della poesia persiana. Torino: Loescher. 10 fr.
ROGER-MILLET, L. Le paysan dans l'œuvre de J. F. Millet. Paris: Flammarion. 6 fr.
SCHMIDT, E. Reise nach Südinien. Leipzig: Engelmann. 8 M.
SÉAILLER, Gabriel. Ernest Renan: Essai de Biographie psychologique. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
WYZEWA, Todor de. En Allemagne: l'art et les mœurs. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- HAUPT, E. Die eschatologischen Aussagen Jesu in den synoptischen Evangelien. Berlin: Reuther. 8 M. 80 Pf.
MÜLLER, D. H. Ezechiel-Studien. Berlin: Reuther. 3 M.
RÉHORE, V. Science des Religions du passé et de l'avenir, du judaïsme et du christianisme. Paris: Pedone-Lauriel. 7 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BACK, S. R. Meir ben Baruch aus Rathenau. Gedenkschrift zur 600. Jahreswende seines Todes. 1. Bd. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Keuffmann. 3 M. 50 Pf.
FONTES rerum austriacarum. 47. II. Pius VI. u. Josef II., 1782-1791. Von H. Schlitter. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 40 Pf.
FOURNIER, Marcel, et Ch. ENOEL. Les Statuts et privilèges des universités françaises depuis leur fondation jusqu'en 1789. 2e Partie. Seizième Siècle. T. IV. L'Université de Strasbourg et les Académies protestantes françaises. Fasc. I. Strasbourg: Paris: Larose. 30 fr.
HAUKE, F. Die geschichtlichen Grundlagen des M. narchenrechts. Wien: Braumüller. 3 M.
KÄMMELEIN, R. Die Stadt Hamburg. 7. Bd. 1555-1584. Von K. Koppmann. Hamburg: Gräfe. 10 M.
KLEINPAUL, R. Das Mittelalter. 1. B. Leipzig: Schönb. u. Günther. 18 M.
MITTEILUNGEN aus dem vaticanischen Archiv. 2. Bd. Eine Wiener Briefsammlung zur Geschichte d. Deutschen Reiches u. der österreichischen Länder in der 2. Hälfte d. 13. Jahrh. Leipzig: Freytag. 7 M. 20 Pf.
MOLLVO, G. Die ältesten libanischen Zirkel. Lübeck: Schmidt. 1 M. 50 Pf.
PLATH, K. Die Königsalpen der Merowinger u. Karolinger. I. Disparium. Berlin: Siebert. 6 M.
PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 60. Bd. Hessisches Urkundenbuch. 2. Abth. 3. Bd. 1359-1376. Leipzig: Hirzel. 24 M.
RICARD, Mgr. Le Concile de 1811, d'après les papiers inédits du cardinal Fesch. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
SCHULZ, H. Peter v. Murrhorne (Papst Coelestin V.). 1. Thl. Berlin: Weber. 1 M. 20 Pf.
VOCABULARIUM jurisprudentiae romanae iussu instituti Savigniani compoerunt O. Gradenwitz, B. Kuebler, E. Th. Schulze. Fasc. I. a-accipio. Berlin: G. Reiner. 8 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BAUMHAUER, H. Die Resultate der Aetzmethode in der kystallographischen Forschung, an e. Reihe v. kystal-lisierten Körpern dargestellt. Leipzig: Engelmann. 16 M.
BRANCO, W. Schwabens 125 Vulkan-Embryonen n. deren tauffüllte Ausbruchsröhren. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 12 M.
BUSSE, L. Philosophie u. Erkenntnistheorie. 1. Abth. 1. u. 2. Th. Leipzig: Hirzel. 8 M.
DRIESCH, H. Analytische Theorie der organischen Entwick-lung. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M.
ELERNHANS, Th. Wesen u. Entstehung d. Gewissens. Eine Psychologie der Ethik. Leipzig: Engelmann. 7 M.
HELM, G. Grundzüge der mathematischen Chemie. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M.
KITTEL, E. Die Gastropoden der Schichten von St. Cassian der südlichen Trias. 3. Th. Wien: Holder. 14 M.
PENCK, A. Morphologie der Erdoberfläche. Stuttgart: Engelhorn. 32 M.
ROTHPLATZ, A. Geotektonische Probleme. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 8 M.
WETTERHAN, D. Das Verhältnis der Philosophie zu der empirischen Wissenschaft v. der Natur. Leipzig: Engelmann. 2 M.
WRZESNICKO, R. Der Grundgedanke der Ethik des Spinoza. Wien: Braumüller. 1 M. 40 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- GABLENZ, G. v. der. Die Verwandtschaft des Baskischen m. den Berbersprachen Nord-Africas nachgewiesen. Braunschweig: Sattler. 12 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A CHARGE OF PLAGIARISM.

Pencilic, Midlothian: Nov. 5, 1894.

Mr. William Wallace's review of my novels in the ACADEMY of November 3 contains the following passage, which I must ask you to reprint:

"Before I leave The Lilac Sunbonnet, I must say that Mr. Crockett would do well to deal with the serious charge of plagiarism which has been made against him in Scotland, and which, so far as I have seen, he has not hitherto attempted to meet. That charge is to the effect that his most notable and most distinctly Hardy-esque exhibition of the humour of Scotch rusticity, the chapter entitled 'The Culf before the Session,' has been to all appearance lifted without acknowledgment from 'Jockey and Maggy's Courtship, Part III.," a chapbook of Dugald Graham, the Skellat Bellman of Glasgow, who died in 1779, and whose works were reprinted in 1883. It has been pointed out that in the chapbook there is a dialogue which runs on thus:

"'Mither, I hae been three or four times through the Bible and the New Testament, and I never saw a repenting stool in't a'. . . . But a daft history book tells me that the first o' them was used about Rome among the Papists. . . ."

Mr. Crockett's chapter contains this:

"'Mother, I've been through the Teataments mair nor yince—the New Testament mair nor twice—an' I never saw nethin about stools o' repentance in the house o' God. But my son Saunders was readi' to me the ither night in a fule history buik, and there it said that among the Papists, &c.'"

The "serious charge" has already done duty in the Glasgow Herald and in the Literary World.

"I have said it thrice:

What I tell you three times is true!"

says another Bellman, whom I do know—him of The Hunting of the Snark. Mr. Wallace, or some one, has told the universe three times that I am a plagiarist. How true the remark is you may judge. I never saw or, to my knowledge, even heard of the works of Dugald Graham, the Skellat Bellman of Glasgow. I saw his name printed for the first time in the accusation of plagiarism itself.

But I did read, a year or so before writing the Lilac Sunbonnet, an old anonymous chapbook, one of a multitude such which I then studied; and in that tract, as in my novel, and as in a familiar ingle-nook tale told in every farm-kitchen in Galloway, a man gets his mother to plead his cause before the Kirk Session.

The extract from the "Bellman" refers to a daft history book for the Catholic origin of stools of repentance; so do I. The book in question is the Scots Magazine for February, 1757, pp. 80, 81: "Reasons for abolishing Stools of Repentance."

I conceive that, without the aid of literary and traditional sources of information—chapbooks, sermons, magazines—a writer on old times in Scotland would be in Mr. Wallace's own state of ingenuous ignorance, and would suppose, for example, that the Covenanters did not claim the power of working miracles.

As Mr. Wallace talks of "my most distinctly Hardy-esque exhibition," I may remind or inform him that he is more accurate than he wots of, and that a charge precisely parallel to that which he brings against me was urged against Mr. Thomas Hardy. He was said to have "lifted" a description of certain military manoeuvres from a forgotten old book about Georgia. This kind of thing is always going on, and I do not think that Mr. Hardy took any further notice of his Mr. William Wallace. And in this, having said my say, I propose to follow his example.

S. R. CROCKETT.

COVENANTING MIRACLES.

London: Nov. 5, 1894.

Mr. Wallace, in his review of Mr. Crockett's novels (November 3), says that, among the claims of the Covenanters, he is not aware that the working of miracles was included. Mr. Wallace may be informed that miracles of healing, of prophecy, of discerning spirits, of exorcism, and of producing, as one may say, death by denunciation, are as common as blackberries in Covenanting hagiology. Madness like Sir Uchtrede's is not more difficult to produce than sudden death! I do not think it necessary to trouble you with examples, but, if required, I can supply them to any extent.

A. LANG.

THE SEPTUAGINT VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

Oxford: Nov. 4, 1894.

Sir H. H. Howorth much mistakes me if he supposes that I implied anything injurious to him in styling him a "volunteer," or that I regarded the "eagerness" of his advocacy of far-reaching conclusions as an unqualified disadvantage. I think it fortunate that we still have a few versatile students who do not disdain subjects which to most laymen are repellent and distasteful. The ACADEMY has published not a few valuable suggestions of Sir H. H. Howorth, which, though (happily) not always new, proceed from independent study. In particular, I took note at the time, with interest, of his much-needed protest against the too confident identification of the "Pharaoh of the oppression" with Rameses II.; and, in spite of the great difficulties in Sir H. H. Howorth's own solution of the problems of Ezra and Nehemiah in the series of letters with which he opened his Septuagint campaign in 1893, I think that he deserves gratitude for raising these questions in this country as a pioneer, and I shall have occasion to state my own opinion on the subject (which connects itself with the study of several post-Exilic writings) in print elsewhere.

I am also most happy to express agreement with Sir H. H. Howorth so far as the thesis of the origin of our Hebrew text from a single archetype is concerned; but I have hitherto been inclined to believe, with Kuenen and Prof. de Goeje (who first introduced Kuenen's masterly discussion of the subject to the English public in the pages of the ACADEMY in 1871, and again in an important review in 1874), that Lagarde's idea of a considerable Jewish falsification of the Hebrew text was erroneous. I hope that this will appear to Sir H. H. Howorth a straightforward answer. There is plenty of room, I know, for investigation, and my friend, Mr. Charles, is not the least valuable of recent acquisitions to the cause of progress: his translation of the Book of Jubilees will by this time be in the hands of Sir H. H. Howorth, and his critical appendices will, I hope, not be too long delayed. Altogether, I see great, but not "stupendous," difficulties; and if I think more highly of German opinion than my critic (having seen again and again the evil consequences of relying on imperfectly trained "common sense"), I hope I may be pardoned. I have myself found continental scholars (as someone lately stated in these pages to be his own experience) "bad to follow"—simply because no scholar, English or German, is good to follow blindly; but I have also found them excellent fellow-workers.

I am sorry that Prof. Robertson Smith's name has been introduced. He never addressed a "caustic" hint to his colleagues in Old Testament research that I can recall, and he would, I think, have resented being styled distinctively a Hebraist, as I for a short time resented it myself. Surely an Old Testament scholar will, as a general rule, become in due time an archaeologist and an historian, without, of course, ceasing to be a Hebraist and a text-critic. I cannot accept the antithesis in which Sir H. H. Howorth places me and other scholars to himself. Nor can I think his description of my own attitude towards the Massoretic text (which is that of critics in general) accurate; and when he goes on to hold me and others responsible for the plan of the Revised Version of the Old Testament, I am fairly baffled. It seemed unfortunate (to use a mild word) that such a faulty version of the Hebrew text should continue to be read in churches, and it was a duty for university scholars, when called upon, to waive any minor objections and take part in the work of revision. But I for one have constantly maintained that nothing short of a new translation from a critically revised Hebrew text was adequate to the wants of thorough Bible students: in short, that we wanted two English Bibles, one for church and the other for home use.

I will gladly co-operate with Sir H. H. Howorth, as well as with Prof. Swete, in pressing the claims of the Septuagint on Hebrew students; but were I to advocate my respected critic's theory as a whole, it seems to me that I should be helping to inflict a serious injury on critical Bible-study. Could we recover the Hebrew MSS. used by the different Septuagint translators, that would indeed be a find, and would lead, in the hands of critics, to surprising results. But, so far as we can judge of the Hebrew text used by the Septuagint translators, can we say that it is, upon an average, more satisfactory than the Massoretic text in general? Must we not apply critical methods both to the received Hebrew text and to the Septuagint? Sir H. H. Howorth would perhaps say, "Wait till you have got a thoroughly critical edition of the Septuagint." But surely this is most impractical advice. We cannot afford to wait; and even with our present Septuagint good results are every year being attained. Prof. Paul Haupt has therefore done well in encouraging the critical use of the Versions, and of a rational method of conjectural emendation, in his new English and Hebrew edition of the Old Testament, to be published by Mr. David Nutt (see detailed programme in Johns Hopkins University Circulars, vol. xi., No. 29, May 1892).

I wish I could write more fully, but must now withdraw from this controversy. I heartily appreciate Sir Henry Howorth's zeal, and fully accept his assurance that he could quote "the latest German memoir." It certainly had appeared to me that he fell into oversights from what I have called his "eagerness," both in minute points of detail and in grave matters of critical theory, from which more attention to "German memoirs," and, above all, a training in the methods of conscientious "pundits," might have delivered him. And I still think that he has, quite unintentionally, been unfair to the class of scholars of whom an admirable representative was the late Prof. Robertson Smith, no mere "pundit" nor mere "Hebraist," and yet no despiser of the methods and the judgments of the best continental and English critical workers.

T. K. CHEYNE.

Cambridge: Nov. 6, 1894.

I regret to find that the last words of my letter in the ACADEMY of November 3 have been supposed to be capable of a meaning which it was certainly not my intention to convey. In endeavouring to be brief I have apparently been worse than obscure; for it was not in my thoughts to attribute to Sir Henry Howorth anything approaching to conscious misstatement. If I might be allowed to fill up the aposiopesis indicated by the —. I should do so in this way: "Is this a consequence of bad handwriting, or what two names ought we to suppose were intended by Sir Henry Howorth when he wrote 'Girgashites' and 'Gershonites'?"

This is all I thought, and, I believe, all I said.
W. ALDIS WRIGHT.

THE FETHARD INSCRIPTIONS, COUNTY WEXFORD.

Torridge, Cambridge: Nov. 3, 1894.

I thank Col. Vigors for his kind criticisms on my transcript of the Baginbun inscription. As he says, the points in which his copy differs from mine are all trivial, with the exception of my error at the commencement of the second line, which he will find I had already corrected and explained in the ACADEMY for October 20.

When I visited the stone last month I took four rubbings—two with heelball and two with damp grass; I also went over my transcript, comparing it letter by letter with the original. My observation at the time, as well as all my rubbings, corroborate my version of the fifth letter of l. 1 and the concluding letters of l. 3. Perhaps the short line in the former letter goes a little more than half way across; but I feel certain that it does not go the whole way across the circular part of the character. Two of my rubbings show a distinct bar between the horizontal stroke and the circle of the third line of l. 3. On the other hand, Col. Vigors is undoubtedly right in making the cross-bar of the second θ in l. 2 a complete diameter, and in his addition of a line, approximately, but not absolutely, horizontal underneath the inscription. I noticed both these features, but did not think them sufficiently important to bring forward in the letter already mentioned.

When Col. Vigors places the three inscriptions side by side he will notice a very remarkable fact: that not only are the Carew and the Castle legends practically identical—the differences between them sink into insignificance when compared with the points of resemblance—but also that the Baginbun and the Castle inscriptions have more than a superficial similarity.

Here is a rough diagram representing the two Fethard inscriptions placed with their lines alternating one with the other. The letters are, of course, merely shown by the nearest approximations which ordinary founts of type will admit; for their true shapes I refer to the published copies (B signifies the Baginbun Stone, F the Fethard Castle Stone, and the three lines of each are represented by the Roman numerals):

B I. Z m a ϕ g i t
F I. m a ϕ g i t
B II. u θ y t ϕ θ Z
F II. e u t p e Ξ
B III. ϕ θ t λ t p *
F III. [c] e t t p *

The differences here also are comparatively small when compared with the points of resemblance. The first two lines of the Baginbun Stone commence with characters peculiar to that inscription; otherwise the two inscriptions differ only in minor varieties of the form of some of the characters. I am doubtful about the first letter of line F III.; it is much injured in the original. The nondescript characters at the ends of the inscriptions, whose positions I have represented by asterisks as they cannot be reproduced in print, are not exactly alike, but they have a very strong family resemblance.

The fact that an epigraphist of the high attainments of Prof. Rhys mistook Hübner's copy of the Fethard Castle Stone for a transcript of the Baginbun Stone is especially noteworthy in this connexion.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

Bedford Park, Chiswick: Nov. 5, 1894.

With reference to the interesting question of the Fethard Castle inscription and its relation to that on Carey Cross, may I point out that Lewis's Topographical Dictionary (quoted by Colonel Vigors) is certainly wrong in stating that "the place was given by Strongbow to Raymond Le Gros"?

The mistake arose in this way. In the Anglo-Norman poem on the Conquest of Ireland which I have recently edited for the Clarendon Press, under the title The Song of Dermot, it is stated in l. 3064 that Earl Richard gave Raymond, among other places, Fethard. This has been wrongly taken to be Fethard in co. Wexford, whereas it can conclusively be shown to have been the district now represented by the barony of Forth, co. Carlow. (See my note to the above passage.) Fethard was probably included in the grant to Hervey de Mont Maurice, consisting of two cantreds next the sea between Wexford and Waterford (Girald. Camb. v., 233; Hoveden, i., 134). Hervey gave some of these lands, including, apparently, Fethard, to the monks of Christ Church, Canterbury, who in the year 1245 transferred them to the Cistercian Monastery De Voto (Tintern, co. Wexford). A transcript of this latter deed is set out in the Journal of the Kilkenny Archaeological Society, 1854-5 (pp. 217-9), and from the grant the town and church of Fethard are excepted in the following terms:

"Salvis tamen epi copo et capitulo ffrenensi villa et ecclesia ffherede [probably a misprint for ffherede = Fethard] cum suis pertinenciis que fuerunt eis a nobis per amicabilem compositionem et confirmationem aliquando concessa."

Two years earlier, in a ratification by John St. John, Bishop of Feros, of the lauds of Dumbrody (another grant of Hervey's), a similar reference is made to a portion of land lying near manerium nostrum de Fethard (Chart. St. Mary's Abbey, Dublin, ii., 171). From about this time Fethard belonged to the Bishop of Ferns; and it seems very probable that the castle, which was afterwards, for centuries, an episcopal residence, was erected by one of the Bishops. Hervey de Mont Maurice, who appears to have been the first Norman grantee, was, of course, not a Carew; but he married Nesta, daughter of Maurice Fitzgerald, and cousin of the first Carew, who was a brother of Raymond le Gros.

GODDARD H. ORPEN.

THE REV. GEORGE HORNER AND THE COPTIC VERSIONS.

Liebigstrasse 9, Leipzig: Nov. 12, 1894.

Mr. Miller, in his fourth edition of Dr. Scrivener's Plain Introduction (vol. ii., p. 91), has given me a mingled panz of joy and pain, by mentioning his obligations to Mr. Horner for aid in respect to the Coptic Versions. I rejoice to see a good man get his due; and I grieve that the modesty of my friend compelled me to strike his name out of the proof-sheets of the Prolegomena to Tischendorf, and to offer to the reader all sorts of valuable Coptic research in an anonymous and impersonal form. Now that he really has been "exposed" in all the vastness of his concealed lore, kindness and modesty, I cannot deny myself the pleasure of tearing away another veil, and saying to the world of scholars that Mr. Horner helped me also in the most self-denying way.

CASPAR RENÉ GREGORY.

AN UNKNOWN (?) HYMN IN HONOUR OF ST. PATRICK.

Lycens: Nov. 2, 1891.

In the ACADEMY for October 20, Mr. Warren publishes a hymn in honour of St. Patrick, which he believes to be inedited.

It may be found (without the last verse) on p. 189 of Colgan's Triadis Thaumaturgae (Louvain, 1647); and M. Ulysse Chevalier also refers to it in his invaluable Repertorium Hymnologicum, under No. 5120.

HUGH VAGANAY

(Librarian at the Free University).

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 11, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Some Animal Defences," by Dr. Andrew Wilson.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "How shall we Teach Religion?" by Mr. J. H. Muirhead.

MONDAY, Nov. 12, 4 p.m. Asiatic: "The Life of Ch'ü Yüan, Author of the Li Shā," by Prof. Legge; "The Stress Accent in the Modern Aryan Vernaculars of India," by Dr. G. A. Grierson.

5 p.m. London Institution: "Primitive Egypt," by Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Lower Extremity," I., by Prof. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Library Association: "The Educational Value of the Public Library Movement," by Mr. E. Foekett.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "British Central Africa Protectorate," by Mr. H. H. Johnston.

TUESDAY, Nov. 13, 8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Colonial Expansion," by Miss Flora L. Shaw.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Address by the President, Sir Robert Rawlinson; Distribution of Medals, &c.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Korea and its People," by Mr. H. Saunders.

THURSDAY, Nov. 15, 4.30 p.m. Historical: Gibbon Commemoration, Addressed by Mr. Frederic Harrison and Others.

6 p.m. London Institution: "Wonder-working Plants," by Dr. D. Morris.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Lower Extremity," II., by Prof. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Linnean: "A Revision of the British Copepoda belonging to the two Genera Bradya and Ectinosoma," by Mr. Thos. Scott; "Recent Observations on the Plant Yields Bhang (Cannabis sativa)," by Dr. D. Frazer.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Alkaloids of Corydalis," by Prof. J. J. Dobbie and A. Leitch.

FRIDAY, Nov. 16, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "The Economics of Direct-Current Central Stations," by Mr. John F. C. Snell.

SCIENCE.

CATULLUS AND HIS MODELS.

Catulle et ses Modèles. Par Georges Lafaye. (Paris.)

THE general object of M. Lafaye in the present work seems to be to free Catullus from the charge of being an "Alexandrian," and to prove that his work is in reality inspired by the literature of classical Greece; in other words, that Catullus, while unable to free himself entirely from more modern influences, was yet at heart in sympathy with the old Greece rather than with the new. This general view, it may be said at once, is sustained throughout with great force and lucidity; at the same time it must be confessed that in matters of detail the author is not always equally convincing.

At the commencement M. Lafaye lays down, as a general principle, that the models of a poem are mostly to be found among earlier poems in the same metre. Acting on this principle, he accepts the ordinary division of the poems of Catullus into five groups: the lyric poems, the epyllion and the elegies, and the epigrams, further subdividing the first of these groups into iambic, melic, and hendecasyllabic. In examining his views it will be most convenient to follow the same arrangement.

"The iambic poetry of Greece belongs to two main schools, the classical and the Callimachian, the latter being a somewhat short-lived reaction against the indecencies and the personalities of the former."

The history of this reaction in its main features is recounted with admirable clearness, though one might perhaps have wished a little more stress to be laid on the external influences which induced Callimachus to make his satires general instead of personal, and to treat of dead rather than of living celebrities. After all, the real reason why Callimachus wrote short pieces, ridiculing or praising people like Thales or Simonides, was probably that these pieces were composed impromptu for recitation at entertainments, as Prof. Reitzenstein has shown was the case with the epigrams in elegiac metre. Just as one poet would be called upon to recite an epigram on some Trojan or Greek hero whose name began with A, while the next had to cap it with one on someone beginning with B, so these iambic trifles of Callimachus were in all probability extemporary effusions on various philosophers, poets, etc., whom he was called upon by his rival versifiers to celebrate. Similarly, when one thinks of the way in which most of the Alexandrian epigrams came to be written, one will perhaps be chary of accepting, as seriously as M. Lafaye seems to do, the criticisms on Archilochus contained in the two epigrams ascribed to Dioscurides and Meleager in Anth. Pal. vii. 351, 352: they read very much like mere replies to a couple of epigrams (since lost) in praise of Archilochus, and as such cannot be taken as at all conveying the real views of their authors.

"Of these two schools of iambics, Catullus, like other Romans before him, was attracted most by the earlier; and though his work shows, as was indeed inevitable, traces of more modern influences, it is with the classical satirists, and more especially Archilochus, that he has most affinity, at any rate of spirit—and affinity of spirit is more than the mere imitation of words or turns of expression."

The parallel between Catullus and Archilochus is worked out in detail, and the points both of likeness and unlikeness dwelt upon with care, the passage in which the buoyant hopefulness of the Greek is contrasted with the consistent pessimism of the Roman being particularly interesting.

But though everyone will be ready to agree with his conclusions, it must be said that M. Lafaye has hardly emphasised as much as one could have wished the real cause of that despondency in the Latin writer, which makes a poem like Catull. 52 so entirely different in spirit from anything in his model. After all, what really made Catullus despair of Rome and the world was Lesbia. He took an interest in the events of the period, as anyone living then could not fail to do; but his heart was never really in politics: if Lesbia had treated him otherwise, he would not have been anxious to die because Vatinius was likely to be elected consul. And here is, of course, the great difference between the Roman and the Greek. Archilochus was never in love in any real sense of the term—that a man should be at all seriously in love with a woman was an unknown thing in his time and for a long time afterwards; and hence that feeling which is, after all, the basis of Catullus' work was necessarily absent from that of Archilochus. Again, it may be doubted whether it is not somewhat far-fetched to dwell on the "modern" melancholy of such a passage as the end of Catull. 4, "sed haec prius fuere." It is surely unnecessarily "modern" to find anything melancholy in it at all. There are days sometimes when the words "armaque fixit Troia, nunc placida compostus pace quiescit," seem to one the most pathetic in all the Aeneid; but there is no reason to suppose that Vergil meant them to be so. The temptation to read more into Catullus' work than he ever intended is very great; all the more, therefore, must one guard against it.

Passing from pure iambi to scazons, M. Lafaye maintains that in these Catullus must to some extent have been influenced by Hipponax, though no direct evidence of such imitation can now be adduced. More unmistakable is the influence of Archilochus. The thoroughly Archilochian nature of Catull. 37 is brought out at some length and with great clearness, though the suggestion that the Glaucus of Archilochus Fr. 57, &c., is the prototype of Egnatius, is not very convincing.

Nor, again, is it very probable that there was ever in Archilochus anything like the passionate outburst of affection for Lesbia which breaks into the middle of Catull. 37. There is little reason to believe that the poetry of Archilochus contained any favourable reference to Neobule whatever. There is no evidence of erotic passages dealing with her at all, except Fr. 71 and 72; and these, if one reads on to the end instead of breaking off in the middle, are hardly as charming as M. Lafaye would have us believe. To suppose that Archilochus was driven to write his satires by disappointed love, is to suppose an anachronism. There is in this respect an essential feature of Catullus' poetry lacking in his models. Whether Catullus found this feature in any Alexandrian iambic writer, or whether it is an addition of his own genius, cannot now be known; but one thing may be said for certain: he did not find it in Archilochus.

"Catullus is a thorough follower of the classical school in his forcible and straightforward language, which gave to his invectives such popularity and political importance, and in his 'open-air' love of nature; but in the actual construction of his verse he is much stricter than his models, and seems to have followed the Alexandrians in the symmetrical division of his poems and in his use of the refrain."

This one will probably be ready to admit, for both these are characteristic features of Alexandrian work, though it is a little bold to say that they are "foreign to classical Greek art" and "an invention of the Alexandrians." The refrain one meets with long before the fourth century, while surely the symmetrical division of elegies, &c., is but an adaptation of the laws of choral lyric poetry to other forms of verse.

"The melic poetry of the Alexandrians is that part of their work of which we know least, but there can be no doubt that at any rate the subjective lyrics of the classical period were extensively imitated from the fourth century onwards. The great difference, however, between these imitations and their originals is, that the former have added to the bold outlines of the latter a mass of realistic detail, which, though excellent in itself, tends rather to overload and confuse the picture."

Various instances of this are given, though why one need introduce the Byzantine Εἰς νεκρὸν Ἀδωνιν as a characteristically Alexandrian piece is not quite clear.

Catullus, M. Lafaye goes on to show, has in his melic poetry much greater affinity with the classical models than with their imitators; and this main contention may be said to be conclusively proved, though it must be confessed that in his very detailed examination of Catull. 51, M. Lafaye is occasionally led into oversubtlety. One does not require an argument of many pages to convince one that this poem has more affinity with Sappho than with the Alcaic pieces of Theocritus. This poem is not, M. Lafaye maintains, really a translation of Sappho in any strict sense of the word, but is constructed on the same principle as Theocr. 29: the first line is a translation, to show the reader what style of work to expect, then the poet branches off and treats the subject freely in his own way. Great stress is laid on the points in which Catullus differs from Sappho, and the suggestion that the former omits to render ἀνὸ φωνέουρας because Lesbia had not a pleasing voice is certainly delightful; but it is surely a little far-fetched to lay such emphasis on "sedens," sitting being regarded by a Roman as something degrading!

The brilliant and startling effect produced in Catull. 11 by the contrast between the Alexandrian beginning and the Lesbian end is well brought out, while for Catull. 17 again a classical origin is claimed, though with some hesitation. But the best part of this section is the last, where M. Lafaye shows that Catullus did not imitate Alcaeus, and why: a couple of pages of lucid reasoning which cannot bear condensation. The fact, however, that Alcaeus was the author of Ἐρωτικά was not necessarily such an attraction for Catullus as M. Lafaye seems to think; for these Ἐρωτικά were, so far as we can judge, exclusively Παιδικά, and as such far more sympathetic to Greek than to Roman taste.

In treating of the Epithalamia, M. Lafaye dwells on the very un-Alexandrian character of Catull. 61, and suggests that both the metre and much of the treatment, especially the numerous flower-images, are borrowed from Sappho; while in Catull. 62—which, in spite of its metre, he very naturally includes among the melic poems—the absence of Alexandrian influence is equally marked. Both these pieces are well illustrated by an elaborate analysis of the extant fragments of Sappho's Epithalamia, though it is distressing to see that he adopts Bonin's unpoetical interpretation of Fr. 94, while for Fr. 93 again he does not seem to have sufficiently examined Longus' adaptation of the passage in his Pastoralia 3, 33, 34. He is also in favour of the view that Sappho already employed two choirs, and argues his case powerfully, though it cannot be said that he is entirely convincing.

"Hymns in rapid lyric metres were written successfully by both Sappho and Anacreon; and therefore Catull. 34 might be an imitation of either of these writers, though its distinctly religious tone seems to render it probable that it was modelled on the former."

This view is supported by an analysis of the extant fragments of Anacreon's hymns, though here there is a serious slip or misprint which makes the Hymn to Dionysus (Fr. 2) refer to Cleobule instead of Cleobulus.

On the Attis M. Lafaye does not do much except develop Wilamowitz—there is not much else to be done. He then concludes his review of the melic poems with an enquiry into the reasons which deterred Catullus from attempting any imitation of Pindar, in the course of which he suggests that the dicta of Horace and Quintilian as to the inimitability of Pindar are based upon the expressed view of some Alexandrian, perhaps Callimachus: a suggestion which certainly sounds very plausible.

In treating of the hendecasyllables, M. Lafaye gives a short history of the metre among the Greeks from Sappho onwards. In the course of this he suggests that the verse became known as Phalaecian, owing to the fact that Phalaecus altered the ictus of the line from the second foot to the first; and he argues forcibly that works like the Leschai of Heraclides show that there must have been a large quantity of Alexandrian hendecasyllabic poetry of which nothing is now known. As to the actual models of Catullus, however, he cannot afford much information, and contents himself with a lengthy analysis of this form of poetry as treated by Catullus himself. He dwells upon the very un-Roman character of these poems and upon the opposition they could not fail to raise, and explains the licence of their language by two distinct theories. He maintains, on the one hand, that Catullus is to be regarded as the conscious champion of freedom of speech in verse, as opposed to the moral censors of the day—a view that does not sound very probable; while, on the other hand, he argues that much of the violence in these pieces is merely so much friendly "chaff" which his readers knew how to take at its proper worth; in fact, Catullus was really on perfectly friendly terms with Furius and Aurelius all the time! Of course, all this may have been so, but it cannot be said that M. Lafaye has proved that it was.

In a very able examination of the Idyllion of Peleus and Thetis (Catull. 64), M. Lafaye points out in detail the various Alexandrianisms of the poem, which he divides for critical purposes into two parts: the theogamy of the beginning and end, and the romantic episode which comes between. With reference to the former of these, he dwells on the significant fact that Catullus was the earliest Roman, so far as we know, to follow the Alexandrians in applying the language of love to marriage, though the suggestion that this was done upon moral grounds is hardly to be taken seriously. In the latter, he shows with great clearness what Catullus has derived from Euripides and Apollonius, and what is his own: indeed, this whole passage, which extends over a good many pages, is an admirable specimen of the author's lucidity of exposition. Exception, however, must be taken to one matter of detail. In the course of his argument, M. Lafaye speaks of the love of the Medea of Apollonius as on a par with that of the Phaedra of Euripides. She is "victime d'une force supérieure, qui la pousse à sa perte," and more to the same effect. This, as every student of the evolution of love must know, is not accurate. Between Euripides and Apollonius there is in this respect a vast difference, the difference between the old and the new. Love to the classical Greek is an external impulse, no doubt; but to the Alexandrian it is a personal emotion. The fact that the old-fashioned machinery of Aphrodite and so on is still employed, is immaterial; the two conceptions are essentially distinct, and all confusion between them must be carefully avoided.

The chapter on the elegies commences with a thorough analysis of the "Coma Berenices," which M. Lafaye regards as a complete translation from Callimachus; and this is followed by a similar treatment of the poem to Mallius—or Manlius, as our author prefers to call him. Here, however, he indulges in several theories which are, to say the least, as yet unproved, especially in his treatment of the Laodamia episode. Laodamia he regards as a companion figure to Ariadne, her misfortune having been brought about by her own misconduct, and by the impatience which made her anticipate her wedding-day, and thereby offend the gods of Marriage. This he, following Baehrens, considers to have been the Alexandrian version of the story. Whether one cares to subscribe to this very doubtful interpretation is perhaps a matter of taste; but anyhow, it is surely not accurate to describe the story of the image which Laodamia made of her dead husband as Alexandrian. If this were so, how would he propose to explain Eur. Fr. 655 (Nauck)? Again, the theory which he tacitly adopts, that the lady of this elegy is not Lesbia but some person unknown, is a painfully prosaic one, and does not really help to clear up the difficulties of the poem.

After a short and rather colourless chapter on the epigrams, M. Lafaye discusses briefly, but in a masterly way, the main question of the chronology of the poems, adopting a course midway between the theories of Baehrens and Riese, which commends itself in every way. The comparison of Catullus with the Alexandrian school in general, with which the work concludes, is again in the author's best style, and sums up the main points of his argument.

Altogether, the work may be described as a masterpiece of lucidity. The reader may find himself in disagreement with many of its details and with some of its conclusions; but the general line of argument is sustained throughout with a clearness and a fluency which at once make it delightful reading and go far towards making it convincing. E. F. M. BENECKE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CONNEXION BETWEEN BABYLONIAN AND GREEK ASTRONOMY.

BARTON-ON-HUMBER.

The now universally admitted connexion between Babylonian and Greek astronomy appears very strikingly in the Tablets No. 137, 82-7-4, dated 273 B.C., and Rm. iv. 397, dated 232 B.C. These two tablets, which have been edited and translated by MM. Epping and Strassmaier, contain the names of the Signs of our Zodiac and descriptions of various single stars and star-groups in or near the ecliptic, and record a series of observations of the positions of the moon and planets. Thus, Tablet No. 137, 82-7-4, which is dated "the 38th year of Antiuksu (Antiochos) and Siluku (Seleukos) the Kings," reads (l. 6):

"On the 18th—cloudy and dark. On the night of the 19th, in the morning the moon was distant about 6 ammāt [1 ammāt = 2° 18'] from the westerly Twin (Castor, a Geminorum)."

This specimen will show the general character of the observations recorded; and the list of the star-names which the tablets contain, and which I have translated from the Babylonian, is as follows:

1. "The westerly-one in the head of the Ram" (β Arietis).

2. "The easterly-one in the head of the Ram" (α Arietis).

In the Hipparcho-Ptolemy Star-list (150 B.C.—A.D. 150), the basis of which was the Babylonian Star-lists, this star (Hamal "the Ram") is described as "the one over the head which Hipparchos places at the muzzle," an illustration of slight alteration of the constellation-figures in the course of time.

3. "The Foundation" (Pleiades).

The name is a reminiscence of the time when Taurus was the leading sign. Ptolemy uses "Pleid" collectively of the group (cf. Euripides, Ion, 1152); and the Pleiades ("Clusterers") derive their name from the Assyrian kintu ("family"), Hebrew Kimah (Job. ix. 9, &c.). The name reappears in the second Arabian Manzil (Lunar Station) Al-thurayyā ("the Cluster").

4. "The Yoke" or "Furrow" (α Tauri).

The ecliptic was regarded as a "yoke" laid across heaven, and as "the furrow of heaven," ploughed by the seven planets; and the name of the ecliptic became in time technically transferred to its first great star.

5. "The northern light of the Chariot" (β Tauri).

This is the "chariot" of Auriga, not the Wain (= Ursa Major).

Ptolemy: "The one at the tip of the northern horn, the same (which) is in the right foot of the Charioteer."

6. "The southern light of the Chariot" (ζ Tauri).

7. "The westerly-one at the beginning of the Twins" (γ Geminorum).

Ptolemy: "The one at the projecting foot of the leading Twin."

8. "The easterly-one at the beginning of the Twins" (μ Geminorum).

9. "The Twin of the Shepherd" (γ Geminorum)—i.e., of "the shepherd Tammuz," Tammuz (= Orion) being the adjoining constellation.

10. "The westerly Twin" (α Geminorum).

Ptolemy: "The one at the head of the leading Twin."

11. "The easterly Twin" (β Geminorum).

12. "The westerly-one at the south of the Crab" (θ Cancri).

13. "The centre of the Crab" (ε Cancri).

Ptolemy: "The cloudlike collection in the breast, the centre of that called the Manger."

14. "The westerly-one at the north of the Crab" (γ Cancri).

15. "The easterly-one at the south of the Crab" (δ Cancri).

16. "The head of the Lion" (ε Leonis).

Ptolemy: "The more-southerly of the two in the head."

17. "The King" (α Leonis).

Ptolemy: "The one at the heart called the Little King" (Βασίλειος, Latin Regulus). "The Lion has at its heart a star called Basiliskos, which the Chaldeans think is leader of the heavenly host" (Schol. in Arat. Phainom. 148).

18. "The small-one in the region after the King" (ρ Leonis).

That such a small star as ρ Leonis should be separately named shows how carefully the whole stellar array had been studied and mapped out.

19. "The tail of the Dog of the Lion" (θ Leonis).

It seems that a Dog was imagined after the Lion, and flying from the latter, fearing lest it should turn round; for the thirteenth Arabian Manzil is Al-Awwā ("The Howler"), and Smyth, speaking of β Virginis, says, "Piazzi calls it Zāvijava, which is corrupted from Zāvīyat-al-awwā, the retreat of the barker. Ulugh Beigh has it Min-al-awwā—i.e., the stars of the barker, or barking bitch. These stars, β, γ, δ, and η [Virginis] and, according to Tizini, ε also, form the XIIIth Lunar Mansion; of which γ is termed by Kazwini Zāvīyah-al-awwā (the barker's corner), being at the angle of those stars" (Cycle of Celestial Objects, ii. 258). This Dog was not a separate constellation, but included in Leo, as, e.g., the Goat (Capella) in Auriga. Proctor, speaking of ε, δ, γ, η, and β Virginis, says, "For some cause or other . . . this corner was called by Arabian [and other] astronomers 'the retreat of the howling dog'" (Easy Star Lessons, p. 109). The cause now appears, and it supplies an interesting instance of the connexion between the Arabian Lunar Mansions and Babylonian.

20. "The tail of the Lion" (β Leonis, Denebola = Dzenez-al-asad, "Tail-of-the-Lion").

21. "The easterly foot of the Lion" (β Virginis).

Ptolemy: "The one at the top of the southern and left wing." The Howling Dog must have been represented as running away almost between the Lion's hind legs.

22. "The westerly bright-one of the Ear-of-Corn" (γ Virginis).

23. "The one called Ear-of-Corn" (Spica, α Virginis).

Ptolemy: "The one at the left band called Ear-of-Corn."

24. "The southern Claw" (α Librae).

Ptolemy: "The bright-one of those at the end of the southern Claw."

25. "The northern Claw" (β Librae).

Ptolemy: "The bright-one of those at the end of the northern Claw."

26. "The centre-one of the head of the Scorpion" (δ Scorpionis).

Ptolemy: "The centre-one of the three bright ones in the head."

27. "The great-one of the head of the Scorpion" (ε Scorpionis).

28. "The Scorpion of death" (Antares, α Scorpionis).

The reading is doubtful. I prefer the rendering here given.

29. "The star of the region in front of PA" (θ Ophiuchi).

PA = Papilsak ("Winged-fire-head"), the upper western part of Sagittarius. Such a description shows that the Tablet is not the result of Greek teaching.

[30. "The star of the Left-hand"] (δ Sagittarii. W. A. I. III. lvii., No. 5).

Ptolemy: "The one at the grip of the left-hand."

No stars in Sagittarius or Aquarius happen to be mentioned in these tablets; but adding from other tablets the usual stars occurring in those two signs, we get a total of thirty-six zodiacal stars or star-stations, an artificial number which, I think, is clearly connected with the thirty-six names of Ea (W. A. I. II. lv.), considered as a zodiacal power, whether lunar or otherwise. These thirty-six stars supplied the origin of the theory of the Decans, or thirty-six Genii, who ruled the Zodiac, and whose late Graeco-Egyptian names are given by Julius Firmicus (iv. 16). Decanal "theology" was a secret and important part of ancient astro-religious belief. Star No. 30 shows that the practice of naming a star from a portion of a constellation-figure is Babylonian, and not derived from the Greeks.

[31. "The star of Eridu"] (σ Sagittarii. Tablet K 2894).

32. "The horn of the Goat" (α and β Capricorni).

Ptolemy: "The northern of the three in the hindmost horn" (α Capricorni). "The southern one of the three" (β Capricorni).

33. "The westerly-one in the tail of the Goat-fish" (γ Capricorni).

Ptolemy: "The foremost of the two beside the tail."

34. "The easterly-one in the tail of the Goat-fish" (δ Capricorni).

[35. "The star of the Foundation"] (δ Aquarii. W. A. I. V. xlv., No. 1).

36. "The Cord of the Fishes" (η Piscium).

Ptolemy: "The centre-one from the knot of those in the northern Cord."

"Hipparchus," says Pliny, with bated breath, "nunquam satis laudatus, . . . ausus, rem etiam Deo improbam, annumerare posteris stellas" (Hist. Nat. ii. 26). But it is clear that, when he compiled his Catalogue of 1080 stars, he had much important foreign literary material to work upon. Unfortunately his works, with a comparatively insignificant exception, are lost; or we might have known more about "Nazaratos the Assyrian," the instructor of Pythagoras, a sage who "held converse with the chief of the Chaldaeans" (Clem. Alex. Strom. i. 15); and about the Babylonian mathematicians—Kidenas, Sudinas, and Naburianos (Strabo, XVI. i. 6); and doubtless concerning many others, such as Berosos, who passed on the archaic lore of the Euphrates Valley to the active Greek mind.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

WAS LINDUM A COLONIA?

Liverpool: Oct. 31, 1894.

The correspondence on this subject in the ACADEMY of October 21 and 28, 1893, tended to unsettle the belief that the second syllable of Lincoln is the Latin colonia. Mr. Bradley, the originator of the correspondence, pointed out the impossibility of direct phonetic filiation between Lindum colonia and the oldest English form Lindcylene. But there was surely ample time for the word to undergo Celtic influences in British mouths before it was transmitted by them to their Anglian conquerors. I venture to translate from the Proceedings of the 42nd Philologenversammlung, held in May, 1893, a paragraph from a paper read by Prof. Pogatscher, of Prag, on the chronology of the I-umlaut in Old English:

"One very important word is the O.E. name for Lincoln. The oldest instance that I know (not having Kemble's Odox to refer to) is to be found in the Chronicle 941-2: A has Lincylene: B, Lindcylas: C, Lindcylas: D, Lincolne. Of these forms, those with y are proved by their mere transmission to be the older, and that with e is easily to be explained by the influence of the Latin form colonia, familiar to the scribes—an occurrence also usual elsewhere. Compare Modern English Thames, influenced in writing by the Lat. Tamensis, with the pronunciation Temz, and the O.E. Temes: or the O.E. Tenid, O.E.T. 427, Tenet, Chron. 853, with the modern Thanet. The form -eylene, which, according to O.E. phonetic laws, is due to the middle syllable, cannot be directly explained from Lat. colonia: because the Lat. tonic \bar{o} would become unstressed in Old English, after the short stressed syllable col-, and therefore incapable either of umlaut or of transmitting umlaut to the O.E. stressed syllable. The word colonia has rather, as Loth points out (Les mots latins dans les langues brittoniques, p. 18, note), passed through the Celtic. The tonic \bar{o} of Latin words, borrowed by Celtic, develops, in common with Brit. \bar{o} into Brit. \bar{u} (Rhys Celtic Britain, p. 303, &c., Loth, p. 67, &c.), a sound-change which, according to Loth, was already completed in the fifth century. Whether this \bar{u} , however, as Loth states (p. 18, note), had a certain tendency towards i : is doubtful, if this conclusion is drawn only from the replacement of this sound [by i] in Old English. For, supposing that Old English, at the time of the transfer, possessed as yet no y , then i must of course have taken its place. Pursuant to this sound-change we see Bede's Dinnot (Hist. Eccl. ii., 2) arising from Lat. Dinnotus, through [Brit.] Dinnot (Rhys, p. 304); and Eog Clyde, from Celto-Lat. Clota, through old Kymric Clut, later Clud (Rhys, p. 147). So also from Lat. colonia, through Brit. colūn (Loth, p. 18), comes Bede's Lindo-Colina (Hist. Eccl. ii., 16, 18), which thus embalms for us in Latin the antecedent stage of O.E. Lind(d)eylene: whose y must repose upon O.E. umlaut, because Brit. \bar{u} from \bar{o} , gives rise to no [Celtic] 'infectio' (Loth, p. 101)."

R. J. LLOYD.

SCIENCE NOTES.

AT the general monthly meeting of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, held last Monday, the following donations to the fund for the promotion of experimental research at low temperatures were acknowledged: Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, £200; Lady Burdett Coutts, Sir Andrew Noble, Prof. Dewar, and the late Thomas Hawksley, £100 each; Sir Frederick Abal, Mr. J. T. Brunner, and Mr. Charles Hawksley, £50 each; Mr. Edward Frankland, £21; Sir John Lubbock, £20; Mr. W. Morris Beaufort, £10—total £801.

THE first meeting of the new session of the Royal Geographical Society will be held on Monday next, at 8.30 p.m., in the theatre of the University of London, Burlington House, when Mr. H. H. Johnston will read a paper on "The British Central Africa Protectorate." Two other African communications are promised before Christmas, from M. Lionel Deele and Mr. Walter B. Harris.

AT the first meeting of the Anthropological Institute, to be held at 3 Hanover-square, on Tuesday next, at 8.30 p.m., Mr. H. Sanderson will read a paper on "Korea and its People," illustrated with the optical lantern. Among the communications promised for future meetings are: "The Northern Settlements of the West Saxons," by Dr. John Beddoe; "The Ainos of Japan," by Mr. A. H. Savage Landor; "The Natives of New Guinea," by Mr. James Chalmers; and "The Ethnographic Aspect of Dancing," by Mrs. Lilly Grove.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. will publish next week two more volumes of the "Naturalists' Library," dealing with Monkeys, by Dr. H. O. Forbes.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE first meeting of the session of the Royal Asiatic Society will be held at 22, Albemarle-street, under the presidency of Lord Reay, on Tuesday next, at 4 p.m., when the two following papers will be read: "The Life of Ch'u Yüan, Author of the Lí São Poem, about the End of the Third Century B.C.," by Prof. Legge; and

"The Stress Accent in the Modern Aryan Vernaculars of India," by Dr. G. A. Grierson.

WE quote from the Revue Bleue the following estimate, by M. Bréal, of the work and character of the late James Darmesteter:—

"Le deuil en est ressenti à Londres et à Berlin comme à Paris, et cette mort si brusque éveillera de douloureuses sympathies jusque dans les villes de l'Inde, où Darmesteter avait été naguère salué comme un glorieux représentant de la science française. Doué des plus rares facultés, il s'était rendu maître, comme en se jouant, des méthodes philologiques. Les écrits qu'il a publiés dans cette direction sont de véritables chefs-d'œuvre, qui seront cités à l'avenir aux jeunes gens comme des modèles. Sa publication du Zmd-Avesta est un véritable monument. Mais l'érudition ne suffisait pas à cette nature ardente. La littérature, la politique l'attiraient; et quand la direction d'une grande Revue lui fut offerte, il se trouva sans effort à la hauteur de cette tâche nouvelle. Il y apporta les vues d'un esprit philosophique, nourri de tous les enseignements de l'histoire, et les passions d'un cœur généreux. Aussi le vide que laisse la disparition d'un tel homme, ne sera pas comblé. Ses amis ne se consolent pas de son départ. Le pays tout entier a perdu l'un de ses voix par lesquelles il avait droit de se faire entendre, et où l'on reconnaissait l'âme et l'accent de la France."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Oct. 27.)

S. L. GWYNN, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths gave some notes on "The Sources of 'Romeo and Juliet,'" mentioning the works of Da Porto (1530), Serin (1542), Clitia (1553), Bandoello (1554), Boiastuan (1559), Brooke (1562), and Painter (1567), and referring to the theory that Shakspeare was also indebted to Grotto's play of "La Hadriana" (1578).—Mr. Gwynn read a paper on "The Spirit of 'Romeo and Juliet,'" in which Shakspeare has done what he has nowhere else attempted: he has written the lyrical drama of passionate love—"love the unconquered in fight" of Sophocles, love that strikes like lightning and which can only be fitly treated in tragedy. Over and over again Shakspeare has treated the passion: he has shown love at cross-purposes in the "Two Gentlemen of Verona," love masquerading in "Twelfth Night," love jesting, love serious, love deepairing, love passionate, love rejected, love pursuing, love in all its moods and phases. He has made it the pivot of twenty plays, on which turns farce, comedy, or tragedy; but nowhere else has he made it the drama itself, or only once in "Antony and Cleopatra." But that is the passion of middle age, of a man and woman past their noon of life, who have tasted all the stimulants and find none like passion, and who in their enjoyment are always conscious that it is a race against time to crowd the most of joy into the space before there shall be no more enjoyment. Nothing could be less like the spirit of the lovers in the garden: their love is not an hour born, and already it takes hold upon eternity. Shakspeare has no jesting upon a love like this: there it is, he shows us it, one of the great sporadic outbreaks of Nature, a rare blessing or a rare calamity. Romeo fancying himself like to die for Rosaline is a pining creature, but Romeo in love with Juliet is his own man again and better: love is new life in his veins. Yet Shakspeare paints this irresistible attraction of two creatures for each other with a kind of terror, a sense of impending fate. It is not now the pretty idyllic view of love that the "Winter's Tale" shows us or "The Tempest," no story told with the softened accent of a man who looks back on the holiday-time of his own affections; it is not Shakspeare of the Sonnets writing of the passion that pulls a man down, the serpent of old Nile that wound about Antony; but it is the young man wringing of what—more than dreams of power, or fame, or genius—occupies the imagination of imaginative youth, writing of the passion that can transmute and transfigure life. The two scenes that pass in Juliet's balcony have taken hold upon the world as perhaps no other single passage in Shakspeare: the summer moonlight is not more universal; there is the pure note, the essential poetry of that sheer invincible, unreasoning, magnetic force which everybody has heard spoken of, which few have felt, but which possesses an eternal fascination for the human mind.—Miss Louisa Mary Davies, in a paper entitled "A Veronese Interior," dealt with the home life of the Capulet household. The conjugal relations of the master and mistress of the mansion have an air of familiarity, which gives us the sensation that the type may even now be studied from the life. These two do not depend for happiness on the dual intercommunion of soul and interchange of ideas; their hospitality is frequent and generous. So frequent is it that the servant who has to deliver the invitations to the guests for the ball ventures on his own responsibility to invite a hitherto unbidden and, in point of fact, a most unbiddable guest to his master's festivity in recognition of his learning and valuable assistance. Apart from the mediæval colouring supplied by the necessity for the continual renewing of the lights and the hostile encounter between the guests, this Capulet ball may be a picture of many a Christmas revel of our own time. But in a retired wing of the Palazzo Capulet we shall find Juliet, who must have been made the incarnate poem she is by the cloistral seclusion of the spot where she dwelt, aided by the pervasive influence of Friar Laurence. The kitchen of the mansion is on very familiar terms with the living rooms, and is throughout a scene of jocular confusion; the master at 3 a.m. is interfering with the cook and being scolded by the nurse, hastily issuing orders which are saucily disregarded. The only member of the domestic staff who seems to be at all amenable to any kind of discipline is Peter, the nurse's gentleman. But it is a comedy in itself to observe the change in the man when released from his imperious mistress's morbid grip of his personality.—Mr. Arthur S. Way read a paper, entitled "England in the year of 'Romeo and Juliet,'" in which he assumed for the play the date of 1591. The contemporary events of literary, social, and political importance in England and abroad were passed in review; and the conclusion reached that the curtain of "Romeo and Juliet" went up in the presence of an audience that included brilliant courtiers, bluff sea-captains, daring privateers, and statesmen who were unselfish, keen-sighted, devoted, and unscrupulous, with poets and essayists who were intellectual and envious. How the talk before the curtain must have contrasted with the twaddle that does duty for talk now!—Mr. Leo. H. Grierson, in a paper entitled "Juliet upon the Stage," said "Romeo and Juliet" is a difficult piece for the theatre, not only by reason of the delicate care and thoughtfulness demanded by the scenery, but also because of the rare qualifications indispensable to the personator of the heroine, who must appeal almost, if not quite, as forcibly to the sympathies of the deaf who only see, as to those of the blind who only hear. Her every attitude and movement must be picturesque. In her utterance there must be no display of power or of tones such as besit oratory. It is vitally important, again, that our actress should understand metre. She must realize the consummate skill which makes Juliet after her "prodigious birth of love" for Romeo jump into womanhood at a bound, capable of forming and effectuating the sternest resolves. She must understand that the character all the while is susceptible of interpretation only from the highest poetic standpoint; and that to ignore this, and attempt to play the part no other than realistically, is as if one were to lift the Venus de Medicis from her pedestal and make her human and small by dressing her up in the newest fashion of the nineteenth century. Juliet is not to be played as if she were just a pretty and amiable young woman; she is rather to be presented as a type of beauty, simplicity and harmony—physical, moral and intellectual—all in one: Juliet and no other, in her freshness, her innocence, her ecstasy, her determination, her despair, and her death. Juliet always, never Ophelia, or Beatrice, or Helena, or Rosalind, or any other of the immortals, but Juliet, first and last. The revolution in her nature, the instant seizure of the senses, the arrest of the blood—succeeded by its quickened flow—all this, and much that follows, has no parallel in any drama, ancient or modern.—Mr. Way read a note on "The Stage and Poisoning." In Shakspeare's time the resources and power of poisons were believed, not only on the stage, but in courts of law and historical treatises, to have been practically unlimited. Marlowe's "Jew of Malta" (ii. 3), Webster's "White Devil" (ii. 3) and "Duchess of Malfi" (v. 2), are only samples of what would then go down with a theatrical audience. Taking such into consideration, it is no small evidence of the sobriety of Shakspeare's judgment, and his self-control in dealing with the marvellous and sensational, that the poisonings in his dramas are so slightly beyond the limits of the possible.—Mrs. Meyrick Heath, in a paper on "The Art of Dramatic Reading," dealt with the questions of voice-production, articulation, and expression. In reading a play of Shakspeare without preparation there cannot be the light and shade, the grasp of the character, the force and emphasis and careful modulation of tone and time, which go, besides correct voice-production and articulation, to make up the charm of the immortal impersonations of the dramatist.

FINE ART.

OBITUARY.

P. G. HAMERTON.

ONE or two rather chilly and ill-informed notices which have appeared of Mr. Hamerton since the first announcement, on Tuesday morning, of his death, suggest the unwelcome conclusion that it is possible for a man to do distinguished service during a whole generation, and then, by the accident of living chiefly at a distance from "the centre of things," to fail to retain a fulness of recognition which one would have thought had been finally secured.

Philip Gilbert Hamerton, who died—suddenly, it must have been—at his house at Boulogne-sur-Seine, at the beginning of the week, was one of the most sagacious and best informed of art writers, a critic whose elasticity and range of mind, whose breadth of mental vision, whose possession, too, of literary taste and of historical knowledge, placed him—it is scarcely necessary to say it—in a category altogether distinct from, and above, that of the fluent scribbler who has no knowledge, and of the blameworthy but bigoted sectarian painter who, if he writes, writes with no literary talent, and with no range of even artistic vision beyond the walls of his own studio. Sympathetic and careful, flexible and amply instructed, Mr. Hamerton touched no subject on which he was not heard with profit. A Painter's Camp in the Highlands was, perhaps, the first production that gave evidence of charm of literary style; Etchings and Etchers, in 1868—of which the first edition has become a desirable rarity—bore witness to the intelligence with which he studied, and to the philosophical spirit in which he deliberately considered, any special branch of art to which he consecrated his attention.

About a year after the appearance of this admirable, even though not quite finally satisfactory, text-book upon one of the most fascinating, and at that time one of the most neglected, of the autographic arts, Mr. Hamerton, in close alliance with his friend Mr. Richmond Seeley, started the Portfolio, an "artistic periodical," which not only survives to this day, but performs a doubly useful function in issuing, with the steadiness of a serial, monograph after monograph, each one of which is, upon its special subject, the utterance of an expert. Under Mr. Hamerton's and Mr. Seeley's guidance, the Portfolio, more, perhaps, than any other monthly magazine, has addressed itself with success, not at all to the idle public, but to the serious student who would wish to be a connoisseur of the arts.

Of the other works associated with Mr. Hamerton's name, the very large volume on Landscapes—at once pictorial and literary—and the substantial tome which goes under the title of The Graphic Arts are probably the two principal. To the second that I have mentioned I should give the higher place. Nowhere else is there afforded such admirable opportunity of weighing the claims of one artistic method or medium against the claims of another—not so much their actual degrees of merit (a matter practically impossible to gauge and idle to discourse about) as their individual characteristics, and their relative appropriateness for a particular labour. But by much that has not been mentioned in the few preceding lines, as well as by the books here briefly described, did Mr. Hamerton establish his claim to be esteemed as one of the most agreeable and serviceable contributors to the art literature of the time.

F. W.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO CIMA'S ALTAR-PIECE "THE INCREDULITY OF THOMAS."

DURING the negotiations which took place in Venice in 1869 for the purchase of Cima's work for the National Gallery, the small register of expenses of the Fraternity of the Battuti (Flagellants) of Portogruaro, containing all the details of payments made for the picture, was placed by Mr. Boxall in my hands for translation; and the following extracts from the principal entries may perhaps interest the readers of the ACADEMY.

On May 28, 1497, the Brotherhood, presided over by their Master (Gastaldo = steward, administrator), Sig. Antonio Fantoni; the assistant master, Sig. Marcuardo della Fratina; their councillors; and represented by a strong number of members—altogether forty—adopted the resolution (nem. contr.): that orders should be given for an altar-piece, to be placed in the Church of St. Francesco at Portogruaro on the altar of St. Thomas, under whose patronage the fraternity has been established; that the work should be a painting and not a bas-relief; and that the Master should be entrusted with the charge of taking the necessary steps to effect this resolution.

In 1502 Master Angelo de Radino enters this curious item in the book: "for two gammons of bacon presented to the artist who is painting the altar-piece at Venice, 2 lire."

In 1503 the same Master adds: "paid in various instalments on account of the altar-piece of St. Thomas of Portogruaro which Master Gian Battista of Conegliano, a painter living in Venice, is now executing, 50 ducats or 310 lire."

In 1504 the Master, Benedetto Tintor—the same referred to in the inscription (now half obliterated), introduced by the artist on a label placed on the lower part of the picture on the left of spectator*—enters these items relating to the completion of the work and its conveyance to Portogruaro:

"For my journey to Venice to take the money to the painter, who had urgently asked for it in a letter wherewith he threatened to leave the picture unfinished unless his request were immediately complied with—5 lire 10 soldi;

"paid on account to the painter—25 ducats, or 155 lire;

"paid also for the case of the picture—6 lire;

"to the porters—8 soldi;

"to the painter's assistants for refreshments—2 lire;

"for carriage of the case to the painter's house—4 soldi;

"for the conveyance of the picture in its case by sea to Portogruaro—6 lire 16 soldi;

* The inscription runs as follows: "At the time of Master Benedetto Tintor, of the late Angelo, of (Councillors?) Ranjio Compagno and . . . Parigaja, of the late Paterniano . . . this work was painted by unanimous vote of the Council" paid also to the painter of the case—2 lire;

 " for blue colour to paint the case—
 2 lire;
 " for three planks—15 soldi;
 " to an assistant carpenter to make the case—1 lira 5 soldi;
 " to place the picture on the altar of
 St. Thomas—2 lire;
 " to fit the picture on the altar, and for rope, nails and a lamp to hang in front of picture—8 lire 8 soldi."

In 1505, the Master, Daniele Fantoni, adds the following expenses:

"for a curtain to cover the picture, for an iron rod to hang the curtain from, for iron rings, cord, fittings, and for a cross to be sewn in the centre of curtain—10 lire 19 soldi;
 "paid to the painter on account—25 ducats, or 155 lire;
 "to the notary for his trouble—6 soldi."

In 1506, the Master, Giovanni Andrea Pellizaro, enters another instalment:

"paid to the painter of the altar-piece of St.
 Thomas—62 lire."

In 1507, the Master, Ambrogio Marangone, registers the following items relating to a suit at law initiated by the painter for the payment of the full balance or return of the picture:

"paid for legal documents, copies of them, letters to lawyers, and for witnesses, &c., &c.— 48 soldi."

In 1508, the Master, Francesco Barbiere, adds other expenses for litigation and a further instalment to the artist:

"paid for copies of documents, letters to Venice, and messenger to Udine—9 lire 14 soldi;
 "to the painter, paid on account—62 lire."

In 1509, the Master, Giacomo Molinaro, makes the final entries in the register concerning the picture:

"agreeably to the amicable settlement of February 13, 1509, I have sent to the artist, through Signor Marcuardo della Frattina, on April 17, 1509, the balance still due to him in completion of the price agreed for the altar-piece of St. Thomas—74 lire 8 soldi;

"paid to the notary, S. Bianchin, as per terms of settlement, half the amount of the expenses for the law-suit—12 lire 8 soldi;

"paid for a copy of the receipt—1 lira."

The total expense, therefore, incurred by the Fraternity of the Battuti of Portogruaro amounted to 830 lire and 16 soldi; and as the "lira veneta" had the value of 5*l.*, the amount would correspond to the insignificant sum of £17 5*s.* 9*d.* sterling. But we must not lose sight of the commercial value of money four centuries ago.

FEDERICO SACCHI.

THE ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM.

WE quote the following from the Oxford Magazine:

"Excellent progress has been made during the Long at the Ashmolean Museum. The spacious new rooms on the ground-floor give ample scope for the exhibition of the casts, which will there be arranged in chronological order. A large number of new casts have already arrived from Berlin and Vienna, and further additions from Athens are on the way. The new lecture-room is perfectly lighted and in all respects spacious and comfortable, and adjoining it will be found a most admirable working-room. The upstairs room, which is soon to contain the library, leaves nothing to be desired, and it is not unlikely that the library of the Architectural Society may also be housed there. Upon the top-landing, in a well-lighted space, 'Tradescant's Ark' and the rest of Ashmole's first collection will be displayed; and then in the first large room entered at the left the new treasures of Renaissance art will be shown. In fact, Mr. Fortnum has already brought down his wonderful collections; and by the middle of the Term this first room, together with a portion of the collection of casts on the ground-floor, will probably be open to inspection. The arrangements for electric lighting are unusually complete; and the strong-room for the most valuable possessions has been skilfully placed, so that its contents may be readily wheeled out and as readily wheeled back at the hour of closing. The middle one of the three large upper rooms is to contain Greek vases and terra-cottas; and among these will be found the new acquisitions from Cyprus, just made by Mr. Myres during his recent journey. Important works of art from Sicily, not long since acquired by the Keeper of the Museum, will also soon arrive. The most spacious of the three upper rooms is to be devoted to Pre-historic and Egyptian art. It is with the greatest gratitude and pleasure that we hear of Prof. Petrie's generous gifts to the collections for this room. Substantially the best things he has are to be added to Ashmole's Museum. A small room downstairs will house the Egyptian marbles, which are too bulky for lodgement above-stairs.

"And now that the Ashmolean Museum—that is, the rooms added behind the old Randolph and Taylor Building—has been spoken of, a word is necessary about the University Galleries. The light given in the room where the Turners are exhibited is beyond all praise. It would be impossible in this climate to have a better lighted room than Mr. Christian has made of this one. The long gallery down-stairs is to be devoted to the University marbles. At last, after subjecting these really remarkable original specimens of ancient sculpture to the most various indignities and dangers, the University is housing them worthily. It may be hoped that this will encourage further gifts of original sculptures, such as abound in English country houses. A special room is to be given to inscriptions. When all arrangements, both in the Ashmolean Museum and in the University Galleries, are completed, it will dawn upon members of the University that it possesses art-collections of a most unusually varied kind. Indeed, many a town on the continent with well-known museums will rank in this respect below Oxford."

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE thirteenth exhibition of the New English Art Club will open next week in the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. There will also be opened next week an exhibition of pictures at the People's Palace, Mile End-road, which will remain on view until December 8.

PROF. W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE will deliver an illustrated lecture at the London Institution, on Monday next at 5 p.m., on "Primitive Egypt." Prof. Petrie has now concluded his lectures at University College, and will start immediately for Egypt, in company with Mr. B. P. Grenfell, to resume his work of archaeological exploration.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce a volume entitled Select Passages from Ancient Writers illustrative of the History of Greek Sculpture, by Mr. H. Stuart Jones, of Trinity College, Oxford.

THE Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt has issued an appeal for a special fund, to be devoted to preserving the Temple of Karnak from further decay, by pumping the water of the Nile inundation out of the ruins. Donations may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. F. G. Hilton Price, 17 Collingham-gardens, S.W.; or to the hon. secretary, Mr. Edward Poynter.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Homolle communicated the latest results of the French excavations at Delphi. Some more pieces of poetry have been found in the Treasury of the Athenians. One of these, now in eleven fragments, contains musical notation—this time not for the voice, but for an instrument. The words can be restored with tolerable certainty; but the notes are difficult to read, because of their great resemblance to one another. The subject of the poem is the birth of Apollo at Delos, his coming to Delphi, and his victory over the serpent with the help of Dionysos. It can be assigned to the second century B.C., by a prayer for Athens and the Romans, with which it concludes. A second Paeon has also been found, which is dated to about the year 340 B.C., by the character of the writing, and by the names of the archons mentioned. The poet was a native of Scarphaia, in Locris; but his name is lost. Another interesting discovery is that of a sculptured figure with an inscription on the shield which was evidently the name of the artist. Unfortunately, all that can now be deciphered [is the first four letters of his patronymic, KAAA; but the form of the A shows that he was an Argive. The other recent finds include: metrical inscriptions of some length, mentioning works of art dedicated in honour of historical personages; some accounts of the fourth century; a decree in favour of Cotys, King of Thrace; several statues of Hellenistic and Roman times; four archaic statues, of the same type as the Korai of the Acropolis; fragments of interesting bronzes with repoussé ornament; and a Corinthian helmet in perfect preservation.

THE STAGE.

M. SARDOU'S NEW PLAY.

Paris: Nov. 3, 1894.

M. SARDOU and Mme. Sarah Bernhardt have scored another success with "Gismonda"; and it is worthy of note that this success has been attained by means far less sensational than those to which the dramatist and the actress sometimes have had recourse in order to win the applause of the public. The plot is relatively simple, the numerous characters are portrayed in bold relief, the spectacular part of the play offers a series of picturesque tableaux, and the costumes are magnificent beyond description.

The scene is laid at Athens, towards the end of the fourteenth century, during the Florentine domination. (I may here remark that, though M. Sardou's archaeological knowledge has been the subject of amusing criticisms, the result of his labours, if not absolutely correct, is highly interesting; and this is all the public care about.) But to return to our subject. Gismonda (Mme. Sarah Bernhardt), on the death of her husband, has been proclaimed Duchess-Regent of Athens during the minority of her son Francesco. In the first act, we see her surrounded by noble suitors anxious to win her heart and duchy. Foremost among these is her cousin, Zaccario Franco (M. Deval), a handsome but crafty and unscrupulous Florentine. Gismonda listens with indifference to the fine things that are said to her, and gives her suitors to understand that she is only to be won by some noble deed of valour. While the suitors protest their readiness to die for her, a shriek is heard, and Francesco's nurse rushes in to tell them that the child has fallen into the pit in which a tiger is kept. The horror-struck mother implores those around to save her son, and swears to wed the man who will do it; but no one is bold enough to face the wild beast. Suddenly a man among the crowd springs into the pit and saves the child; the rescuer proves to be one Pietro Almerio (M. Gaitry), a falconer, a man of low birth, though handsome and of noble bearing. The Duchess offers him a large reward, which he disdainfully refuses; he recalls to her the vow she had made and claims its fulfilment.

Gismonda now retires to the convent of Daphne in order to gain time, and in the hope that Almerio will abandon his pretensions.

She has even despatched an envoy to the Pope, asking him to release her from her vow; but the Holy Father not only refuses her request, but, through the Bishop Sophron (M. de Max), threatens her with excommunication should she attempt to free herself by violence. In the meantime, Almerio has sought fame on the battlefield; he has annihilated the Catalans who threatened Athens; he is a popular hero, and the people threaten to revolt in his favour. The barons, alarmed at this state of affairs, manage by stratagem to imprison Almerio; but the Duchess, who admires the man, will not allow any harm to befall him.

The interest of the play culminates in the third act, which takes place amid the splendid surroundings of Gismonda's private apartments, while the scene that follows is one of the best the author of "Patrie" has ever conceived. Almerio appears before Gismonda, who tries by offers of wealth and honours to induce him to forego his claim, which she treats with scorn. Almerio obstinately refuses her offers; in impassioned tones he relates how he has loved and worshipped her for months, never hoping even to be able to approach her, but now he may dare, and he will have her. Astonished by the fervour of his passion—a thing so new to her—Gismonda changes her tactics. She becomes subtle, caressing; her beauty and sweet voice work their charm; and she holds forth the promise of such bliss that Almerio, conquered, falls at her feet and promises on the cross she wears on her bosom to renounce publicly all claim on her. No sooner has he sworn this than she turns on him with a laugh of derision and exclaims: "Away! out of my presence, wretched menial, return to your hut!"; but as he is about to retire, she adds, in a soft voice, "and leave the door open to-night."

In the next scene we learn that Gismonda has kept her promise: she has visited Almerio among the ruins of the temple of Venus. In the pale moonlight she comes forth from the hut, leaving Almerio asleep. As she is about to depart, footsteps are heard: she hides behind a broken column just in time to see the traitor Zaccario and his âme damnée, Gregorias, stealthily approach the abode of Almerio. Listening, she learns that it was Gregorias who intentionally dropped her son into the tiger's den, and that now they have come to murder Almerio; but at the last moment Gregorias is conscience-struck and runs away. Seizing an axe the latter has dropped, Gismonda creeps behind Zaccario, and fells him to the ground as he is about to stab her lover.

The fifth and last scene takes place amid the pomp of Palm Sunday Mass in the Basilica. In the presence of the priesthood and the court, Almerio renounces his claim to the hand of the Duchess. At the same moment, Zaccaria's friends accuse Almerio of murder; he makes no attempt to deny the charge, only too happy to give his life to save Gismonda from dishonour. But Gismonda loves him; she openly proclaims his innocence and her own guilt, and, kneeling before him, craves his pardon and the privilege of becoming his wife. Thus the drama ends, amidst the peal of bells, organ music, the Hosannah of the choir, in an apotheosis of such splendour that criticism is disarmed.

It is useless attempting to give any idea of the genius displayed by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in her new part. I can only echo the enthusiastic exclamation of a well-known critic, as the curtain fell on the last words of the third act: "Ah! la grande artiste, la grande artiste!" MM. Guity, Deval, and de Max likewise deserve the highest praise. In appearance and bearing they are living representatives of the characters portrayed by Veronese and Tiepolo.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. HENSCHER gave his first "Symphony Concert" at the Queen's Hall last Thursday week. The programme opened with E. Humperdinck's Prelude to "Hänsel und Gretel," an opera which is based on one of Grimm's fairy tales, and which, at the present moment, is going the round of the German theatres. The themes are tuneful and pleasing, and the scoring very clever; but this "Prelude" scarcely makes a good concert piece: it serves, in the opera, strictly as a prelude to what follows. Mr. Frederick Dawson played Tchaikowsky's pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, an interesting work, but of unequal merit: the thematic material is attractive, but the working out is, for the most part, showy rather than substantial. And then, again, the Concerto is very long. Mr. Dawson gave an excellent rendering of the music: his touch is refined, and his fingers are sure. The programme included Brahms's Symphony in D, but in this Mr. Henschel was not at his best. Mrs. Henschel sang the Clärchen's Songs by Beethoven.

An immense audience assembled at the Crystal Palace on Saturday. The programme was in Memoriam Mendelssohn, who died November 4, 1847. It included some of the master's finest works—the "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture, the "Scotch" Symphony, and the "Loreley" Finale. Miss Fanny Davies played with great spirit the pianoforte Concerto in G minor. To comment on works which have long been admired, and which are still enjoyed, would be superfluous. The Crystal Palace orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Manns, is specially noted for its renderings of Beethoven, Schumann, and Mendelssohn; and on this occasion both master and men were on their mettle. It is easy to sneer at Mendelssohn: it is easy to point out that he was a little lower than some of his predecessors; but it is far better to recognise what was good and great in his work, and to feel that he did not live and labour in vain.

The Monday Popular programme concluded with a pianoforte Quintet in F from the pen of Mr. Moir Clark, a young composer, for some time a pupil of Mr. Prout's at the Royal Academy. The writing is not always of the true "chamber" order, and Mr. Clark is still in his "storm and stress" period; but the work undeniably shows talent and promise. There is a welcome freshness in the music, and the composer is skilled in the art of development. The two middle movements—Andante and Allegro—are, to our thinking, the strongest, while the Finale is the weakest. The Quintet was well interpreted by Miss Fanny Davies, Mlle. Wietrowetz, and Messrs. Ries, Gibson, and Whitehouse. The last-named gave as violoncello solos Dvorák's "Waldesruhe," a small but beautiful tone-picture; and an Allegro Appassionato by Saint Saëns, a clever piece, though not in the least impassioned. Mr. Whitehouse played with much taste and feeling. Miss Fanny Davies performed with success Chopin's Fantasia Polonaise (Op. 61), an interesting piece, rarely heard, and given at these concerts for the first time. Miss Margaret Hoare was the vocalist, and in songs by Chamade and Tiesen secured the favour of the public.

Herr Siegfried Wagner, only son of Richard Wagner, conducted a concert at the Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening. It is now close on forty years since his father made his début as conductor here in London. He was disgusted with his surroundings, annoyed at the "ridiculous Mendelssohn worship," and had lost pleasure in his work, which, curiously, was "Young Siegfried," an early form of the Siegfried section of the "Ring des Nibelungen." Now the Mendelssohn worship still continues, as the concerts given in connexion with the anniversary of that composer's death have just shown; but we have, in addition, a Wagner worship, which, at any rate in some of its phases, is equally ridiculous. There are serious musicians who recognised Wagner's genius when, without honour or reward, he was fighting against conventionality and insincerity in art; and now the public is feeling its power. Young Siegfried has, therefore, come at a most opportune moment; for, whatever his personal merits, he was certain of a sympathetic reception. The programme contained two pieces by Liszt. It was natural that the young conductor should wish to include the name of his grandfather, who helped and cheered his father during the dark days of adversity; but his selection was scarcely a wise one. The symphonic Poem "Les Préludes" has fine moments; but the "Mephisto Walzer" is a piece of realism in art, as coarse as it is clever. If Liszt was to be represented, why was not the "Faust" Symphony chosen? That work is generally regarded as one of his most important and most interesting. The Wagner music consisted of the "Siegfried" Idyll, the "Flying Dutchman" Overture, the "Vorspiel" and "Liebestod" from "Tristan," and the closing scene from "Die Götterdämmerung." In the last Miss Marie Brema sang with great dramatic power, but the part is too high for her voice. Siegfried Wagner conducts with enthusiasm, and, at times, with great refinement. To criticise him, to compare him with eminent and experienced Wagner conductors, who are, as it were, in our very midst, would be unfair. He is welcomed now, principally, for his father's sake; his own reputation may come with time.

Last Wednesday evening the one hundred and fifty-sixth festival in aid of the funds of the Royal Society of Musicians took place in Westminster Abbey. Dr. Bridge's "Cradle of Christ," a Christmas canticle, composed for the recent Hereford Festival, was performed for the first time in London. The poem is an English version, by Dr. J. Mason Neale, of Giacomone's hymn, "Stabat Mater Speciosa," a companion sequence to the "Stabat Mater Dolorosa." The music is in Dr. Bridge's best style. The work consists of six short numbers, of which the opening chorus, the expressive baritone solo, "Who is He," and the quaint canonic carol-chorus, "Jesus lying in the Manger," specially deserve mention. The solo singers were Mme. Albani and Mr. Daniel Price, and the composer was at the conductor's desk. The programme also included Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," a "sweetness long drawn out," as sung by Mme. Albani. The Abbey was very full.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

OBITUARY.

THE death of Mr. Eugene Oudin cannot be passed over without a word of regret. He was in the prime of life, and his short but successful career as a vocalist gave promise of a brilliant future. He was a true lover of his art: not one who pandered to the taste of the public, but who sought to improve it. The world of musical art can ill afford to lose such men, for they are rare. Mr. Oudin was held in high esteem by his many friends.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. "They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly. London: ALEXANDER & SWEETHEAD, Fumival Street, E.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

COMPLETION OF DR. SWETE'S EDITION OF THE SEPTUAGINT.

THE OLD TESTAMENT in GREEK, according to the SEPTUAGINT. Edited by H. B. Swete, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. Vol. III. (HOSEA—IV. MACCABEES), 7s. 6d.

THE FOUR GOSPELS in the OLD SYRIAC VERSION. Transcribed from the Palimpsest in the Convent of St. Katharine on Mount Sinai, by R. L. BENSLEY, M.A., late Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic; J. R. HARRIS, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, and University Reader in Palaeography; and F. C. BURKITT, M.A., Trinity College; with an Introduction by Mrs. LEWIS. Demy 4to, half-buckram, 25s.; paper covers, 21s.

NEW VOLUMES OF PROFESSOR JEBB'S SOPHOCLES.

"The whole edition, so far, exhibits the most complete and elaborate editorial work which has ever appeared."—Saturday Review.

SOPHOCLES.—ELECTRA. Part VI. of the Plays and Fragments. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES.—AJAX. Part VII.

[In the press.]

INTERNATIONAL LAW, CHAPTERS on the PRINCIPLES of. By J. Westlake, M.A., Q.C., Whewell Professor of International Law. Demy 8vo, 10s.

A HISTORY of EPIDEMICS in BRITAIN. Vol. II. By Charles Creighton, M.D., M.A., formerly Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Cambridge.

Vol. II FROM THE EXTINCTION OF THE PLAGUE TO THE PRESENT TIME. Demy 8vo, 20s.

THE STEAM-ENGINE and other HEAT ENGINES. By J. A. Ewing, M.A., F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.

Texts and Studies.—New Part.

THE RULES of TYCONIUS. Vol. III., No. I., Freshly Edited from the MSS. with an Examination of his Witness to the Old Latin Version. By F. C. BURKITT, M.A., Trinity College. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

The Cambridge Homer.

HOMER'S ILIAD. The Text, Edited in accordance with Modern Criticism, by Arthur Platt, M.A., Professor of Greek in University College, London. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

HOMER'S ODYSSEY. By the same Editor. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

The Cambridge Historical Series.

General Editor—G. W. PROTHERO, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh.

THE REVOLUTIONARY and NAPOLEONIC ERA, 1789-1815. By J. H. Rose, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"It is not too much to say that Mr. Rose's treatment of this difficult and complicated subject shows a grasp of essentials and a soundness of judgment that are decidedly uncommon."

JOURNAL DES DEBATS.—"C'est peut-être, de cette difficile période, le plus sûr, le plus lumineux Manuel qui ait été encore écrit."

. Other Volumes are in preparation.

New Volumes of the Cambridge Natural Science Manuals.

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCE SERIES.

General Editor—A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College.

PRACTICAL PHYSIOLOGY of PLANTS. By F. Darwin, M.A., F.R.S., and E. H. Acton, M.A. 6s.

PRACTICAL MORBID ANATOMY. By H. D. Rolleston, M.D., F.R.C.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Assistant Physician and Lecturer on Pathology, St. George's Hospital, London; and A. A. KANTHACK, M.D., M.R.C.P., Lecturer on Pathology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. 6s.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE SERIES.

MECHANICS and HYDROSTATICS. By R. T. Glazebrook, M.A., Assistant Director of the Cavendish Laboratory. 5s.

[Nearly ready.]

Pitt Press Mathematical Series.

ARITHMETIC for SCHOOLS. Second Edition. By C. Smith, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Complete, with or without Answers, 3s. 6d.

Part I., Chapters I-VIII, Elementary, with or without Answers, 2s.

Part II., Chapters IX-XX, with or without Answers, 2s.

KEY to C. SMITH'S ARITHMETIC. 7s. 6d.

[Nearly ready.]

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

NEW EDITION OF DR. MILL'S ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY.—1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. A Sketch of the Commodities and the Countries of the World. By H. R. MILL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E., Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.

[Nearly ready.]

CICERO.—PRO MILONE. New Edition. With Introduction and Notes by J. S. Reid, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

HOMER.—ILIAD. BOOK XXIV. By G. M. Edwards, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Sidney Sussex College. 2s.

[Nearly ready.]

SCHILLER.—WALLENSTEIN'S LAGER and DIE PICCOLOMINI. With Introduction, English Notes, and Appendix, by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in German at the University of Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

SCHILLER.—WALLENSTEIN'S TOD. By the same Editor.

[In the press.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1176.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

PROFESSOR VILLARI'S NEW WORK.

THE FIRST TWO CENTURIES OF FLORENTINE HISTORY: the Republics and Parties at the Time of Dante. By Professor PASQUALE VILLARI, Author of "The Life of Savonarola," "The Life and Times of Machiavelli," &c. Translated by LINDA VILLARI. Demy 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 16s.

"JOHN OLIVER HOBBS."

THE TALES of JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. In 1 vol. With Portrait of the Author, by Walter SPINDLER. Second Edition in preparation. Cloth boards, gilt top, 6s.

"A STORY OF TWO."

NAME THIS CHILD. By W. H. Chesson. 2 vols., cloth, 12s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ECSTASY."

MAJESTY: a Novel. By Louis Couperus. Translated from the Dutch by A. T. de Mattos. Cloth, 6s.

THE NEW "PSEUDONYM."

HELEN. By Oswald Valentine. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"A BORN STORYTELLER."

BY REEF and PALM. By Louis Becke. The new vol. of "The Autonym Library." Second Edition, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"For Mr. Becke, he is excellent reading, as we have said; excellent reading first and last. And, so far as himself is concerned, he need but go on putting forth volume after volume like 'By Reef and Palm' to make a firm friend of the British public till the end."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CONFESSIONS of AMOS TODD, Adventurer. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE MERMAID SERIES."

THE BEST PLAYS of BEN JONSON. Vol. II., post 8vo, about 500 pages, front., cloth, 2s. 6d.

(Three months after date of publication the price will be raised to 3s. 6d.)

[Next week.]

NEW VOLUMES OF "THE REFORMER'S BOOKSHELF."

NIHILISM AS IT IS. Stepniak's Pamphlets, Translated by E. L. Voynich, and Felix Volkhovsky's "Claims of the Russian Liberals." Introduction by Dr. SPENCE WATSON.

THE INDUSTRIAL and COMMERCIAL HISTORY of ENGLAND. By Prof. Thorold Rogers. Second Edition, 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

"Full of information of a very valuable kind which is not found elsewhere."—Liverpool Daily Post.

WITH INTRODUCTION BY GRANT ALLEN.

IN the GUIANA FOREST. By James Rodway. 16 Full-page Illustrations, large crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

[Next week.]

THE EXPANSION of SOUTH AFRICA. By the Hon. A. Wilmot. Large crown 8vo, cloth, with Maps, 5s.

[Next week.]

NEW VOLUME OF "THE CHILDREN'S LIBRARY."

ROBINSON CRUSOE. Carefully Edited for "The Children's Library." Cruikshank's Illustrations, post 8vo, fancy cloth, floral edges, 2s. 6d.

MISS FRANCES POWER COBBE'S WORKS.

Popular Reissue.

Author's Edition, in uniform bindings, each crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

RELIGIOUS DUTY. Third Edition.
THE PEAK in DARIEN.
DAWNING LIGHTS.
ALONE to the ALONE. Third Edition.

HOPES of the HUMAN RACE. Second Edition.
THE DUTIES of WOMEN. Ninth Edition.
A FAITHLESS WORLD.

The following Books, by the SAME AUTHOR, are held in stock:—

DARWINISM in MORALS. 1 vol., cloth, 3s. 6d.
STUDIES: New and Old. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
BROKEN LIGHTS. Third Edition, 2s. 6d.
HOURS of WORK and PLAY. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

ITALICS: Notes of Politics, People, and Places. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
THANKSGIVING. 6d.
RE-ECHOES. 1s.
THE FRIEND of MAN. 2s. 1 in paper cover, 1s.

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA of PROPER NAMES. In 1 vol., 13½ in. by 10 ins. by 3 ins., bound in half-cloth extra, price £2 2s. net; half-morocco, £2 15s. net; also in leather binding.

[Next week.]

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

| | |
|--|-----|
| SIR WILLIAM GREGORY'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY, by T. HUTCHINSON | 391 |
| W. M. TORREN'S HISTORY OF CABINETS, by J. A. HAMILTON | 393 |
| W. P. COURTNEY'S WHIST GOSSIP, by J. I. MINCHIN | 394 |
| FURNEAUX'S EDITION OF THE GERMANIA, by P. T. RICHARDS | 395 |
| MAX O'RELL'S JOHN BULL & Co., by W. WICKHAM | 395 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN | 396 |
| SOME BOOKS ON FOLK-LORE | 397 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 398 |
| THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES | 398 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 398 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "LOVE IN AUTUMN," by ARTHUR SEMONS | 399 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 399 |
| "THE RAIDERS": A NOTE, by X. | 399 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 400 |
| CORRESPONDENCE: | |
| The Newly Found Sinaitic Codes of the Gospels, by F. C. Conybeare and F. P. Badham; Plagiarism and Covenanting Miracles, by William Wallace; The New Psychology, by J. S. Stuart-Glennie | 400 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 403 |
| DELITZSCH'S ASSYRIAN DICTIONARY, by Prof. SAYCE | 403 |
| OBITUARY: MAHÁDEO CHIMNÁRI APTÉ, by Col. JACOB | 403 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 403 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 404 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 404 |
| THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB, by F. W. | 405 |
| THE J. M. GRAY SALE | 405 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 405 |
| RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 406 |

STAMPS.—WANTED TO PURCHASE, a good Collection.—H. DEANE, Dundaniel, Moffat, N.B.

BOOKS and BOOKPLATES BOUGHT in any quantity. Prompt cash payment.—Address J. S. EASTES, Bookseller, 67, Great Queen Street, Holborn, W.C.

CONTRIBUTOR to several Leading London Papers, and Editor of Monthly Journal, desires to WRITE WEEKLY LETTER on Art, Literature, and the Drama for Provincial Press.—Address E. M., 17, Red Lion Square, W.C.

BOOK-PLATES (Ex-Libris) DESIGNED and ENGRAVED in Medieval or Modern Styles on Wood, Copper, or Steel. A Book containing Illustrations of Medieval Designs on Wood, post free, 25 stamps.—THOMAS MORING, 52, High Holborn, London, W.C. Established 1791.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List.—115, Fleet Street, London.

IMPORTANT TO AUTHORS.

AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS PRINTED and PUBLISHED on liberal terms.—Address ALPHA, care of 163, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

TYPEWRITING—SHORTHAND.—Miss LEONIE HARTLEY (from People's Palace, Battersea, Woolwich Polytechnic, 429, Mansion House Chambers, E.C. All kinds of MSS. carefully copied. Duplicating clear as print. Pupils received. Testimonials forwarded.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, BOND SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET (Opposite the British Museum). Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices. Catalogues on application.

ASSISTANCE WANTED.

The undermentioned Cases, for which it has not been found possible to raise the necessary help from other sources, are RECOMMENDED by the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY. Contributions towards their assistance will be gladly received by C. S. LOEN, Secretary, 15, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, W.C.:

17,924. Wanted, £5 2s. 1d. towards the cost (£26 17s. 9d.) of maintaining a family for two months, and emigrating them to Canada. The man has been 14 weeks out of work through a decline of his trade, in which there was no prospect of improvement. Very respectable people.

17,924. A Southern Committee asks for £3 16s. to enable them to pay a pension of 7s. a week to an old lady of 77. She has been a yellum sewer, and at the time of giving up work had saved £120. All her relations are dead. The clergy contribute 1s. a week.

16,305. £5 17s. is needed to complete a pension of 6s. 6d. to a most respectable old servant, aged 73. Her savings (£109) are exhausted. A former employer allows her 1s. weekly.

17,854. An East End Committee wish to raise the sum of £5 1s. 4d. towards a pension for the widow of a ship's captain, who died in 1837. Since that date she has continued to maintain herself in a most respectable position till her failing eyesight has forced her to give up work. She is now 75 years old, and all her relations are dead. A friend has promised to cover the rent. She is a most respectable and deserving old person.

17,924. £7 3s. required to complete a pension of 8s. a week for an old man, aged 88, formerly an omnibus driver. Had saved. Incapacitated from work many years ago by deafness.

17,797. £4 17s. 6d. is wanted to complete an allowance of 7s. 6d. a week to a very respectable single woman, who has suffered for years from illness, and is now only able to do very light work.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

LECTURESHIP ON CIVIL LAW.

Owing to the retirement of the present holder of the office, the University Court will on 22nd inst., or some subsequent date, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a LECTURER on CIVIL LAW. The Salary attached to the Lectureship is £200 per annum. The Course consists of not less than 20 Lectures during each Winter Session, and is available both for Arts Students, and for students qualifying for the Degrees of B.L. and LL.B.

The appointment now to be made will date from 1st January, and in the first instance will continue for the remainder of the lately appointed Lecturer's term of office, viz., till 30th September, 1895. The Lecturer to be appointed will be required to take up the latter portion of the course presently being delivered as from and after 1st January.

Applications and testimonials should be lodged with the undersigned not later than Monday 18th inst.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON,
Secretary of the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE.

UNIVERSITY OF WALES.

The Council of this College is prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of LOGIC and PHILOSOPHY, at a stipend of £250 per annum. The appointment carries with it a seat on the Senate of the University of Wales.

Applications, with Testimonials, should be forwarded on or before December 4th, 1894, to Cardiff, November 12th, 1894. IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.

About TWELVE OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS (£40 to £20) in APRIL.—Apply to the HEAD MASTER.

AT MRS. LOUISE JOPLING'S ART SCHOOL, Logan Place, Earl's Court Road.

MISS HOPE REA will give a SERIES of FIVE LECTURES (weekly) on "ITALIAN SCULPTURE," with Lantern Illustration commencing FRIDAY NEXT, NOVEMBER 23rd, at 4.30. Tickets: Series, 5s.; Single, 1s.—Apply Miss REA, 60, Belsize Park Gardens, or the LADY SUPERINTENDENT, Art School, South Kensington.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scientific Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLE-

MEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W. References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mr. Goschen, John Usher, Esq., of Norton, Middleham; the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgway, 36, Porchester Terrace, W. and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

MONTHLY CATALOGUE of Rare,

Curious, and OUT-OF-THE-WAY BOOKS, sent free on demand.—G. LEMALIER, Libraire, 38, Rue de Châteaudun, Paris.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

High-Class Modern Publications and Remainders.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C., on TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock (by order of several Eminent Publishing Houses), MANY THOUSAND VOLUMES of HIGH-CLASS MODERN PUBLICATIONS, including 164 Curtis's Velasquez and Murillo (sets £1 11s. 6d.)—100 Bieton's Life of an Artist (7s. 6d.)—40 Buchanan's Picture Poses (21s.)—20 Shakespeare's Macbeth, illustrated by Moss Smith £2 12s. 6d. and £5 5s.—21 Mignon Shakespeare, 6 vols. (£2 2s.)—30 Hill's Dr. Johnson (23s.)—50 North's Wild Animals (£1 15s.)—75 Sheridan's The Rivals (£2 12s. 6d. and £5 5s.)—2,000 Daudet's Tarascon (7s. 6d. and 5s.)—4 Cozzens' American Yachts—25 Anderson's Arts of Japan (£3 8s.)—400 vols. of Artistic Japan (75s.)—389 Bradshaw's New Zealand (14s.)—1,250 Atwell's Italian Masters (5s.)—600 Wharton's Wit and Beaux (3s. 6d.)—1,900 Great French Writers (2s. 6d.)—4,400 Subjects of the Day (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.)—4,500 White's Osborne (6d.); also a Stock of Ornamental Menu Cards, Invitation Cards, Ball Programmes, Chromo-lithographs, Juvenile Books, &c.

To be viewed, and catalogues had.

In Bankruptcy.—Re DALZIEL BROS. (by order of N. Newson-Smith, Esq., the Trustee).

MESSRS. HODGSON are instructed to include in the above SALE by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C., the under-mentioned important BOOK PROPERTIES, COPYRIGHTS, WOOD-BLOCKS, ELECTRO and STEREO-TYPE PLATES—viz.: Pictures of English Landscapes, by Birket Foster—Bachmann's Wayside Poses—North Coast Poems, and Related Stories of the Affections, illustrated by Walker, Pinwell, North, Houghton, Small, Wolf, Dalziel, and other artists—Planché's An Old Fairy Tale, cuts by Doyle—Golden Thoughts—Spirit of Praise—Ingelow's Poems—Griset's Grotesques—Sage Stuffing, by the Hon. Hugh Rowley—Otto Speckter's Fables—Victoria History of England—Handy History of England—Handy Bible History—Petersill's Poetry—Unpublished Wood-blocks to Grimm's Tales by Zweicke and Bayes—the Stereo-Plates of Eleven Shilling Novels, &c.

Catalogues may be had of Messrs. GUY & CHILES, 71, Queen-street, E.C.; of H. Newson-Smith, Esq., 37, Walbrook, E.C.; or of the Auctioneers, as above, where the Lots can be viewed.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firm. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism London."

BLACKWOOD'S Philosophical and Theological List.

BY PROFESSOR FLINT.

HISTORICAL PHILOSOPHY in FRANCE and FRENCH BELGIUM and SWITZERLAND. By ROBERT FLINT, Professor in the University of Edinburgh, &c. 8vo, 21s.

THEISM. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ANTI-THEISTIC THEORIES. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY PROFESSOR JAMES SETH.

A STUDY of ETHICAL PRINCIPLES. By JAMES SETH, M.A., Professor of Philosophy in Brown University, U.S.A. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

BY PROFESSOR PFLEIDERER.

PHILOSOPHY and DEVELOPMENT of RELIGION. Being the Edinburgh Gifford Lectures for 1894. By OTTO PFLEIDERER, D.D., Professor of Theology at Berlin University. 2 vols., post 8vo, 15s. net.

BY R. M. WENLEY, D.Sc.

ASPECTS of PESSIMISM. By R. M. WENLEY, M.A., D.Sc., Lecturer on Mental and Moral Philosophy in Queen Margaret College, Glasgow; Author of "Socrates and Christ." Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY PROFESSOR ROBERTSON.

THE EARLY RELIGION of ISRAEL, as set forth by Biblical Writers and by Modern Critical Historians. By JAMES ROBERTSON, D.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY PROFESSOR ANDREW SETH.

SCOTTISH PHILOSOPHY. A Comparison of the Scottish and German Answers to Hume. By ANDREW SETH, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Logic, Rhetoric, and Metaphysics in the University of Edinburgh. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HEGELIANISM and PERSONALITY.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

BY PROFESSOR SORLEY.

THE ETHICS of NATURALISM. Being the Shaw Fellowship Lectures, 1884. By W. R. SORLEY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Moral Philosophy, Aberdeen University. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE LATE PROFESSOR VEITCH.

INSTITUTES of LOGIC. Post 8vo, 12s. 6d.

KNOWING and BEING. Essays in Philosophy. First Series. Crown 8vo, 5s.

BY REV. JOHN PATRICK, B.D.

THE APOLOGY of ORIGEN in REPLY to CELSUS. A Chapter in the History of Apologetics. By Rev. JOHN PATRICK, B.D., Edinburgh. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BY REV. JAMES LINDSAY, B.D.

THE PROGRESSIVENESS of MODERN CHRISTIAN THOUGHT. By Rev. JAMES LINDSAY, M.A., B.D., B.Sc., &c., Kilmarnock. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

TALES of the PUNJAB, told by the People. By Flora Annie STEEL. Illustrated by J. Lockwood Kipling, C.I.E., and Notes by R. C. TEMPLE. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, 6s. [THE CRANFORD SERIES.]

THE FABLES of ÆSOP. Selected, Told Anew, and their History Traced, by JOSEPH JACOBS. Done into Pictures by RICHARD HEIGHWAY. Crown 8vo, gilt, or edges uncut, 6s. [THE CRANFORD SERIES.]
WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"A beautiful edition in the Cranford Series, with charming illustrations."
GLOBE.—"The drawings and pictorial devices are eminently quaint, many being highly humorous, and all effective.....Probably at once the most scholarly and most popular edition of the Fables ever published."

THE MEANING of HISTORY, and Other Historical Pieces. By FREDERIC HARRISON. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.
DAILY CHRONICLE.—"All these and other qualities are not only discernible. They penetrate through and through the texture of the deeply interesting, wise, and eloquent volume before us."

ESSAYS and ADDRESSES, Religious, Literary, and Social. By PHILLIPS BROOKS, late Bishop of Massachusetts. Edited by the Rev. JOHN COTTON BROOKS. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ESSAYS and ADDRESSES. An Attempt to Treat Some Religious Questions in a Scientific Spirit. By the Ven. JAMES M. WILSON, M.A., late Head Master of Clifton College, Vicar of Rochdale, Archdeacon of Manchester. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
GUARDIAN.—"We heartily welcome a new edition."

THE STORY of SONNY SAHIB. By Mrs. Everard Cotes (SARAH JEANNETTE DUNCAN). Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

SIBYLLA. By Sir H. S. Cunningham, K.C.I.E., Author of "Wheat and Tares," &c. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The quiet but deeply interesting little drama of which Sibylla is the heroine.....The really good things must be found, not by readers of reviews, but by readers of the books themselves; and since the days of 'The Chronicles of Dustypore' we have wondered that their discoverers have not been more numerous."
GLASGOW HERALD.—"A book to be read at least twice—once for the story, and as often as one pleases for the good things scattered in it."
DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"One of those rare books which are no sooner read than they tempt their reader to prompt and assiduous re-perusal."

MAURICE; or, the Red Jar. A Tale of Magic and Adventure for Boys and Girls. By the COUNTESS of JERSEY. With Illustrations by Rosie M. M. Pitman. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALL MALL BUDGET.—"There is a charm of genuine simplicity in the narration."
OBSERVER.—"The book is quite delightfully written, for Lady Jersey is one who writes prose as a poet writes it.....The illustrations are very suitable to the text, and show no little skill in designing."
MORNING POST.—"A fertile imagination and much grace of manner render Lady Jersey's 'Maurice; or, the Red Jar' especially attractive as a tale of magic and adventure for boys and girls."

MY NEW HOME. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"This is just the kind of tale which suits Mrs. Molesworth's gift of telling stories for young people."
DAILY NEWS.—"Bright and readable, and fully sustains the authoress's reputation."
DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A gracefully told tale for girls."
JOURNAL of EDUCATION.—"A charming story, written with that thorough comprehension of a child's mind and ways that we have learned to expect from the author of so many delightful Christmas books."

A TREATISE on CHEMISTRY. By Sir H. E. Roscoe, F.R.S., and the late C. SCHORLEMMER, F.R.S. Vol. I. The Non-Metallic Elements. New Edition. Completely Revised by Sir H. E. ROSCOE, assisted by Drs. H. G. COLMAN and A. HARDEN. With 374 Illustrations and a Portrait of Dalton engraved by C. H. JEENS. 8vo, 21s.

THE RISE and DEVELOPMENT of ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By CARL SCHORLEMMER, LL.D., F.R.S., late Professor of Organic Chemistry in the Owens College, Manchester, Victoria University. Revised Edition. Edited by ARTHUR SMITHELLS, B.Sc. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

PHYSIOLOGY for BEGINNERS. By Prof. M. Foster, F.R.S., and LEWIS E. SHORE, M.A., M.D., Senior Demonstrator of Physiology in the University of Cambridge. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL NEWS.—"Fulness and accuracy of knowledge are here provided and presented to the mind with such simplicity and clearness as scientific training and professional practice alone are able to reach."

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

NEW VOLUME.

SELECTIONS ILLUSTRATIVE of GREEK LIFE from the MINOR WORKS of XENOPHON. Adapted for the use of Beginners. With Vocabulary, Notes, and Exercises. By C. H. KEENE, M.A. Post 8vo, 1s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL CLASS-BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME.

COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. By E. C. K. Gonner, M.A., Brunner Professor of Economic Science at University College, Liverpool. Globe 8vo, 3s.
NATURE.—"If the main facts contained in this volume are grasped by students intended for commercial careers, British commerce will undoubtedly be benefited."

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

THINGS WILL TAKE A TURN. By Beatrice

HARRADEN, Author of "Ships that Pass in the Night," "In Varying Moods," &c. A New Illustrated Edition, with Forty-six Pictures from Designs by JOHN H. BACON. Square 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

FROM THE CLYDE TO THE JORDAN: Narrative of a Bicycle Journey. By HUGH CALLAN, M.A., Author of "Wanderings on Wheel and on Foot through Europe," and "The Story of Jerusalem." Crown 8vo, with 30 Illustrations, cloth, 6s.

READINGS FROM CARLYLE: a Selection of Representative

Extracts from the Works of Thomas Carlyle. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by W. KEITH LEASK, M.A., late Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF PLANTS. From the German of ANTON KERNER von MARILAUN, Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna. By F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc., Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London. With about 1,600 Original Woodcut Illustrations, and 16 Coloured Plates. To be completed in 16 Monthly Parts at 2s. 6d. each net, and in 4 Half-Vols., cloth, at 12s. 6d. each net.

Now ready, Parts I. to VII., and Half-Vol. I.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

Philosophy at Home Series.

Neat Crown 8vo Volumes, 2s. 6d. each.

Lotze, Prof. H.—Outlines of the PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. Translated by F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A. (Oxon.)

"One of the most suggestive and enlightening works that our age has been privileged to welcome."—Academy.

Salter, W. M.—First Steps in PHILOSOPHY.

"Has deservedly reached a second edition."—Literary World.

Bosanquet, Dr. Bernard.—KNOWLEDGE and REALITY: a Series of Logical Studies.

Molinari, G. de.—Religion. Translated by W. K. FIRMINGER, B.A. (Oxon.)

"Has excited considerable attention in France, and cannot fail of readers here too, where the question of the relation of Church and State is analogous."—Times.

Bax, E. B.—The Problem of REALITY.

"An acute and comprehensive little treatise. It is seldom that a complete theory of the Universe is presented in such brief form."—Glasgow Herald.

"Nothing in it which a thoughtful reader should find any difficulty in grasping."—Daily Chronicle.

Lillie, A.—Influence of Buddhism on PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.

"Not content with pointing out the well-known coincidences between Buddhism and Christianity, but seeks to account for them. The learning is imposing and ingenious."—Times.

Schopenhauer, A.—Minor Writings. Translated by BAILEY SAUNDERS. 5 vols.

"Mr. Saunders has done English readers a genuine service."—Athenaeum.

"It was a happy thought to translate these essays."—Academy.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LONDON.

READY THIS DAY.

Crown 8vo, 150 pages, 2s., cloth.

MODERN JOURNALISM

A Handbook of Instruction and Counsel for the Young Journalist.

By J. B. MACKIE,

Fellow of the Institute of Journalists.

LONDON: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON,
7, STATIONERS' HALL COURT, E.C.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., labelled:
JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homoeopaths & Chemists, London

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 49, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

DAVID NUTT,

270-271, Strand.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS at all BOOKSELLERS and LIBRARIES.

NEW WORKS ON THE DARWINIAN THEORY.

LECTURES on the DARWINIAN

THEORY, delivered by the late ARTHUR MILNES MARSHALL, Professor of Zoology in Owens College, Manchester. Edited by C. F. MARSHALL, M.D. Demy 8vo, xx.-236 pp., with 37 Illustrations, mostly from Original Drawings and Photographs, cloth, uncut, 7s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR AND EDITOR.

BIOLOGICAL LECTURES and AD-

DRESSES. (The Modern Study of Zoology—The Influence of Environment on the Structure and Habits of Animals—Embryology as an Aid to Anatomy—The Shapes and Sizes of Animals—Death—The Recapitulation Theory, &c.) Crown 8vo, viii.-364 pp., cloth, uncut, 6s.

THE RUSSIAN JEWS: Emancipation or Extermination? By I. ERRERA, Professor at the University of Brussels. With a Prefatory Note by THEODORE MOMMSEN. Translated by BELLA LOWY. Demy 8vo, x.-208 pp., Map, cloth, uncut, 3s. 6d.

* * * The original has been unanimously recognised as the ablest statement of the Jewish case against the Russian Government.

TIMES.—"Professor Errera has done good service to the cause of what Professor Mommson rightly calls Common Sense and Humanity, by his temperate and authentic statement of the facts of the case."

IN THE SERIES "FAIRY TALES OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE."

MORE CELTIC FAIRY TALES. By JOSEPH JACOBS. Illustrated by J. D. Batten. 6s.

* * * This Volume concludes the Series "Fairy Tales of the British Empire" of the preceding volumes, of which many thousands have been sold in this country and in America.

Although the volume has only been issued three weeks, the charm and beauty of both text and illustrations have already been recognised by over fifty newspapers in all parts of the Kingdom.

N.B.—A few copies of the Special Issue, on Japanese vellum, with double state of the plates, still left. Full prospectus on application.

IN THE BIBLIOTHEQUE DE CARABAS.

Vol. IX. A PHILOLOGICAL ESSAY

concerning the PYGMIES of the ANCIENTS. By EDWARD TYSON, M.D., F.R.S., &c. 1690. Now Edited, with an Introduction treating of Pygmy Races and Fairy Tales, by BERTRAM C. A. WINDLE, D.Sc., M.D., Dean of the Medical Faculty, and Professor of Anatomy, Mason College, Birmingham. Crown 8vo, civ.-103 pp., 6s. net.

* * A full list of the Bibl. de Carabas sent on application.

NÖEL. A Book of Carols for Christ-maside. Written and Designed by CH. J. FFOULKES; Music by H. A. VINCENT RAMSON. Small fol., 12 Full-page Designs, 10 pages of Words of Music, printed on the finest hand-made paper, bound in specially designed cover, 5s.

AT the CROSS ROADS, and other

Poems. By ARNOLD WALL. Crown 8vo, 64 pp., cloth, uncut, 2s. 6d.

THE JESUITS in CHINA and the LEGATION of CARDINAL DE TOURNON. By ROBERT C. JENKINS, Hon. Canon of Canterbury. Demy 8vo, vi.-165 pp., 2 Portraits, cloth, uncut, 5s.

SONGS and SAGAS of the NORSE-

MEN and ENGLISHMEN. By ALBANY F. MAJOR, Hon. Sec. of the Viking Club. 8vo, 134 pp., cloth, uncut, 3s. 6s. net.

TALES from WELSH WALES. By

P. H. EMERSON, Author of "A Son of the Fens," &c. Crown 8vo, 334 pp., 3s. 6d.

TO BE PUBLISHED IMMEDIATELY.

POEMS, OLD and NEW. By George

COTTERELL. Printed at the Oxford University Press. Pp. 227, fcap. 8vo, cloth, uncut, 6s. net.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

WINTER'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL
(10th Year of Publication.)

Entitled—

THE STRANGER WOMAN.

BY

JOHN STRANGE WINTER,

Author of "Booties' Baby," "Army Society," "A Seventh Child," "The Soul of the Bishop," "Red Coats," &c.

In picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

NOTICE.—The First and Second Editions of this favourite Annual were exhausted on the day of Publication, a THIRD EDITION is now ready.

At all Circulating Libraries in Town or Country.

I.

Mrs. Lovett Cameron's New Novel.

A BAD LOT. By the Author of "In a Grass Country," "Jack's Secret," "A Tragic Blunder," "A Sister's Sin," &c. 3 vols., 18s. [Immediately.

II.

Hawley Smart's New Novel.

A RACING RUBBER. By the Author of "Breezie Laughton," "Long Odds," "The Plunger," "Beatrice and Benedick," &c. 2 vols., 12s.

III.

Alan St. Aubyn's New Novel.

A TRAGIC HONEYMOON. By the Author of "A Fellow of Trinity," "The Junior Dean," "The Master of St. Benedict's," &c. 2 vols., 12s.

IV.

Florence Warden's New Novel.

A PERFECT FOOL. By the Author of "The House on the Marsh," "My Child and I," "A Young Wife's Trial," "A Wild Wooing," &c. 2 vols., 12s.

"To all those who like a mystery, and who gratefully remember 'The House on the Marsh,' let the Baron recommend 'A Perfect Fool.'"

"...the interest in the main story never flags, Marriable Scelfox and the clever Chris are all excellent portraits....The literary workmanship is worthy of high praise."—Scotsman.

V.

New Novel by the Author of "Molly Bawn."

PETER'S WIFE. By Mrs. Hungerford, Author of "Nora Creina," "An Unsatisfactory Lover," "April's Lady," "The Hon. Mrs. Versker," &c. 3 vols., 18s.

"The author of 'Molly Bawn' may always be depended upon for a story of complicated affections and feminine intrigues which shall interest the reader. Nell is a charmingly drawn character, and it is in her romance that the reader takes the greatest interest."

Publishers' Circular.

VI.

Mrs. Edward Kennard's New Novel.

THE CATCH of the COUNTY. By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "The Hunting Girl," "Just Like a Woman," "Sporting Tales," &c. 3 vols., 18s."We do not entertain the least doubt that Mrs. Kennard's latest fiction will rival its forerunners in popularity."—Daily Telegraph.

"The story is lively enough, and the movement is well sustained."

"...the three volumes have nothing of dullness, and plenty of 'go.'"—Daily Chronicle."Mrs. Kennard deals with her material in a vivacious fashion."—Globe.

Will be published early in December.

Price One Shilling each.

"BELGRAVIA" ANNUAL (Illustrated)

Containing Contributions by—

FLORENCE MARRYAT,

The AUTHOR of "MISS MOLLY," GERTRUDE WARDEN, HUME NISBET, EDITH STEWART DREWRY, &c.

AND

"LONDON SOCIETY" CHRISTMAS NUMBER (Illustrated),

Containing Contributions by—

JOHN STRANGE WINTER,

B. M. CROKER, CURTIS YORKE, "RITA," W. W. FENN, R. M. BURNAND, A. PERRIN, &c.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,

14, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

With 41 Full-page Plates (8 Photo-Intaglios), and 32 Illustrations in the Text.

2 vols., 8vo, 36s. net.

MEMORIALS OF ST. JAMES'S PALACE.By EDGAR SHEPPARD, M.A.,

Sub-Dean of H.M. Chapels Royal, Honorary Chaplain to the Queen and H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge.

NEW NOVEL BY EDNA LYALL.*DOREEN: the Story of a Singer.By EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan," &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

LIFE and LETTERS of ERASMUS. A Series of Lectures delivered at Oxford. By JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE. Crown 8vo, 6s.CONTINUATION OF MR. GARDINER'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.*HISTORY of the COMMONWEALTH and PROTECTORATE,1649-1660. By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M.A., Hon. LL.D. Edinburgh, Fellow of Merton College, Honorary Student of Christ Church, &c. Vol. I. 1649-1651. With 14 Maps. 8vo, 21s."Precision, lucidity, accuracy are the qualities of Dr. Gardiner's style. The impartiality, the judicial temper, which distinguish Dr. Gardiner among historians, are conspicuous in this new volume from its first page to its last."—Daily News.LONDON and the KINGDOM: a History derived mainly from theArchives at the Guildhall. By REGINALD R. SHARPE, D.C.L., Records Clerk in the Office of the Town Clerk of the City of London. (3 vols.) 8vo. Vols. I. and II., 10s. 6d. each.FROM EDINBURGH to the ANTARCTIC: an Artist's Notes andSketches during the Dundee Antarctic Expedition of 1892-93. By W. G. BURN MURDOCH. With a Chapter by W. S. BRUCE, Naturalist of the Barque Balena. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 18s."This fascinating record opens up a new avenue in our experience. We are introduced to places unknown to any man of this generation, and in some cases the expedition seems to have reached portions of the globe entirely unvisited before.....The illustrations are all that could be wished; they are, like the stories, full of character and life."—Spectator.CHIPS from a GERMAN WORKSHOP. By F. MAX MÜLLER, K.M.New Edition, in 4 vols. Vol. I. RECENT ESSAYS and ADDRESSES. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.A PRIMER of PSYCHOLOGY. By GEORGE TRUMBULL LADD,

Professor of Philosophy in Yale University. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

[In a few days.

POEMS. By ROBERT F. MURRAY, Author of "The Scarlet Gown."With a Memoir by ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

[In a few days.

. Fifty Copies have been printed on Large Paper, price 10s. net.

BALLADS of the MARATHAS. Rendered into English Verse fromthe Marathi Originals by HARRY ARBUTHNOT ACWORTH, H.M. Indian Civil Service, President Bombay Anthropological Society. 8vo, 5s.

[In a few days.

THE OUTDOOR WORLD SERIES.BUTTERFLIES and MOTHS (BRITISH). By W. FURNEAUX,

F.R.G.S., Author of "The Outdoor World; or, Young Collector's Handbook," With 12 Coloured Plates, and 241 Illustrations in the Text. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

[In a few days.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HAGGARD.*THE PEOPLE of the MIST. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. With 16

Full-page Illustrations by Arthur Layard. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The only questions to be asked concerning a book of this kind are, 'Does it lay hold?' 'Does the pipe go out during its perusal?' 'Does it keep us out of bed until one, when we have determined to go at eleven?' and as they can all be answered in the affirmative, there is really nothing more to be said about 'The People of the Mist.'"

Westminster Gazette.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. DELAND.

"Marriage is not a result but a process."

PHILIP and his WIFE. By MARGARET DELAND, Author of "John Ward, Preacher." Crown 8vo, 6s.

[In a few days.

A TRUE RELATION of the TRAVELS and PERILOUS ADVEN-TURES of MATHEW DUDGEON, GENTLEMAN: Wherein is truly set down the Manner of his Taking, the Long Time of his Slavery in Algiers, and Means of his Delivery. Written by Himself, and now for the first time printed. Crown 8vo, 5s."We like Mr. Dudgeon for his own impertinent sake, for the vital note he often touches, for the freshness of the breeze that blows across the Elysium he has built up from the wreckage of the past.....We all clamour to-day for new sensations, but what we rather desire is variations upon the old sensations. The adventures of Mr. Dudgeon give them."—National Observer.LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

New Works and New Editions.

Vol. I., Now Ready, remaining volumes at intervals of one month.

THE HISTORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION (1789-1800). By LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS. Translated by FREDERICK SHOBERL. New Edition, with 50 Illustrations on Steel. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, to be published monthly, price 9s. each.

Vol. I., Now Ready, remaining volumes at intervals of one month.

THE HISTORY OF ROME from the Earliest Times to the Reign of Augustus. By THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated by WILLIAM PURDIE DICKSON, D.D., LL.D. New and Cheaper Edition, Revised. In 5 vols., crown 8vo, to be issued at monthly intervals, price 7s. 6d. each.

NOW READY.

TWO SUMMERS IN GUY-ENNE, 1802-3. By EDWARD HARRISON BARKER. Author of "Wayfaring in France," &c. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 16s.

"Few Englishmen know France so well as Mr. Barker; few feel its charm so keenly. Most of his journeys have been made afoot through unexplored byways, so that he is more at home in the village auberge than even Mr. Stevenson."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

THROUGH TEN ENGLISH COUNTIES. By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "A Holiday on the Road," &c. Demy 8vo, with 16 Illustrations, 16s.

"In bright and gossiping fashion the author discourses of scenery, of old characters encountered by the way, of architectural and archaeological glories, of homely old fairs, and of quaint rural customs."—World.

NOW READY.

LETTERS FROM THE CAMP TO HIS RELATIVES AT HOME DURING THE SIEGE OF SEBASTOPOL. By COLIN FREDERICK CAMPBELL. With Introduction by Field-Marshal LORD WOLSELEY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Few who read these letters will question Lord Wolseley's judgment. Simple and modest in tone they give a vivid picture of the siege, its incidents, and its terrible trials, and a very shrewd criticism of the blunders, strategical and administrative, of those who were responsible at the time for the conduct of the campaign."—Times.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH WHIST AND ENGLISH WHIST-PLAYERS. By WILLIAM PRIDEAUX COURTNEY. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 14s.

"It is the rich mass of anecdotes, personal associations, poetry, fiction, humour, and patches, that have grown around this choicest of firsides games, that the author devotes himself."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

PERSIAN PICTURES—SAFAR NAMEH: a Book of Travel in the East. In crown 8vo, 6s.

"The author of 'Persian Pictures' has seen more of the interior of life in Iran than is vouchsafed to many travellers from Europe. She attends Mohammedan festivals, hobbles with shiekhs, bargains in bazars, dreams in gardens, fishes in mountain streams, and penetrates behind the veil that separates the women's quarters of Persian palaces from that to which the male guest has access. Her sketches are picturesque and vivid in colouring, and yet in no respect overdrawn. The volume is full of charm and full of information."—The Scotsman.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

A FAMILY ARRANGEMENT By the Author of "DR. EDITH ROMNEY," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE PRINCESS ROYAL. By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "Mr. Bryant's Mistake." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW EDITION.

BASIL LYNTHURST. By ROSA N. CAREY, Author of "Not Like Other Girls," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

The Oxford English Dictionary.

TWO NEW PARTS

Just published, 4to, paper covers.

A New English Dictionary

On Historical Principles. Founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society.

(1) D—Deceit. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. 3s. 6d.

(2) F—Fang. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. 2s. 6d.

The Delegates of the Press have arranged for the punctual issue of the letters D and F. in quarterly sections. From and after January 1st, 1895, one section at least consisting of sixty-four pages, will be published quarterly at half-a-crown.

THE OXFORD DANTE

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth boards, gilt lettered, 7s. 6d.

COMPLETE WORKS OF DANTE in PROSE and VERSE. Edited by E. MOORE, D.D., with Index of Proper Names by PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A.

TUTTE LE OPERE DI DANTE ALIGHIERI NUOVAMENTE RIVEDUTE NEL TESTO

OXFORD INDIA PAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 9s. 6d.

MINIATURE EDITION on OXFORD INDIA PAPER. 3 vols, 32mo, 10s. 6d.

A Work of Extreme importance to Students of Botany and Horticulturists.

The Work will be completed in Four Parts, which will be issued to the subscribers who take the whole Work at Eight Guinea; net; and the Price will be raised on Publication. Subscriptions will be received until the Publication of Part IV.

Part III., now ready. Parts I. and II., published 4to, cloth, £2 2s. each, net.

INDEX KEWENSIS: an Enumeration of the Genera and Species of Plants from the Time of Linnaeus to the year 1835 inclusive. Edited by Sir J. D. HOOKER and B. D. JACKSON.

Just published, demy 8vo, paper wrapper, 1s. 6d.

INDEX to SIR JAMES H. RAMSAY'S LANCASTER and YORK. By FRANCIS MARRIS JACKSON.

2 vols. 8vo, £1 16s. With Maps and Illustrations.

LANCASTER and YORK: a Century of English History (A.D. 1399-1485). By Sir JAMES H. RAMSAY, of Bamf, Bart., M.A.

Immediately. Crown 8vo, half-bound, 8s. 6d. net.

ADAMNANI VITA S. COLUMBÆ. Edited from Dr. Reeve's Text, with an Introduction on Early Irish Church History, Notes, and a Glossary, by J. T. FOWLER, M.A., D.C.L., F.S.A., Lecturer in Hebrew; Librarian, and Vice-Principal of Bishop Hatfield's Hall, in the University of Durham.

SHAKESPEARE'S SELECT PLAYS.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, stiff cover, 1s. 6d.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING. Edited by WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A., Hon. D.C.L. and LL.D., Fellow, Senior Bursar, and Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUE FREE ON APPLICATION.

London: HENRY FROWDE,
Clarendon Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The Life and Times of J. Greenleaf Whittier 1807—1892.

By S. T. PICKARD

With Steel Plate Engravings. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

An entirely new and authoritative biography based on the Quaker Poet's own letters and papers.

Low's New Series of "Travel and Adventure."

Crown 8vo volumes, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

VOLUME I., JUST READY.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A. Fully Illustrated.

VOLUME II., IMMEDIATELY.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. By HENRY M. STANLEY, D.C.L., &c. With Map and Illustrations.

PICTURESQUE CEYLON.

Vol. II. KANDY and PERADENIYA. By HENRY W. CAVE. Demy 4to, numerous Full-page Illustrations in Woodburygravure, gilt edges, roxburgh binding, 23s. net.

"A series of beautiful photographic illustrations of scenery and life... accompanied by appropriate letterpress, descriptive and historical."—Times.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN the DAY OF BATTLE: a

Romance. By J. A. STEUART, Author of "Kilgroom: a Story of Ireland," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

"A bold and stirring story, full of colour, incident, and strife.... The pirates, the Arab tribes, and their crimes and conflicts are vigorously depicted; and the third volume, in which the Scotch hero gets safely into and out of the Holy City, is strikingly picturesque and interesting."—World.

"A straightforward, rattling, breezy romance. It is a gallant story, in which the exciting adventures tumble over each other's heels. A good, honest, wholesome novel. In the ranks of our new school of romance the author deserves to find a prominent place."—Daily Telegraph.

THREE NAPOLEONIC NOVELS BY ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

Never before Translated.

Each in 2 vols., uniform crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. per vol.

THE COMPANY OF JEHU.

THE FIRST REPUBLIC; or, The Whites and the Blues.

THE LAST VENDÉE; or, The She-Wolves of Machecoul.

LOW'S SERIES OF ORIGINAL NOVELS.

Each in One Volume at 6s.

HIGHLAND COUSINS. By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Daughter of Heth."

PERLYCROSS: a Tale of the Western Hills. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lerna Doone," &c.

THE MAN from OSHKOSH: a Story. By JOHN HICKS, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Fern.

THE GATES of DAWN. By Fergus HUME, Author of "The Fever of Life," &c.

AN ELEMENTARY HISTORY of ART, Architecture, Sculpture, and Painting. By Mrs. ARTHUR BELL (N. D'ANVERS), Author of "The Art Guide to Europe," "The Life of Raphael d'Urbino," &c. Fourth Edition, revised and brought up to date by the Author. Illustrated with 375 Engravings. Crown 8vo, half-bound, 10s. 6d.; or in 2 vols., I. Architecture and Sculpture, 5s.; II. Painting in All Ages, 6s.

TALES from ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL Told to Children. By Mrs. FREWEN LORD. With Plan and View of the West Front of the Cathedral. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

A PLUNGE INTO SAHARA: an Adventure of To-day. By G. DEMAGE. With Illustrations by Paul Crampel. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1894.

No. 1176, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Sir William Gregory, K.C.M.G., formerly M.P., and sometime Governor of Ceylon: an Autobiography. Edited by Lady Gregory. (John Murray.)

THERE is not a dull chapter—scarcely is there a dull page—in this goodly volume, which contains the life-story of a kindly, impulsive, thoroughly lovable Irish gentleman: a story designed for the entertainment of his wife and son, and told with vivacity, good-humour, and unflinching candour. The career here described is that of a stirring, energetic spirit, an ardent sportsman, an insatiable traveller, moulded by circumstance into an accomplished and versatile man of affairs: of one who, notwithstanding that his activities had not always been wise and beneficent, yet in the end contrived, despite sundry errors and not a few misfortunes, to bestir himself strenuously in good deeds, and at his death to leave the world appreciably better than he found it.

The Irish Gregorys are a "Cromwellian" offshoot from an old Warwickshire stock, the owners of Styvechale Hall, near Coventry. Robert Gregory, of Galway, the great grandfather of Sir William, having at an early age entered the service of "John Company," succeeded in amassing a large fortune in the East, part of which, on his return, he invested in the purchase of Coole, an estate of over £7,000 a year in his native county. Robert's son William married Lady Anne, daughter of the Earl of Clancarty, and in 1813 was appointed Under-Secretary for Ireland—an office which he held for eighteen years. He did not inherit Coole until a few months before his death, which occurred in 1840. Meanwhile his son Robert had married a beautiful and talented Irishwoman named O'Hara; and of this marriage a son—William, the future M.P. and Governor of Ceylon—had been born on July 13, 1817.

From his mother William Gregory inherited those qualities of head and heart to which his subsequent success and popularity were mainly owing. His nature in all points—good and bad alike—was Irish to the core. Nimble-witted and many-sided, yet without intellectual or spiritual depth, ardent and impetuous in enterprise, yet speedily damped by resistance or ill-luck, sweet, docile, and tractable under kindness, yet furious in his resentment of a wrong—he seems to have exemplified in his own person almost every trait we are accustomed to look for in the bright, winning, uncertain Celtic temperament.

William Gregory's youth was mostly passed at the Under-Secretary's Lodge in the Phoenix Park. Here one day, while fishing in a pond for roach, the seven-year-old urchin made the acquaintance of the Marquess Wellesley, at that time viceroy, who presented him with a splendid copy of Walton's Compleat Angler, and insisted upon his beginning his classical studies without delay. The clever and affectionate youngster ramped through the rough places of the Latin Grammar, feeling himself amply rewarded for his labour by a smile from his new friend and hero. "It was my greatest treat to be put through my facings by him. I always felt, although such a very little fellow, that I must do whatever he told me, and that I could do it. It seemed impossible that he should impose anything unreasonable." When, some years later, Gregory went to Harrow, he found that the grounding the marquess had bestowed on him in Latin gave him no small standing among his class-fellows.

At Harrow, flattered by the notice of his Greek tutor, Dr. B. Kennedy, Gregory soon became a hard-working student, and, while still in the fifth class, won the prize for Latin Lyrics from the entire school. Next year he again won the same prize; but having foolishly shown his verses to Kennedy before sending them in, and having by that expert's advice cancelled a stanza or two, he was told by Dr. Longley that the prize must be forfeited to Pearson, the next in order of merit.

"It was a terrible blow to me, and for the time had a very bad effect. I gave up my books and got into every kind of scrape, until it ended in my being turned to the bottom of my remove. I really cared very little what I did or what became of me, so bitter and so enduring was the disappointment. I think I should have gone quite to the bad had I been under any master but Dr. Longley. I loved him so very dearly, that when I found him distant in his manner, and yet at times looking upon me so kindly and so sadly, and when I could bring myself to think dispassionately upon his decision and recognise its justice, the better principle prevailed. I mended my ways, took to my books again, and next year (1835) got the Latin Hexameters, the Peel Medal, and the Scholarship, and wound up my career by being head of the school for a considerable time."

From Harrow Gregory proceeded to Oxford, where, soon after his arrival, he carried off one of three exhibitions belonging to Christ Church. This time, however, he only ran second; being beaten by "a very ugly, very unclean, and very uncouth creature" named Linwood, at whose hands, in the contest for the Craven Scholarship, he shortly afterwards sustained another and still more signal defeat. Dashed by these reverses, he yet continued to read on, though in a desultory fashion; with the result that, on going in again next year for the Craven, he again ran second—this time however, to a student of quite inferior pretensions, whom their common tutor, Dr. Liddell, had repeatedly assured Gregory he was sure to beat.

Soon after this, Gregory was introduced to the Turf by some old Harrow friends, whom he had fallen in with during a visit to Cambridge. "From that time I deserted my old reading associates, and thought of nothing but Epsom and Newmarket." Still he read on for his degree by fits and starts, and, having two excellent coaches, felt sure of his First Class. But, when the Degree was at hand, and he should have been sweating over his divinity and logic, he went off instead to the Newmarket Spring meetings, subsequently riding to Epsom to see Bloomsbury win the Derby in a snow-storm—an event which, by putting £300 in his pocket, served to confirm his love of racing. On his return he tried to make up for lost time, working night and day until, on the very eve of the examination, he was taken violently ill with a rush of blood to the head. After an enforced rest of six months, followed by a vain effort to resume his studies, the unlucky young man quitted Oxford in broken spirits, and without even a common degree. Such was the result of his first visit to Newmarket.

On the death, in 1842, of Mr West, M.P. for Dublin city, Gregory, who at this time neither knew nor cared a jot about politics, weakly consented to contest the vacant seat in the ultra-Conservative interest, and actually defeated Lord Morpeth, the nominee of Dan O'Connell, by 390 votes. It had, of course, been necessary to issue an address; and the preparation of this had been entrusted to Shaw, the Recorder for Dublin, who, without a word of warning to Gregory, drew up "a grandiloquent proclamation," pledging the unwary novice to a strong Protestant programme, and denouncing Free Trade, the Maynooth Grant, and the National System of Education. This address furnished the text upon which, much against his will, Gregory found himself compelled, again and again, to hold forth to a yelling mob of Protestant operatives. He resisted as far as he might, and was rebuked by the Rev. "Thrash'em" Greg for his Laodicean lukewarmness; but, all the same, he entered Parliament burdened with avowals which, had he but known what he was doing, he would never have made. No sooner had he arrived in London than he found that the pledges—he calls them "intimations"—he had given to his fanatical constituents were serious impediments to his influence with the party in power. He found English Conservatives desirous, not of crushing the Romanists under foot, but rather of levelling them up to an equality with the Protestants. Lord Eliot, then Chief Secretary for Ireland, who had a short time before accepted his candidature for Dublin, now threw him over by expressing his regret to the House at "the violence of Mr. Gregory's language on the subject of education." At last, when Sir Robert Peel took him privately to task for the obsolete rigour of his sectarianism, the young man's cup of bitterness overflowed, and with a wrathful heart he explained to his kind counsellor the degrading perplexities into which he had carelessly suffered himself to be led. Peel's advice was brief and practical:

"If you have given any pledges, keep them, or else resign; but under any circumstances, dissociate yourself at once from those ultra men who, if they had their way, would create a fresh rebellion in Ireland."

Gregory did not resign. Perhaps he felt that the shabbiness of the manoeuvre by which the "intimations" he now chafed under had been extracted from him absolved him from too punctilious an observance of them in the House. Anyhow, though he adhered to his detested programme to the extent of opposing Peel's proposal to increase the Maynooth Grant in April, 1845, he showed his independence by pairing in favour of Mr. Hutt's motion for the free importation of Australian corn, thus becoming—as he proudly boasts—"the first seceder from the Protectionist phalanx." And when, on the meeting of Parliament in 1846, Peel introduced his motion for Free Trade, the renegade representative of Protectionist Dublin hastened to the great Minister's support, and early in February made a speech on the abolition of import duties on corn, which he himself describes as "long and extremely dull, but received with attention by a full House."

Two days later Gregory was offered the Irish Lordship of the Treasury, together with the virtual control of Irish business in the House of Commons. The opening was a brilliant one; and had Gregory had the stuff of a statesman in him, he would have caught at it with glad eagerness. As it was, he felt, he confesses, "more alarmed than pleased" at the offer. Instead of gratefully accepting, he at once began to point out the obstacles that would beset his path. Finally, he asked and obtained permission to consult his parents. His mother was half inclined to say, "Accept!" But his father, remembering an unlucky pronouncement made at the hustings in favour of Protection, and fearing lest his son should be charged with having spoken and voted in order to obtain office, urged him strongly to decline. The son found little difficulty in acting upon advice so consonant with his own inclinations; and thus it came to pass that William Gregory, to his subsequent bitter and lasting regret, failed to take the tide of his fortunes at the flood, and wrote to refuse the proffered post. In August, 1847, Parliament was dissolved, and Gregory again stood for Dublin. There being every appearance of a walk over, the candidate went off to Goodwood, the result being that John Reynolds, a Radical spouter, who in Gregory's absence offered himself to the electors, defeated him at the poll by ninety-five votes. Thus a second time had the unlucky plunger to pay dearly for unseasonable indulgence in his darling sport. After an abortive attempt to win a seat in Galway County, he accepted the inevitable, and for the next ten years remained a stranger to the House.

In 1857 Gregory re-entered Parliament, this time as member for Galway County. During the ten years' interval—owing partly to the hard times following on the famine of 1845, partly to his persistent efforts to redeem all his losses and liabilities by a single brilliant stroke on the Turf—he had become desperately involved, and had ultimately been forced to sell two-thirds of the family estate. A visit to Kinvara, once an outlying portion of the property (upon which in the Famine years the rates had been 18s. in the pound, "and that a fictitious pound, for it was never paid!"), served to convert Gregory into an ardent tenant-righter. The land was poor and stony, and had been sold in Dublin to one Comerford, a carpenter, who paid for it with borrowed capital. As soon as he had been given possession, the rapacious monster raised the rent so as to pay 5 per cent. on the borrowed money, and to yield himself a large income besides. The ruin and despair of the rack-rented people, who in the Gregorys' time had never been asked even for the old rent in full, so affected William Gregory that, from the day of his visit to the day of his death, he remained a staunch supporter of the Irish tenants' cause. And thus it happened that the same man who in 1842 had been returned for Dublin, in the very teeth of the Liberator, by the Rev. "Thrash'em" (Tresham) Greg and his 1500 Protestant operatives (bought at £3 a head), was now proclaimed knight of the shire for a county in Connaught mainly through the aid of the Roman Catholic bishops of Galway and Kilmacduagh, who wisely preferred a sympathetic heretic to an orthodox candidate (Capt. Bellow) apt to give himself airs.

The crying wrong under which the tenants groaned was, of course, the instability of their tenure of the land. In those days notices to quit "fell like snowflakes." The largest landowners in Ireland (the Law Life Insurance Company) regularly handed a notice to quit to every tenant on their property, together with the receipt for the rent! In order partially to remedy this evil, Gregory, in 1866, joined forces with Sir Colman O'Loughlin, the member for Clare, and the two framed and introduced a very moderate Bill:

"Where there was no written agreement, a lease of twenty-one years was presumed. . . . Where the tenancy was annual, the tenant was empowered to deduct county cess, and distress was forbidden. Compensation in case of ejectment of a yearly tenant was exacted, except in case of non-payment of rent."

Truly, when judged by the standard of recent legislation, a very moderate Bill! Had it passed, the result would have been a general granting of leases, and Ireland would have been at peace for twenty-one years.

"Before I introduced the Bill I met Mr. Gladstone going out of the House, and I besought him to stay and hear what I had to say, and to help me if he approved. He said: 'Let me look at your Bill,' and ran his eye over the headings of the clauses. 'Why, you want,' said he, 'to interfere with the management of a man's own property! I will have nothing to do with it' (ejaculating these last words with the greatest emphasis). We failed in making our way with our Bill."

Verily, tempora mutantur.

Again, in 1870, when Mr. Gladstone introduced his Land Bill for Ireland, Gregory, with the full consent of the delegates of the tenant farmers assembled in London, formulated certain proposals for the guidance of the Government, promising that, if they were adopted, the land question would never be heard of again. These included: (1) The establishment of a Land Court, open to both landlord and tenant; (2) the adoption of existing rents as the basis of a legalised settlement; and (3) the empowering of the tenant to sell his goodwill in all cases, whether of eviction or of voluntary departure. Sir John Gray brought forward these suggestions in Committee, but was opposed in every instance by the Government. And yet, as the whole world knows, Mr. Gladstone's second Land Bill of 1880 was entirely founded on these three proposals, though with certain injudicious additions of his own! So true is it that every dealing of England with Ireland comes too late.

Of the many other interests and activities of William Gregory, of his efforts to extend the usefulness of the British Museum; of his connexion with the National Gallery, to which he left a Savoldo, a Jan Steen monochrome, and two Velasquez; of his tour in the States (during which he arrived three days after the "Revolution of Harper's Ferry," at the very scene of the foray, and actually rode to Washington in the train which carried John Brown to his trial and execution); of his endeavours to secure the independence of the Danubian Principalities, and his warm espousal of the Southern Cause on the outbreak of the American War in 1861; of these, and many other matters which occupied Gregory's attention during the years of his parliamentary life, we can do no more than make the briefest possible passing mention. Nor can we stay to tell of his cordial reception by the brilliant London society of the Forties; of his friendship with Lady Jersey, and the curious cause which, for a time, interrupted it; of his attendance (in a dress worth £80) at Her Majesty's bal poudre on June 6, 1845, and the picturesque assemblage afterwards of the bewigged and powdered eighteenth century gallants in the supper room at Crockford's; or of his cordial intimacies with Dan O'Connell, Lord George Bentinck, Lord Dunkellin, the Earl of Lincoln, and hosts of others—men of every conceivable shade of political opinion. Of the stories he relates concerning this period of his life some are "chestnuts," and one at least is neither new nor true. Had Lady Gregory consulted her Dictionary of National Biography, she would have seen that Barnes, the editor of the Times, died of the effects of a surgical operation in May, 1841, and therefore could not possibly have written out the cheque for £500 which, on p. 86 of this volume, he is stated to have filled in and handed to Mrs. Norton, as the price of an important state secret which she is stated to have coaxed out of her unsuspecting admirer, Sidney Herbert, during a tête-à-tête dinner on December 4, 1845. Perhaps as good a thing as can be found in the book is contained in the following paragraph, which we quote from Sir William's review of Lord Palmerston's Administration, and with which, most regretfully, we take our leave of this entertaining and, let us add, instructive volume:

"England soon found out the loss of the clear head, the solid judgment, and the firm hand of Lord Palmerston, when Lord Russell succeeded him, and Mr. Gladstone assumed the leadership of the House of Commons. Hitherto Lord Palmerston had always repressed Mr. Gladstone's exuberances, quietly but irresistibly. Since then, except for brief intervals, Mr. Gladstone has had a free hand, and Egypt and Ireland can attest the consequences. A member of Lord Palmerston's Cabinet gave me an amusing description of their proceedings. At the beginning of the session, Mr. Gladstone used to come in, charged to the muzzle with all sorts of schemes of all sorts of reforms which were absolutely necessary in his opinion to be immediately undertaken. Lord Palmerston used to look fixedly at the paper before him, saying nothing until there was a lull in Gladstone's outpouring. He then rapped the table and said cheerfully, 'Now, my lords and gentlemen, let us get to business.'

T. HUTCHINSON.

A History of Cabinets. By W. M. Torrens. (W. H. Allen.)

THIS book, the last of Mr. Torrens's works, is also the one on which he bestowed the most labour and research. It is the most ambitious in its design, the widest in its scope; and upon it his reputation as an historian is most likely to rest. There is, then, something doubly pathetic in the fact that he died just before it appeared—"just as the last proof-sheets had been returned to the printers." It is impossible in reviewing it not to wish to be alive rather to its merits than to its faults, seeing that the author, who might have defended himself against strictures or made good confessed defects, has passed away. Mr. Torrens had laboured for many years under an affection of the eyesight, which prevented him from either writing his own manuscript or correcting his own proofs, and made him in these respects dependent on the services of changing amanuenses. It is to be regretted that their services seem to have been somewhat perfunctorily rendered. For certain peculiarities of style no doubt Mr. Torrens was himself responsible, such as a singular addiction to the repeated use of unusual words, "im-prescriptible," "inveteracy," "the intercept of the Commonwealth," "interjaculate," "Carteret's habitual spurn of the vermiculate questionings and cavils of his colleagues"; but in the correction of the proofs, slips of grammar, and more than slips of spelling, do his work an injustice for which he was in no respect responsible. A serious historical work ought not to be allowed to call anybody a "persona grata," as this does twice over, to print "rights" for "rites," and "council" for "counsel"; nor should we have to read that "the event, long awaited, conferred a step in rank, at which his wife was said to be more elated than him." Considering, too, the bulk of the book, and that it is made up very largely from manuscript sources not very accessible to the public, it deserved an index, which, instead of giving the clue only to proper names, would have referred the student to subjects as well. With a few almost mechanical improvements this history might have been made a very useful work of reference. As it is, for want of a table of contents and two more pages of index, only those are likely to consult it who have the time to read and digest it thoroughly, or the patience to be their own guides when the index fails them.

It is not quite easy to discover the scope of this book from its title, nor yet to suggest a title that would have better represented its scope. After a brief introduction, covering the years from 1688 to 1714, the history begins with the accession of George the First, and thenceforward proceeds, year by year, and with great detail, till it concludes with the death of George II. This period is chosen because in Mr. Torrens's judgment it covered the whole growth of executive government by means of a cabinet. William was his own Prime Minister, and, in spite of the restriction of his prerogatives, remained so to the end of his life. Under the weaker rule of Anne came a change, a change perhaps less due to weakness than to discretion:

"In outward semblance all went on as before. Every minister knelt to Anne, as his predecessor had knelt to her grandfather, and to her would-be despotic sire; and, if all had not the careful and scrupulous wisdom of the Lord Treasurer, or the grace of sympathy and devotion of the Captain-General, there was not one of them who would not have repudiated the idea that he held office by any other tenure than that of Her Majesty's pleasure. Nevertheless, there came about by degrees a transmutation of things in the working of the Executive, which, had it been anticipated in the days of Pym and Strafford, would have averted civil war, and much that followed in its train. It is curious to observe with what good temper and good nature, with what dignity and prudence, Anne allowed herself to be led during the greater portion of her reign, and that, so long as the delicacy of deference and duty was shown her, she hardly seems to have thought of asking the dangerous question, which shall govern England—the Crown that cannot be called to account, save by revolution, or individual ministers, that Parliament may depose by a majority of one?"

On Anne's death, slight and unimpressive a matter as the demise of the crown appeared to be, it became at least clear that absolutism in the executive administration was a thing of the past. With monarchs alien in speech and sympathy, whose interests lay abroad, and who attached no adherents to their persons at home, the supersession of the king by his ministers became as easy as it was inevitable. Indistinctly at first, clearly enough afterwards, those monarchs themselves became alive to the fact: "Your ministers, Sir," said Lord Chancellor Hardwicke after reading His Majesty a lecture, "are only your instruments of government." The king smiled and said bitterly, "Ministers are the king in this country." No doubt this change came about in a sufficiently tortuous and self-seeking way; and the clique of nobles, in whose hands cabinet government became an accepted fact, were perhaps equally unconscious and undesirous of playing the part of founders of a constitution. To found a fortune, to consolidate a family connexion, or to build a palace, was enough for them. Still, when George II. died,

"Cabinet rule had been upon its trial for nearly half a century, and, despite many blemishes and errors, its superiority to the systems of government that had preceded it was tacitly accepted by the nation. Dynastic controversies had been laid to rest, and civil strife, endangering the public peace, was heard of no more. The crown devolved without question or grudge upon the next lineal heir, but, shorn of the power to perplex or disturb the community by the gratification of arbitrary whim, it was no longer an object of jealousy or fear. The supremacy of Parliament had been gradually established—not only in the making of laws but in the power of enforcing them; for the ministers, who in combination formed the Executive, though nominally appointed by the King, were, as everybody knew, co-optatively chosen by the chiefs of the party that happened to be in power."

For the period of time which he selected it may be doubted whether Mr. Torrens did not write his book on too extensive a scale; for the complete growth of cabinet government, as indicated in his above-quoted conclusion, it is almost certainly too short, and, after all, the growth of cabinet government in England is rather a subject for a substantial essay than for two bulky narrative volumes. As it is, he has written not a history of cabinet government, nor a history of cabinets, but the history of some cabinets. The huge mass of correspondence preserved by the families of the chief politicians of the early Georgian period is not only a rich mine of historical material for any study of their times, but the best for the examination of the somewhat subterranean arts and artifices of the first cabinets. This mine Mr. Torrens worked carefully and laboriously, and in the result was almost too much loaded with his materials. To trace the intrigues and record the rivalries of ministers, to whom cabinet solidarity was only beginning to be known, requires not only considerable fulness of narrative, but also a great wealth of quotation. The defect of this otherwise valuable history is that it wants proportion and cohesion, leaves on the reader's mind a certain bewilderment, and seems to have been written upon no really definite plan. On the other hand, the subject necessarily involved a biographical treatment; and, though needlessly hostile to Walpole, Mr. Torrens's sketches of the characters of the statesmen whose strategy he is unfolding are always interesting and often brilliant. He abounds in happy sarcasms and caustic touches:

"The Irish Peerage [was] too often treated as a sort of outhouse of honour, where the waifs and strays of fortune were glad to stable their horses until called within the circle of privileged nobility."

"The Executive knack of judiciously saying nothing at considerable length, with a certain air of good-nature and sympathy, was then, as now, regarded as a gift of governing genius."

"Immigrant monarchy" for the principle represented by the house of Brunswick, and "the working capital of corruption" for secret service money, are neat phrases; while of George II. before Dettingen it is cruelly written:

"George II. grew impatient of mere prominence in the picture of still life hitherto presented by the Court of England since his accession. Nature, he often suspected, had meant him for a great general. The lust of war, not for the sake of territorial acquisition—for of this he did not dream—but for the sake of fighting, as classical education taught every great king he ought to fight, stirred his soul. What would his contemporaries of France and Austria or Poland think of him if he remained for ever shut up thus tamely in his island-paddock, never daring to clear territorial fences or make a royal rush in any direction? Even his hated kinsman, Frederick of Prussia, would look down upon him if he did not form some offensive alliance, sack some city, or cause a respectable number of some neighbour's soldiery to bite the dust. Then there was the martial honour of England to be maintained, which providence had entrusted to his keeping. How could he justify himself to his loyal subjects if he never led any of them out to be slaughtered in the good old style of his predecessors?"

Too much devotion, however, to the early history of English cabinets has the effect of rather souring a writer's style and destroying the perspective of his judgment. He paints a series of portraits in tones more sombre than upon a broader view they need to be. As read in Mr. Torrens's pages, the history of England during about sixty years is an almost unbroken record of self-seeking, intrigue, place-hunting, corruption, and lies. The statesmen whose names are recorded there seem to be divisible into able rogues and stupid rogues. Yet, bad as they were and discreditable as are many of the incidents of that epoch, who can look upon what England then was and did, and still more upon what she afterwards became, and agree that this is a fair or adequate way of dealing with her history? The History of Cabinets is a valuable store of materials, often new and always curious; it is a vigorous and interesting, sometimes a brilliant, study of one side of our political history; but it is too one-sided to be definitive, and, on the whole, too pessimistic to be just. Mr. Torrens's last work is, beyond doubt, an important contribution to our knowledge of the eighteenth century; but it leaves the field still waiting for the labours of other hands.

J. A. HAMILTON.

English Whist and English Whistplayers. By W. P. Courtney. (Bentley.)

THIS is unquestionably the most lively book on a delightful subject that it has ever been my good fortune to come across; and Mr. Courtney's thorough acquaintance, not only with the literature but with the unwritten records of the whist-table, places his work at the head of what is now a pretty extensive literature of the game. His history of whist itself is as complete as can be found in Cavendish; but the special charm of the book lies in the endless anecdotes of the leading men and women who, from the time of Dean Swift to the present day, a period of nearly two centuries, have been devoted to this pastime. The number of celebrated characters, literary and otherwise, whom Mr. Courtney is able to connect with the game would seem to show that the real difficulty would be to find persons who were successful in any career who were not whistplayers. Prelates, the clergy at large, lawyers, soldiers, kings and their subjects at whist afford matter for a series of amusing stories, not often to be found within one volume. To name all the literary men connected with our game would be impossible. Among the leading warriors and sovereigns devoted to the game we find the two Napoleons, Marlborough, Lord Olive (who killed himself in the middle of an unfinished rubber), Sir John Malcolm, Blücher (more, however, of a gambler than a whistplayer), and the great Moltke, who, to close all his triumphs, made a grand "slam" on the night before his death.

The great Napoleon was not great at the whist-table, and a characteristic story is told of him at St. Helena. At a private party of whist he took out four Napoleons to use as markers, and one of the young ladies took up one of the coins and asked him what it was. The polite hero snatched it rather roughly from her, and, pointing to the impression, exclaimed, "C'est moi." The annoyance caused by this incident ruffled him so much that he made a misdeal. The party begged him to try again, and he did so with the same result. His countenance then displayed the rages of convulsive fury, and his anger was not appeased until the house had been searched for old cards, which could be more easily dealt. Meantime the unhappy Count Las Casas, his only attendant, was ordered to sit down at a spare table to play the cards alone until they should run smoothly (p. 154). Louis Philippe showed equal regard for the coin that bore his name. He dropped a Louis on the carpet while playing whist, and arrested the progress of the game to look for it, whereupon a foreign ambassador, who was one of the party, set fire to a billet of 1,000 francs to give light to the king under the table (p. 254). As a general rule warriors are greater adepts at whist than doctors. But there are always exceptions. Dr. Arnal, a physician to the third Napoleon, was a skilful player, and pitiless to the faults of those who associated with him in his pleasures. He was playing at the Tuileries with a General A—, who committed every kind of whist enormity. It was soon observed that at each blunder the doctor's annoyance increased, and that as instances of imbecility occurred he fidgeted more and more on his chair: twenty times, at least, he checked any further display of his indignation by a supreme effort. At last the general crowned the edifice of his folly with so dreadful a bric-à-brac that the doctor lost all patience. Looking fixedly at his partner, he hissed out the words, with sufficient loudness for the whole of the company to hear, "Yes, it is very clear that it is not very difficult to become a general" (p. 158). From Mr. Courtney's pages it would appear that doctors when they have become proficient are inclined to be severe on their partners. A certain Dr. Belman was playing whist one evening, with an elderly spinster. She trumped his best card, and at the end of the hand the doctor asked the reason why. The lady's soft reply did not succeed in turning away the wrath of the infuriated gentleman. "Oh, Dr. Belman, I judged it judicious!" was her smiling answer. His fury burst all bounds. He thundered out in ever increasing harshness of tone—"Judicious! Judicious!! Judicious!!! You old fool!" The lady never played again (p. 106). I would recommend to the attention of the unfortunate player who objects to the vituperation of a bullying partner the example of Colley Cibber, who, being a very cool customer and shockingly addicted to swearing, thus retorted on his severe critic: "Don't be angry, General, for, damme, I can play ten times worse if I like!" (p. 308).

To whistplayers, Mr. Courtney's chapter on Clubs will prove the most interesting. He describes the rise and fall of Crockfords', which was hardly a whist club, and which stood on the site of the existing Devonshire Club. At the other end of St. James's-street, No. 87, now the headquarters of the St. George's Chess Club, is the room in which the most scientific whistplayers used to congregate every afternoon and evening—Grahams' Club, called from the names of the proprietors, father and son, who kept it successively for many years. Like all whist clubs, it had its vicissitudes; it was dissolved in 1836 to get rid of a few obnoxious members, a resource not unusually exercised in such institutions, and immediately reconstituted. After a few more years this famous club was broken up by the proprietor closing its doors, on account of failure on the part of members to pay their subscriptions. It was at Grahams' that Lord Henry Bentinck invented the Blue Peter. The Portland family have given three great men to the world: Lord William Bentinck, the Governor-General of India, in whose time a material called kunker was first used for making roads, and he was hence called William the Kunkerer; Lord George Bentinck, the king of the Turf in England, who, when the great Country Party was betrayed, abandoned the loved pursuit of a lifetime to defend a lost cause; and Lord Henry Bentinck, the rival of James Clay for the throne of whist, and the inventor of the Blue Peter. Mr. Courtney gives the history of the other leading whist clubs—the Portland, the Baldwin, the Westminster, and the St. James's. This last club he describes as still flourishing at 87, St. James's-street, but he will be sorry to hear that it also has been closed, and for the same reason as its predecessor, the Grahams'. One of the best rooms for whist in London is again vacant, and at the disposal of any club desirous of inheriting such great traditions.

The card-rooms of the great social and political clubs are secret reunions open only to the members, to which no stranger is ever admitted, whatever other hospitality may be extended. Beyond the circle of the members themselves, and the traditions that descend among them from generation to generation, the secrets of those card-rooms are not exposed to the public gaze. Mr. Courtney draws the curtain, to some extent, as regards the Garrick, the Athenaeum, and his own favourite haunt in the Reform Club, to the members frequenting which card-room his book is dedicated. "Whist at the Carlton," says Mr. Courtney, "has never flourished with the same vigour as in its political rival, and a few years since it died away." Mr. Courtney's knowledge on this mysterious subject must be founded on rumour only, but I fear the rumour is too correct. I have played with a member of the Carlton who goes to other quarters for his whist, and he wickedly informed me that in the card-room of our headquarters he was obliged to acknowledge that we belonged to the stupid party.

Mr. Courtney concludes with a careful criticism and list of all preceding writers on the game. He is thoroughly just in his account of Hoyle, Mathews, Cavendish, James Clay, Procter, and General Drayson, to all of whom he gives their merited meed of praise. He is, in my opinion, far too laudatory of Dr. Pole, whose whist teaching has that utter absence of practicality which is the chief merit of all the other authors I have mentioned. His list of whist-books is, I should think, complete; for I was surprised to find among them whist hands to illustrate Cavendish's system of play, published in 1863, by A. C. and B. D., of Kurnool, in India. I think I must have known these gentlemen when I was head of that district, from 1860 to 1866, and, doubtless, played many a rubber with them during those years.

In conclusion, I beg to thank Mr. Courtney heartily for his delightful volume, and to recommend it unreservedly to all whistplayers. Every card-room in London and the provinces should have a copy, for it is exactly the kind of book to beguile its members during those painful half hours in which they may be waiting to make up a rubber.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

Cornellii Taciti de Germania. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Map, by H. Furneaux. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

"Who would leave Italy for Germany, unless Germany were his Fatherland?" asks Tacitus. Mr. Furneaux, to the gratification of students, passes from the Annals to the Germania; but he carries with him an eye trained in a wider sphere. No justice could be done to the Agricola or Germania by an editor who was not familiar with the larger works. The real character and object of the Germania must be settled by consideration of those greater units. Not only must we ask where it could be inserted if (as has been sometimes thought) it were a section out of the Histories, but a careful study of the style is needful to determine whether it belongs to the same phase of the author's literary activity as the Histories do. In period, they are much the same; but a comparison of the two works would show, Mr. Furneaux says, that the Germania is "fully intermediate in style between Histories and Annals, and represents a period in which the historian is still at times subordinate to the orator." Mr. Furneaux seems to lean to the idea that the Germania may have been written for insertion in the Histories, then taken out, enlarged, and published separately. The material may have grown on Tacitus's hands, and there was a possible reason for publishing the essay at what appears to be its date of publication. Both Domitian and Trajan had done much to draw attention to Germany: Trajan had established a defensive policy in that country at which "the more ardent spirits would be disappointed"; and Tacitus might well come forward to support the policy of prudence by showing "the vast extent and overwhelming numbers of the tribes of Germany, and the climatic, physical, and economical obstacles to its subjugation."

Tacitus' account of the Germans must always be little less interesting to Englishmen than it is to the present dwellers between Rhine and Vistula; and it is gratifying to find the work of scholars in both countries brought to a focus in an introduction and notes of moderate compass but nearly exhaustive grasp. Extreme thoroughness is the mark of Mr. Furneaux's work, and the present edition, uniform with his Annals, gives him space enough. Perfectly unalarmed by the authority of German editors and critics, he judges for himself; and, though alternative views are stated, he will not abdicate the functions of an editor by refusing to give his readers a firm lead. This remark is true of both notes and introduction. The latter is more complete than his modesty claims it to be, especially in the admirable section on "The account given by Tacitus, and its value," wherein the relation of the Germania to early English institutions is handled. The text adopted is generally that of Halm, but not invariably. A noteworthy feature of the commentary is its close attention to the art of Tacitus' composition and to the links which unite the chapters and larger divisions.

Having said so much in general terms, we may now briefly discuss three passages: (1) C. 3. Fuisse apud eos et Herculem memorant, primumque omnium virorum fortium ituri in proelia canunt. "As the prototype of brave men," says Mr. Furneaux; but this is perhaps putting more meaning on the words than they can bear, or need bear, seeing that the same sense can be got by suggestion in a plainer way. Why not simply translate: "He is named first in their war-songs," before all other brave men? Why first? As an example, perhaps. (2) C. 6. In rectum aut uno flexu dextros agunt, ita conjuncto orbe ut nemo posterior sit, "So keeping line as they wheel that no one drops behind the one next to him" (Furneaux). If we are to read orbe, not ordine, we might make more of its special force. I should understand Tacitus to mean that German horses (and horsemen), unlike trained Roman horses, practise only one turn in riding exercises, say to the right. But that turn is continued in a constant curve to the right until the head of the little column meets the tail, and you cannot say which is head and which is tail any longer. (3) C. 12, about travelling judges: Centeni singulis ex plebe comites consilium simul et auctoritas adsunt, "As advisers and with power to decide" (Furneaux). Considering that the verdict of a Roman consilium was binding on the magistrate, this seems tautologous. Is it possible that auctoritas means that the hundred followers were more than mere jurymen, because they lent weight to the judge, as being there to enforce the decision? Thus we should have two uses found, just as certain other followers have two uses in C. 13 (decus and praesidium). Auctoritatem in C. 39 appeals to the same two ideas of weight and strength.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

John Bull & Co. The Great Colonial Branches of the Firm: Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. By Max O'Rell. (Frederick Warne.)

OUR old friend Max O'Rell gives in the present volume an account of a lecturing tour, which occupied about two years, in Canada, the United States, some of the Pacific Islands, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, and South Africa. Long as he has lived in England, he remains a thorough Frenchman, lively and epigrammatic; prejudiced and inaccurate, but always amusing.

The greater part of the book is taken up with Australia, and we doubt the Australians being pleased with his account of them. He is not much in love with them or with their country. Their religion bores and their drunkenness disgusts him. If he ever comes near being a bore himself, it is when he is running down the Protestant religion: it is, indeed, a blemish in his book that he should go out of his way to attack persistently every form of Protestantism. Here is a specimen of the drunkenness of the Australians:

"In the town of X. [Victoria] I had occasion to go and see the mayor. I found him tipsy. On leaving his presence I went to the office of the town clerk. He was tipsy. From there my manager and I went to call upon the director of the principal bank. He was tipsy. The proprietor of the hotel where I was staying was in bed, suffering from delirium tremens. The same night, at my lecture, the police had to eject from the front seats two individuals who, by their conduct, were preventing the audience from following me. One was a prominent person in the town, and the other was the worthy representative of the district in Parliament."

What strikes one as incomplete in this story is that the policemen were not tipsy too! Now as to their eating:

"The Australians pass the greater part of their time at table. At seven they take tea and bread and butter. At half-past eight they breakfast off cold meat, chops or steaks, eggs and bacon, and tea. At eleven most of them take a light lunch of beer and biscuit, or tea and bread and butter, according to their sex. At one, or half-past, they dine, and again the teapot is in requisition. At three afternoon tea is served and swallowed. From six to seven all Australia, broadly speaking, is taking its third meal, and again drinking tea. Those who stay up at all late sometimes supplement this with a light collation at ten."

The reader will find many shrewd observations on the various questions and difficulties of the day, and on the future of the colonies. Mr. Max O'Rell is no believer in confederation. He says:

"If there is one profound conviction that I have acquired in all my travels among the Anglo-Saxons in the different parts of the world, it is that the colonies do not want confederation, and will never move towards the realisation of this dream."

He does full justice to the great qualities of English statesmen and administrators as displayed in the foundation and management of the colonies, and gives this testimony to our freedom:

"I have travelled over a great part of the earth's surface, have lived in the two great republics of the world, France and America; and it is my firm conviction that there exists, on this planet, but one people perfectly free, from a political and social point of view, and that is the English."

That John Bull & Co. will give much pleasure is certain. The English is excellent; now and then only does the foreign origin of the writer betray itself, as in Society for the Promulgation of the Gospel for Society for the Propagation of the Gospel; but such slips are rare. There is a touch of pathos in the last page: after years of travel through new countries, and looking in vain for something to remind him of former generations, he is asked by Sir Thomas Upington, of Cape Town—

"Well, after all these long travels, what are you going to do now?" "What am I going to do?" is the reply, "I am going to Europe to look at some old wall with a bit of ivy on it,"

WILLIAM WICKHAM.

NEW NOVELS.

One Fair Daughter. By Frank Frankfort Moore. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Children of Circumstance. By "Iota." In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

The Daughters of Danaus. By Mona Caird. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

Ventured in Vain. By Reginald E. Salwey. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Son of Reuben. By Silas K. Hocking. (Frederick Warne.)

The Beechcourt Mystery. By Carlton Strange. (Newnes.)

Suspected. By F. P. Rathbun. (Henderson.)

MR. FRANK FRANKFORT MOORE has several good points as a writer of fiction. He has fair constructive power, and a peculiarly light and easy vein of persiflage which would relieve the most threadbare theme from dullness. One Fair Daughter is charming in its slightly cynical but not spiteful humour, and its obiter dicta upon the social ethics of the day. These are characteristics which will probably win for the author more popularity in the clubroom than in the boudoir. Irony, wit, and satire are lost upon the majority of womankind, but the male reader will have many a quiet smile over the amusing caricatures of London life that crop up in almost every chapter. The year in which the events of the present novel occurred was memorable in the West End for the Introspection craze, a name which tolerably well explains itself; it had been preceded by the Costermongers' year and the Skirt dancers' year, while in the far-off past had been years devoted to the Cowboy, the Divorce Court, the Submerged Tenth, and the Slums. In his romantic scenes Mr. Moore lays on the paint with considerable thickness, reminding one of the Bulwer-Lytton and Disraeli treatment of such subjects; and though, perhaps, there is little material now left with which a society novel can shock the susceptibilities of the age, it must be confessed that Mr. Moore, in nautical metaphor, sometimes steers exceedingly close to the wind. In the novel under notice Miss Philippa Liscomb and Mr. Maurice Wentworth love one another with a devotion almost too profound to be indicated in language, until Alice Heathfield, Maurice's betrothed wife, awkwardly appears upon the scene, when Philippa at once withdraws from the competition and insists upon the gentleman fulfilling his honourable obligations. Here we have self-surrender of a high type, altogether praiseworthy and respectable. And when she hears that the newly-married bride, having become acquainted on her wedding day with some early scandal connected with Maurice, has declined to fulfil ordinary hymeneal requirements, we may pardon her for feeling due concern on his behalf. But that her self-surrender should forthwith take the shape of throwing herself, by her own invitation, into her lover's arms, and retiring with him to a secluded country village for a fortnight, in order to recompense him in some way for the loss of sensual enjoyment, of which she has been in a manner the cause, is certainly a dénouement more original than edifying.

A novel of a totally different kind to the above is Children of Circumstance. Although the writer cannot resist the feminine temptation to introduce as the principal male figure a rather invertebrate specimen of the sex, though the book ends without settling the final fortunes of the principal characters, and though the only important love-scene that occurs in its pages is conducted on both sides with the easy pleasantry of a dispassionate flirtation, there is plenty of powerful writing throughout. The story is mainly connected with some of the darker sides of London life, and the quixotic efforts of Margaret Dering, a girl of twenty, to reclaim the fallen women of the West End. The fact that neither the methods nor the results of her process could, under any circumstances, be capable of realisation in actual life, need not be counted as any disparagement of the author's sincere and spirited effort to inspire a tenderer feeling towards the erring humanity whose lot she describes. The theme is, of course, by no means a new one, and Wilkie Collins' New Magdalene will at once occur as a novel written with similar purpose; but it may be doubted whether the trenchant satire of the latter work is to be compared for real effectiveness with the dignified pathos of "Iota's" handiwork. A word must be said for the characters of the story: they are drawn with a masterly hand, and the analysis of motives and actions is conducted with an appreciative humour which stamps the book as a worthy successor to A Yellow Aster, the novel which first brought this author into notice.

The name of Mona Caird is associated with a controversy which assumed some prominence in the holiday season five or six years ago, and which is kept up in a languishing form even now. It might reasonably be presumed that a novel from her pen would embody this lady's pronounced opinions upon the duties and privileges—more especially the privileges—of woman in the married state; and The Daughters of Danaus does not belie expectations. Its theme throughout is the revolt, or upheaval, or emancipation—or whatever the proper term may be—of the weaker sex. The principal characters are Hadria and Algitha, two sisters of an advanced and rebellious type of womanhood. The latter goes off upon a mission to the East End, where, appropriately perhaps, she marries a Socialist. We do not, however, hear so much about her as about her sister Hadria, a most emphatic and outspoken young person, who looks upon marriage as a degrading bondage, and considers that a woman with a child in her arms is "the symbol of an abasement, an indignity more complete, more disfiguring and terrible than any form of humiliation that the world has ever seen." After such a vigorous expression of opinion as this, it is somewhat strange to find the young lady condescending to submit to the degrading bondage she has denounced, and to marry an exceedingly commonplace person named Hubert Temperley. The inconsistency of her procedure no doubt suggested itself to her in due course, as, after a short spell of marriage, we find her taking a trip to Paris on her own account to study music, and also engaging in a deliberate course of flirtation with Professor Theobald, a man of immoral character, whose efforts to allure her from the path of virtue she has, however, the courage to resist. It is not easy to decide whether the author means Hadria's career to be a model or a warning; from certain expressions towards the end of the book one is tempted to believe she must have intended the latter. In point of mere style Mrs. Caird is an accomplished writer, but the constant repetition of the same views and arguments soon becomes wearisome; and, so far from having provided us with any solution of "the marriage question," the author has done little more than demonstrate how exceedingly dull a book of five hundred pages may be made.

Except for the presence of a hero who is preternaturally good and needlessly scrupulous, Ventured in Vain is sufficiently entertaining to merit favourable notice. The immaculate perfection of Mr. Geoffrey Markham has a foil in the character of the Reverend Latimer Legge, a parish clergyman of self-seeking and unscrupulous tendencies, while a stolen will and a wicked butler lend useful aid to the construction of a plot. By the help of her butler, Mrs. Markham, Geoffrey's mother, effects concealment of the will, in order to secure to her son the enjoyment of a large property, to the exclusion of his cousin's widow, the rightful heir. Black-mailing naturally follows, and the will, as in duty bound, turns up towards the end of the book. From this it will be seen that the main outlines of the story are anything but original. Still, the details are well filled in, and the result is a very readable production.

Mr. Hocking's name of itself guarantees the character of his book: it is sure to be healthy and pleasant writing. A Son of Reuben contains, as the title suggests, the story of a man resembling the patriarch of old, who, though his father's firstborn, his might, and the beginning of his strength, was yet "unstable as water." George Lister, son of a Lancashire mill-owner, is a young man of artistic temperament with a soul above cotton and yarns. Idle and selfish in disposition, and faithless in love, his downward course is assured from the first, without a single redeeming point except his affection for the child his wife has borne him, a woman more selfish and frivolous, if possible, than he is himself. This is not one of Mr. Hocking's best books; but it is a sensible, well-written moral story, and worthy of a place among Christmas gift-books. There are several good illustrations.

The Beechcourt Mystery is a novel in three parts, the scene of the first being laid in France, and that of the other two in England. The French episode is introductory, and serves to account for the appearance on English soil of one Martin Rapau and his pretended daughter Mathilde, who are installed as lodgekeepers at Beechcourt Park by Lord Strogan, the owner, who has been attracted by the beauty of the French girl. The author of this book follows the usual tactics of the purely sensational novelist. Intrigue, robbery, and murder plentifully besprinkle the pages of his work. The incidents for the most part take place somewhere about midnight, and whole histories of mysterious crime are overheard at the right moment by persons conveniently hiding behind a tree or near an open doorway. It is without doubt a thrilling and blood-curdling narrative, and fulfils its purpose with complete success.

Suspected is also the story of a tragedy, but it is written in a totally different style. Here a woman is found stabbed to the heart, and a man, formerly her betrothed lover, is accused of the murder, convicted upon circumstantial evidence, and executed. These events take up half the book; the remainder is occupied with a narrative of discoveries which seem to implicate two or three different persons in the murder, until a confession at the end clears up the mystery. The writer displays some ingenuity in fabricating the incidents which throw suspicion upon totally separate parties, and also in concealing all clue to the real explanation; but his narrative wants lightness of touch and is made rather needlessly long.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

SOME BOOKS ON FOLK-LORE.

Folk-Tales of Angola. Fifty Tales, with Ki-mbundu Text, Literal English Translation, Introduction, and Notes. Collected and edited by Heli Chatelain. (Boston, U.S.A.: American Folk-Lore Society.) The society makes an appropriate start with its special memoirs. For the stock of beast-fables and other apparatus of folk-lore which the slave-owners imported with their human cargoes has flourished on American soil, and dominated the folk-lore both of the Red Indian and of the European settler. In his capacity as linguist to missionary and trading expeditions, Mr. Chatelain mastered the language of the Loanda natives sufficiently to enable him to collect their folk-tales, proverbs, riddles, and songs, gathering a wealth of material from a field hitherto little-worked. The selections are prefaced by brief but informing chapters on the physical features of the Portuguese province of Angola, on the various subdued or semi-independent tribes scattered between Zambesia and the Congo State, whose social arrangements preserve relics of barbarism like the matriarchate, "as fatherhood is never absolutely certain," and among whom slavery flourishes, not only as the usual result of war, but because debtors and criminals are saleable property and "the uncle has the right to dispose of his nephews and nieces as merchandise." The Angolans are "superstitious deists"; but the great God is a roi fainéant, the ma-bamba, or godlings, whose several functions are as numerous as those of the dii minores of the ancients, being the sole objects of sacrifices and presents. Mr. Chatelain passes in rapid review the several collections of African folk-tales, deducing from comparisons of them with those published by him, and usefully annotated, that the several groups are related to a common stock. As might be expected, the beast-fable is the persistent type: not that type peculiar to India, in which animals act as men in the form of animals, and which Benfey explains as due to the Oriental belief in metempsychosis, but the genuine barbaric type, in which the beast-world is organised like the world of men. For to the savage the affinity between man and beast is complete; as a legend of the Micmacs says: "In the beginning of things men were as animals, and animals as men," in which, by the way, lurk the germs of the theory of common descent. Separating the few tales in Mr. Chatelain's collection bearing traces of foreign influence from those that are unadulterated, we have materials which take equal rank with the South African collections of Dr. Bleek and Bishop Callaway.

The Legend of Perseus. A Study of Tradition in Story, Custom, and Belief. Vol. I. "The Supernatural Birth." By E. S. Hartland. (David Nutt.) The extension of the comparative method to the materials of folk-lore is receiving rapid illustration, notably since the publication of Mr. Frazer's Golden Bough. But his application of that method was largely inferential, whereas Mr. Hartland, striking a clear note in his preface, leaves us in no doubt as to the significance of the conclusions to which his "study" brings us. Mr. Frazer invites us in the closing sentence of his book to listen to the bells of Rome ringing the Angelus as we linger at eventide in the once sacred grove of Nemi, where the incarnate tree-god was slain; but only "he who hath ears to hear" will interpret the vague hint. Mr. Hartland, more boldly, makes the birth of Perseus from the fecundation of Danaë by Zeus in the form of a shower of gold, the text of discourse on legends of supernatural conceptions all the world over. Ideas, universal in their range and fully developed in barbaric culture, have persisted through every stage of advance, and, finally, become "embodied in the faith and symbolism of the loftiest and most spiritual of the great religions of the world—the religion of civilised Europe. The figure of Perseus, the god-begotten, the dragon-slayer, very early became a type of the Saviour of the world." Mr. Hartland gathers his analogous examples from various and scattered sources—classical stories, Märchen, Sagas, customs, and popular superstitions; and the result of comparing these is to show that, however varied the form, the substance is identical. It rests on the foundation-belief that he who works wonders must himself be wonderful, and have come into the world in no ordinary way: born, as it may be said, not of flesh and blood. The theory of virtue inhering in all things is called in to explain the modus operandi. Hence the legends of the impregnation of virgins by swallowing seeds or eggs, by smelling flowers, by the aid of birds, by wind or water, by sun-rays, or by some mysterious visitation of the gods; and thus is produced the raw material out of which the creeds of civilised faiths have woven their dogmas of incarnation. This explanation not only throws light on the origin of the dogmas, but acts as a solvent under which their disappearance is inevitable. Mr. Hartland may here and there have strained his variants to bear an interpretation which rather confuses than clears the main issue; but even where there may be dissent from some of his conclusions, there will be agreement as to the skill with which he has disentangled a mass of valuable material and produced it in lively form. We shall await with interest the publication of the succeeding volumes.

A Dictionary of British Folk-lore. Part I. Traditional Games of England, Scotland, and Ireland; with Tunes, Singing-Rhymes, and Methods of Playing. Collected and edited by Alice B. Gomme. Vol. I. Accrington—Nuts in May. (David Nutt.) Children's Playing Games. (Same author and publisher.) That modern improvement on the old school of antiquity, named the folk-lore, is ever on the search for survivals of custom and belief in hitherto neglected materials. Indeed, the materials interest him only so far as they are the amber which has preserved the fly. Not only folk and fairy-tale and nursery rhyme, but games and toys, yield their relics under his analysis. For the serious pursuits of manhood are mimicked in the pastimes of childhood. The dances and the romps, the tin soldiers and trumpets, the dolls and other apparatus of the play-room, are the offspring of a remote antiquity. "Hot Cocks" is depicted in Egyptian wall-paintings, and the wooden toy-bird with wheels under the wings found in the Fayum cemetery is identical with one devised for Yakut and Ainu children. In this first instalment of a Dictionary of British Folk-lore, projected by Mr. G. L. Gomme, traditional games are dealt with. Excluding invented games of skill, Mrs. Gomme has collected about 450 games, played alike by children and adults, or which represent the serious occupations of manhood, many of the specimens being, as Mrs. Gomme remarks, "unconscious folk-dramas of events and customs which were, at one time, being enacted as a part of the serious concerns of life before the eyes of children many generations ago." The mode of playing each game is fully described, and, where needful, illustrated, the tunes being added to the singing-games. Where the significance of the words or movements points to some custom, the possible connexion is indicated; and here Mrs. Gomme walks warily. There are the marriage games, as in "Round the Mulberry Tree," where the players probably represent the dance round a sacred bush; the funeral games of the "Green Gravel" and "Jenny Jones" type; the personification of hunted or sacrificed animals; the imitation of battles and military manoeuvres; of chase after prisoners; the relics of divination in forfeits, and so forth. "Cats' Cradle" is one of a type of string-puzzles or guessing games of world-wide distribution. Mrs. Gomme reserves the story of the origin and development of the games, and the comparison of those collected by her with "the games of children of foreign countries," for treatment in the second and concluding volume. Thus far she has discharged a pleasant task with tact and ability. The smaller volume comprises a selection of eight singing games for the nursery and schoolroom, with appropriate decorative illustrations by Miss Winifred Smith. It would make an excellent Christmas gift-book for young people.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have decided to issue a series of "European Statesmen," similar in form, size, and scope to the "Twelve English Statesmen." The new series will be edited by Prof. J. B. Bury. The following volumes are now in hand: Charles the Great, by Mr. Thomas Hodgkin; William the Silent, by Mr. Frederic Harrison; Richelieu, by Prof. R. Lodge; Mazarin, by Mr. A. Hassall; Maria Theresa, by Dr. J. Franck Bright. There will also be volumes on Ferdinand the Catholic, Charles V., Peter the Great, Frederick the Great, Catharine II., Napoleon, Cavour, and others.

MR. STUART J. REID's memoir of Lord John Russell, being the ninth volume of "The Queen's Prime Ministers" series, will be published by Messrs. Sampson Low early in December. It will have for frontispiece a photogravure of a crayon portrait by G. F. Watts.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce yet another volume of reminiscences by A. K. H. B., to be entitled St. Andrews and Elsewhere: Glimpses of Some Gone and Things Left.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co. have in the press The Travels of the Cesarewitch in the East, illustrated with 500 photogravure plates and wood engravings from sketches made for this work by the artist who accompanied the party. The first volume is expected to be ready in January next.

A WORK entitled The Story of the Expansion of South Africa, written by the Hon. A. Wilmot, a member of the Cape Legislature and a friend of Mr. Rhodes, will be issued next week by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. A large special edition has been taken by Messrs. Juta & Co., of Cape Town.

A LIFE of the Right Rev. J. S. Hill, first Bishop of Western Equatorial Africa, who died about a year ago at Lagos, has been written by Miss R. E. Faulkner, and will be published early in December by Mr. H. N. Allenson. All profits from the sale of the book are to be given to the Niger Mission.

UNDER the title of Corrected Impressions, Mr. George Saintsbury will shortly publish, with Mr. Heinemann, a volume of collected essays on the principal writers of the Victorian age, both dead and living, in which he arrives, in some cases, at rather startling conclusions.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will issue next week the second volume of The Best Plays of Ben Jonson, of which the first volume, under Prof. Herford's editorship, has already appeared in the "Mermaid Series," of which the present volume forms the last number. The plays now given are literal reproductions of the old text of "Bartholomew Fair," "Cynthia's Revels," and "Sejanus."

MR. ALFRED H. MILES has edited a new "Elocutionist," which will comprise one or two novel features. Dr. Lennox Browne contributes to it a popular treatise on the anatomy, physiology, and hygiene of the vocal organs; Mr. Clifford Harrison a chapter on the art of introducing musical accompaniments into elocutionary recitals; while Mr. Miles himself supplies a chapter on elocution and public speaking generally. The selections, of which there are about five hundred, cover the whole range of poetry and a considerable field of prose. Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are to publish the volume immediately.

THE Clarendon Press will issue immediately the twelfth volume of Prof. Buchheim's "German Classics," consisting of an annotated edition of the first four books of Goethe's Dichtung und Wahrheit. The volume will have an introduction, giving, besides a brief history of the compositions and a general outline of the contents of the whole Autobiography, a short account of Goethe's genealogy.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press Britain's Naval Power, being a short history of the growth of the British navy from the earliest times to Trafalgar, written by Mr. Hamilton Williams, instructor in English literature on board H.M.S. Britannia.

A VOLUME of short stories, by Mr. H. D. Lowry, entitled Women's Tragedies, will shortly appear in Mr. John Lane's "Keynotes" series.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish during this month Alleyne: a Story of a Dream and a Failure, by a new writer, Mr. E. T. Papillon. The motif of the story is the contact of the spiritual nature with the purely material. The scene is laid in South-east Devon, in the valley of the River Otter.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will also shortly issue a novelette, entitled A Fancy Sketch, the story of a platonic friendship between a young artist and a woman of shop.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG, & Co. will publish this week, in one volume, Florence Marryat's new novel, entitled The Beautiful Soul.

THE "Stories from the Diary of a Doctor," by L. T. Meade and Clifford Halifax, M.D., which appeared in the Strand Magazine, will be issued in volume form by Messrs. George Newnes & Co.

The Experiences of an Anglican Sister of Mercy is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE & Co. have nearly ready for publication a volume of poems by Mr. Frank L. Stanton, entitled Songs of the Soil.

AN exhibition of Puritan and Presbyterian literature will be on view during next week at the English Presbyterian Theological College, Guilford-street. It covers a period of almost two centuries, from Tyndale's Practice of Prelates (1530) to Bennet's Irenicum (1722), and is as fairly representative of English Presbyterian history and controversies during that period as a collection not exceeding 160 volumes can be made. The catalogue will contain a brief descriptive note to each volume, and may be looked upon as a guide to the main outlines of this region of literature.

THE first meeting of the session of the Royal Statistical Society will be held on Tuesday, November 20, in the Lecture Theatre of the Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn-street, at 4.45 p.m., when the president, Lord Farrer, will deliver his inaugural address on "The Relations between Morals, Economics, and Statistics."

THE first ordinary meeting of the one hundred and forty-first session of the Society of Arts will be held in John-street, Adelphi, on Wednesday next, at 8 p.m., when Major-General Sir John Donnelly, chairman of council, will deliver the opening address.

A MEETING of the English Goethe Society will be held in the rooms of the Royal Society of British Artists, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall, on Friday next, at 8 p.m., when Mr. W. F. Kirby will read a paper on "Goethe as Faust."

THE name of the translator of Errera's The Russian Jews, noticed in last week's ACADEMY, is Bella Löwy.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE December number of Scribner's Magazine will, as usual, be a Christmas number, with a cover specially designed and several extra illustrations. Mr. Rudyard Kipling contributes a poem entitled "McAndrew's Hymn," the speaker being the Scotch engineer of an ocean passenger steamer; Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse gives an account of the life-work of G. F. Watts, illustrated by no less than twenty-one reproductions of his pictures; while there will also be included the last of the late Mr. Hamerton's series of papers on contemporary French painters, dealing with Emile Friant.

"GOOD Cheer," the Christmas number of Good Words, will this year consist of nine stories, with twenty illustrations. Among the contents we may specially mention: "The Minister's Dog," by Maarten Maartens; "The Interregnum in Fairy Land," by Mr. John Davidson; "An Emigrant," by Mrs. Hinkson (Katharine Tynan); "How he came out on the other side," by Mr. William Canton; and "Robin Goodfellow," by Mr. John Reid.

MRS. AMELIA E. BARR has written for the Century Magazine a story dealing with religious sentiment, entitled "From the Lowest Hell." The scene is laid in the neighbourhood of Skye, and the publishers are sending an artist to that region to make illustrations.

WITH the part to be issued on November 26, Cassell's Magazine enters upon its twenty-first year of publication; and henceforth the price will be sixpence per month instead of sevenpence as heretofore. Among the contributions to appear in the December part are: a serial story, by L. T. Meade, entitled "The Voice of the Charmer"; short stories by J. M. Barrie and Anthony Hope; "The Cabinet and Its Secrets," by Sir Wemyss Reid; and an illustrated article on the hats and bonnets worn by the Princess of Wales.

THE joint Christmas number of The Young Man and The Young Woman will contain a story by Mr. Conan Doyle, entitled "A Foreign Office Romance"; also stories by Annie S. Swan, Jane Barlow, and Gilbert Parker; an illustrated article on "Our First Winter in Canada," by the Countess of Aberdeen; reminiscences of Charles Dickens, by his eldest daughter; and a poem for the season by Mr. Norman Gale.

THE opening article in the yearly supplement to the Liberty Review, to be published on November 26, will be on "The Revolt of Labour," by Mr. Frederick Greenwood. Old age pensions will be discussed, Mr. Thomas Mackay criticising Mr. Chamberlain's proposals, and Lord Stanley of Alderley offering an alternative scheme. Mr. George Livesey will answer the question, "Should the London Gas Supply be Municipalised?" Canon Hayman will put forward "A Plea for Free Labour"; a chairman of brewster sessions will have something to say about "Magistrates and the Liquor Traffic"; and a railway goods agent will deal with "The Railway Rates Fiasco" as an object-lesson in state interference.

THE Westminster Budget for this week will contain an illustrated article on the St. Deiniol's Theological and General Library and Hostel for Students, which Mr. Gladstone has founded at Hawarden.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday the following decrees will be proposed: (1) That the University of Allahabad be admitted to the privileges of a colonial university; (2) that thanks be given for the gift to the university of a selection of clocks, miniatures, and bronzes from the Hawkins collection; (3) that Prof. A. A. Macdonell and Mr. Arthur Sidgwick be added to the board of studies for the new honour school of English.

ON the same day, in Congregation, a statute will be promulgated, remodelling the honour school of Oriental studies. It is proposed to abolish the division into Indian and Semitic; and to require that every candidate shall be required to offer either Sanskrit, or Arabic, or Hebrew (together with the corresponding history), and also one additional language and one special subject, to be prescribed in regulations.

BISHOP BARRY, the Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge for this year, announces that he has chosen for his subject "The Ecclesiastical Expansion of England," to be treated on the same lines as Sir John Seeley treated the national expansion. He will deal separately with the colonies proper, India, and the native races of Polynesia and Africa. The first lecture of the course is to be delivered next Sunday.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER, Slade professor of fine art at Oxford, announces a course of six lectures, to be delivered in the studio of the University Galleries, on "A New Phase of Water-Colour Painting," with demonstrations.

THE Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright, Grinfield Lecturer on the Septuagint at Oxford, delivered his terminal lecture on Wednesday of this week, the subject being "Daniel xi.: The Period between Antiochus the Great and Antiochus Epiphanes."

DR. J. LORRAIN SMITH has been appointed demonstrator in pathology at Cambridge, in succession to Mr. Louis Cobbett; while the latter has been elected to the John Lucas Walker studentship in pathology held by the former.

THE following have been elected to honorary fellowships at Corpus Christi College, Oxford: Mr. Philip L. Slater, secretary to the Zoological Society; Mr. Frederick W. Walker, high master of St. Paul's School; the Rev. Edward L. Hicks, canon residentiary of Manchester; and Mr. Robert Bridges. All these are members of the college; the first three were formerly fellows.

At a meeting of the Oxford Architectural and Historical Society, to be held on Tuesday next, Mr. Falconer Madan will read a paper on "The History of the Ashmolean Museum and the Tradescant and Ashmole Collections," illustrated with some engravings of the old buildings.

THE second and concluding volume of the Rev. R. B. Gardiner's Registers of Wadham College is now nearly ready for issue to subscribers. Vol. i., which appeared about five years ago, covered the period from the foundation of the college in 1613 to 1719. The present volume carries the work on to 1871, where the editor proposes to stop. It contains about 2300 names of foundationers and commoners, arranged according to the chronological order of admission, together with an alphabetical index. Wherever it has been possible to trace a man's subsequent career, a full record is appended to his name; and for this purpose County Histories and other genealogical works have been thoroughly searched, while in many cases living members of the college have supplied the editor with information.

THE Rev. W. Dunn Macray will publish immediately, through Henry Frowde, the first volume of a new Register of Magdalen College, Oxford, containing the fellows down to 1520.

PROF. ARCHIBALD R. S. KENNEDY, of Aberdeen, has been elected to the chair of Hebrew and Oriental languages at Edinburgh, vacant by the death of Prof. Dobie.

THE chair of Arabic and Persian at University College, London, is vacated this term by Dr. Rieu's election at Cambridge. No endowment is attached to the chair, nor has it yet been decided whether in future the two languages should be taught by the same person.

WE observe that three more natives of India have to be added to the matriculations—two at Oxford and one at Cambridge—all of them, from their names, apparently from Bengal.

THE inaugural lecture which Prof. Prothero delivered at Edinburgh on October 16, on taking possession of the new chair of history in that university, has been published as a pamphlet (Edinburgh: Thin; Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co.). The title is Why should we learn History? and the answer to the question is substantially conveyed in a quotation from Mr. Lecky: "He who has learnt to understand the true character and tendencies of many succeeding ages is not likely to go very far wrong in estimating his own."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

LOVE IN AUTUMN.

It is already autumn, and not in my heart only,
The leaves are on the ground,
Green leaves untimely browned,
The leaves bereft of summer, my heart of Love left lonely.

Swift, in the masque of seasons, the moment of each mummer,
And even so fugitive
Love's hour, Love's hour to live:
Yet, leaves, ye have had your rapture, and thou,
poor heart, thy summer!

ARTHUR SYMONS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Antiquary for November Mr. A. M. Bell continues his account of palaeolithic remains found at Wolvercote, Oxfordshire. Regarding the objects found, there is little new to communicate; but the writer's speculations—or, as we perhaps should say, discoveries—regarding the formation of certain upper strata are very interesting. "English Glass-making in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries" is the first part of a paper which promises to be of considerable value. The section before us relates to window-glass only. Mr. Roach de Shonix gives a good account of the Leicester Museum. Some of the objects contained therein are of no little interest: notably so a fragment of Samian ware inscribed as a love-token from the gladiator Lucius to his sweetheart Verecunda Lydia. Among objects of a later date is a shield-shaped weight, probably of the fifteenth century, on which are represented the royal arms, France and England quarterly. A Georgian weight of similar shape is also preserved there. It, too, bears the royal arms, but accompanied by the lion and the unicorn. It may not be out of place to remark that about a quarter of a century ago a series of eighteenth century weights (three, if we remember aright) were exposed for sale in the shop of a dealer in curiosities at Lincoln. They were said to have been once the standard weights of the city. The information contained in Mr. Hartshorne's paper on the "Man in the Iron Mask" will be new to many. The subject has never seemed to us of much importance, but there are to whom it is of deathless interest.

"THE RAIDERS": A NOTE.

IN a letter addressed to the ACADEMY Mr. S. R. Crockett refers to the assistance he has derived from "literary and traditional sources of information—chapbooks, sermons, magazines." There are few writers of reputation who, in the crucible of their imagination, have not turned base metal of this kind into the purest gold. By such transmutation sprang into existence Shakspeare's finest work. To Scott, as a literary alchemist, nothing came amiss.

The present generation of writers are finding that their predecessors have used up much, if not the best, of this raw material. And now, as the question of commercial competition in literature more and more presses, a writer becomes less and less anxious to indicate the sources of his inspiration. He wants to keep the field to himself; and, in the event of his having "pegged out" a particularly rich claim, he tacitly appropriates the resultant treasures of episode and fancy as the products of his own brain.

I wish to make clear that it is no part of my present purpose to pronounce how far such assumption of inventive genius on the part of a novelist is justifiable. But if we are forced to pry into the workshop of every latter-day novelist and analyse for ourselves the extent and value of his materials, we may have to revise our judgment in the case of several.

Take Mr. Crockett. Till The Raiders was published, we had no work of considerable value from his pen. His Scots dialect, his pawky humour, his grip of Lowland characteristics, struck me at once as delightful. But their vehicle took the shape of mere sketches, in which constructive skill was neither displayed nor required. With The Raiders Mr. Crockett challenged comparison with R. L. Stevenson. The book was a great success. The critics forthwith admitted him to the higher rank of novelists, on account of the constructive and inventive genius of which The Raiders apparently gave evidence. On reading the book I clinched that opinion in my own mind by admiration of the two most striking episodes—the episodes on which Mr. Crockett's claim as an artist might fairly hitherto be rested. I refer to Yawkins's escape from a king's ship, and the hero's adventures in the hut near the Murder Hole.

I have before me a book with the following title:—"Historical and Traditional Tales in Prose and Verse, connected with the South of Scotland, Original and Select. Kirkcudbright: Printed and Published by John Nicholson, 1843." One of these tales is "The Smugglers," by Samuel Wilson; another is "The Murder Hole," given as anonymous. It is not too much to say that The Raiders owes the best part of its corporate existence to these two tales.

I may say: first, Mr. Crockett makes no acknowledgment in his book; second, the details, the slightest details, are practically annexed from the older tales; third, and most serious offence, he utilises the phraseology.

"THE RAIDERS."—
Cap. ix.

"Here she comes. By the weathercock of Krabbendyk, 'tis the Seahorse, boys—a sloop of war of eighteen guns. See the jack at her mizzen. Mark their sky-scrapers."

Cap. x.

"He [Captain Yawkins] would have stuck a knife in you as quick as get married on shore—and they say he was married as many as sixty-seven times, the old Mahometan!"

"And it was bonny to see the boarding nets triced up and the pikes ready, the pistols all primed and the matches burning, ilka yin stuck

"THE SMUGGLERS."
Cap. ix.

"She's a sloop of war by G—, with her sky-scrapers and royal studding sails, flying jib and spritsail—top-sail, with the Union Jack at her mizzen peak."

"Cast off breechings and muzzle-lashings, overhaul the gun-tackles, prime your guns fore and aft, and get your matches lighted—trice up the boarding nettings and see your pikes and pistols ready—the first man aboard that offers to flinch his quarters shall have my cutlass in his guts, by G—." Besides a

"THE RAIDERS."
Cap. x.

in a linstock on the deck.

"The gunners were dumping round shot on the boards, and the grape and cannister were coming up from below."

"Down dropped the peak, round went the spars, the yards were braced, and away we swung."

"With that he leaped down, and snatching off his wig and broad, flapping hat, he crammed them into the right-hand Long Tom, and with his own hand shot them aboard the king's man."

Cap. xix.

"Where'er we see a bonny lass, we'll ca' as we gae by; Where'er we meet wi' liquor guid, we'll drink an we be dry. There's brandy at the Abbeyburn, there's rum at Heston Bay, And we will go a-smuggling afore the break o' day."

Other close parallels might be quoted. In addition, of course, "The Smugglers" supplies the strong vivacious outline of the whole Yawkins episode, as reproduced by Mr. Crockett.

Considerations of space prevent my dealing at any length with the anonymous tale, "The Murder Hole." Mr. Crockett here uses the material, but little of the phraseology. Its story is shortly this. A moor between Ayrshire and Galloway had become notorious owing to the disappearance of travellers. A pedlar-boy, crossing the moor one tempestuous night, seeks refuge at a cottage. He looks through the window, sees an old woman scrubbing the floor and strewing it with sand, and her two sons hastily thrusting some heavy body into a chest. He is seized, and, after retiring to bed, hears the murderous crew discuss his passage to the next world. He escapes, though he has not gone far before a hoarse voice exclaims: "The boy has fled! Let loose the bloodhound!" Eventually he baffles his pursuers, though he has fallen and hurt himself severely on a heap of stones.

Readers of The Raiders will be at no loss to gather from the above brief analysis the origin of an extremely clever and racy portion of Mr. Crockett's volume.

Wilfully or not, Mr. Crockett, by his reticence, suggests the impression that The Raiders is, in every respect, his own. So far as the popularity of his work is concerned, he would not have suffered by indicating his indebtedness. Literary reputation is not a thing to be played with.

"THE SMUGGLERS."

goodly tier of twelve-pounders on each side, the brig mounted two long eighteen-pounder stern-chasers, which Captain Yakens usually called his long Toms, and of which he was not a little vain. These he ordered to be double-shotted with round and cannister, and beside each he stuck in the deck a linstock, with a match ready lighted."

"'Helm a-weather,' cried Yakens, 'drop the peak—square the mainyard—let go the headbolines—brace about the headyards.'"

"Old Yakens on the quarter-deck, betwixt his two stern-chasers, plucked from his bald scalp the hat and wig, and tossing them on the cruiser's deck, 'Take these,' cried he, 'you lubberly dogs, for wadding to your guns.'"

"Where'er we see a bonny lass, we'll ca' as we gae by, Where'er we meet wi' liquor guid, we'll drink an we be dry. There's brandy at the Abbeyburn, there's rum at Heston Bay, An' we will go a-smuggling afore the break of day."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BONNETAIN, Mme. Paul. Une Française au Soudan. Paris: May & Motteux. 3 fr. 50 c.
FINLAND im 19. Jahrh. in Wort u. Bild dargestellt v. finländ. Schriftstellern u. Künstlern. Leipzig: Koshler. 88 M.
FRANCE, Anatole. Le Jardin d'Épiqueure: recueil de pensées. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 8 fr. 50 c.
GILLE, Ph. Causes sur l'art et les artistes. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 8 fr. 50 c.
KYU, Th. Cornelia. Nach dem Drucke vom J. 1594 hreg. v. H. Garsner. München: Ackermann: 2 M.
LAGARDE, A. de. Paul de Lagarde. Erinnerungen aus seinem Leben. Göttingen: Dieterich. 2 M.
LOOTENS, L. La Théorie musicale du chant grégorien. Paris: Thorin. 15 fr.
SÉAILLES, Gabriel. Ernest Renan: Essai de biographie psychologique. Paris: Didier. 8 fr. 50 c.
VALORI, Prince de. Verdi et son Œuvre. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 8 fr. 50 c.
WESTLANDER, A. Russland vor e. Regime-Wechsel. Politische u. wirtschaftliche Zustände im heut. Russland. Stuttgart: Malcomes. 1 M. 80 Pf.
WOLFF, E. Goethes Leben u. Werke. Mit besond. Rücksicht auf Goethes Bedeutg. f. die Gegenwart. Kiel: Lipsius. 6 M.

THEOLOGY.

- CLENET, C. Die Einheitlichkeit der paulinischen Briefe geprüft. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 4 M. 80 Pf.

HISTORY.

- BELHOMME, le Lieut.-Col. Histoire de l'Infanterie en France. T. 1 et 2. Paris: Charles-Lavauzelle. 10 fr.
BEANULLI, J. J. Römische Ikonographie. 2. Th. Die Bildnisse der röm. Kaiser u. ihrer Angehörigen. III. Von Pertinax bis Theodosius. Stuttgart: Union. 21 M.
BISMARCK'S, Fürst, Ansprach, 1848-1894. Hreg. v. H. v. Poschinger. Stuttgart: Deutsche Verlag-Anstalt. 7 M.
DIERCKX, G. Geschichte Spaniens von den frühesten Zeiten bis auf die Gegenwart. 1. Bd. Berlin: Cronbach. 7 M. 50 Pf.
LUDWIG, Th. Die Konstanz Geschichte-schreibung bis zum 15. Jahrh. Strassburg: Trübner. 8 M.
MAASS, O. Kleitarch u. Diodor. Eine Quellenuntersuchg. I. St. Petersburg: Schmitzdorff. 1 M. 50 Pf.
PETERSDORFF, H. v. General Johann Adolph Frhr. v. Thielmann, e. Charakterbild aus der Napoleon. Zeit. Leipzig: Hirtzel. 8 M.
PHILIPPSON, M. E. Ministerium unter Philipp II. Kardinal Granvella am span. Hofe. (1579-1588.) Berlin: Cronbach. 12 M.
WOLF, Th. Johannes Honterus, der Apostel Ungarns. Kronstadt: Zeidner. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- BASTIAN, A. Zur Mythologie u. Psychologie der Nigritier in Guinea m. Bezugnahme auf sozialistische Elementargedanken. Berlin: Reimer. 4 M.
FREUS, Th. Die Begriffsarten der Amerikaner u. Nordasiaten. Königsberg-i.-Pr.: Braun. 4 M.
ZIMMERMANN, A. Das Mikroskop. Wien: Denticke. 9 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- DARMESTETER, James. Essais orientaux. Paris: Lib. Centrale des Beaux-Arts. 8 fr.
TACITE, Nouvelles considérations au sujet des Annales et des Histories de. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
USKUNDE, ägyptische, aus den k. k. Museen zu Berlin. 2. Bd. 2. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NEWLY FOUND SINAITIC CODEX OF THE GOSPELS.

Oxford: Nov. 12, 1894.

MAY I attempt in your columns a solution of the enigma which the new Syriac Codex of Mount Sinai, in its version of the first chapter of Matthew, has flung down before the learned world. First let me give the new text as Mr. Burkitt translates it in last week's Guardian, giving only the verses which in the new Codex assume a new form:—

"Matthew i. 16.—Jacob begat Joseph; Joseph, to whom was betrothed Mary the Virgin, begat Jesus, who is called Christ.

"V. 18.—Now the birth of Christ was on this wise: when Mary his mother had been betrothed to Joseph, when they were not coming near one to the other, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

"V. 19.—Now Joseph her husband, because he was just, did not wish to expose Mary, and thought of quietly divorcing her.

"V. 20.—Joseph, son of David, do not fear to take Mary thy wife, for that which is to be born of her is from the Holy Spirit.

"V. 21.—For she shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins.

"V. 24.—Now when Joseph arose from his sleep he did as the angel of the Lord commanded him.

"V. 25.—And he married his wife, and she bear him a son, and he called his name Jesus."

Here we have a naturalistic account of the birth of Jesus in vv. 16, 21, 25, juxtaposed with the usual miraculous account in the rest of the verses—18-23. Which is the more primitive account, the naturalistic or the miraculous? In other words, have we here an originally unorthodox text in process of becoming orthodox, or an originally orthodox text in process of being made heretical? And here I use the terms orthodox and heretical in the conventional sense. An answer to these questions will explain how the two rival and incompatible accounts came to jostle each other in the same context. Let us first consider the hypothesis that an originally orthodox text is here in process of being hereticised.

Against such a view it may be urged:—

1. That the genealogy finds its only logical and possible conclusion in the new form of v. 16. This all parties will admit. But this is to admit that the genealogy was originally devised on heretical lines, and destined to prove that Jesus was the natural son of Joseph.

2. That the genealogy so devised cannot be detached from the text as a later addition. For it is in a way presupposed by the account of the birth which follows it in vv. 18 foll. The very language shows this, for v. 1 begins, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ," and v. 18, "Now the generation of Jesus Christ was on this wise." Thus v. 18 harps back to v. 1.

3. That the new features of the text in vv. 16, 21, 25 are not idiosyncracies of the new Syriac text, but were once part of a widely diffused and established text. For, as Mr. Burkitt points out, the words of the current text of v. 25, "and he knew her not until," are omitted in the best representative of the ancient African Latin Version.

4. A heretic anxious to produce a naturalistic text would not have been content with such slight changes of the new text, but would have made a clean sweep at least of v. 19.

These reasons oblige us to reject this first hypothesis. But the rival hypothesis on which we are thrown back is not simple.

For (1) what orthodox person trying to make the text orthodox would have left in vv. 16, 21, and 25? It is a sufficient answer to this objection to say that most orthodox copyists would not; and the fact that this is the only codex in which v. 16 is found, in what must yet have been its original form, proves that they did not so leave it. In the new codex the primitive text of v. 16 is still respected, as it was not by the writers of any of our other ancient codices. (2) If a naturalistic account of the birth stood in the earliest text, how shall we account for vv. 18-20 and vv. 22 and 23? I would suggest the following theory in explanation of the very difficult problem implied in this second objection.

The Jews in the time of Christ deemed it possible and natural for a child to be conceived of the Holy Spirit, and yet at the same time to be begotten in the ordinary way. The two processes lay in different spheres. The one gave his soul or reason, which was a gift of the Divine Spirit; the other process gave his flesh, blood, and the faculties of sense. So Philo writes:

"The sensible and individual man is a being compounded of earthy substance and of divine Spirit (σύνθετον ἐκ γῆδ' οὐρίας καὶ πνεύματος θεοῦ). His body came into being because the Artist took clay and fashioned out of it a human form (μορφὴν ἀνθρώπου). His soul arose out of nothing created whatsoever, but from the Father and Controuler of all things (τὴν δὲ ψυχὴν ἀπ' οὐδενὸς γενήσασθαι τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ ἡγεμόνος τῶν ἀπείρων)."—Philo, De Opificio Mundi, i. 32, § 46.

In the terms of such a philosophy as this, a woman might be said to conceive her child of the Holy Spirit in respect of its soul, which is an ἀπαύγασμα θεοῦ λόγου or νοῦ, a spark thrown off by the divine Reason or Word. At the same time, she would conceive it in respect of its flesh, blood, and sensuous faculty (αἰσθησις) in the natural manner through intercourse with a human husband. So it is that the angel assures Joseph that Mary has conceived the future Messiah "of the Holy Spirit," and yet in the same breath bids him take his wife to himself and procreate the Messiah in the usual way. To the mind of Philo and of his contemporaries there was nothing in such a command that was inconsistent or irreligious. And in the Liber de Cherubim of Philo (§ 13), we meet with language closely analogous to that of Matt. i. 18 foll. The writer, in an allegorising vein, compares the wives of the Patriarchs and other leaders of Israel to virtues.

"Sarah," he says, "is introduced as becoming pregnant when God visits her in her solitude (τότε κύουσιν, ὅτε δ' θεὸς αὐτὴν μοναθεῖσαν ἐπισκοπεῖ). And she brings forth not to Him who so visited her (τῷ τὴν ἐλπίσκειν πεποιμένῳ), but to him who yearned to attain to wisdom, and he is named Abraham. Yet more clearly doth he [viz., Moses] instruct us in the case of Leah, saying that God opened her womb (Gen. xxix. 31)—and to open the womb is a man's part. But she conceived and bore, not to God—for He alone is all sufficient to himself—but to Jacob, to him who had laboured willingly for the good cause, that Virtue might receive the Divine Seed from the First Cause, and bring forth to that one of her suitors who should be preferred. Again, when Isaac, the all-wise, had prayed to God, Rebecca, who is Patience, became pregnant by Him to whom the prayer was uttered (ἐκ τοῦ ἱκευθέντος ἔγκυος). And without any prayer at all or supplication, Moses having taken Sephora, who is winged and soaring virtue, finds her pregnant by nothing mortal (Σεπφώραν Μωϋσῆς λαβὼν εὐρίσκει κύουσιν ἐξ οὐδενός θνητοῦ)."

Here the phrase ἐξ οὐδενός θνητοῦ answers to the ἀπ' οὐδενός γυναικός, i.e., πνεύματος θεοῦ, "Divine Spirit," in the passage above quoted from the De Opificio Mundi. Therefore we might substitute it, and write the last sentence thus: Σεφ. Μ. λ. εἰ. κν. ἐκ πνεύματος θεοῦ. If we do so, we get almost the very words used in Matt. i. 18 of Mary: "ἐνέβη ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα ἐκ πνεύματος Ἁγίου."

Such a resemblance of phrase is hardly to be explained as a mere coincidence. We are obliged to admit that the original purport of the story was to represent Mary as owing the soul of the Messiah to the Holy Spirit, and His flesh to the natural human intercourse. The account of Matt. 18-25 must be explained by help of the Jewish theosophy current at the time.

Verses 19, 20 alone conflict with such an interpretation. The human and the divine parentage of Jesus may have lain in different planes, and so have been consistent with one another. But why, in that case, was Joseph minded to put his bride away privily? Why should the angel bid Joseph not to fear to marry his wife, unless his apprehensions had been already roused?

I cannot but think that in these verses we have the gloss of carnally minded persons, who were too dull to comprehend the purely spiritual import of the statement that Mary had conceived by the Holy Spirit, of persons who could only understand that which they could see and handle, and who thus introduced into our text a confusion of the divine Fatherhood with the human, which befits a pagan rather than a Christian standpoint.

The New Testament is full of similar confusions of spiritual processes and realities with fleshly and material ones. The "leaven of the Pharisees," the "I have bread to eat that ye know not of," will occur to everyone. The very vision of the Holy Ghost descending in bodily form as a dove is a materialising of the symbolism so common in Philo, according to which the Divine Spirit or Logos is likened to a wild dove, a symbolism which also meets us in the pages of the Jewish Talmud. The literalist interpretation of the word parthenos in the Septuagint version of Es. vii. 14 was also not without its influence in determining the growth of the text in an orthodox direction.

One word more as to the use in the new Codex, in Mat. i. 16, of the phrase, "Mary the Virgin." To me the phrase has a very primitive and almost contemporary air, when occurring in such a context. Let us suppose that Mary, after the death of Joseph, her child's natural father, became one of the "widows" of the early Christian community at Jerusalem (cp. Acts vi. 1). In such a case she would have been known to her contemporaries as "Mary the Virgin." For widows who, after their husbands' death, rejected second wedlock and lived holly had, in the earliest Church, the rank and title of "virgin." Thus Clement of Alexandria (Strom. vii. 12) speaks of the widow as having by her self-restraint regained her virginity (καθότι ἡ χήρα διὰ σωφροσύνης αὐτὴς παρθένος). So Tertullian de Exh. Cast. i.: "Secunda virginitas . . . in viduitate perseverat ex arbitrio." These are writings of the end of the second century. In writings of its commencement we have the same thing put more unequivocally—e.g., Ignatius ad Smyrnaeos xiii.: "I salute . . . the virgins who are called widows (τὰς παρθένους τὰς λεγόμενας χήρας)." Among the Alexandrine Jews the same was the case, or Philo could not have written as follows (de Cherubim i. 148):

"In contrast with ourselves, it is befitting for God to converse with a nature that is unstained, untouched, and pure—with the true virgin. For among men the intercourse for the begetting of children makes virgins into women; but whensoever God begins to consort with the soul, He turns her that was before a woman back into a virgin (πρότερον οὖσαν γυναῖκα παρθένον αὐτὴς ἀποδείκνυσιν, cp. the passage of Clemens Alex.) . . . At least He will not hold intercourse with Sarah before 'it had ceased to be with her after the manner of women,' and before she had returned into the position of a chaste virgin (ἀναδραμεῖν εἰς ἀγνευσις παρθένου τάξιν)."

We are thus able to carry back the institutions of Clement and Tertullian through Ignatius into the Hellenic Judaism of the very beginning of the Christian era. It cannot, therefore, be questioned that in the earliest community of Christians widows would be classed as virgins. What was the custom in Philo's circle, in the Church of Smyrna in A.D. 110, in the Churches of Alexandria and Carthage about A.D. 190, is certain to have been the custom in the Christian Church of A.D. 40-60. But, if so, Mary, the widow of Joseph and mother of Jesus the Messiah, would have at least possessed a title granted to the rest of the viduate order. She would have been known to her contemporaries as "Mary the Virgin"; and so the earliest text of the Gospel of Matthew seems to have called her.

FRED. C. CONYBEARE.

London: Nov. 10, 1894.

The Lewis Codex—the Old Syriac version of the Gospels—is at last in our hands: and the strange phenomena presented at the very outset, those commented on by Mr. Rendel Harris in this month's Contemporary Review, are by themselves sufficient to justify the intense interest with which the publication has been awaited. "Joseph, to whom was espoused the Virgin Mary, begat Jesus"—such is the termination of the Matthean genealogy, according to our new authority. And the miraculous begetting of Jesus is recounted with the following variation, "She shall bear thee a son . . . and she bore him a son." Jesus, son of Joseph!

Mr. Rendel Harris exclaims that some heretic has perverted the primitive orthodox text, adding that the writer manifestly contradicts himself in his representation of Christ as Joseph's son, and yet a Virgin's. Surely the latter consideration should have made Mr. Harris hesitate. It is incredible that even heretics should stultify themselves so flagrantly as this. Why not have omitted the Virgin-birth altogether? But these new readings of the Old Syriac introduce nothing fresh: they merely intensify difficulties in the received text that have always been recognised, and it is only as part of that larger question that they can be dealt with satisfactorily.

In imputing inconsistency to the hypothetical heretic, Mr. Rendel Harris follows the path pursued by that long line of commentators who separate the Matthean genealogy, David to Joseph, from the subsequent narrative of Virgin-birth; and Luke ii., where Joseph is called "parent," "father," from the Annunciation narratives that precede. But the grounds on which this separation has been made are purely subjective, and—as I pointed out eighteen months ago, à propos of certain unities of style and diction which bind the separated sections together—are not at all decisive.

"The narratives of Virgin-birth do not necessarily exclude St. Joseph altogether. It is only stated that Christ's birth was not due to any action or volition of His Mother's husband. When the rib was taken from Adam's side, Adam was unconscious" (Formation of the Gospels, 2nd edit., pp. 58, 87).

This tentative conclusion is now pressed home with irresistible cogency by the readings of the Old Syriac.

Conception, what did this word imply at the time that our protevangelists were composed? Something which, so far as we are here concerned, did not materially differ from what it implies to-day; for though the two elements necessary—that which fertilises from the one side, and on the other that which is fertilised—were not recognised in the same manner, yet the fact was fully perceived that two elements were necessary, this provided by one parent and that by the other. Physiology had already realised that, at the first moment of conception, a child is of the substance of both father and mother. How, then, did the phenomenon of a Virgin with child present itself? There were three possible explanations: (1) That the fertilising germ had been derived, though abnormally, from the Virgin's husband; (2) abnormally produced by the Virgin; (3) supplied from above. It was the first of these inferences that commended itself to the authors of Matt. i., ii., and Luke i. 5-ii.

The authors of Matt. i., ii., and Luke i. 5-ii. held that Christ was Virgin-born and also was of Joseph's seed. For even if, in defiance of the internal unities of style and diction, we violently separate those sections of Matt. i., ii., and Luke i., 5-ii., which speak of Joseph as David's heir and Christ's father, from the narratives of miraculous conception, still, even by themselves, these latter supply sufficient indication that the point of view is not different from that in the sections obelised. In Matt. i. 20, at the beginning of the Virgin-birth section, the angel addresses Joseph as "Thou son of David." Why? except on the hypothesis above suggested. And Joseph is given warrant for exercising the rights of fatherhood, and giving the Child its name. So, too, in Luke i. 27, 32, 36, the angel's promise to the Virgin that her child shall inherit the throne of His father David is prefaced with a statement that her espoused husband was of David's lineage, and closes with an intimation that the Virgin herself was of Aaron's—"Great daughter of Levi, clothed in white linen," as she is styled in the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs. The combined effect of Matt. i., ii. and Luke i. 5-ii.—discrepant in so many particulars, but co-incident in this imagined discrepancy with themselves—imperatively demands the explanation, that the authors perceived no contradiction between phenomena which so many of their commentators have set in opposition.

True, that Joseph's instrumentality is unconscious. But this was almost necessitated by the very nature of the case. And any inference, hostile to Joseph's fatherhood, from this omission is clearly negated by the fact that in Matt. i., ii. the Virgin's instrumentality is represented as unconscious too. ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα—"She was discovered to be with child"—evidently to her own surprise, as well as the surprise of those intermediaries who informed Joseph; for we must beware of so reading Matt. i., ii. as if the writer foresaw and intended us to read between his lines the matter of Luke i. 5-ii. She was surprisingly discovered to be with child; and the angel's address to Joseph reads like the first mention of an idea, novel and new, not as the confirmation of something which his espoused wife has already asseverated.

Is there anything contrary to Joseph's fatherhood in the statement that the conception in Matt. i. is derived "ἐκ πνεύματος ἁγίου," and in Luke i. is attributed to "the spirit and power of the Highest"? Again no. Whatever view, distinct or indistinct, of the personality of the Holy Spirit was entertained by the authors of the two protevangels, it is clear that the expression "Spirit" in these two passages is used in a sense quite impersonal, merely to denote divine agency. For Christ is never regarded in the New Testament as Son of the Holy Ghost, nor is the Holy Ghost ever regarded as His Father. And the only document in which such a relationship is mentioned, "The Gospel according to the Hebrews," which makes the Spirit instead of the Father address the baptised Christ as "My Son," precludes any misunderstanding under this head by subsequently making Christ refer to the Spirit as "My Mother. An exact parallel to the expression, "Conceived by the Holy Ghost," is furnished in Galatians iv. 29, where Ishmael, "born according to the flesh," is distinguished from Isaac, "born according to the Spirit," κατὰ τὸ πνεῦμα (cf. Romans i. 3, 4).

But there still remains the fact that in Luke i. 35 Christ is pointedly called God's Son. Is there anything contrary in this to the view above taken? We must examine that passage at length: "Thou shalt bring forth a Son. He shall be called Son of the Highest," so Gabriel. The Virgin accepts the announcement that her Son shall be Son of the Highest—kings are generally regarded in the Old Testament as "Sons of God, children of the Most High"—and she perceives no incompatibility in such a title with human fatherhood. Her only difficulty is occasioned by the fact that as yet she has not known man. Gabriel's second address is directed to remove this difficulty. He tells her that by a divine interposition the necessity for intercourse with man will be obviated. That which is to be born shall be born holily. And therefore—the conception being due, not to the volition of man but of God (cf. John i. 12, 13)—her child shall be, in a still higher sense than she had previously understood, God's Son.

Son of the Virgin and of Joseph—this is the view chosen by the authors of Matt. i., ii., and Luke i. 5-ii., for it was the readiest to occur and the most natural. The prophecy of Isaiah, by which they were so much influenced, does not state that a child should be born with only one parent, but that conception should take place virginitate salva. What occasion was there to go beyond the prophecy? And exact information as to the mode of fulfilment there could not have been. For supposing the narrative of the Annunciation to have been derived immediately from the Virgin herself; yet, from the character of the event, even the Virgin could have given evidence only as to the fact of a miracle having occurred, not as to its nature. But, indeed, it is more probable that the Virgin had passed away long before the first line of Matt. i., ii. and Luke i. 5-ii. was written.

But though the author of Matt. i., ii., and the author of Luke i. 5-ii. are in absolute agreement as to the physical relationship to Joseph, there is an important difference in the latter's method of dealing with the subject; a departure from Matt. i., ii., which appears to have prepared the way for that alternative view, generally prevalent from the second century until now, that Christ was of the substance of His mother alone. Mary is represented as conscious and consentient, a difference of representation which at once raises her high above the level of Joseph. This moral obscuration of Joseph by Mary was only natural under all the circumstances, for Mary had lived to occupy a position in "the Christian community which the language of the 'Magnificat' shows to have been very high, while Joseph had died before the Messianic glories began. It was very natural, and no new doctrine was designed; still, one turns from the picture painted by Luke with a clear impression only of Virgin and Child. A single stroke of the brush is needed—the provision of Davidic lineage for Mary—and the picture, though overburdened with much superfluous detail, will no longer need the figure of Joseph for its necessary completion.

The decisive touch that obliterated the notion of Joseph's fatherhood, and transformed the primitive picture of the Holy Family into that on which we look to-day, appears to have been added by the "Gospel of Peter." Justin Martyr, and Pseudo-Isaiah of the "Vision," who were both certainly acquainted with the Gospel of Peter, agree in asserting Mary's descent from David; and besides Pseudo-Isaiah's references to bloodless conception and parturition, we have also that fixed formula of Docetism, "By water only, not by blood." However it came to pass, we find by the middle of the second century the doctrine generally prevailing that Christ, as man, was of the substance of His mother alone, though witness to the old belief was still maintained by most Jewish Christians. Hegesippus accepts the Virgin-birth, and yet regards Joseph's children by a former marriage, and the children of his brothers, as veritable kinsmen of the Lord. But Jewish Christianity became extinct.

The new light of the Syriac Codex guides us back. In cave, or stable, or house, at Bethlehem or Nazareth—the outlines are dim and indistinct, for the sky is clouded; but this much, at least, we see clearly with the Shepherds: not only the Christ-child's mother, but also His father, St. Joseph.

F. P. BADHAM.

PLAGIARISM AND COVENANTING MIRACLES.

Glasgow: Nov. 12, 1894.

MR. S. R. CROCKETT, in his letter in the ACADEMY of November 10, writes: "Mr. Wallace, or some one else, has told the universe three times that I am a plagiarist." I have not told the universe three times, or even once, that Mr. Crockett is a plagiarist. The charge was made in the Glasgow Herald, but I did not make that charge. I did not make any such charge in the Literary World. I did not make any such charge in the ACADEMY. What I did was to mention the fact that such a charge had been made in Scotland, and to suggest that Mr. Crockett should deal with it. He has acted on my suggestion, and so has justified it. Whether his treatment of the accusation of plagiarism be accounted adequate by the critics who made it, or by the reading public, is no concern of mine.

If Mr. Crockett is under the impression that I have had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the bringing of an accusation of plagiarism against him, I have to assure him that he is utterly mistaken. In return for this assurance, I must ask Mr. Crockett at once to unsay these words—

"This kind of thing is always going on, and I do not think that Mr. Hardy took any further notice of his Mr. William Wallace. And in this, having said my say, I propose to follow his example."

Whatever be the "kind of thing" that is "always going on," I have neither art nor part in it. Mr. Crockett must first catch his Mr. William Wallace treating him as some one seems to have treated Mr. Hardy, before he follows that gentleman's example. He must see that, in the light of my assurance, and of my general criticism of his works, his words, written no doubt under a false impression, resolve themselves into a meaningless impertinence.

I gather from Mr. Lang's courteous letter that he can supply information calculated to prove that the Covenanters claimed the power to work miracles. I shall be delighted to see such information. Mr. Lang's authority on the field of knowledge of which Covenanting hagiology is but a corner is beyond dispute. At the same time, I hope my use of "the Covenanters" will not be misunderstood. I spoke of "the Covenanters"—the general character of my allusion to them shows this—precisely as most folk in Scotland are in the habit of speaking of "the Reformers," as representative, responsible men, fighting for what they rightly or wrongly regarded as the cause of "sacred freedom." It would be as unjust to identify "the Covenanters" with all the madness of the rabble of Cameronianism as to identify "the Reformers" with all the excesses of the Knoxite mobs. If Mr. Lang can prove that any man in the position of the Rev. Alexander Renfield in Mad Sir Uchtrid of the Hills, a trained Protestant theologian and in the possession of his wits, ever exercised the power—the eminently useful power—of converting an antagonist into a Nebuchadnezzar, or of performing an equivalent miracle, it will be my duty to cry peccavi—perhaps even to sit upon the stool of repentance in Penicuik Free Church.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY.

London: Nov. 12, 1894.

In your notice of Dr. Ward's article on "Assimilation and Association" in the current number of Mind (ACADEMY, November 3, p. 351), your reviewer congratulates him on what may "perhaps be regarded as a new departure in physiological investigations. Its significance lies in the fact that it moves away from the old-fashioned standpoint from which mind was regarded as a thing having contents to the biological standpoint from which it is seen to be a complex of functional activities."

Will you permit me to say that this was precisely my standpoint more than twenty-one years ago, in setting forth the bases of The

New Philosophy of History? For, having assimilated the conception of the atom to that of the molecule and the cell, and having defined physics as the science of the casual relations of motion in its three forms—translation (Energetics), transformation (Chemics), and assimilation (Organics)—I correlated with the science of physics thus conceived the science of metaphysics defined as the science of the causal relations of cognition in its three forms, con-sciation, ideation, and conation. See more particularly pp. 113 to 115, and p. 126.

J. S. STUART-GLENNIE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, NOV. 18, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Mountain Legends," by Mr. Clinton Dent.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Real Issue before the School Board Electors," by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.
MONDAY, NOV. 19, 5 p.m. Hellenic: "Archaeological Discoveries in Crete," by Mr. Arthur J. Evans; "The Mythology of the Bacchæ," by Mr. A. G. Bather.
5 p.m. London Institution: "Climbing in the Himalayas," by Mr. W. Martin Conway.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Grounds for Painting," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Logical Meaning of Proper Names," by Mr. E. C. Benecke.
TUESDAY, NOV. 20, 4.45 p.m. Statistical; Inaugural Address, "The Relations between Morals, Economics, and Statistics," by Lord Farrer.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Machinery of War-Ships," by Mr. Albert J. Durston.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Anatomy of Altherura africana, compared with that of other Porcupines," by Mr. F. G. Parsons; "The Significance of Diagnostic Characters in the Pleurocentridæ," by Mr. J. T. Cunningham; "A Description of the so-called Salmonoid Fishes of the English Chalk," by Mr. A. Smith Woodward.
WEDNESDAY, NOV. 21, 7.30 p.m. Meteorological: "Methods of determining the Influence of Springs on the Temperature of a River, as illustrated by the Thames and its Tributaries," by Mr. H. B. Guppy; "Some Effects of the Gale in the Highlands of Scotland on November 17 and 18, 1893," by Mr. Eris S. Bruce; "History of a Water-spout," by Mr. Alfred B. Wollaston.
8 p.m. Geological: "The Pleistocene Beds of the Maltese Islands," by Mr. John H. Cooke; "Geological Notes on a Journey in Madagascar," by the Rev. R. Baron; "A Collection of Fossils from Madagascar, collected by the Rev. R. Baron," by Mr. R. Bullen Newton.
8 p.m. Microscopical: "A Simple Method of Measuring the Refractive Indices of Media," by Mr. E. M. Nelson; Demonstration, "Staining Central Nervous System," by Dr. W. A. Turner.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Opening Address by Sir John Donnelly, Chairman of Council.
THURSDAY, NOV. 22 6 p.m. London Institution: "Extinct Monsters," by the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Pigments," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Electrical Steep-Grade Traction in Europe," by Dr. Charles S. du Riche Proulx; "Electric Tramways in the United States and Canada," by Mr. H. D. Wilkinson; "Electric Traction, with special reference to the Installation of Elevated Conductors," by Messrs. R. W. Blackwell and Philip Dawson.
FRIDAY, NOV. 23, 5 p.m. Physical: "The Measurement of Electro-magnetic Capacity," by Mr. Frederick Womach; "Mirrors of Magnetism," by Prof. S. P. Thompson and Mr. Miles Walker; "Students' Simple Apparatus," by Prof. Ayrton.
8 p.m. English Goethe Society: "Goethe as Faust," by Mr. W. F. Kirby.

SCIENCE.

Assyrisches Handwörterbuch. By Fr. Delitzsch. (Leipzig: Hinrichs.)

PROF. DELITZSCH has at last conferred a great boon on the students of the Assyrian inscriptions. Out of the abundant stores of his knowledge he has published a practical and useful Assyrian dictionary, compact, well-arranged, and excellently printed. The first part of it, as far as daleth, has appeared; the concluding portions will soon follow. The price puts it within the reach of every Assyriologist, however meagre his means may be, while the size makes it easy to handle.

For years we have been clamouring for a work of the kind; and great was the disappointment of the Assyriologist when Prof. Delitzsch published the first part of his other Assyrisches Wörterbuch seven years ago. That was neither useful nor scientific, and its form and price rendered it simply an expensive luxury.

Unlike too many scholars, Prof. Delitzsch has profited by the criticisms which were provoked by his former work, and the result is the volume that lies before us. The number of references given in it is enormous, the use of every word being copiously illustrated from the inscriptions and lexical tablets. In the quotations the words are transcribed syllabically, just as they are written in the original texts; and the employment of different type prevents any confusion in the arrangement, and makes it easy to understand the contents of each article at a glance. In fact, the book is a model of what a dictionary ought to be.

The work was sorely needed, as the multiplication of published texts, and still more of translations of them, and of studies upon particular words, has burdened the memory of the Assyriologist with a load it can no longer bear. It gives us at last a list of all the words that are found in the principal texts, as well as the materials for judging whether the renderings proposed for them are justified.

Of course, it cannot be a complete dictionary, in the sense that a Hebrew or even an Arabic lexicon can be complete. Assyriology is a progressive science, and the number of texts actually examined is but a tithe of those that exist. New words, or forms of words, are constantly being brought to light, and every student will find many in his notebook or his memory which are not recorded in the dictionary. It is on this account a pity that the publisher did not print on one side of the page only, leaving the other side blank, as in that case room would be found for the additional entries that will have to be made. Thus I fail to find ararianu, the name of a plant (K. 61, i. 33, ii. 60), ammē, which is described as made of gold (K. 48, 19), akkapatum (K. 4047, 3), and many other words which I have noted down in my readings of the inscriptions, while Mr. Strong has lately added many new and interesting words to our lists. Among these we may reckon alamgâte "images" and arrute "districts" or "villages," in the corrected copy which he has published of the inscription of Assur-bel-kala. Similarly I could wish that space had been allowed for the addition of further references to those given by Prof. Delitzsch. I have, for instance, found the word aburricanu as the equivalent of the ideographs . . . SUB-BA in R. 204, 3; and every Assyriologist, doubtless, has many which he would be glad to record.

Prof. Delitzsch's "anti-Accadian" theory has very wisely been allowed to drop into the background in his present work. We have but few roots invented to explain words which were not Semitic in their origin. Ara, "to go," is no longer included in the Semitic lexicon. Still there are certain instances in which it would have been better if the non-Semitic derivation of a term had been frankly acknowledged. I wish the Professor would devote a little study to the modern Arabic dialect of Egypt. That would show him how readily a Semitic language adopts foreign words, and how still more readily it adapts them to a Semitic form.

A. H. SAYCE.

OBITUARY.

MAHÁDEO CHIMNÁJĪ ĀPTE.

A FEW weeks ago I had the pleasure of announcing in the ACADEMY the completion of an important Sanskrit work at the press of the Ānandāśrama, Poona; and now, alas! comes the sad news of the death, on October 22, after ten days' illness, of the generous founder and supporter of the āśrama—Mr. Mahādeo Chimnāji Āpte.

My friend was well known in Western India as an able and successful lawyer; but his splendid effort to preserve the ancient writings of India, and to bring the best of them within the reach of all scholars, gained for him a world-wide reputation. I gave a short account of his labours in this direction in the ACADEMY of April 16, 1892, and they were continued up to the last. His position as a munificent supporter of Sanskrit learning was absolutely unique, for he devoted almost the whole of his fortune to that object. He not only provided the entire amount required for erecting the fine buildings composing the āśrama, but also devoted a considerable sum to its permanent endowment. Before I left India, in 1891, he told me that he intended to retire from his profession at no distant date and become a Sannyāsi; and he showed me the tomb (śamādhi) in the āśrama in which his body was eventually to be deposited. This intention had not, however, been carried out; so, a few hours before his death, the rites constituting sannyāsa were performed, and he received the new name of Ānandasarasvatī Svāmī. This enabled his relatives to bury him as he had desired, instead of cremating the body according to custom.

His nephew, Mr. Hari Nārāyaṇa Āpte, has for some time superintended the printing and publishing operations carried on in connexion with the Ānandāśrama; and he will, no doubt, continue them to the satisfaction of all. But Mahādeoārā's place is not likely to be filled up; for, as Vyāsa (Dharmaśāstra iv.) well said:

"S'ateshu jāyate śūrah, sahasreshu cha paṇḍitah, Vaktā śatasahasreehu, dātā bhavati vā na vā."

G. A. JACOB.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE president and council of the Royal Society have this year awarded the medals as follows:—The Copley Medal to Dr. Edward Frankland, for his services to theoretical and applied chemistry; the Rumford Medal to Prof. James Dewar, for his researches on the properties of matter at extremely low temperatures; the Davy Medal to Prof. Cleve, of Upsala, for his researches on the chemistry of the rare earths; and the Darwin Medal to Prof. Huxley, for his researches in comparative anatomy, and especially for his intimate association with Mr. Darwin in relation to The Origin of Species. The Royal Medals have been awarded to Prof. J. J. Thomson, in recognition of his contributions to mathematical and experimental physics, especially to electrical theory; and to Prof. Victor Horsley, for his investigations relating to the physiology of the nervous system and the thyroid gland, and to their applications to the treatment of disease.

MR. OLIVER PEMBERTON, of Birmingham, will deliver the Bradshaw Lecture at the Royal College of Surgeons on December 12, his subject being "James Syme, Regius Professor of Surgery in the University of Edinburgh, 1833 to 1869: a Study of his Influence and Authority on the Art and Science of Surgery during that Period."

THE first volume of Prof. Oliver's translation of Kerner's Pflanzenleben will be published by Messrs. Blackie & Son about the end of this month. The work has been appearing in monthly parts, under the title of "The Natural History of Plants"; and the issue of vol. i. completes the first half of the book.

AT the first ordinary meeting of the Institution of Civil Engineers, to be held at Great George-street, Westminster, on Tuesday next, Mr. Albert J. Durston, engineer-in-chief of the Navy, will read a paper on "The Machinery of War-Ships." The paper will be the subject of discussion the following week.

THE Christmas course of lectures, adapted to children, at the Royal Institution, will be delivered by Prof. J. A. Fleming; on "The Work of an Electric Current."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

NEXT to Baber's Memoirs, translated by Erskine and Leyden, the Tarikh-i-Rashidi is, in the opinion of Oriental scholars, the most comprehensive and vivid record we have of events in Central Asia in the days of Sheibani the Usbeg, and Baber the Jaghatai. Its author, Haidar Mirza, himself played a considerable part in the wars that led to the establishment, north of the Oxus, of the Usbeg supremacy, and of the power of the Great Moghul in Hindustan. Like his cousin Baber, Haidar was also a lively and intelligent writer; and his book is well worth translation. The task has been undertaken and completed by Mr. N. Elias, of the Indian Political Department, aided by Mr. E. Dennison Ross; and the English version, with notes and an introduction, is to appear shortly.

DR. G. A. KRAUSE, who has been studying the languages of Africa since 1872, and who has selected the Hausa language for his special study, has been collecting large materials, not only lists of words, but stories, sacred songs, and historical fragments, among the Hausa tribes. He has sent some of these materials to the Royal Library at Berlin, where they are open for inspection; but the bulk of his collection is still in his own hands, and will be published after his return to Europe. He considers the Hausa language as the result of a combination of two Bantu dialects welded together by people speaking a Hamitic idiom. He has discovered north of Binue a language which he considers to be purely Hamitic. To judge from articles of his published in German journals, much new light on the relationship of the African languages may be expected from his long continued labours among African tribes. He speaks the Hausa language with perfect fluency, and his services might prove useful to the Hausa Association, which was started a year or two ago in England.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO. have acquired Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co.'s interest in the stock and copyrights of works dealing with Oriental languages hitherto published by the latter firm, as represented in their "Catalogue of Oriental Books," and have secured the services as Oriental adviser of Mr. A. N. Wollaston, C.I.E., of the India Office. This part of the business will be under the management of Mr. H. M. Jones, who has been for many years connected with W. H. Allen & Co.

WE have nothing but praise for the English-Swahili Dictionary (Oxford: Clarendon Press), compiled for the use of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa by Mr. A. C. Madan, whose long residence and missionary labours among the natives has given him exceptional opportunities for thoroughly acquiring the language. His collection of Swahili folk-tales was a good preparation for the work. The volume is handy, well printed, and practical. It has been published conjointly with the Oxford Press by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, who have also issued three little companion books—Mango wa Historia: or, a Swahili Historical Reader, containing a history of mankind up to the Birth of Christ; Zamlendo wa M'Uleno wache Zinalembedwungati Zolota, the "Pilgrim's Progress" in the Manganga language, for use in the district of Lake Nyassa; and Zinyimbo: or, Hymns for Public Worship in the Kimegi dialect.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL.—(Thursday, Oct. 25.)

DR. POSTGATE, president, in the chair.—Prof. Armitage Robinson read a paper on "An Apparent Misunderstanding of Pliny's Statement (Ep. ad Traianum xvi. 6, 7) as to Meetings of the Christians." The words quod essent soliti...hætaerias esse ueteram are frequently cited by themselves as giving important evidence as to Christian practice as to the Eucharist and the Agape in 112 A.D. Of the two meetings here described "the later...was suppressed after the issue of Trajan's edict forbidding clubs" (Lightf. Ignat. et Polye. i. 52). This later meeting being the Agape, either the Eucharist had been already separated from the Agape before this time, or this edict was the actual occasion of the separation. Ramsay (Church in the Roman Empire, p. 219) further contends that the morning meeting was religious, and this Pliny "obviously accepts as strictly legal." "The Christians abandoned the illegal meeting, but continued the legal one. This fact is of the utmost consequence." The whole controversy appears to rest on a misunderstanding due to the isolation of the paragraph from its context. It occurs as the statement of certain renegades who had abandoned the Christian faith, some several years before, some even twenty years before. They were pleading that, even when they were Christians, they were innocent of all crime. The sum total of their offence, they assured him (adfirmabant autem), had been that they had been accustomed (quod essent soliti...) to attend two religious meetings on a fixed day, one a religious gathering, the other a social one: and even this (quod ipsum, referring most naturally to the whole of their practice) they had ceased to do since the edict forbidding clubs. The Christians, then, gave up nothing in consequence of the edict: the renegades gave up everything, for their plea was that they had ceased to be Christians (fuisse quidem, sed desisse). The passage remains as important as ever as a description of early Christian meetings: but it throws no light whatever, if the view here stated be accepted, on the separation of the Eucharist from the Agape.—Prof. Ridgeway discussed the legend of Herakles and the Hind with the golden horns (Pindar, Ol. iii. 31). Aristotle (Poetics xxv. 5) refers to the blunder made by some poets, who did not know that female deer have no horns (οτι θηλεία ελαφος κέρατα ουκ εχει). Scholars are right in seeing an allusion to Pindar, who (Ol. iii. 31), speaking of the journey of Herakles to the land of the Hyperboreans in search of the golden-horned hind, uses the phrase χρυσόκερων ελαφον θήλειαν. On this same journey he reached the "shady sources of the Ister" (iii. 13). But Pindar must share the censure with Euripides, who, in the chorus of the Heracles Furens, in which he celebrates the Labours of Herakles, says (375-6)

τάν τε χρυσόκερανον | δόρκαν ποικιλόδωτον

Moreover, sculptors and engravers are equally to be blamed. For, on certain coins of Abdera of the fourth century B.C., we find Artemis accompanied by a horned deer, commonly described as a stag (Gardner Types, Pl. iii. 31). Again, all are familiar with the famous statue in the Louvre, commonly known as "Diane à la biche." Here the hind is adorned with antlers. Again, there are at least two gems in the British Museum (763, 765) which show the goddess accompanied by a horned deer. Are all the poets and artists wrong, or does Aristotle err in laying down as universal the absence of horns in female deer? The latter seems to be the true solution. In one species only of all the cervine genus is the female equipped with antlers. The reindeer of Northern Asia and Europe is the exception. Pindar makes the Far North the scene of the quest of Herakles, Euripides indicates the same; and in Roman times there was a popular belief that the hero had visited North Germany (fuisse apud eos [sc. Germanos] et Herculem memorant, Tac. German. 2). The capture of a timid deer would have been a mean task for the slayer of the Nemean lion and the Lernean hydra, but the point of the legend lies in the difficulty of obtaining so rare a creature as a horned hind. Occasional pieces of reindeer horn have been found among the multitudinous antlers and bones of other deer in the Lake dwellings of Switzerland and Bavaria, showing that, about 1200–800 B.C. occasional specimens reached Central Europe. It is affirmed that the reindeer was still alingerer in North Germany in Roman times. If Baltic amber reached Mycenae 1400–1200 B.C., and Homer had a dim notion of a land where the day was very long and the night very short, we need not wonder if the early Greeks had heard a rumour of a strange kind of deer, the females of which were horned.

VIKING CLUB.—(Friday, Nov. 2.)

PROF. W. WATSON CHEYNE in the chair.—Mr. Albany F. Major, hon. secretary, read a paper by Mr. Hyde Clarke, who was prevented by illness from being present, on "A Norman Queen of Jerusalem." This was Godhilda de Toni, wife of Baldwin I., King of Jerusalem. Although Dugdale has referred to Godhilda as the wife of King Baldwin, no attention has been paid to her descent. She had previously been the wife of the Count de Mellet or Meulan. Mr. Clarke showed, from the Sicilian annals, that King Baldwin had sought in marriage the rich princess Adelaide, widow of Roger Guiscard, Count of Sicily. She accepted his offer; but after two years' marriage she discovered that the King had another wife, and she returned to Sicily in disgust, dying shortly afterwards in the Convent of Palli. Godhilda, this first wife, belonged to the princely house of Toni and Limesy, being a daughter of Ralph de Toni, the Elder, Hereditary Standard-bearer of Normandy and Lord of Flamstead in Hertfordshire, where she was probably born. A sketch was given of the history of the line of Toni and Limesy, of which the branch best known in England was that of the De Staffords, and of which the Dukes of Rutland, Newcastle, and Devonshire, the Earl of Crawford, the Clintons, and the Gresleys are remaining descendants. Godhilda took her name from the Princess of Barcelona, who married Roger de Toni, Knight of the Swan and Standard Bearer of Normandy, who in 1018 made a crusade against the Moors and rescued Catalonia. Mr. Clarke suggested that the claim of the German Emperor to the Order of the Swan was founded on the marriage of Baldwin with Godhilda de Toni. He also examined many questions connected with the family, and the light they throw on the Norman invasion and the division of England as recorded in Domesday.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, Nov. 5.)

BERNARD BOSANQUET, Esq., president, in the chair.—The president delivered the annual address on the subject, "An Essential Distinction in Theories of Experience." He began by expressing a sense of the services rendered to philosophy by his predecessor (Mr. Shadworth Hodgson), through his persistent demand for thorough-going analysis, and especially through his antagonism to the doctrine of the substantial soul. He proceeded to indicate the distinction between "Combinational" and "Transformational" theories of experience, as resting on the acceptance or non-acceptance of any form of experience whatever as adequate to reality and above criticism. A superficial coincidence between theories which were really thus opposed took place, in so far as popular idealism and utilitarianism (as seen, for example, in Mill) accepted modifications of sensational data and tests of reality analogous to those which a true transformational theory demands. But as deeper questions were raised, the underlying divergence of the two kinds of theory once more became apparent; and it became evident that current philosophy, whether sensationalist or a priori, was really fettered to different forms of the given, and had no fundamental justification for any modifications to which it might in fact subject its data. Those, therefore, to whom existence or the self were ultimate realities, would be found to leave the path of critical theory a little later than the sensationalists, but on grounds ultimately the same. The charge of finality could not be brought against critical or transformational theory when rightly understood, though occasion might have been given for it when the divergence of the theories was obscured by compromise. Philosophy would always be an attempt to rise above the given, and would necessarily present the two aspects of destructive criticism and of mysticism, inasmuch as it accepted no part as the whole, but in every part saw something of the whole.—The address was followed by a discussion.

ZOOLOGICAL.—(Tuesday, Nov. 6.)

Sir W. H. FLOWER, president, in the chair.—The president read a letter addressed to him by the late Emin Pasha, containing a diary of ornithological observations made during the last part of his journey towards the Congo. This letter and journal had been taken from the Arabs on the Upper Congo by the officers of the Congo Free State, and forwarded to the president.—The secretary read a report on the additions that had been made to the society's menagerie during the months of June, July, August, and September, 1894, and called special attention to the following objects: (1) Two remarkably large and fine specimens of the Hamadryad snake of India and Burma (Ophiophagus elaps), received in exchange and on deposit. (2) A series of mammals and birds from British Central Africa, presented by Mr. H. H. Johnston, and carefully brought home by Mr. Alexander Whyte, the naturalist on Mr. Johnston's staff, on June 23. (3) A young male white-tailed gnu (Connochaetes gnu), born in the menagerie on June 23, being the produce of the male and one of the females that were purchased of Mr. Reiche, March 7, 1893. This was the first occasion of this antelope having bred in the society's gardens. (4) A fine female eland of the striped form (Oreos canna livingstonii), from the Transvaal, obtained by purchase July 10, being the first individual of this variety received by the society. (5) Two giant tortoises from the Aldabra Islands (Testudo elephantina), presented by Rear-Admiral W. R. Kennedy, July 12. (6) A young male pleasant antelope (Tragelaphus gratus), bred in the Zoological Gardens, Hamburg, received July 27.—Mr. C. Davies Sherborn exhibited a copy of, and made remarks on, the recently issued reprint of George Ord's American Zoology.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger exhibited a gecko, forwarded to him by Mr. R. T. Lewis, which had been captured in winter (July), fully active, on the snow upon the highest portion of the Drakensberg Range, Natal. It belonged to a genus believed until 1888 to be characteristic of the Australian fauna, and differed from its nearest ally, Oedura africana, in the smaller and convex granules covering the head and in the nostril shield not entering the nostril. Mr. Boulenger proposed for it the name Oedura nivaria.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger read a third report on additions to the Batrachian collection in the Natural History Museum, containing a list of the species, new or previously unrepresented, of which specimens had been added to the collection since 1890, and descriptions of some new species.—A communication was read from Sir Walter L. Buller, containing remarks on a petrel lately described as new by Capt. Hutton under the name of Oestrelata leucophrys.

ANOLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY.—(Tuesday, Nov. 6.)

E. A. CAZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—Miss Edith Hodgetts read a paper on "Russian Stories considered as Members of the great Aryan Group of Legends." She traced the resemblance between prominent features in Russian tales and similar traits in the fairy stories and legendary lore of other countries, and expressed a hope that the subject of comparative folk-lore would be seriously taken up by some better skilled investigator. The paper was illustrated with a brief analysis of some Russian stories, proving the position taken by the writer.

FINE ART.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.

PICTURES by Mr. Will Rothenstein, M. Helleu, the brilliant French etcher, Mr. Furse, and Mr. Will Rothenstein, constitute, it is believed, the chief attraction at the New English Art Club's winter exhibition, where, however, the water-colours of Mr. Francis James and Mr. Brabazon receive cordial recognition.

At the Champ de Mars M. Helleu's picture was admired last summer. The problem it successfully solves is that of the representation of rushing water, directed from various sources—the nominal subject being the depicting of the fountain of Latona at Versailles. The work of the French artist is happily distinguished by spirit and freedom: in painting, as much almost as in etching, does he seize with charm the moment's effect. Mr. Wilson Steer, who has usually exhibited two or three canvases, displaying his gifts as colourist, or as graceful observer of line and movement, concentrates himself this time upon a single effort, though it is reported that he retains in his studio a work of great merit. The picture at the New English Art Club is but imperfectly described by its title, "The Japanese Gown," since that which it records with so singular a felicity is as much the charm of the wearer as the flow and texture of the dress, and is, yet again, the line and colour of the whole scene and incident depicted, quite as much as the portrait of the particular model. Of generally dexterous brushwork, the picture is likewise a refined and agreeable vision; its deficiencies, if they exist, are few; its merits are many, and are for the most part such only as are possessed by an artiste de temperament. Mr. Furse's contribution is a male portrait, slight, but highly indicative: full of the alert perception of character, refined in conception and in treatment. Mr. Will Rothenstein, one of the youngest members of this artistic society, is assuredly already beheld to be not the least gifted or the least individual. We have before now insisted upon his firm possession of distinguished qualities; nor have we blinded ourselves to the presence in his work of a measure of eccentricity, which he may presently discard. To us, Mr. Rothenstein's "Porphyria" is not so much a composition proper as a clever fragment of a composition. In colour it scarcely seeks to be a harmony. Yet is it interesting and strangely forcible. The world, perhaps, will be more ready to receive his vivid record of "Coster Girls." One of these has the babyish prettiness, the sensitiveness, the shyness, the je ne sais quoi besides, which you may find in regions over Westminster Bridge, in the New Cut, in Oxford-street for all that we can tell to the contrary, as well as anywhere else. An obvious truth of record is stamped upon the canvas. It is a performance which will do good to the young artist's reputation.

By Mr. Francis Bate there is a quiet, sympathetic vision of the ordinary fields in September; by Mr. Bernard Sickert, a skilful "Chiswick"; by Mr. Walter Sickert, a study full of life and movement of that now almost classic temple of the dance and of song—"Sam Collins's" music-hall at Islington. Mr. Moffat Lindner's drawings display a measure of refinement, though he is not seen, we think, quite at his best. Mr. Brabazon's "Naples"—the slight, small drawing—is charmingly right in colour and in atmospheric effect. To the manly and decisive virtues of Mr. Francis James's flower-pieces we have before borne witness. With economy of means he indicates form. He retains freshness with singular skill, and his colour is delicate while joyous and full.

F. W.

THE J. M. GRAY SALE.

THE miscellaneous collection of books and works of art, the property of the late Mr. J. M. Gray, first curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, was sold last week, in Edinburgh, by Messrs. Dowell, of that city. The collection afforded ample evidence of Mr. Gray's varied studies, and of the care with which he amassed material bearing directly or indirectly upon them, though it did not perhaps contain any remarkable proportion of things—in the way either of books, or pictures, or prints—of definite and important money value. Yet, owing to the position of its late owner, as an acceptable writer on art as well as a public functionary, its dispersion aroused no small measure of interest in the Scottish capital.

We note some of the higher prices obtained. Among the books there may be mentioned a first edition of Paradise Regained and Samson Agonistes, £3 5s.; Browning's Bells and Pomegranates, £6 15s. (W. Brown); Browning's Paracelsus, the first edition—published by Effingham Wilson—£2 4s.; Swinburne's Blake, £1 1s.; the Germ, £6 15s. (W. Brown); William Morris's Story of the Glittering Plain, printed at the Kelmscott Press, £2 10s. (Thin); R. L. Stevenson's Inland Voyage, £2; Lang's Ballads and Lyrics of Old France, £2 10s.; Pater's Marius the Epicurean, £1 3s.; Symonds's Age of the Despots, &c., £2 6s.; Wedmore's Méryon, &c., £1 2s.; Crowe and Cavalcasselle's History of Painting in North Italy, £4 15s. (Thin); Willshire's Introduction to Ancient Prints, £1 4s.; Michel's Rembrandt, edited by Wedmore, £2 7s. 6d. (Grant); Wilkie's & Geddes' Etchings, edited by David Laing, £2 12s. 6d. (W. Brown); the first edition of Hamerton's Etching and Etchers, £5 5s.; Blake's Illustrations to the Book of Job, £8 10s. (Grant); Hipkin's Musical Instruments, £3 7s. 6d. Among the few etchings by Andrew Geddes, as to whose life and work Mr. Gray was a recognised authority, the "Portrait of Mrs. Geddes"—in a desirable state—fetched £1 16s., and the "Alexander Nasmyth" and "Child with an Apple," £2 8s. Of the few Whistler's, there may be noted the "Marchande de Moutarde," £1 12s.; the "Smithy," £2 7s. 6d.; and "The Balcony," £5 5s. The "Smithy" seemed unfinished. An impression of the second state of "The Morgue" of Méryon realised £10 10s. (Lamont). Two admirable mezzotints by Ward, after Geddes—one of them the "Portrait of Wilkie," and the other the "Portrait of Patrick Brydson"—fetched, each of them, £3 15s. The pictures hardly require chronicle, as they were most of them oil sketches by contemporary Scottish artists. An exception was a Monticelli, "A Study of Ladies," which went for about eight and twenty pounds.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE last day of the exhibition entitled "Fair Women," at the Grafton Galleries, will be Saturday, December 1. The galleries will reopen early in January with an exhibition of the works of old Scottish portrait painters, combined with a representative selection of pictures by J. M. W. Turner. This will close at the end of March; and in May the galleries will open with "Children," an exhibition consisting of portraits of children and objects of interest associated with childhood.

An effort is being made by the Bristol Fine Arts Academy to place their institution on a basis more in accordance with the artistic feeling of the age. To this end great changes have been made; the number of works exhibited being far fewer than in former years, owing to the careful selection now made. The four galleries are draped, and pictures are now hung with spaces between. A sub-committee of artists has been formed for the purpose of developing the resources of the institution. One of the aims of this sub-committee is directed to the arrangement of pictures, as far as possible, according to the different schools of painting; and in the exhibition to open next week a room has been devoted to works by the men of Newlyn and St. Ives.

THE first general meeting of the Hellenic Society for the current session will be held at 22, Albemarle-street, on Monday next, at 5 p.m., when Mr. Arthur J. Evans will read a paper on his discoveries in Crete.

MISS BRODRICK, Ph.D., will deliver a course of three lectures in the British Museum, on "Ancient Egyptian Art," on Thursdays, at 11.30 a.m., beginning on November 22. The subjects that she will specially deal with are—sculptors and architects, painters and their methods, and craftsmen. Tickets may be obtained from Miss K. Martin, College Hall, Byng-place, W.C.

MR. R. W. MACBETH has been elected a correspondent of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in the section of engraving.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Ernest Chantre submitted a report on the archaeological mission to Asia Minor with which he was entrusted last year by the Minister of Public Instruction. The chief results were the discovery of cuneiform inscriptions at two unexpected places: in the "Hittite" citadel of Boghaz-Keui (Pterium), and in the Tell of Kara-Euyuk, near Caesarea, which covers the ruins of a "Pelagic" city. In the latter case, some of the inscriptions were of the Achaemenid period, and others in an unknown tongue. The importance of these discoveries is not only that they extend further west the area of Assyrian influence, but also that they may throw light upon the sources of "Mycenaean" civilisation, the existence of which in Asia Minor had hitherto been barely suspected.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE Crystal Palace programme on Saturday included Saint-Saëns' Prelude to his Biblical Cantata, "Le Déluge." It is a smooth, scholarly piece of writing, but the effect which it produces is extremely vague. We, of course, are treating it as abstract music; as an introduction to the Cantata it may have more meaning and point. Another novelty was "Lo Zingaro," Rhapsodie for baritone and orchestra, by Mr. Godfrey Pringle. The original Italian words tell of the sorrowful song of a wandering gipsy. The music, in simple ballad form, is clever, attractive, and, one may add, picturesque. The Rhapsodie was well sung by Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. Mockridge gave an artistic, if not very powerful, rendering of the Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger." Dvorák's Dramatic Cantata, "The Spectre's Bride," which has not been heard in London for some time, was performed, with Miss Ella Russell and Messrs. Whitney, Mockridge, and Andrew Black as soloists. The composer's noblest achievement is his "Stabat Mater"; but among genre pieces of the modern school his "Spectre's Bride" will always hold a foremost place.

Herr Emil Sauer gave the first of eight pianoforte recitals at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The Bach - d'Albert Prelude and Fugue in D, which stood at the head of the programme, sufficed to show that in the matter of technique the pianist stands second to none; also that, like Rubinstein, he has a fine touch and wonderful gradations of tone. He next played Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 53). The reading was clear and intelligent; but in the Rondo there were, here and there, signs of virtuosity gaining the upper hand. Schumann's lovely Nachtstück (Op. 23, No. 4), was performed with great charm and refinement, though, if Mme. Schumann's tempo be the correct one, at too slow a rate. Of Chopin three pieces were given: the Bolero (Op. 19), one of the composer's few commonplace pieces; the delicate Nocturne in F (Op. 15, No. 1); and the A flat "Ballade." The Nocturne was interpreted with feeling and finish, but there was too much storm and stress in the Ballade. A performance of Chopin's Etude in A minor, by way of encore, showed that Herr Sauer is an admirer of Rubinstein; also that, like that eminent pianist, he is not always note-perfect.

If Herr Sauer wishes to gain something more than an acknowledgment of his great technical powers, which no reasonable critic can call in question, we should strongly advise him in future to alter in one or two respects the character of his programmes. Transcriptions, especially of Bach's Organ Fugues, are to be condemned; even the Scherzo from the "Midsummer Night's Dream," though arranged by Mendelssohn himself, is ineffective. If the pianist wishes merely to display his full powers as an executant, one or two brilliant show pieces could easily be placed at the end of the programme. Again, the musical literature of the pianoforte being extensive, could not some novelties be introduced, or old, neglected works revived? With care and judgment the long series of concerts may be made pleasant and profitable.

Mr. Richard Gompertz, assisted by Messrs. Hayden Inwards, Emil Kreuz and Charles Ould, gave the first of two concerts at the Salle Erard on Wednesday evening. The programme commenced with Tschaiowsky's Quartet in D (Op. 11), a work which, so far as we are aware, had not previously been heard in London: by the way, nothing of the Roman composer's has ever been given at the Popular Concerts.

The Quartet contains some very fresh and charming music. The first movement is interesting, though a little forced as regards rhythm. The most attractive movement is the Andante. The opening theme is exceedingly quaint; and the second one, in good contrast, is accompanied by a persistent figure for 'cello, and reiterated notes for second violin and viola which have a mournful effect. The whole movement, indeed, is imbued with that feeling of sadness so prevalent in the national music of the North. The Scherzo is not particularly characteristic. The Finale contains some good workmanship, which shows the influence of the Beethoven of the Razoumowsky period. The programme also included Dvorák's new Quartet in F (Op. 96). The first two movements, Allegro and Lento, show excellent workmanship; but they are not striking. The Scherzo is bright and clever, though the Trio does not appear to offer sufficient contrast. The Finale shows the strongest individuality. The composer must have been in one of his most genial moods when he penned it. It is overflowing with Bohemian humour. Dvorák is skilled in the art of development, and can do much even with unpromising material; but when his subject-matter, as in this case, has strong character, then he warms to his work and produces a masterpiece. Further acquaintance with the Quartet may perhaps modify our opinion with regard to the earlier movements. The performances, on the whole, were very good. Miss Catherine Fisk sang songs by Brahms, Leoncavallo, and Schubert, and met with a cordial reception.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO
THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

| | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|--|---------|--------------|------------|
| | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station | 0 13 0 | 0 6 6 | 0 3 3 |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. | 0 15 2 | 0 7 7 | 0 3 10 |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. | 0 17 4 | 0 8 8 | 0 4 4 |

Just published, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

A DREAM OF THE SEA, AND OTHER POEMS.

By ALEXANDER LIND.

London: SIMPKIN MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.

365 SHAVES FOR 6d.

A STICK of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP
is said to LAST A YEAR.

STICKS 6d., 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; CAKES 1s., 2s., 3s.

THE LIBERAL.

THE LIBERAL.—A New Weekly.

THE LIBERAL.—First Number on SATURDAY, NOV. 17.

THE LIBERAL.—Price Threepence Weekly.

THE LIBERAL.—The Best Writers in

THE LIBERAL.—Politics, Literature, Science, and Art.

THE LIBERAL.—At all Newsagents and Bookstalls; and Wholesale of

E. MARLBOROUGH & Co., 51, Old Bailey, London, E.C.
JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh and Glasgow.

DEATH DUTIES.

THE LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE COMPANY.

This Company is prepared not only to issue new Life Policies covenanting to pay the DEATH DUTIES direct to the Government Authorities BEFORE GRANT OF PROBATE, but also to secure the same advantage when desired TO UNENCUMBERED EXISTING POLICIES.

HEAD OFFICES {1, DALE STREET, LIVERPOOL.
{7, CORNHILL, LONDON.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

DAYS of a SOLDIER'S LIFE. Written during Active Service in the Crimean, Chinese, Austro-Prussian ('66) and Franco-German ('70-71) Wars. By General Sir C. P. BEAUCHAMP WALKER. With Portrait. Demy 8vo, 18s. [This day.]

LIFE of WARREN HASTINGS. First Governor-General of India. By Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I. With Portrait. Demy 8vo, 18s. [This day.]

LIFE of GEORGE WASHINGTON. By Lieut.-Colonel COOPER-KING. With Maps and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

THE MARCHES of WALES: Notes and Impressions on the Welsh Borders, from the Severn Sea to the Sands o' Dee. By CHARLES G. HARPER. With 114 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 16s. [Next week.]

WOMEN in INDIA. By Mary Frances Billington. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the DUCHESS of CONNAUGHT. With an Introduction by the MARCHIONESS of DUFFERIN and AWA, C.I. And numerous Illustrations by Herbert Johnson and others. Demy 8vo. [In a few days.]

INCIDENTS of FOREIGN SPORT and TRAVEL. By Colonel POLLOK, Author of "Sport in British Burma." With Illustrations by A. T. Elwes. Demy 8vo, 16s.

QUEEN of BEAUTY; or, the Adventures of Prince Elfrestan. By Mrs. R. HENTY. Illustrated by John Jellicoe. Large crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

NEW NOVELS.

A BLACK SQUIRE. By Mrs. Alfred Hunt. 1 vol., crown 8vo. [Next week.]

THE PILGRIMS. A Bit of Cornwall in Australia. By W. CARLTON DAWE. 2 vols. [This day.]

GRANDBOROUGH: a Novel. By the Earl of DESART. 2 vols. [Ready.]

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CAMDEN LIBRARY.

On fine paper, with rough edges, at 6s. per vol.; on fine paper, bound in Roxburgh, with gilt top, 7s. 6d. net; LARGE-PAPER copies, 50 only, on hand-made paper and bound in Roxburgh, with gilt top, 21s. net.

EARLY LONDON THEATRES—IN THE FIELDS.

By T. FAIRMAN ORDISH, F.S.A. Fully Illustrated.

CONTENTS.

BEFORE the PLAYHOUSES.
THE THEATRE.
THE CURTAIN.
THE SURREY SIDE.

THE AMPHITHEATRES.
NEWINGTON BUTTS and the ROSE.
THE BEAR GARDEN & HOPE THEATRE.
PARIS GARDEN and the SWAN.

"The book is the fruit of a profound erudition in the remote literature and in the still more remote record evidence relating to its subject. It is well illustrated, and deserves a cordial welcome both from antiquaries and from general students as giving a full account of its subject, and one which for the first time makes the subject clear."—Scotsman.

THE PRECEDING VOLUMES IN THIS SERIES ARE—

WEST IRISH FOLK TALES and ROMANCES,

With Specimens of the Gaelic Originals in 3 Dialects Phonetically Spelt, Collected and Translated by WILLIAM LARMINIE.

"We have nothing but praise to bestow on the book."—Athenaeum.
"Highly illustrative of the imaginative character of the Celtic race."—Times Weekly.
"It is not alone the comparative mythologist, but also the poet and the creator of imaginative fiction, who profit by this industrious compilation."—Literary World.
"A book of extreme value to the lovers of folk-lore."—Antiquary.

SCULPTURED AND STORIED SIGNS AND INSCRIPTIONS OF HISTORIC LONDON.

By PHILIP NORMAN.

"A work which should have attraction and value not only for all educated Londoners, but for all genuine antiquaries all the land over. Very curious are many of the facts accumulated, and the pictorial representations of signs are not less quaint. A real contribution to the literature of English antiquities."—Globe.

ANTIQUITIES and CURIOSITIES OF THE EXCHEQUER.

By HUBERT HALL, of the Public Record Office.

"A valuable addition to the Camden Library, and contains great wealth of information, every item of which belongs to the category of 'things not generally known.' It does great credit to the persevering industry, discrimination, and literary skill of its author. The book is admirably produced and indexed, and is readable throughout."—Daily Telegraph.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOKS.

With 186 Full-Page and other Illustrations by the Author.
THE LAND of the SPHINX. By G. MONTBARD, Author of "Among the Moors." In royal 8vo, richly gilt cloth and gilt top, 16s.

The TIMES says:—"The numerous sketches are full of interest for all who know Egypt and its history. Contains many bright appreciations of Egyptian life and manners."

MEMOIRS to SERVE for the HISTORY of NAPOLEON I. From 1802 to 1815. By his Private Secretary, Baron CLAUDE FRANÇOIS DE MÉNEVAL. The work completed by the addition of hitherto Unpublished Documents. Translated and fully Annotated by ROBERT H. SHERARD. In 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top (about 1,400 pp.), with Autograph Letters and Photogravure Portraits, 18s. per vol.

The TIMES speaks of the work as being both valuable and important, and extremely interesting.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says that the interest is sustained to the very last pages, and must be acknowledged to be little less than absorbing.

ALPHONSE DAUDET'S MASTERPIECE.

FROMONT JUNIOR and RISLER SENIOR. Translated by E. VIZETELLY. With 88 Wood Engravings by Fromont and Hamel from Original Drawings by George Roux. In large crown 8vo, artistic binding, 6s. [Immediately.]

* * An Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 copies for England and America, each copy Numbered and Signed, with 88 Illustrations by George Roux, and 20 Full-Page Etchings by Fernand Desmonlin. In royal 8vo, £1 1s. net.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE POETS AND THE POETRY OF THE CENTURY."
HUMOUR, SOCIETY, PARODY, and OCCASIONAL VERSE. Selections from the Poetry of George Canning, Theodore Hook, J. H. Frere, Austin Dobson, Ashby Sterry, W. S. Gilbert, Lewis Carroll, Sir F. Pollock, C. S. Calverley, Whyte Melville, Sir Theodore Martin, Fredk. Locker-Lampson, May Kendall, and others. Edited by ALFRED H. MILES. With Biographical and Critical Notices by leading Critics. In fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s.; in buckram gilt (limited edition), 6s.; and in parchment in complete sets of 10 vols. (edition limited to 100 copies), £3 15s. net.

In large crown 8vo, half bound leather and gilt, 640 pp., 3s. 6d.

MILES'S STANDARD ELOCUTIONIST, comprising a Popular Treatise on the Anatomy, Physiology, and Hygiene of the Vocal Organs, with Illustrations, by LENNOX BROWNE, F.R.C.S., Senior Surgeon of the Central Throat and Ear Hospital; a Chapter on the Art of introducing Musical Accompaniments into Elocutionary Recitals, by OLIFFORD HARRISON, with Musical Examples; an Essay on the Principles of Elocution, on Public Speaking, the Selection, Study, and Delivery of Recitations, and upwards of 500 Pieces, forming a graduated Series for Study, selected from the best Authors, by ALFRED H. MILES.

"Nothing published this season is likely to surpass in interest and in value 'The Crimson Sign.'"

A NEW HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

THE CRIMSON SIGN. A Narrative of the Adventures of Mr. Gervase Orme, sometime Lieutenant in Mountjoy's Regiment of Foot. By Dr. S. R. KEIGHTLEY. In cloth gilt, with Frontispiece, 6s.

YORKSHIRE POST.—Of adventure stories nothing published this season is likely to surpass in interest and in value 'The Crimson Sign.' The heroine is a delightful personage. But the whole story is admirable; full of exciting situations and cleverly conceived portraiture."

The First Edition is entirely exhausted of Colonel Haggard's New Novel, in One Volume.

TEMPEST TORN. In Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. A second Edition will be ready this week.

BY MRS. ALFRED MARKS.

DAVID PANNELL. In cloth gilt, 6s.

The ATHENÆUM says:—"David Pannell" is a fine piece of work. Has an interest beyond and above the common."

GLOBE.—"It affords pleasure of no ordinary kind."

BY MARIE HUTCHESON.

BRUNO THE CONSCRIPT. In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

ACADEMY.—"One of the best stories we have read for some time. The character drawing is unusually good. Ably and gracefully written, and cannot fail to afford real pleasure to the reader."

IN DEMAND AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY RITA.

PEG the RAKE. In 3 vols.

FIRST REVIEW.

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.—"A racy Irish story, brightly written and thoroughly interesting. Peg is a finely conceived and well-executed character. There are also very charming traits which make it most lovable, and a certain pathos that brings a curious sensation to the throat and eyes of the sympathetic reader."

A Fourth Edition in the Press.

CHILDREN of CIRCUMSTANCE. In 3 vols. By the Author of "A Yellow Aster."

The MORNING POST says:—"Daring in thought, clever in execution, and treating with a note of earnest enthusiasm the difficult problems it touches; the authors new work is likely to attract as much attention as 'A Yellow Aster.'"

BY MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN.

NEW SPORTING NOVEL.

RUN to GROUND. In 3 vols.

The First and Second Editions of "A New Note" being exhausted, a Third Edition is now ready.

The WORLD says:—"The latest book of which people are talking."

A NEW NOTE. In 2 vols.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says:—"The writer's incommunicativeness respecting his or her name will excite a good deal of public curiosity, for the book is a really remarkable one."

HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

MESSRS. ISBISTER'S NEW LIST.

SOCIALISM. By Professor Robert Flint, D.D., LL.D., &c., Author of "Theism," "Agnosticism," &c. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. [In a few days.]

LABOUR and SORROW. Sermons Preached on Various Occasions. By the Rev. W. J. KNOX LITTLE, M.A., Canon of Worcester Cathedral. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d. (Vol. XII., in "The Gospel and the Age" Series.)

"Worthy to represent Cathedral preaching."—Academy.

THE SCEPTICS of the OLD TESTAMENT: JOB, KOHELETH, AGUR. With a new English Text of Job and Ecclesiastes. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. By E. J. DILLON, Magstrand of Oriental Languages, University of St. Petersburg, &c. [In November.]

BIRDS of the WAVE and WOODLAND. By PHIL ROBINSON, Author of "The Poets' Birds," &c. With 50 Illustrations (several Full-page) by Charles Whympere. Royal 8vo, gilt top, 10s. 6d. [Next week.]

TEN-MINUTE SERMONS. By the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D., Editor of "The British Weekly," "The Bookman," &c. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d. (Vol. XV. in "The Gospel and the Age" Series.)

"Each one of them is a thoughtful, polished essay, as lofty in tone as it is straightforward and vigorous in expression."—Glasgow Herald.

TWENTY LITTLE MAIDENS. A Story-Book for the Young. By A. E. BLANCHARD. With 16 Full-page Illustrations by Ida Waugh. Fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d.

"The stories are charming.....the illustrations are exquisite."—Christian World.

NORTHWARD HO! Stories of Carglen. By ALEXANDER GORDON, Author of "The Folks o' Carglen," &c. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Just ready.]

ESSENTIAL CHRISTIANITY, and other Sermons By the Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, M.A., Author of "Social Christianity," &c. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d. [Just published.]

GOOD WORDS VOLUME, 1894.

Edited by DONALD MACLEOD, D.D., one of H.M. Chaplains.

Royal 8vo, gilt edges, 7s. 6d., and containing

S. BARING GOULD'S New Three-Volume Story,

KITTY ALONE.

SHORT STORIES by

BRET HARTE. | L. B. WALFORD. | LANOE FALCONER.
W. E. NORRIS. | W. CLARK RUSSELL. | And others.

And Articles by

The BISHOP of WINCHESTER, Sir R. S. BALL, LL.D., Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, M.P., The DEAN of YORK, Sir WM. H. FLOWER, LL.D., The DEAN of GLOUCESTER, Archdeacon SINCLAIR, D.D., JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P., "SHIRLEY," JOHN HUNTER, D.D., GEORGE MATHESON, D.D., KATHARINE HINKSON, WILLIAM CANTON, AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D.D., The EDITOR, &c.

With over 300 Illustrations by

GORDON BROWNE, ALEX. ANSTED, LOCKIART BOGLE, W. HOVEREND, A. J. GOODMAN, CHARLES WHYMPER, F. H. TOWNSEND, HERBERT RAILTON, and others. [November 23.]

THE

SUNDAY MAGAZINE VOLUME, 1894.

Edited by the Rev. BENJAMIN WAUGH, Author of "Sunday Evenings with my Children," &c.

Royal 8vo, gilt edges, 7s. 6d., and containing

ANNIE S. SWAN'S New Three-Volume Story,

A LOST IDEAL.

And Articles by

Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D., Precentor VENABLES, M.A., Professor J. P. MAHAFFY, D.D., Canon ATKINSON, D.C.L., Rev. Professor H. C. SHUTTLEWORTH, M.A., JULIA WEDGEWOOD, Canon T. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE, M.A., L. T. MEADE, Professor W. T. GAIRDNER, M.D., WM. WRIGHT, D.D., Canon LIDDELL, M.A., J. MONRO GIBSON, D.D., R. P. HORTON, D.D., Professor T. M. LINDSAY, D.D., G. F. PENTECOST, D.D., The EDITOR, &c., &c.

With 12 Coloured Plates and 300 Illustrations by

G. F. WATTS, R.A., Sir E. BURNE-JONES, FRED. MORGAN, F. G. KITTON, C. E. BROCK, C. W. WYLLIE, A. S. BOYD, and others. [November 23.]

ISBISTER & CO., LIMITED, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A COUNTRY MUSE.

By NORMAN GALE.

First Series. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

This Edition contains some Poems which did not appear in the previous Edition. The Second Series of "A COUNTRY MUSE" will be published in uniform style.

Now Ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries.

MUGGLETON COLLEGE: Its Rise and Fall.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"In this brilliant little satire the philanthropy of the age, with its purely material ideals, is vigorously assailed, and the intellectual poverty of a large class of well-meaning persons is exposed. At the same time there is no attack upon individuals. The author speaks with the authority of wide experience, and handles types rather than men." "Very smartly and satirically told. Extremely amusing, even to one who has no pretension of 'being behind the scenes.'"—Glasgow Herald.

Ready November 20 at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

The COMMAND of the SEA.

By SPENCER WILKINSON.

Reprinted from the Pall Mall Gazette. Crown 8vo, 1s.

The COLONIZATION of INDO-CHINA.

By J. CHAILLEY-BERT. Authorised English Translation. By ARTHUR BARING BRABANT

With an Introduction, Maps, Notes, and an Index. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"M. Chailley-Bert writes with intelligence and accuracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

With a Map of the North-Western Frontier of India, showing the Pamir Region and Part of Afghanistan, 25 in. by 18½ in.

The RIVAL POWERS in CENTRAL ASIA.

Translated from the German of JOSEPH POPOWSKI by ARTHUR BARING BRABANT, and Edited by CHARLES E. D. BLACK.

Demy 8vo, Map in Pocket, 12s. 6d.

"A fascinating book. Still more, it is a book to make the British reader think. It is accompanied by the best map of the Pamir region we have yet seen."—National Observer.

The MIGRATION of SYMBOLS.

By COUNT GOBIET D'ALVIELLA, Professor of the History of Religions in the University of Brussels. An Authorised Translation. Edited by Sir GEORGE BIRDWOOD, M.D., K.C.I.E., C.S.I., LL.D., Officer of the Legion of Honour and of the French Academy.

With five Full-Page Plates and 139 Illustrations in the Text. Medium 8vo, 15s.

"Count Gobiet D'Alviella's elaborate and beautifully illustrated volume is pre-eminently distinguished by the sanity and sobriety of its conclusions. . . . A valuable and instructive work, which, moreover, is well written, and excellently translated."—Glasgow Herald.

WAYS and WORKS in INDIA.

By G. W. MACGEORGE, M.I.C.E., late officiating Consulting Engineer to the Government of India for Railways.

With numerous Illustrations from Photographs and from Original Drawings. Five Maps and an Index. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"A graphic and authoritative survey."—Times.

"Well arranged and clearly set forth, and the book is very well written."—Scotsman.

"This elaborate and most instructive work."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE RULING RACES of PRE-HISTORIC TIMES in INDIA, SOUTH-WESTERN ASIA, and SOUTHERN EUROPE.

By J. P. HEWITT. With Diagrams and Maps. Demy 8vo, 18s.

"The result of an immense amount of study of ancient literature, and of patient endeavours to piece together and harmonise the legends and myths of bygone civilisations."—Liverpool Mercury.

"The great learning of the book, and the many matters of interest on which it touches by the way, must always give it a high value in the esteem of those who study the beginning of history."—Scotsman.

RAMBLES and RECOLLECTIONS of an INDIAN

OFFICIAL. By Major-General Sir W. H. SLEEMAN, K.C.B. A New Edition. Edited by VINCENT ARTHUR SMITH, Indian Civil Service. With a copious Bibliography, an Index, and a Map. 2 vols., 12s. net.

BERNIER'S TRAVELS in the MOGUL EMPIRE. An entirely New Edition, with Illustrations and Reproductions of Maps from Early Editions. By ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE, Mem. As. Sec. Bengal, F.S.A. Scot. Crown 8vo, pp. liv. 500, 6s. net.

"The old translation has now been revised and edited in a very scholarly fashion."—Times.

CONSTABLE'S HAND ATLAS of INDIA. A New Series of 60 Maps and Plans, prepared from Ordnance and other Surveys, under the direction of J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S., F.R.S.E., &c. In half morocco, or full bound cloth, gilt top, 14s.

"Nothing half so useful has been done for many years to help both the traveller in India and the student at home."—Athenaeum.

No. 179. 15th Year of Publication. Price 6d.

THE ARTIST:

PHOTOGRAPHER AND DECORATOR.

An Illustrated Monthly Journal of Applied Art.

NOVEMBER.—Contents.

FROM MONTH TO MONTH.

PENCIL DRAWING BY MR. JOHN RUSKIN.

SIR EDWARD BURNE-JONES. (Illustrated.)

A TALK with FRANK RICHARDS. (Illustrated.)

EXHIBITIONS PAST and to COME.

THE ROYAL FEMALE SCHOOL of ART. (Illustrated.)

THE PORTRAITS of CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. (Illustrated.)

THE PHOTOGRAPHER. (Illustrated.)

ROYAL PHOTOGRAPHIC SOCIETY and "SALON" EXHIBITIONS. (Illustrated.)

UNDER THE HAMMER in PARIS.

MOZAICS.—II. (Illustrated.)

COLOUR PRINTING in BELFAST.

IN SUNRISE-LAND. (Illustrated.)

PARIS NOOKS and CORNERS. (Illustrated.)

OUR TWELVE-GUINEA PRIZE COMPETITION.

ALL THE ART and PHOTOGRAPHIC NEWS of the MONTH.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.,

Publishers to the India Office,

14, Parliament Street, Westminster.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1177.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE DAWN of CIVILIZATION (EGYPT and CHALDÆA). By Prof. Maspero.

Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.

[This, it may be safely said, is the most important work which has appeared in this country on the Early History of Egypt and Chaldaea. The results of recent Archaeological research in the Valleys of the Nile and Euphrates have been marshalled in historical perspective in this magnum opus by one of the greatest authorities of our time. It covers the history of Egypt down to the XIV. Dynasty, and that of Chaldaea during the First Empire, and although the points of connection with Bible History are not chronological they are essentially illustrative of the Sacred Narrative. Professor Sayce adds a Preface.]

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. Professor SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo. Fourth Edition. Buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

ART PICTURES from the OLD TESTAMENT: Sunday

Readings for the Young. A Series of Ninety Illustrations from Original Drawings by Sir F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A.; Sir E. BURNE-JONES, Bart.; E. J. POYNTER, R.A.; G. F. WATTS, R.A.; E. ARMYTAGE, R.A.; P. MADOX BROWNE; S. SOLOMON; HOLMAN HUNT, &c., &c. With Letterpress Descriptions by ALEY FOX. Small 4to, cloth boards, 6s.

ATTILA and his CONQUERORS. By Mrs. Rundle Charles,

Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

ECCE ANCILLA DOMINI. Mary, the Mother of Our Lord.

By Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black, cloth boards, 2s.

THE AUTHORSHIP of DEUTERONOMY. By Sir William

MUIR, K.C.S.I., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 3d.

The CATECHISM of the ORTHODOX EASTERN CHURCH.

By IGNATIUS MOSCHAKÉ. 18mo, limp cloth, 6d.

BUDDHISM. Being a Sketch of the Life and Teachings of Gautama, the Buddha. By T. W. RHYS DAVIDS, M.A., Ph.D. A New and Revised Edition. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from

"Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black on hand-made paper, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; levantine, 6s. 6d.; limp German calf, 7s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH in THESE ISLANDS before the COMING of AUGUSTINE. By the Rev. Canon BROWNE, B.D., D.C.L. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

JOAN the MAID: Deliverer of England and France. By

Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SONGS, OLD and NEW. By Mrs. Rundle Charles, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Demy 16mo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE OLD CHURCHES of OUR LAND: the Why, How, and When of Them. By FRANCIS BALDWIN, Architect. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHRISTUS COMPROBATOR; or, the Testimony of Christ to the Old Testament. Seven Addresses by C. J. ELLICOTT, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

RELIGION in JAPAN: Shintoism, Buddhism, and Christianity. By the Rev. G. A. COBBOLD. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

LECTURES at SION COLLEGE. "Faith," by the Right

Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON. "The Share of Parliament and Convocation in the English Reformation," by the Ven. Archdeacon SINCLAIR. "The Prayer Book as a Manual of Religious Teaching," by the Rev. G. W. GENT. "How to Read the Bible," by the Ven. Archdeacon THORNTON. "The Church and the Younger Laity," by the Rev. Canon BROWNE. "On Inspiration and Old Testament Criticism," by the Rev. Dr. WACE. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

NOBLE WOMANHOOD: a Series of Biographical Sketches.

By G. BARNETT SMITH. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

[The lives selected are the following:—Princess Alice, Grand Duchess of Hesse; Florence Nightingale; Frances Ridley Havergal; Harriet Beecher Stowe; Sister Dora; Louisa May Alcott; Elizabeth Fry; Feliela Dorothea Hennans. This is a companion volume to "Eminent Christian Workers."]

EMINENT CHRISTIAN WORKERS of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By G. BARNETT SMITH, Author of "Everyday Heroes," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

[The lives selected are the following:—Archbishop Tait; Patteson, the Martyr Bishop; the Earl of Shaftesbury; Bishop Daniel Wilson; Arnold, of Rugby; Bishop Wilberforce; George Moore, the Philanthropist; Hauntington, the East African Hero; and Bishop Selwyn.]

CHINA. By Professor R. K. Douglas. With Map. New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

"A concise, unbiased, and remarkable readable account of China, compiled for the benefit of readers of every degree."—Saturday Review.

RUSSIA, PAST and PRESENT. Adapted from the German of Lankenau and Oelnitz. By Mrs. CHESTER. With Map and several Woodcuts. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

EDIBLE and POISONOUS MUSHROOMS: What to Eat, and What to Avoid. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With 18 Coloured Plates illustrating 48 Species. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

ROMANCE of LOW LIFE AMONGST PLANTS: Facts

and Phenomena of Cryptogamic Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth boards, 1s.

FREAKS and MARVELS of PLANT LIFE; or, Curiosities of Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D., A.L.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

PICTORIAL ARCHITECTURE of FRANCE. By the Rev.

H. H. BISHOP, M.A. With numerous Engravings. Oblong 4to, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE of SCIENCE.—OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By PERCY FARADAY FRANKLAND, Ph.D., B.Sc. (London), F.R.S. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

"It is a book which every Clergyman, every Magistrate, every Guardian of the Poor, every Governor of a School, ought to possess and master."—Guardian, October 3.

SIMPLE EXPERIMENTS for SCIENCE TEACHING.

With numerous Diagrams, including 200 Experiments fully illustrating the Elementary Physics and Chemistry Division in the Evening School Curriculum Code. By J. A. BOWER. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

FRUIT CULTURE for PROFIT. For Farmers, Small

Holders, Allotment Holders, Cottagers, &c. By C. B. WHITEHEAD, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

UNIFORM EDITION of MRS. EWING'S WORKS.

The Society have in the press a Uniform Library Edition of Mrs. Ewing's Works, which will consist in all of Eighteen Volumes, crown 8vo, half-cloth, price 2s. 6d. each.

The first Two Volumes are now ready.

Volume I. (282 pp.) contains: MELCHIOR'S DREAM, and other Tales—The BLACKBIRD'S NEST—A BIT of GREEN—FRIEDRICH'S BALLAD—The VISCOUNT'S FRIEND—The YEW LANE GHOST—A BAD HABIT—A HAPPY FAMILY.

Volume II. (264 pp.) contains: MRS. OVERTHEWAYS REMEMBRANCES—IDA—MRS. MOSS—THE SNORING GHOSTS—REKA POM—KERGUELEN'S LAND.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| RECENT PHILOSOPHY, by A. W. BENS | 415 |
| AUSTIN DOBSON'S EIGHTEENTH CENTURY VIGNETTES, by LIONEL JOHNSON | 416 |
| LESLEY-BEAULIEU'S RUSSIAN INSTITUTIONS, by W. R. MORFILL | 418 |
| COL. FISHWICK'S POPULAR HISTORY OF LANCASHIRE, by W. E. A. AXON | 419 |
| NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE | 419 |
| SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE, by NORMAN GALE | 421 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 422 |
| THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES | 422 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 423 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "FROM MAGDALEN BRIDGE," by MISS L. DOUGALL | 423 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 423 |
| CORRESPONDENCE: | |
| "The Riders," by S. R. CROCKETT and W. ROBERTSON NICOLL; Covenanting Miracles , by Andrew LANG; St. Ignace and the New Syrian Gospel , by G. A. SIMCOX; The "Lover" of a Hall: its Etymology , by the Rev. A. L. MAYHEW; Myths of Cosmogony by Dr. POLITE, by Mrs. EDMONDS; "Domus celis Plutonia," by Prof. TYRRELL; "The Best Plays of Ben Jonson," by Prof. HERFORD | 423 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 425 |
| TERRIEN DE LACOURPÈRE'S BEGINNINGS OF WRITING, by Canon ISAAC TAYLOR | 425 |
| OBITUARY: COL. GARRICK MALLERY | 426 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 427 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 427 |
| THE MADONNAS OF RAPHAEL, by GRANT ALLEN | 428 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 429 |
| "JOHN A. DREAM," by F. WEDMORE | 429 |
| RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SNEDDOCK | 430 |
| OBITUARY: ANTON RUBINSTEIN | 431 |

STAMPS.—WANTED to PURCHASE, a good Collection.—H. DEANE, Dundanon, Moffat, N.B.

CONTRIBUTOR to several Leading London Papers, and Editor of Monthly Journal, desires to WRITE WEEKLY LETTER on Art, Literature, and the Drama for Provincial Press.—Address E. M., 17, Red Lion Square, W.C.

BOOK-PLATES (Ex-Libris) DESIGNED and ENGRAVED in Medieval or Modern Styles on Wood, Copper, or Steel. A Book containing Illustrations of Medieval Designs on Wood, post free, 25 stamps.—THOMAS MORING, 52, High Holborn, London, W.C. Established 1791.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by KAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List —115, Fleet Street, London.

IMPORTANT TO AUTHORS.

AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS PRINTED and PUBLISHED on liberal terms.—Address ALPHA, care of 163, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

TYPEWRITING—SHORTHAND.—Miss LEOLINE HARTLEY (from People's Palace, Battersea, Woolwich Polytechnic, 429, Mansion House Chambers, E.C. All kinds of MSS. carefully copied. Duplicating clear as print. Pupils received. Testimonials forwarded.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOBO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

MONTHLY CATALOGUE of Rare,
Curious, and OUT-OF-THE-WAY BOOKS, sent free on demand.—G. LEZATIER, Libraire, 38, Rue de Châteaudun, Paris

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Invested Funds £4,700,000
Paid in Claims £9,000,000

For Mutual Life Assurance.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £4,600,000.

At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE.

UNIVERSITY OF WALES.
The Council of this College is prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of LOGIC and PHILOSOPHY, at a stipend of £350 per annum. The appointment carries with it a seat on the Senate of the University of Wales. Applications, with Testimonials, should be forwarded on or before December 4th, 1894, to Cardiff, November 12th, 1894. IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.
About TWELVE OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS (£40 to £20) in APRIL.—Apply to the HEAD MASTER.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholarly Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

FINISHING SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S DAUGHTERS.—The Misses SINCLAIR CLARKE, 46, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W.—References permitted to—The Right Honourable G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen; John Usher, Esq., of Norton, Middleham; the Honble. and Rev. Wm. Miller, LL.D., C.I.E.; the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, 36, Porchester Terrace, W., and Colonel Bisset, R.E., C.I.E.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.
The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turin, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

PALL MALL.—A Small but choice Collection of fine Old Violins, collected by the late Mr. Rawson, of Wincobank, Yorkshire.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on THURSDAY NEXT, the 29th inst. (by direction of the Exors. of Mrs. Rawson), the Collection of STRINGED INSTRUMENTS, including violins by Amati, 1722, Joseph Guarnerius and Peter Guarnerius; a violoncello by Maggini, violas by Gobetti and Nicolas, and an interesting Portrait in oils of Paganini.
May be viewed Tuesday next and following day, when catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO QUINCEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

DEATH DUTIES.

THE
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

This Company is prepared not only to issue new Life Policies covenanting to pay the DEATH DUTIES direct to the Government Authorities BEFORE GRANT of PROBATE, but also to secure the same advantage when desired TO UNENCUMBERED EXISTING POLICIES.

HEAD OFFICES {1, DALE STREET, LIVERPOOL.
{7, CORNHILL, LONDON.

POPULAR EDITION, with PORTRAIT.

Large 4to, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."—Weekly Dispatch.
"We doubt not it will have an immense circulation."—Echo.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival Street, E.C.

VINOLIA CREAM

FOR

COLD SORES, BURNING, ITCHING, &c.

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per box.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS' GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sneezing, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled: JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, LONDON.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s. or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each. 2½ yards by 3 yards, 3s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched.—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hostelry sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'UGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S STANDARD BOOKS.

BY LORD MACAULAY.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James the Second.

POPULAR EDITION, 2 vols., cr. 8vo, 5s.
STUDENT'S EDITION, 2 vols., cr. 8vo, 12s.
PEOPLE'S EDITION, 4 vols., cr. 8vo, 16s.

CABINET EDITION, 8 vols., post 8vo, £2 8s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 5 vols., 8vo, £4.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS.

STUDENT'S EDITION, 1 vol., cr. 8vo, 6s.
PEOPLE'S EDITION, 2 vols., cr. 8vo, 8s.
TREVELYAN EDITION, 2 vols., cr. 8vo, 9s.

CABINET EDITION, 4 vols., post 8vo, 24s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 3 vols., 8vo, 36s.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS. With

LAYS of ANCIENT ROME. Complete in 1 volume.

AUTHORISED EDITION, cr. 8vo, 2s. 6d., or 3s. 6d., gilt edges.
POPULAR EDITION, cr. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"SILVER LIBRARY" EDITION. With Portrait and Illustrations to the "Lays." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LAYS of ANCIENT ROME, &c.

Illustrated by G. Scharf, fcap. 4to, 10s. 6d.

Bijou Edition, 18mo, 2s. 6d., gilt top.

Popular Edition, fcap. 4to, 6d., sewed; 1s., cloth.

Illustrated by J. R. Weguelin, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth extra, gilt edges.

Annotated Edition, fcap. 8vo, 1s., sewed; 1s. 6d., cloth.

COMPLETE WORKS of LORD MACAULAY.

LIBRARY EDITION, 8 vols., 8vo, £5 5s.

CABINET EDITION, 16 vols., post 8vo, £4 16s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of LORD MACAULAY.

By the Right Hon. Sir G. O. TREVELLYAN, Bart.

POPULAR EDITION, cr. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
STUDENT'S EDITION, cr. 8vo, 6s.

CABINET EDITION, 2 vols., post 8vo, 12s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

BY JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

LIFE and LETTERS of ERASMUS: a Series of Lectures delivered at Oxford. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada. 12 vols., crown 8vo, 42s.

THE DIVORCE of CATHERINE of ARAGON:

the Story as told by the Imperial Ambassadors resident at the Court of Henry VIII. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SPANISH STORY of the ARMADA: and other Essays, Historical and Descriptive. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ENGLISH in IRELAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

SHORT STUDIES on GREAT SUBJECTS.

CABINET EDITION, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

CHEAP EDITION, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

CÆSAR: a Sketch. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THOMAS CARLYLE: a History of his Life.

1795-1835, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 1834-1881, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s.

BY WILLIAM E. H. LECKY.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND in the EIGH-

TEENTH CENTURY. LIBRARY EDITION, 8 vols., 8vo, £7 4s.

CABINET EDITION, 12 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each. (England, 7 vols.; Ireland, 5 vols.)

HISTORY of EUROPEAN MORALS, from

AUGUSTUS to CHARLEMAGNE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

HISTORY of the RISE and INFLUENCE of the SPIRIT of RATIONALISM in EUROPE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

BY SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James I. to the Outbreak of the Civil War, 1603-1642. 10 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

HISTORY of the GREAT CIVIL WAR, 1642-

1649. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

HISTORY of the COMMONWEALTH and PRO-

TECTORATE, 1649-1660. Vol. I. 1649-1651. 8vo, 21s.

[Just published.]

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY of ENGLAND.

With 375 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 12s.

BY SIR T. ERSKINE MAY.

(LORD FARNBOROUGH.)

The CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND,

since the Accession of George III., 1760-1870. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

BY THE REV. J. FRANCK BRIGHT, D.D.,
Master of University College, Oxford.

A HISTORY of ENGLAND. 4 vols., crown 8vo.

Period I.—MÆDIEVAL MON-
ARCHY: the Departure of the Romans to Richard III. From A.D. 449 to 1185.
4s. 6d.

Period III.—CONSTITUTIONAL
MONARCHY: William and Mary to William IV. From 1689 to 1837. Price
7s. 6d.

Period II.—PERSONAL MON- ARCHY: Henry VII. to James II. From
1185 to 1688. 5s.

Period IV.—THE GROWTH of DEMOCRACY: Victoria. From 1837 to 1880. 6s.

BY THE RT. HON. A. H. DYKE ACLAND, M.P., AND CYRIL RANSOME, M.A.

A HANDBOOK in OUTLINE of the POLITICAL

HISTORY of ENGLAND to 1893. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY ARNOLD TOYNBEE.

LECTURES on the INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION of the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY in ENGLAND. With Memoir of the Author by BENJAMIN JOWETT, D.D. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY HENRY THOMAS BUCKLE.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ENGLAND and FRANCE, SPAIN, and SCOTLAND. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

BY SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, BART.

THE ORIGIN of CIVILISATION and the PRIMI-

TIVE CONDITION of MAN. With 5 Plates and 20 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 18s.

BY PETER M. ROGET.

THESAURUS of ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES

Classified and Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. Recompensed throughout, Enlarged and Improved, partly from the Author's Notes, and with a full Index, by the Author's Son, JOHN LEWIS ROGET. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY THE BARON DE MARBOT.

THE MEMOIRS of the BARON DE MARBOT.

Translated from the French by A. J. BUTLER. Fourth Edition, slightly Abridged.
1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BY ALEXANDER BAIN.

MENTAL and MORAL SCIENCE: a Compendium of Psychology and Ethics. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE SENSES and the INTELLECT. 8vo, 15s.

THE EMOTIONS and the WILL. 8vo, 15s

PRACTICAL ESSAYS. Crown 8vo, 2s.

LOGIC, DEDUCTIVE and INDUCTIVE.

Part I. DEDUCTION. 4s.

Part II. INDUCTION. 6s. 6d.

BY JAMES SULLY.

THE HUMAN MIND: a Text-Book of Psychology.

2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

OUTLINES of PSYCHOLOGY. 8vo, 9s.

BY JOHN STUART MILL.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY.

LIBRARY EDITION. 2 vols., 8vo, 30s.

PEOPLE'S EDITION. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A SYSTEM of LOGIC, RATIOCINATIVE and

INDUCTIVE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

EDITED BY T. C. SANDARS.

THE INSTITUTES of JUSTINIAN. Latin Text, with English Introduction, Translation, and Notes. 8vo, 18s.

BY JOSEPH GWILT.

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA of ARCHITECTURE.

Illustrated with more than 1,700 Engravings. Revised by WYATT PAFWORTH.
8vo, £2 12s. 6d.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,
By CHARLES S. MIALI.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot easily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. . . . We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 and 22, Fumival Street, E.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. Gatti.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE FATAL CARD. Mr. William Terriss, Messrs. Murray Corson, Charles Fulton, W. L. Abingdon, Richard Purdon, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Vane, Laura Linden, Sophie Larkin, and Miss Millward.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE LADY SLAVEY. Miss May Yohe and Mr. Charles Danby; Mesdames Adelaide Astor, Jenny McNulty, and Blanche Barnett; Messrs. Robert Pateman, H. Sparling, G. Humphery, and Henry Beaumont. At 7.45, THE FUTURE MRS. RANSOME.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. Comyns Carr.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE NEW WOMAN. Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. J. G. Grahame, Mr. Wyes, Mr. Champion, Mr. Byron; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Alma Murray, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Gertrude Warden, Miss Richards, and Miss Winifred Emery.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Arthur Chudleigh.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A GAY WIDOW. Messrs. Chas. Hawtrej, E. Righton, G. Hare, N. Chart, E. H. Kelly, W. Draycott, F. Thorne, C. Coutts, W. Dennis, R. Harwood, E. Bertram; Mesdames Eva Moore, C. Maltby, M. Harding, V. Raye, A. Moubrey, L. Rachel, and Lottie Venne. Preceded, at 8.15, by OLD CRONIES.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE CASE OF REBELLIOUS SUSAN. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Mr. Kemble, Mr. Fredk. Kerr, Mr. C. P. Little, Mr. Ben Webster, Mr. E. Dagnall; Miss Fanny Coleman, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Nina Boucicault, and Miss Mary Moore.

DALY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, W. J. Manning, L. D'Orsay, W. H. Rawlins, G. Perteous, Hert Haslem; Mesdames Letty Lind, Cutler, Studholme, Hodson, Martino, Pounds, Fairfax, Batchelor, Sybil Grey.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir Augustus Harris.

THIS EVENING, at 7.30, THE DERBY WINNER. Mrs. John Wood, Misses Beatrice Lamb, Alma Stanley, Pattie Browne, Evelyn Hughes, L. Moodie, Hetty Dene; Messrs. Arthur Bouchier, George Giddens, Lionel Rignold, Charles Dalton, Harry Eversfield, East, Lawford, Harding, Revelle.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Mr. John Hare, Lessee and Manager.

THIS EVENING, at 8, MONEY. Mr. John Hare, Messrs. Forbes Robertson, Arthur Cecil, C. Groves, C. Brookfield, A. Aynesworth, S. Brist, C. Rock, Du Maurier, G. Trent, Sims; Miss Kate Rorke, Miss Helen Luck, and Mrs. Bancroft.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Lessee, W. S. Penley.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. W. S. Penley, Messrs. W. Everard, S. Paxton, H. Farmer, C. Thornbury, and Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Merrick, Kate Graves, Mabel Lane. At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mr. Tree, Sole Lessee and Manager.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, JOHN-A-DREAMS. Mr. Tree, Mr. Charles Cartwright, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Charles Allan, Mr. Herbert Ross, Mr. Edmund Maurice; Miss Janette Steer, Miss Le Thiere, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, HIS EXCELLENCY. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Ellaline Terriss, Alice Barnett, Gertrude Aylward, and Nancy McIntosh; Messrs. Rutland Barrington, Charles Kenningham, John Le Hay, Arthur Playfair, Augustus Cramer, and George Grossmith. Preceded, at 7.40, by A KNIGHT ERRANT.

PRINCE OF WALES THEATRE.

MR. ARTHUR ROBERTS' SEASON.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CLAUDE DUVAL. Messrs. C. E. Stevens, Eric Thorne, J. Welch, F. Morgan, H. O. Clarey, L. Russell, and Mr. Arthur Roberts; Mesdames Violet Robinson, Florence Levey, Liddon, Eva Ellerslie, Carrie Benton, Kate Canner, Alice Helbrook, Violet Leslie, and Miss Marie Hallon.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. George Alexander.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE MASQUERADERS. Messrs. Herbert Waring, Elliot, H. V. Esmond, A. Vane-Tempest, H. H. Vincent, Ian Robertson, A. B. Davenport, Graeme Goring, A. Holmes, Arthur Royston, J. F. Cornish; Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Granville, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Beryl Faber, Mrs. Edward Saker, &c.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'Oyly Carte.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, MIRETTE. Messrs. Courtice Pounds, Scott Fiske, Walter Passmore, John Coates, Scott Russell, and Richard Temple; Mesdames Florence St. John, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and R. Brandram.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. Willie Edouin.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE WRONG GIRL. Messrs. Forbes Dawson, W. Blakeley, Howard Russell, Philip Cunningham, Dudley Cloran, Richard Blunt, and Willie Edouin; Mesdames K. Lucile Foote, Violet Armbruster, Helen Cresswell, Daisy Bryer, and Fanny Brough. Preceded, at 7.50, by THE QUEEN'S PRIZE.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. John F. Sheridan, J. Furneaux Cook, Jack Thompson, W. S. Laidlaw, F. Seymour, and E. J. Lonnien; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Mabel Love, Gracie Whiteford, F. Wilson, Eva Greville, C. Cranford, Dora Thorne, A. Maxwell, Dorothy Wood, Maud Maude, and Addie Congers.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Under the Management of Mr. H. Tripp Edgar.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, A TRIP TO CHINATOWN. Mr. R. G. Knowles, Messrs. Tripp Edgar, De Lange, Stevens, Hilliard, Bousfield, H. Wright, Bernard, &c.; Misses Edith Bruce, May Edouin, Edith Vane, Georgie Wright, Kate Everleigh, Audrey Ford, Madeline Rowsell, and Texarkansas. At 8, RICHARD'S PLAY.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. Weedon Grossmith.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, T. Kingston, A. Helmore, J. L. Mackay; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esmé Berenger, A. Beet. Preceded, at 8.15, by LOYAL.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHEAP EDITION, NOW READY.

THE DATA OF ETHICS.

BY

HERBERT SPENCER.

Also, Price 1s.

WEISMANNISM
ONCE MORE.

BY

HERBERT SPENCER.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, W.C.

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."
NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on Application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

• and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for selling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 6s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall

NOW READY, PRICE 1s.

With Coloured Presentation Plate.

DOUBLE CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

THE

WOMAN AT HOME

ANNIE S. SWAN'S MAGAZINE.

Full of Illustrations, and containing Stories by the following, among many others:—

ANNIE S. SWAN. Illustrated.

J. M. BARRIE. Illustrated.

L. T. MEADE. Illustrated.

IAN MACLAREN. Illustrated.

S. BARING-GOULD. Illustrated.

PERCY ANDREAE. Illustrated.

THE QUEEN of ITALY. By

ARTHUR WARREN. A Woman's Life in the Bush—A Chat with Dr. Joachim—An Illustrated Interview with Sarah Grand—The Glass of Fashion. All fully Illustrated, in addition to the regular attractive features, appear in the

WOMAN AT HOME DOUBLE
CHRISTMAS NUMBER. Now ready. Price 1s.
With Coloured Presentation Plate.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

24, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAHLTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism London."

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

Just ready, large crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

AUSTRALASIA. Vol. II.—MALAYSIA and the PACIFIC ARCHIPELAGOES. By F. H. H. GUILLEMAUD, M.D., Author of "The Cruise of the Marchesa," "Life of Magellan," &c. With Numerous Maps and Illustrations. (Forming Volume II. of the reissue, Revised and Enlarged, of Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel.)

Recently published in the same Series.

AUSTRALASIA. Vol. I.—AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. By ALFRED RUSSELL WALLACE, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

New ready, demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d. net, postage 5d.

CLOUDLAND: a Study on the Structure and Characters of Clouds. By the Rev. W. CLEMENT LEY, M.A., F.R.Met.Soc. With numerous Coloured Plates, and other Illustrations.

THE GREAT ICE AGE, and its Relation to the Antiquity of Man. By JAMES GEIKIE, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Murchison Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh. Third Edition, much enlarged. With Two New Chapters on the "Glacial Phenomena of North America," by Prof. T. C. CHAMBERLIN. Also 18 Maps and 75 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 25s.

STANFORD'S FAMILY ATLAS of GENERAL GEOGRAPHY. Exhibiting the various Physical and Political Divisions of the Chief Countries of the World, 50 Maps, with a List of Latitudes and Longitudes. Imperial folio, half-morocco, price Five Guineas.

Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS of UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY. Quarto Edition. Containing 48 Coloured Maps, and an Alphabetical List of about 30,000 Names with Latitudes and Longitudes. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, cloth sides, gilt edges, 30s.

STANFORD'S OCTAVO ATLAS of MODERN GEOGRAPHY. Containing 38 Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully Engraved on Copper Plates; also an Alphabetical List of over 30,000 Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Handsomely bound in half-morocco, gilt edges, price 21s. Size, when shut, 7½ inches by 12 inches. Second Edition, Revised.

POPULAR WORKS ON NATURAL SCIENCE.

By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. Fisher).

"Hundreds of children have learnt their first science lessons from Miss Buckley's enchanting books.

"No more excellent Christmas gift-books could be found."
Manchester Guardian, Bookseller.

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE.

With 74 Illustrations. Twenty-fourth Thousand, Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.; calf extra, 11s.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES: and other Lectures. A Sequel to "The Fairyland of Science." With 100 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.; calf extra, 11s.

LIFE and HER CHILDREN. Glimpses of Animal Life, from the Amœba to the Insects. With 100 Illustrations. Thirteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.; calf extra, 11s.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE; or the Great Backed Family. With numerous Illustrations. Sixth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 8s. 6d.; calf extra, 14s.

A SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE, and of the Progress of Discovery from the Time of the Greeks to the Present Time. With 77 Illustrations. Fourth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 8s. 6d.; calf extra, 14s.

Crown 8vo, handsome cloth binding, price 10s. 6d.

ANIMALS from the LIFE. 255 Coloured Illustrations, drawn by HEINRICH LEUTEMANN. With descriptive Letterpress, Edited by ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY.

